9. Sub-clause (b) applies to "cotton contracts" not only between a member and a member, but also between a member and a non-member. As regards a non-member, there must be not only a "cotton transaction", but there must also be an arbitration agreement. It is because of that reason that the expression "cotton contract" has been used in sub-clause (b). But the language of sub-clause (b) discloses an intention that there should be a provision for arbitration even as regards "any dispute as to the existence of such transaction", which intention is disclosed by the words "including any dispute as to the existence of such transaction". If, however, an arbitration agreement is contained in a Cotton Contract, but the existence of the transaction itself is disputed, the whole Contract, including even the term therein for arbitration, would be in dispute and in such a case the dispute as to the existence of such transaction would not be referable to arbitration. It is in order to get over that difficulty that sub-clause (b) further provides "provided in the latter case the parties had agreed in writing before entering into business relation that any dispute arising between them out of that agreement or any such transactions that may be entered into including any dispute as to the existence of such transaction shall be referred to arbitration under the by-laws of the association". This is clear because the above proviso is made applicable only "in the latter case" that is, in the case of a dispute as to the existence of such transaction. What the Proviso requires is that there must be an agreement in writing, that such agreement in writing must be "before", that is, prior to entering into the "business relation and that such agreement should be" that any dispute arising between them out of that agreement or any such transactions that may be entered into including any dispute as to the existence of such arbitration shall be referred to arbitration under the by-laws of the association". The comparatively short provision contained in sub-clause (b) presents many difficulties in its construction and in ascertaining the reasons for the actual language used. The words "Cotton Contract" have been used in sub-clause (b) in contradistinction to "Cotton Transaction" used in sub-clause (a). It is not difficult to ascertain the reason for this change. Under sub-clause (a) both the parties would be members and both would be governed by Art. 103. But under sub-clause (b) one party can be a non-member to whom Art. 103 would not apply and hence the words "Cotton Contract" have been used requiring not merely a cotton transaction but also, in addition, an agreement about arbitration. But what cannot be understood is why is sub-clause (b) made again applicable "between members" when there was no necessity to do so as all such disputes arising between members would fall within sub-clause (a). Similarly, it is difficult to comprehend why the words used in the earlier part of sub-clause (b) are "subject to the by-laws or subject to E. I. C. A. arbitration", but in the later part the only words used are: "under the by-laws of the association", although we feel that the context required all the said words used in the earlier part could have appropriately been repeated in the latter part. Further, the Proviso in sub-clause (b) requires the agreement in writing to be "before entering into business relation". Why is the scope of the agreement in writing restricted by the use of the word "before"? Such an agreement in writing would, for the purposes contemplated by the Proviso, be equally effective if such an agreement is even simultaneous or subsequent to the "Cotton transaction". Now the words

"such transaction" have been used in sub-clause (b) three times. Before the words "such transaction" occur in sub-clause (b) for the first time the word "transaction" does not at all occur in sub-clause (b). The words used earlier are: "Cotton Contracts". The fact that the words "such contracts" have not been used but the words "such transaction" have been used indicates that a distinction has been made between "cotton contracts" and "cotton transaction". The only distinction appears to be, as stated earlier, that "cotton contracts" are "cotton transaction" with an added term containing an arbitration agreement and it is because of such distinction that sub-clause (b) later specifically provides for an arbitration agreement. If the distinction we have made is correct, "such transaction" refers not to any "transaction" referred to earlier in sub-cl. (b) itself — because none has been so mentioned — but to a "transaction" which has been mentioned as "cotton transactions" in sub-clause (a). It is possible to so construe it because although sub-clauses (a) and (b) are separately numbered, the word used between them is "or" and there is a semicolon at the end of sub-clause (a) and therefore sub-clauses (a) and (b) form part of the same sentence. The use of the word "such" in sub-clause (e) is a matter of great controversy before us because it is sub-clause (e) which the respondents strongly canvass for. It cannot go unnoticed that at the end of each of the said sub-clauses (a), (b), (c) and (d) there is a semicolon, followed by the word "or" and therefore all the five sub-clauses are parts of the same sentence. The above discussion about the word "such" used in sub-clause (d) yields an important principle of construction, it being that "such" can refer not to that which is used in the same sub-clause in which it is used, but that it can refer to that which may have been used in an earlier sub-clauses of clause (A).

10. Sub-clause (c) also uses the word "such" in connection with "contracts or transactions". Neither the word "contracts" nor the word "transactions" has been used in sub-clause (c) itself, but they have been used in the earlier sub-clauses (a) and (b) and on the basis of the above principle, the word "such" in sub-clause (c) must be construed to refer to "transaction" and "contracts" used in sub-clauses (a) and (b) respectively.

11. Sub-clause (d) contains the words "subject to these by-laws or subject to E. I. C. A. arbitration or containing words or abbreviations to a similar effect". These words are identical to those used in the earlier part of sub-clause (b).

12. Now, turn to sub-clause (e). Its short provision is "Cotton contract" covered by any such arbitration agreement. "Cotton contracts" has been used in sub-clause (b) and "such contracts" in sub-clause (c). As already stated, for the purposes of clause (A) there appears to be a distinction between "cotton transactions" and "cotton contracts", the latter being a cotton transaction with the additional element of an agreement for arbitration. Then occur the words "any such arbitration agreement". Here the word "such" means of the nature mentioned earlier in sub-clause (a). The word "such" is merely descriptive and the inquiry therefore would be whether any provision of the nature of an arbitration agreement finds a place in any of the earlier sub-clauses (a) to (d). It is not necessary that the words "arbitration agreement" should have been specifically used and even a provision of the nature of an arbitration agreement without the use of the specific words "arbitration agreement" would suffice. A provision in the nature of an arbitration agreement finds a place in the earlier part of sub-clause (b) and in sub-clause (d) and is contained at each of these two places in the words "made subject to the by-laws or subject to E. I. C. A. arbitration or containing words or abbreviations to a similar effect". But the words in sub-clause (e) are "covered by any such arbitration agreement". The effect of the words "covered" will be considered a little later. But the words are "any such arbitration agreement" and not "such arbitration agreement". The use of the word "any" tends to indicate that "arbitration agreements" of more than one nature find mention in the earlier sub-clauses (a) to (d) that an examination of these four sub-clauses shows that it is in fact so. Sub-clause (b) refers to an "arbitration agreement" at two places: firstly, in its earlier part and, secondly, in its later part in the Proviso. The arbitration agreement referred to in the earlier part is an arbitration agreement in the Cotton Contract itself, whereas that in the Proviso is an arbitration agreement in writing and entered into before entering into business relation of the nature mentioned in that Proviso, that is, an arbitration under the by-laws of the Association, i.e., E. I. C. A. Ltd. The contents of both are the same, the difference being only as to whether such arbitration agreement is simultaneous, that is, contemporaneous with the business transaction or whether it precedes the business transaction. As all the five sub-clauses form part of but one sentence — the sentence embracing the opening portion, the five sub-clauses and the concluding portion — even grammatically "such arbitration" need not be read as referring only to the contents of sub-clause (d) which immediately precedes sub-clause (e) but should be read as referring to the contents of all the preceding four sub-clauses (a) to (d) to the extent they contain an arbitration agreement. In our opinion, "cotton contracts covered by any such arbitration agreement" means the cotton contracts to which any such arbitration agreement applies. The word "covered" has been used to achieve the object that the arbitration agreement should embrace not only claim, disputes and differences arising in the performance of the business contract, but should also embrace those relating to the very existence of the contract itself. Another feature of the wording of sub-clause (e) is that it does not use words like "between members" or "between a member and a non-member" or any other similar descriptive words about the parties to the "cotton contract". Sub-clause (e) is, therefore, in that sense wider and can apply even when both the parties to the "cotton contract" are non-members as in the case before us.

13. In the case before us the said Contract dated 9th December 1964 between the parties to this Appeal was a "Cotton Contract". Because of the said term incorporated therein that the contract was "subject to the bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association Ltd., Bombay" all the bye-laws became incorporated into that contract, including bye-law 38-A. The words in the concluding portion of clause (A) of Bye-law 38 amount to an arbitration agreement. The nature of that arbitration agreement was, by reason of the words therein "subject to the bye-laws of the East India Cotton Association Ltd., Bombay" and the words of the concluding portion incorporated therein, that of an arbitration agreement mentioned expressly in the first part of sub-clause (b) and by reference in sub-clause (c). Therefore the said contract dated 9th December 1964 was "covered by such arbitration agreement" and fell within sub-clause (e). It must therefore be concluded that there existed a valid arbitration agreement between the parties. Mr. Bhatt, the learned Counsel for the appellants, did not dispute that if any of the said five sub-clauses (a) to (e) were held to be applicable in the present case, there would result an arbitration agreement between the parties which would cover the said disputes between the parties arising under the said contract dated 9th December 1964.

14. Mr. Bhatt had contended that the authority which made the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd. could not legislate, nor can it be presumed to have legislated by making those bye-laws, in respect of non-members. In our opinion, the very approach underlying this contention is misconceived. The authority that made the bye-laws did not, by the bye-laws themselves, provide for arbitration in respect of any non-member. In the present case the parties, though they both are non-members, have by their own voluntary act of making their contract subject to the bye-laws of the E. I. C. A. Ltd, incorporated Bye-law 38-A into their Contract and thereby agreed to an arbitration agreement. It is by reason of such voluntary act of the two parties, and not by any independent force of the bye-laws, that the agreement has come into being and become binding on the parties.

15. Mr. Bhatt had also contended that, in order to attract the provisions of clause (A) of Bye-law 38, it is not enough that the said parties should have stated in their said Contract dated 9th December 1964 that it was "subject to the by-laws of the East India Cotton Association Ltd., Bombay" but that, in order to attract the provisions of Cl. (A) of Bye-law 38, the parties should have stated specifically and in express words that the said Contract was "subject to the arbitration agreement as contained in Clause (A) of By-law 38 of the E. I. C. A. Ltd.". This contention of Mr. Bhatt misses the force and effect of the operative words containing an agreement for arbitration to be found in the concluding portion of clause (A) of By-law 38. These operative words are to be read as having been incorporated by reference into the said Contract dated 9th December 1964. So read, the said Contract dated 9th December 1964 contains within it an Arbitration Agreement. The principles about the contents of a document being incorporated into another document by reference to the former are so well-settled and well-established as not to need even a reference being made to any authorities or text-books enunciating them. When the contents of the operative words contained in the concluding portion clause (A) of By-law 38 are read into the said Contract dated 9th December 1964, the said Contract would contain words identical to those what Mr. Bhatt contended should, specifically and expressly have been used in the said Contract dated 9th December 1964.

16. The said Contract dated 9th December 1964 is in writing and so also are the provisions of clause (A) of bye-law 38 which are to be read into it. There was, therefore, in existence between the parties a written Arbitration Agreement as contemplated by clause (a) of S. 2 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, and it was a valid agreement. We, therefore, confirm the Judgment and Order of Madon, J. and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1972 BOMBAY 350 (V 59 C 63)

CHITALE AND NATHWANI, JJ.

The Municipal Corporation of Greater Bombay, Appellants v. Hasham Ismail Mamsa, Respondent.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 78 of 1970, D/- 7-10-1970 against Judgment of Vaidya J. reported in AIR 1971 Bom 215.

(A) Bombay Court-fees Act (36 of 1959), S. 6 (iv) (a) — Suit for accounts — What is — (X-Ref:— Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (f).)

For a suit which can properly be called a suit for accounts, legal liability to render accounts against the defendant must appear on the allegations in the plaint. When the plaintiff in a suit alleges that the defendant Bombay Corporation made demands for recovery of property tax from time to time and the plaintiff not only paid the entire amount due from him but had overpaid, such plaint allegations did not disclose any legal liability on Corporation to render accounts to plaintiff. AIR 1971 Bom 215. Reversed. (Paras 2, 4)

(B) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 527 — Section if violates Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (f) of Constitution — (X-Ref:— Constitution of India, Articles 14, 19 (1) (f).)

Merely because a statute not dealing with limitation in general prescribes a special period of limitation different from the one in the Limitation Act, it does not follow that the provision prescribing the special period of limitation violates Article 14 of the Constitution, much less Art. 19 (1) (f) thereof. Hence S. 527 is not violative of Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. (Point conceded).

(C) Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (3 of 1888), S. 527 — Suit against Corporation — Limitation.

When notices of demand as sent by Corporation for recovery of property tax as served on plaintiff on 14-3-1968 and the suit in question in respect thereof was filed on 29-4-1969 the suit was clearly barred by limitation if the acts of Corporation complained of in the plaint could not be said to be unauthorised. K. K. Singhavi i/b. A. M. Desai, Attorneys, for Appellants; R. W. Adik, for Respondent.

CHITALE, J.:— This is an appeal against the decision of Vaidya, J. in Appeal from Order No. 405 of 1969 reversing the order of the trial Court holding that the suit in question fell under S. 6 (iv) (a) of the Court-fees Act, and it had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, the valuation of the subject-matter of the suit being over Rs. 25,000/-.

2. In the opinion of Vaidya, J., the suit was essentially a suit for accounts and it fell under S. 6 (iv) (i) of the Court-fees Act. The relevant prayers in the prayer clause of the plaint read thus:— (p. 93/p.bk)

"(a) That the defendants may be ordered and decreed to render to the plaintiff the account of the aforesaid payments from time to time made to the defendants for property taxes of the plaintiff's said immovable properties and on taking up such account to pay to the plaintiff such amount as may be found due and payable by the defendants to the plaintiff.

(b) That it may be declared that the amount of property taxes for which the said bills are from time to time are served on the plaintiff is paid to the defendants and nothing is due and payable by the plaintiff to the defendants for the property taxes for the period upto 31st March 1968.

(c) That the defendants, their officers, servants and agents be restrained by an order and injunction of this Honourable Court from taking any coercive action for recovery of the property taxes for the period upto 31st March, 1968 and from attaching or selling the plaintiff's said immovable properties more particularly described in Exh. A to the plaint".

Mr. Adik, who appears for the respondent-plaintiff, has taken us through the relevant allegations in the plaint. He referred to paras 5, 7, 10 and 13 of the plaint. It is not necessary to set out in detail the relevant allegations in the plaint, as Justice Vaidya has set out the same in his judgment. In substance what the plaintiff alleges is that towards the property tax properly due from him he has made payments from time to time and not only the amount due from him to the Bombay Municipal Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the Corporation) by way of property tax is paid, but the Corporation is over-paid. This is made clear by the annexures to the plaint. Exh. F to the plaint sets out the particulars of the amount which the plaintiff claims from the Corporation as due and payable to him, which is Rupees 22,238.81. Exh. G to the plaint is headed "Summary of the amount due to the plaintiff from the Municipality". The amount shown under this head is Rupees 5,511.05. It is rather difficult to reconcile the headings of these two Exhibits, but it appears from Exh. G to the plaint that, according to the plaintiff, taking all the payments made by the plaintiff to the Corporation into account, he alleges that the Corporation is over-paid to the extent of Rs. 5,511.05. Merely because the plaintiff alleges that he has made payments from time to time, the Corporation is thereby over-paid, hence it is necessary to take accounts, it cannot be said to be a suit for accounts. What must be considered is not an allegation here and there in the plaint, but the substance of the plaint read as a whole. For a suit which can properly be called a suit for accounts, legal liability to render accounts against the defendant must appear on the allegations in the plaint. In the present case all that the plaintiff alleges is that the Corporation made demands for property tax from time to time, he made payments from time to time and he has not only paid the entire property tax due from him, but in fact he has over-paid the Corporation. Considering the nature of the suit, as disclosed by the allegations in the plaint, it is obvious that in law there is no liability on the Bombay Municipal Corporation to render accounts to the plaintiff. The Corporation issued bills from time to time and made demands pursuant to those bills. If it is the case of the plaintiff that he has paid the entire amount due from him by way of property tax and has over-paid the Corporation, it is for the plaintiff to prove the alleged over-payment. We do not think that the allegations in the plaint disclose any legal liability on the Corporation to render accounts to the plaintiffs. It is also important to note that on the allegations in the plaint what the plaintiff seeks to do is to repudiate the liability in respect of the amount claimed from him by the Bombay Municipal Corporation as property tax.

3. The averments in the plaint also indicate that the plaintiff alleges that some of the bills were wrongly issued by the Corporation, as the property tax mentioned in these bills and claimed by the Corporation was not due from him. The plaintiff alleges that he was not liable to pay that tax because some of the sheds were burnt, some licences were cancelled and there were some vacancies, as set out in Exh. F to the plaint. These allegations clearly indicate that the plaintiff challenges the very validity of such bills and the demands made by the Corporation pursuant to such bills. If so, it Is clear that at least in respect of the bills and demands so challenged the plaintiff is disputing by the present suit the liability in respect of the whole amount of such bills and demands. On the allegations in the plaint considered as a whole, we are unable to hold that this is a suit for accounts. Merely because the plaintiff alleges various payments from time to time and consequent over-payment, it cannot be held to be a suit for accounts. There are no allegations in the plaint to indicate any probability of shifting balances on either side, as in the case of a mutual open and current account or even a running account between the parties on a specific agreement either express or necessarily implied. Exhibits F and G to the plaint considered with the allegations in the plaint make it abundantly clear that the plaintiff challenges his liability in respect of Rs. 22,238.81 claimed by the Corporation as property tax and in addition seeks to recover from the Corporation Rs. 5511.05 — the amount of alleged over-payment. This by itself takes the valuation of the subject-matter of the suit above Rs. 25,000/-.

4. Justice Vaidya in his judgment observes:—

"..... In the present case, the plaintiff is not asking for a declaration to obtain adjudication against recovery of money from the plaintiff. He wants a declaration or adjudication that the money is already recovered and the defendants are over paid. It is not the same thing as adjudication against recovery of money. Supposing there was a simple claim where the plaintiff were to say that Rs. 10,000/- were due as taxes and the Municipal Corporation had recovered through error Rs. 11,000/- and hence the plaintiff was entitled to refund of Rs. 1,000/-; such a suit cannot be considered as a suit for declaration to obtain adjudication against recovery of money from the plaintiff. Nevertheless, if what the plaintiff, as stated in the present plaint, claims is a declaration, after taking accounts, it would be necessary to restrain the defendants from recovering the taxes under the 17 notices of demand in respect of the period from April 1950 to March 31, 1968. The prayers (c) and (d) in the plaint are necessarily, therefore, incidental reliefs, which must follow if the plaintiff is entitled to get the reliefs prayed for in prayers (a) and (b)"

With respect, we are unable to agree with the reasoning adopted by Justice Vaidya. In the illustration given in the above-quoted observations it would be a simple suit for recovery of Rs. 1,000/-. Justice Vaidya in his judgment refers to Lakshman v. Babaji, (1884) ILR 8 Bom 31, Ishwarappa v. Dhanji Bhanji, ILR 56 Bom 23 = (AIR 1932 Bom 111) and Krishnaji Vinayak Belapurkar v. Motilal Magandas Gujarati, 31 Bom LR 476 = (AIR 1929 Bom 337). We have perused these decisions. All that these decisions lay down is that initially it is for the plaintiff to value the subject-matter of the suit and such valuation initially determines the jurisdiction of the Court. They do not lay down what are the essentials of a suit for accounts. In our opinion, in order that a suit can be held to be a suit for accounts, the allegations in the plaint must indicate that on those allegations a legal liability to render accounts does arise against the defendant. In the present case, the averments in the plaint do not indicate such a liability. In our opinion, the present suit is one challenging the right of the Corporation to recover the amount it demands by way of property tax on the two grounds mentioned above and the suit does fall under Section 6 (iv) (a) of the Court-fees Act, as held by the learned trial Judge.

5. Mr. Adik for the plaintiff further submits that in any case the trial Court was wrong in holding that by the present suit the plaintiff seeks to challenge the right of the Corporation to recover Rs. 1,40,778.74.

6. In view of the prayer (c) in the plaint, we are unable to accept the above contention of Mr. Adik. The allegation of over-payment is obviously inconsistent with this contention. Mr. Adik now states before us that the plaintiff desires to confine his claim in the suit to the items mentioned in Exh. F to the plaint. We see no reason why the plaintiff should not be allowed to restrict his claim even at this stage. In order to do that, amendment to the plaint would be necessary. The trial Court shall allow the plaintiff to amend the plaint suitably. We may mention here that Mr. Adik has made it clear before us that although it was the plaintiff's contention that the Corporation is over-paid to the extent of Rs. 5,511.05, the plaintiff does not want to pursue that claim and desires to restrict his claim to Rs. 22,238.81, detailed in Exh. F to the plaint. In view of this statement at the Bar made by Mr. Adik for the plaintiff, the City Civil Court, Greater Bombay, will have jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The trial Court shall direct the plaintiff to pay the necessary court-fee taking into consideration that the suit falls under Section 6 (iv) (a) of the Court-fees Act and the subject-matter of the suit is to be valued at Rs. 22,238.81.

7. In view of what is stated above the trial Court shall reconsider whether injunction as prayed for by the Notice of Motion, out of which this appeal arises, should be granted in respect of the claim in the suit, modified as indicated above.

8. After we dictated the above order Mr. Singhavi for the Corporation points out that the trial Court has recorded the finding, though incidentally, that the suit is barred by limitation in view of S. 527 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. He submits that since the plaintiff has restricted his claim so as to bring the suit within the jurisdiction of the trial Court, the question of limitation can properly be considered. The determination of that question does not require any additional evidence, hence this Court itself can consider that question before directing the trial Court to proceed with the suit. In view of this submission, we adjourn the further hearing of the appeal.

7th October 1970.

9. Mr. Singhavi for the defendant submits that the present suit is obviously barred by limitation in view of S. 527 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act (Bombay Act III of 1888) and in case this Court accepts this contention, it would not be necessary to send down the proceedings to the trial Court for disposal of the suit. We have carefully considered this contention and we find that this is not a case where any further evidence would be necessary in order to decide the question of limitation. We may also mention here that Mr. Adik for the plaintiff did not contend that this question of limitation requires any evidence to be led, before it could be decided. Mr. Adik for the plaintiff invites our attention to para 11 of the plaint, which reads thus:

"The plaintiff submits that Section 527 of the Bombay Municipal Act does not apply to the facts of the case inasmuch as the said notices of demand dated 14th March 1968 are ultra vires and illegal and contrary to the provisions of the said Act. The plaintiff in any event submits that Section 527 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act is illegal and ultra vires the Constitution of India as it violates the fundamental rights guaranteed to the plaintiff under Arts. 14 and 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution of India"

Mr. Adik for the plaintiff did not press the constitutional point raised in the above paragraph of the plaint and obviously for good reasons. It is obvious that there is no substance in that contention. Merely because a statute not dealing with limitation in general prescribes a special period of limitation different from the one in the Limitation Act, it does not follow that the provision prescribing the special period of limitation violates Art. 14 of the Constitution, much less Art. 19 (1) (f) thereof. Mr. Adik, however, submits that Section 527 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act does not apply to the facts of this case, because according to the plaintiff the notices of demand served by the Bombay Municipal Corporation on the plaintiff are illegal. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the decision of this Court in Jalgaon Borough Municipality v. Khandesh Spg. and Wvg. Mills Ltd., 55 Bom LR 65 = (AIR 1953 Bom 204). In our opinion, this decision has no application to the facts of the present case. In that case it was held that the Municipality had no authority to levy the tax in respect of which the suit was filed and it was on that footing that the question whether that suit was within limitation arose before the Court. In the present case considering the allegations in the plaint as a whole, it is abundantly clear that the plaint alleges that the notices of demand are illegal because the amounts claimed by the said notices are not in fact due from the plaintiff, since the plaintiff claims exemption in respect of items mentioned in Exh. F to the plaint and with regard to the rest he alleges that he has already paid amounts which amply cover the claim made by the said notices of demand. There is no allegation in the plaint that the Corporation had no authority to levy property tax, all that the plaintiff alleges is that he is entitled to exemption from paying the property tax in respect of items mentioned in Exh. F to the plaint on the grounds mentioned therein. Thus the plaint alleges not absence of authority to levy the tax in question, but wrong levy in respect of the same, ignoring the grounds for exemption claimed by the plaintiff. The plaintiff further alleges that the Corporation has issued notices of demand in respect of the tax which he has already paid. These allegations do not amount to an averment that the levy of the tax is unauthorised. What the plaintiff alleges is that the levy thereof is wrong in view of some of the provisions of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act. Mr. Adik points out that the plaint alleges that the Corporation was not entitled to recover certain amount of tax levied in respect of certain huts, because according to the plaintiff these huts were at the material time not in existence at all. There is nothing to show that the Corporation admits that at the material time the huts were not in existence. Merely because the plaintiff alleges that the huts were not in existence at the material time, the act of the Corporation in levying the tax and issuing notices of demand in that respect cannot be said to be unauthorised. Even if the plaintiff succeeds in establishing that the huts did not exist at the material time, it would only mean that the assessment made by the Corporation was wrong, but it does not mean that the Corporation had no authority to levy the particular tax under the statute. Merely because the plaintiff chooses to dispute the existence of the huts at a particular time, the levy of tax for the same and issuing notices to recover that tax cannot be held to be unauthorised acts on the part of the Corporation. Mr. Adik further points out that some amount of tax is disputed because according to the plaintiff there were vacancies. All these allegations raise disputed questions of fact just to show that the assessment of the tax is wrong. On these allegations it cannot be said that there is an allegation that the tax sought to be recovered is illegal in the sense that it is unauthorised, the Corporation having no authority to levy it, apart from the question of wrong assessment thereof. In effect the plaintiff claims exemption in respect of certain items mentioned in Exh. F to the plaint. If the Corporation has the authority to levy and recover property tax—which is not disputed by the plaintiff—assessment of such a tax, even if made by wrongly disputing certain facts on which exemption can be claimed, cannot be held to be unauthorised, nor can steps to recover such tax be held to be unauthorised. In view of this, we are unable to accept the plaintiff's contention that the principle laid down by the decision mentioned above — 55 Bom LR 65 = (AIR 1953 Bom 204) applies to the facts of the present case. Even on the allegations in the plaint the acts of the Corporation complained of cannot be said to be unauthorised.

10. The relevant dates on the question of limitation are: The notices of demand which are sought to be challenged by the present suit were served on the plaintiff on 14-3-1968 and the present suit was filed on 29-4-1969. If the acts of the Bombay Municipal Corporation complained of in the plaint cannot be held to be unauthorised, it is obvious that Section 527 of the Bombay Municipal Corporation Act applies and the suit is clearly barred by limitation. Accordingly we hold that the present suit is barred by limitation.

11. We may mention here that Mr. Adik for the plaintiff did not contend before us that the question of limitation cannot be considered at this stage, particularly in an appeal against the order on a notice of motion for injunction.

12. We may also mention here that Mr. Adik for the plaintiff did not urge before us that the plaintiff is entitled to rely on Section 14 of the Limitation Act, as was done in the trial Court, to show that the suit is within limitation. Mr. Adik concedes that the subject-matter of the earlier suit was different from that of the present suit.

13. In the result we allow the appeal, set aside the order passed by Mr. Justice Vaidya in appeal from Order No. 405 of 1969 and for reasons indicated above we dismiss the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff shall pay the defendant costs throughout. The plaintiff shall also pay the defendant the costs of the suit in the trial Court. The plaintiff shall pay necessary court-fee on the plaint, as indicated above. If the plaintiff fails to pay the necessary court-fee on the plaint, the trial Court shall take steps to recover the same. Order accordingly.

14. In view of the above order, the trial Court shall only see that the plaint is amended by the plaintiff, as indicated above, and shall recover the necessary court-fee from the plaintiff. Since we have dismissed the suit, nothing more need be done by the trial Court.

Order accordingly.

V. B. Rege, for Petitioner; K. J. Abhyankar, for Opponent No. 1.

ORDER:— The plaintiff, who is the owner of the suit house, and who wanted to evict the defendant, but did not succeed is the petitioner here. The respondent-defendant is occupying a portion on the ground floor of the Plaintiff's house as a monthly tenant on a payment of Rs. 20/- as rent. The property is in the city of Sholapur. The petitioner bank wanted the premises for the purpose of conducting the business. It therefore required the premises reasonably and bona fide for its own use and occupation. It, therefore, served a notice on the respondent dated 2-7-1964 demanding the possession of the premises as well as arrears of rent till the date of the notice. The respondent denied the claim of the petitioner by a reply to that notice. He, however, sent all the arrears. The suit thereafter for possession and mesne profits followed. The respondent resisted the suit. The trial Court framed a number of issues and found that the respondent has established that it bona fide required the suit premises for its own use and occupation and that greater hardship would be caused to it than the respondent, if the suit is dismissed. The trial Court, however, was of the view that in spite of this the petitioner would not be able to recover possession of the suit premises because Section 25 of the Bombay Rents, Hotel and Lodging House Rates Control Act (hereinafter called "Rent Act") is a hurdle in the way of the bank. Under Section 25 a landlord shall not use or permit to be used for non-residential purposes any premises, which on the date of the coming into operation of the Rent Act were used for residential purposes. The date when the Rent Act came into operation is 19-1-1948. The trial Court found that the suit premises were used for residential purposes on 19-1-1948 and, therefore it cannot be used for non residential purposes. Accordingly, therefore, the petitioners were not entitled to recover the suit premises from the respondent.

2. The petitioner went in appeal to the District Court and the learned Extra Assistant Judge, who heard the appeal, also found in favour of the petitioner being of the view that the petitioner required the premises reasonably and bona fide for its own use and occupation. But because according to the learned Assistant Judge the suit premises were not let out for non-residential purposes on 19-1-1948, the petitioner would not be entitled to recover possession of the suit premises. Accordingly, therefore, he dismissed the appeal. It is this order of the learned Assistant Judge, Sholapur, that is sought to be corrected by the petitioner here.

3. Mr. Rege, the learned advocate for the petitioner, contends here that the findings of fact as regards the nature of occupation on 19-1-1948 is erroneous, because of the wrong approach by the learned Assistant Judge. During the course of the judgment, the learned Assistant Judge considered the evidence of Gangadhar Jabde, who was the first owner of the suit premises, Janardhan Pandit, who had conducted a charitable dispensary in the suit premises from 1945 till 1948 and one Sakham Chatli, who had given the evidence as regards alternative accommodation. It is true that the learned Assistant Judge, while deciding the nature of occupation on 19-1-1948, observed that although these three witnesses had stated that there was a charitable dispensary in the suit premises yet they should not be believed because that they are all interested in the petitioner; there is hardly any evidence to show that they were really interested witnesses. But at the same time while deciding the point regarding the necessity of the premises for personal occupation, the learned Assistant Judge in the same breath believed these very witnesses. It is true, as contended by Mr. Rege the learned advocate for the petitioner that such an approach for recording a finding of fact is erroneous. The witnesses did state that there was a charitable dispensary in the suit premises between 1945 and 1948. This period would cover 19-1-1948. The learned Assistant Judge believed the witnesses on one point but did not believe for no reason the very witnesses on other connected points. In the absence of any evidence whatsoever to show that on 19-1-1948 the nature of occupation was residential, the learned Judge held that it was residential. Mr. Rege, therefore, argued that the case be remanded back because of this patent error. He gave another ground for this and that is that appellate Court should be slow to disbelieve the oral evidence of witnesses when such evidence was believed by the trial Court. After all, according to him the trial Court has opportunity of seeing the witnesses and also the way they give evidence. Therefore when there is question of believing the oral evidence, the appellate Court should not hastily disbelieve the oral evidence which was believed by the trial Court. He relied for this on The Bombay Cotton Manufacturing Co. Ltd. v. Raja Bahadur Shival Motilal, 17 Bom LR 455 and Arthur Wijetilekha v. Don Edmond Ronashinghe, AIR 1931 PC 255. The proposition of law as argued by Mr. Rege is correct. But at the same time the appellate Court had always jurisdiction to reassess all the evidence as well as the circumstances that are on record. If therefore, the appellate Court reassesses the evidence, which it is entitled to do in appeal, it cannot be said to have committed an error in law. In my view, therefore, it would be difficult for me to correct this kind of error of fact, though serious, committed by the learned Assistant Judge.

4. In my view the real point for consideration however here is this. Is the learned Assistant Judge as well as the trial Judge right when they independently dealt with the issues: whether the petitioner had established that it required the premises reasonably and bona fide for its own use and occupation; and whether the suit premises were let out for non-residential purposes on 19-1-1948. Both the Courts below held that the suit premises were residential premises on 19-1-1948 both the lower Courts have also answered the question about the reasonable and bona fide requirement of the petitioner in the affirmative. Now Section 13 (1) (g) of the Rent Act runs as under:

"13. (1) Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act but subject to the provisions of Section 15, a landlord shall be entitled to recover possession of any premises if the Court is satisfied—

(g) that the premises are reasonably and bona fide required by the landlord for occupation by himself or by any person for whose benefit the premises are held or where the landlord is a trustee of a public charitable trust that the premises are required for occupation for the purpose of the trust or

....."
It is argued that Section 13 is independent and is not subject to any of the provisions of the Rent Act, because the expression "Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act, but subject to the provisions of Section 15" is used by the legislature and, therefore, it intended to make Section 13 independent of any provisions in the Act. It cannot, according to Mr. Rege, be subject to any provision in the Act except Section 15. It is, therefore, argued that Section 13 cannot also be subject to Section 25 of the Act. Section 25 of the Rent Act is as follows:

"25(1) A landlord shall not use or permit to be used for a non-residential purpose any premises which on the date of the coming into operation of this Act were used for a residential purpose. (2) Any landlord who contravenes the provisions of sub-section (1) shall on conviction be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three months or with fine or with both."

It is, therefore, clear that the legislature had intended that the landlord shall not use or permit to be used for non-residential purpose any premises which on 19-1-1948 were used for a residential purpose. If, therefore, the premises were used for a residential purpose on 19-1-1948, a landlord is prohibited from using the same for a non-residential purpose. Section 25 also provides a penalty. Any landlord who contravenes Sec. 25 (1) is punishable with fine or with imprisonment extending to three months.

5. The point, therefore, that arises here for consideration is whether the words 'bona fide' in Sec. 13 (1) (g) can be interpreted with Section 25 at the back of our mind. Words 'bona fide' have been interpreted to mean in good faith, 'bona fide' also means 'honestly' as distinguished from bad faith or without fraud or deception. A question of bona fides is a question of fact and, therefore, the Court is entitled to look to every relevant fact or circumstance affecting the landlord's possession. "Bona fide required" would also mean genuinely and honestly required. To reach this conclusion this Court must be satisfied about the reality of the claim made by the landlord. Now it is true that bona fide and reasonable requirements include requirements for business as well as for residence. But if the premises were used for residential purposes on 19-1-1948 and if the landlord requires it for non-residential purposes, by an application (sic) can his requirement be said to be a reasonable requirement in view of the provisions of Section 25? Can it be said to be also a bona fide requirement in view of Section 25? It is true that Section 13 seems to be a self-contained section and would not be subject to any other provisions in the Act. But at the same time the Court will naturally have to consider bona fide and reasonable requirement of the landlord in view of the provisions of Section 25. If he is not entitled to change the user because he has not fulfilled a particular condition will he be still said to require the premises bona fide and reasonably? It appears to me that even though the expression "notwithstanding anything contained in this Act but subject to the provisions of Sec. 15" is used in Section 13 yet when we have to give a finding on the "bona fide and reasonable requirement", we will also have to consider the reasonable and bona fide requirement after also reading the provisions of Section 25.

6. I am supported in this view of mine by the decision of Tarkunde, J. in Civil Revn. Appln. 2172 of 1957, decided on 3-12-1959 (Bom). A similar question as the one before me arose before him and according to him Section 25 and Section 13 of the Act are not mutually exclusive. There being no conflict between Section 13 (1) (g) and Section 25 of the Rent Act, there was no question of one section governing the other. Tarkunde, J. has observed during the course of his judgment that in considering whether in a particular case the alleged requirement of the landlord is reasonable or bona fide; the Court is certainly entitled to take into account whether the requirement alleged and proved by the landlord is not forbidden by any law. According to him if a landlord desires to use the premises contrary to the penal provisions in Section 25 this Court will not regard such requirement as either reasonable or bona fide. This means in his view Section 13 (1) (g) is not controlled by Section 25, but both the provisions have to be read together. He then continues and says "reading these provisions together it follows that where the landlord claims that he requires the premises contrary to the limitations imposed by Section 25 the Court will not hold that he has fulfilled the requirement of Section 13 (1) (g)" with respect I agree with this view of Tarkunde, J.

7. Now, therefore, it cannot be held that the suit premises were not let for non-residential purposes on 19-1-1948 and at the same time held that the bank's requirement for the purpose of its occupation is reasonable and bona fide. It appears to me that this is a manifest and patent error of law on the face of the proceedings. It therefore appears to me that the approach by the trial Court as well as by the learned Assistant Judge to the issues is erroneous. The findings; therefore, in consequence of this erroneous approach are manifestly improper. It is better and proper therefore to remand the record and proceedings of this case back to the District Court, Sholapur for correcting this manifest error. If need be a fresh hearing be given to the parties before passing the final judgment according to law.

8. Petition allowed. Rule made absolute. No order as to costs.

Case remanded.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1554 of 1968, D/- 30-7-1971.

Index Note:— (A) Cri. P. C. (1898), Sections 435 and 438 — Issue of domicile and nationality certificate — Procedure for cancellation in case it is wrongly or illegally issued — Government cannot issue executive instructions for its cancellation.

Brief Note: (A) Issuing of a domicile and nationality certificate, which consists of important legal evidence of nationality, citizenship and domicile of a person, is a judicial function. There is no provision of law under which executive instructions can be given by the Government to the District Magistrate or the Magistrate concerned to cancel the certificate without even hearing the person affected. Even if the Government was of the opinion that the certificate had been wrongly or illegally issued by the Taluka Magistrate who was an executive Magistrate the District Magistrate ought to have been asked to exercise the powers under Section 435, Criminal P. C. by calling the papers and in case he was satisfied that the certificate was wrongly or illegally issued, to make a report under Section 438, Criminal P. C. Therefore, the instructions issued by the Government to the District Magistrate to cancel the certificate of the petitioner were totally unwarranted. (Para 16)

Index. Note:— (B) Constitution of India, Art. 5 (a) and (c) — Essentials of citizenship under the Article — Domicile.

Brief Note: (B) The petitioner was not only born in India, brought up in India, educated in India, but after he attained majority, he served in the ordnance factory and started a business of his own in Sholapur in 1947 making India his permanent home. His wife was also permanently residing in India. He had never left India after his birth.

Held that at the commencement of the Constitution i.e. on November 26, 1949, the petitioner was domiciled in India. Even assuming that his domicile of origin was Persia or Iran, as his father and mother hailed from Iran, in law he acquired a domicile of choice in India prior to the commencement of the Constitution. He became a citizen of India under Article 5 as he was born in the territory of India and he had been ordinarily residing in the territory of India for not less than five years immediately preceding the commencement. (Paras 20, 21)

Index Note:— (C) Citizenship Rules (1956), R. 30 — Acquisition of foreign citizenship — Exclusive jurisdiction of Central Government.

Brief Note: (C) In the case of a citizen of India within Art. 5 of the Constitution it is only the Central Government which has jurisdiction to decide whether he has acquired foreign citizenship. This question has to be decided by the Central Government as provided by Rule 30 of the Rules framed under the Citizenship Act, 1955. Unless the Central Government decides this question, such a person cannot be treated as a foreigner and cannot be deported from the territories of India. AIR 1971 SC 1382, Relied on. (Para 24)

A. A. Peerbhoy with A. N. Salik, for Petitioner; S. N. Naik i/b. M/s. Little and Co. Attorneys, for Opponents.

VAIDYA J.:— The petitioner Keshasrao Sorabji Irani was born in Bombay in the year 1922. His father Sorabji Kekobad Irani came to India from Persia in the year 1902 to assist his sister in the business of running a restaurant in Bombay. Sorabji married in 1913 the petitioner's mother Goharbai in Bombay. He continued his business in Bombay and settled down in India and never went back to his country of origin or went out to any other country till his death in the Sassoon Hospital at Poona. When Sorabji died, the petitioner was 7 months old. The petitioner was educated at Poona and passed his Matriculation examination in the year 1940. After passing the Matriculation examination he studied for a diploma course in Engineering in the Poona Engineering College. In 1944, he obtained a diploma in Mechanical Engineering from the College of Engineering at Poona. Thereafter the petitioner worked in the ammunition factory at Kirkee, first as a supervisor trainee from May 1944 to November 1944, and then as supervisor B grade in Material Estimate Office from December 1944 to March 1946.

2. In 1947 the petitioner settled down in Sholapur. He has been running a general store and restaurant at Sholapur since that date till now. On October 19, 1949, he married one Banu Rashid. Banu Rashid is an Indian citizen born in India in 1932 and her parents were also domiciled in India. The petitioner resided in India since his birth. He never went out of India. The petitioner, therefore, claims to be a citizen of India under Article 5 of the Constitution of India. He continued to enjoy all the rights of the citizens of India including the right to vote.

3. However, the petitioner is being harassed from the year 1960 by police officers in the office of the District Superintendent of Police at Sholapur and other authorities of the Government of Maharashtra. The harassment began in the year 1960 when one Sub-Inspector Joshi approached him and told him that as he was Irani, he should register himself and his wife as foreigners. The petitioner protested. He told S. I. Joshi that he was not an Iranian national but an Indian citizen by birth. He also told him that his wife was also an Indian citizen, that his name "Irani" was only a surname and had nothing to do with his nationality or domicile. The Sub-Inspector, however, told him that he and his wife must fill in the forms of registration under Registration of Foreigners Rules and that if he did not do so, he would be prosecuted and expelled from India. He also assured him that if he filled in the forms, nothing would happen to him. The petitioner, therefore, filled up from A under the Registration of Foreigners Rules, 1939. Even in that form, against the column "present nationality", he mentioned "Indian". Against the column "previous nationality, if any" he mentioned "Nil". This form was filled in by him on January 5, 1960; and similar forms were also filled in at that time by the wife of the petitioner and his mother Goharbai. In the form filled in by Goharbai, her nationality was mentioned as Iranian because she wrongly believed that as she was born in Iran, she was Iranian national and had also obtained as Iranian passport.

4. Nothing happened till April 10, 1961 when in pursuance of a letter addressed by the District Superintendent of Police, Sholapur a residential permit was issued to the petitioner stating:—

"As you are not in possession of valid national passport, you have been permitted to stay in India for three months, i. e. until 10-7-1961."

It was also stated in the letter that the petitioner should get a valid passport from his Consul in India before the above date. A similar letter and residential permit were received by the petitioner's wife. The petitioner then approached the office of the District Superintendent of Police and met one Sub-Inspector Padgaonkar and told him that the said residential permits were illegally and wrongly issued to the petitioner and his wife notwithstanding that they were Indian citizens. S. I. Padgaonkar advised the petitioner to apply for naturalization under Section 6 (1) of the Citizenship Act read with Rule 17 (1) of the Citizenship Rules. Acting on the advice of S. I. Padgaonkar, the petitioner filled in form No. XII prescribed under Rule 17 (1). Even in that form, however, he stated that he was an Indian citizen by birth. A similar form was filled in by his wife. The two forms were forwarded to the Secretary, Ministry of Home Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi through the Collector of Sholapur. On August 18, 1961, the Additional Collector, Sholapur returned the forms to the petitioner directing him to send the same directly to the Government of India. The petitioner, therefore, sent the two forms directly to the Secretary Ministry of Home Affairs, Government of India, New Delhi. The Government of India returned the forms with a remark that as the affidavits in support of the two forms did not bear the same date. The forms were returned. Nothing happened thereafter till the year 1964.

5. On July 18, 1964, the District Superintendent of Police, Sholapur once again called upon the petitioner to obtain a passport and apply for extension of time of his stay in India. The petitioner, who had not consulted any lawyer or taken any legal advice till this stage, thought it necessary to take legal advice. He was advised then that as he was an Indian Citizen, he had not to apply under Section 6 (1) of the Citizenship Act. He also wrote a letter to the Assistant Secretary, General Administration Department Government of Maharashtra, Bombay on September 24, 1964 submitting that the residential permits were wrongly and illegally issued to him in the past and that he should be treated as an Indian citizen as he was always an Indian citizen. The petitioner was directed by a letter dated December 30, 1964 by the District Superintendent of Police to give particulars about himself and his wife claiming to be citizens under the Constitution in answer to the questionnaire sent to him. In that reply the petitioner's father's nationality was described as "Not known but domiciled in India".

6. Notwithstanding this, however, on July 15, 1965, the District Superintendent of Police, Sholapur informed the petitioner that the Government of Maharashtra had not considered the request of the petitioner to be treated as an Indian citizen for the reason that the details about the father of the petitioner were not known. The petitioner then sent a letter to the Government of Maharashtra on September 27, 1965 giving all the details about himself and his father and the circumstances in which he and his wife had filled up previously certain forms. That letter runs as follows:—

"68, Railway Lines,
Sholapur.

Dated: 27-9-1965

From

Mr. K. S. Irani,
68, Railway Lines,
Sholapur.

To

The Under Secretary,
The Govt. of Maharashtra, General Administration Department, Sachivalaya,
Bombay.
Subject: Request for grant of Indian citizenship.

Sir,

I sent an application on 24-9-1964 to Your Honour for grant of Indian citizenship to me. I had stated in that application that I was born in Bombay in the year 1922 and educated in Engineering College, Poona. I have given all the details about myself and parents in that application. I and my wife being Indian citizens, it was not necessary for me and my wife to get registered as Indian Nationals, when we are already Indian citizens. But when the District Superintendent of Police, Sholapur intimated to my mother, my wife and myself in 1961 to get registered as Iranian Nationals, we got ourselves, by misunderstanding, so registered.

When I sent my application dated 24-9-1964 referred to above, I had sent certificates and forms duly filled in along with the application. I have received a letter No. 79/IP/937/SB of 1965 dated 15th July 1965 from the District Superintendent of Police, Sholapur that my application dated 24-9-1964 referred to above to the General and Administration Department, Government of Maharashtra could not be considered for the reasons stated in the D. S. P.'s letter dated 15th July 1965 referred to above.

It appears grant of Indian citizenship has been withheld from me and my wife mainly because the authorities require additional information about my father.

My father, late Sorabji Kaikobad Irani came to India from Iran in about 1902, when he was 17 or 18 years old. He was called to India for assisting in Hotel business by his eldest sister, who was staying in Bombay and who is not living now. My father's younger sister Gulbai Home Driver aged about 70 is at present staying at Poona in Camp area. She has been staying in Poona since childhood.

My father died in 1922 in Sassoon Hospital, Poona, when I was 7 months old. My parents were married in India in about 1913 and I was born in 1922. My father never went back to Iran, after he came to India in 1902.

My father's sister Gulbai Home Driver who is staying in Camp area gave me the above information about my father.

I feel assured that the information supplied above will satisfy Your Honour that impediments in the way of grant of Indian citizenship to myself and my wife as mentioned in the letter dated 15th July 1965 of the D. S. P., Sholapur referred to above can very well be removed and early orders may be passed in my case and that of my wife regarding the grant of Indian citizenship.

Since, as stated in the D. S. P.'s letter dated 15th July 1965 my wife's case depends upon my claim to Indian domicile, this application may be treated as one on behalf of myself and my wife.

I request that Your Honour will give an early and favourable decision in the matter.

I beg to remain,

Sir,

Yours most obedient servant,

Sd/- K. S. Irani."

Surprisingly, the Government of Maharashtra rejected the request of the petitioner to be treated as a citizen of India; and the petitioner was informed about this decision by the District Superintendent of Police on April 21, 1966. The petitioner asked the Government of Maharashtra by his letter dated April 28, 1966 to furnish him the reasons as to why he was not being treated as the citizen of India.

7. The petitioner also tried to know more about his citizenship and was advised that he should obtain a domicile certificate and the certificate of citizenship from the taluka Magistrate, North Sholapur. Accordingly, he obtained a domicile certificate on July 8, 1966 which runs as follows:—

Sholapur 8-7-66.

CERTIFICATE OF AGE, NATIONALITY, DOMICILE, ETC.

(Issued by Authorities in the State of Maharashtra)

On submission of the proof noted below:—

It is hereby certified that Shri Kekhasarao Sorabji Irani was born on the 19th day of April in the year one thousand nine hundred and twenty two only at Bombay Taluka Bombay District Bombay in the State of Maharashtra within the territory of India or of Maharashtra that he is a CITIZEN OF INDIA that he is domiciled in the State of Maharashtra (add, if necessary) by reason of birth that he belongs to community Parshi.

Particulars of Proof submitted.

A Answers given by the applicant on the form of questionnaire prescribed.

B Birth certificate issued by the Public Vaccination Medical Practitioner, Bombay.

C Affidavits or Declaration of by the applicant.

Dated at Sholapur this 8th day of July 1966.

(Seal of the Taluka Executive Magistrate,

Sd/- 8/7

Taluka Executive Magistrate, North Sholapur".

It is clear from the certificate that the Taluka Magistrate gave the certificate after considering the answers given by the petitioner in the form of questionnaire prescribed for obtaining the domicile certificate, birth certificate issued by the Public Vaccination Practitioner, Bombay, affidavits made by the petitioner and the certificate of birth registry from Assistant Health Officer, Greater Bombay.

8. Though he obtained this certificate, the petitioner's troubles did not end. He received from the District Superintendent of Police a letter on August 19, 1967, more than a year after he obtained the aforesaid domicile certificate. The letter sounds rather curious. The letter stated:—

"I have the honour to inform you that the Government desire whether you and your wife are still interested in acquiring Indian citizenship. If so, you are requested to apply afresh as your old application is out-dated".

By his letter dated August 30, 1967, the petitioner replied that as the petitioner and his wife were Indian citizens, there was no necessity for them to make any application for citizenship.

9. In spite of this, on March 26, 1968, the petitioner received a letter from the District Magistrate, Sholapur calling upon the petitioner to attend his office on March 28, 1968 "to receive instructions in making an application for grant of a certificate of naturalization under S. 6 (1) of the Citizenship Act and in producing the requisite documents along with the said application". The petitioner did not attend the office. He sent a letter on April 26, 1968 reiterating that he was already an Indian citizen; and he could not be compelled to apply for naturalization, bringing to the attention of the District Magistrate the fact that he had already obtained certificate of age, nationality and domicile, a copy of which was forwarded to the District Magistrate along with the letter.

10. It is strange, however, that instead of accepting the certificate, the authorities took the extraordinary step of trying to take back the certificate of domicile issued by the Taluka Magistrate from the possession of the petitioner, so that he should be prohibited from making use of the said document as evidence of his status. The Tahsildar, North Sholapur, who is also the Taluka Magistrate, North Sholapur, by his letter dated... April 1968 called upon the petitioner to attend his office with the certificate of nationality and domicile dated July 8, 1966. At this stage, the petitioner apprehended that there was a sinister move to deprive him of his certificate of nationality and domicile. He contacted his legal advisers at Bombay. They advised him not to produce the certificate of domicile before the Taluka Magistrate. On July 5, 1968, the Tahsildar wrote a further letter which runs as follows:—

"NOTICE"

No. O. P. L-M-68
5-7-68.

To

Shri K. S. Irani,
Sholapur.

From

Tahsildar, Sholapur.

Sir,

You have not produced domicile certificate upto 16th May 1968 as promised by you on 8th May 1968. You are therefore requested to produce the same on or before the 10th July 1968. You are therefore informed that if you fail to do so severe action will be taken against you and as per Government Rules domicile certificate will be taken back from you.

Sd/-

Tahsildar, South Sholapur".

11. On receipt of this letter, the petitioner filed the above petition in this Court on July 30, 1968 under Art. 226 of the Constitution of India submitting that he was being harassed unnecessarily by the Police and the Government authorities from 1960 onwards.

12. In the petition, after setting out the facts mentioned hereinabove, he contended that having regard to the facts of birth and subsequent life of the petitioner, his status as a citizen of India under Art. 5 of the Constitution of India was established beyond a shadow of doubt. He submitted that he was domiciled in India at the time of the commencement of the Constitution having been born in India in 1922 and having been brought up in India, educated in India and carrying on business permanently and living permanently in India. He also submitted that his conduct in filling up the forms under the Registration of Foreigners Rules and under Section 6 of the Citizenship Act was not voluntary and was as a result of illegal pressure and threat by the police officers, that even in these forms, he had mentioned the true fact, viz., that his nationality was Indian and hence his status as a citizen of India, was not affected by filling up those forms. He, however, apprehended that the authorities including respondent No. 1, the State of Maharashtra, respondent No. 2 the District Superintendent of Police, Sholapur and respondent No. 3, the Taluka Magistrate, North Sholapur, Sholapur were contemplating immediate action which would be inconsistent with his status as an Indian citizen. He alleged in the petition that his fundamental rights as a citizen of India were in jeopardy due to the threatened action on the part of the respondents. He, therefore, prayed that it should be declared that he is a citizen of India and entitled to all the protection and rights guaranteed to the citizen of India under the Constitution of India. He also prayed for an order restraining respondent No. 1, the State of Maharashtra, respondent No. 2, the District Superintendent of Police, and respondent No. 3, the Taluka Magistrate, North Sholapur, Sholapur from deporting the petitioner out of India and/or forcing him to take passport of any foreign country and/or taking any action which may be inconsistent with the constitutional status of the petitioner as a citizen of India. He prayed for a further injunction restraining the respondents from calling upon the petitioner to surrender the certificate of nationality and domicile given to him.

13. The petition was admitted by this Court on August 14, 1968. The respondents did not care to file any affidavit in reply to the petition till January 23, 1970. On that day, however, respondent No. 3, the Taluka Magistrate, who was also the Assistant Electoral Registration Officer, Sholapur City South Assembly Constituency, Sholapur, called upon the petitioner to show cause why the objection to the inclusion of his name in the electoral roll should not be accepted. The objection was on the ground that the petitioner was not a citizen of India. The petitioner then wrote a letter informing respondent No. 3 that the above petition was pending in this Court; and as the petitioner had exercised his franchise at all the general elections previously, he should not be deprived of his franchise illegally. He reiterated that he was a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution of India and he was protected by Art. 5 of the Constitution of India. In spite of this reply, the name of the petitioner was deleted from the electoral list. He, therefore, filed Civil application No. 348 of 1971 alleging that respondent No. 3 had committed contempt of this Court in omitting the petitioner's name from the list.

14. It was not before June 21, 1971 that the respondent filed their affidavit in reply to resist the petition. On that day, the Under Secretary to Government of Maharashtra, General Administration Department filed an affidavit in reply vaguely denying the allegations made by the petitioner with regard to his birth, education, upbringing occupation and living in India and calling upon the petitioner to produce all the relevant papers without making any serious attempt to repel any of the submissions made by the petitioner under Art. 5 of the Constitution of India. Notwithstanding the specific allegations against Sub-Inspector Joshi and Sub-Inspector Padgaonkar, the respondents did not care to file any affidavit of those officers. The Under Secretary filed the affidavit in reply merely denying the allegations made without stating on what basis he was denying those allegations. The Under Secretary, who did not claim any personal knowledge about the facts alleged in the petition, filed the affidavit in reply stating that the allegations were "not admitted" and yet, he relied merely on the forms filled up by the petitioner and his wife under Section 6 (1) of the Citizenship Act, 1955 and the Registration of Foreigners Rules. He also relied on certain directions to cancel the said certificate issued to the Taluka Executive Magistrate. In paragraph 4 of his affidavit in reply, he said:—

"The Superintendent of Police reported to the Collector in his letter dated 9th October 1967 that the applicants were born and brought up in India and there was nothing adverse against them and that he had no objection to consider the request of the applicants. The Superintendent of Police obtained fresh applications from the applicants and submitted them to the Government together with a fresh report. The Government on receipt of the said report vide their letter in G. A. D. No. CTZ(N) 49/61 dated 1-2-1968, requested the District Magistrate to ask the applicants to apply for naturalization in Form XII of the Citizenship Rules, 1956 to the Government of Maharashtra with requisite information and documents. It was pointed out in the said letter that the domicile and citizenship certificate obtained by the petitioner from the Taluka Executive Magistrate North Sholapur were quite incorrect and the Taluka Executive Magistrate was directed to cancel the said certificate".

In paragraph 26, however, he stated:

"I however say that the District Magistrate, Sholapur directed the Taluka Executive Magistrate to cancel the certificate of domicile issued by him to the petitioner for the reason that the petitioner was an Iranian national and was registered as a foreigner".

The respondents have not cared to place before the Court the so-called directions issued by the District Magistrate to the Taluka Executive Magistrate.

15. Mr. Naik, who appeared for the respondents, produced before us a file from the Sachivalaya, which showed that the Under Secretary, General Administration Department, had informed the District Magistrate that it was not correct on the part of the Taluka Magistrate to have issued a certificate of domicile and nationality to the petitioner; and the District Magistrate was advised: "The said certificate may be cancelled immediately under intimation to Government. The circumstances under which the said certificate was issued may also be explained". Mr. Naik relying on this letter argued that in pursuance of these directions, the District Magistrate must have issued instructions or directions to the Taluka Magistrate; and accordingly, the Taluka Magistrate called upon the petitioner to return the domicile certificate. The Under Secretary has submitted in the affidavit that the domicile certificate issued by the Taluka Magistrate was invalid because the petitioner and his wife had applied under Section 6 (1) of the Citizenship Act and were registered under the Registration of Foreigners Rules in the Office of the District Superintendent of Police at Sholapur. He has further submitted in the affidavit in reply that because the petitioner "who has been registered as an Iranian national and has refused to comply with the request made by the Government of Maharashtra to put in an application for naturalization under Section 6 of the Citizenship Act", he was not entitled to any relief prayed for in the petition.

16. At the outset, it is necessary to observe that we are amazed at the manner in which the submissions made by the petitioner since 1960 have been dealt with by the Police Department and by the General Administration Department of the Government of Maharashtra. It is shocking to see that by executive instructions, directions are given by the General Administration Department to the District Magistrate to cancel a certificate of domicile issued by a Taluka Magistrate. Issuing of a domicile and nationality certificate, which consists of important legal evidence of nationality, citizenship and domicile of a person, is a judicial function. If at all there was something wrong with the certificate, the District Magistrate ought to have been asked to call for the papers and see whether the order was properly passed under Section 435 of the Criminal P. C.; and if the District Magistrate was satisfied that the certificate was wrongly or illegally issued, he ought to have made a report to this Court under Section 438 of the Criminal P. C. Disregarding all these provisions and the functions of the Taluka Magistrate, who is an Executive Magistrate under the Criminal P. C. it pains us to note — instructions have been issued, without even hearing the petitioner, to cancel the certificate; and the Taluka Magistrate proceeded to call upon the petitioner to give back the certificate in a most extraordinary manner. It is in these circumstances that the petitioner, who claims to be a citizen of India and about whose citizenship we have no doubt whatsoever, was compelled to file this petition before us about the callous manner in which he was being deprived of his certificate of domicile and nationality by officers, who are admittedly acting under the Government of Maharashtra in the General Administration Department as stated by the Under Secretary in his affidavit in reply. We asked Mr. Naik to point out any provision of law under which such instructions could be given by the Government to the District Magistrate or to the Taluka Magistrate. He had to concede there was none.

17. The next question is whether the fact (1) that the petitioner and his wife filled up forms under the Registration of Foreigners Rules; (2) that they further filled forms under the Citizenship Act, 1955; (3) that the petitioner's mother claimed to be an Iranian national and obtained an Iranian passport; and (4) that the petitioner refused to apply for naturalization on the ground that he was already a citizen of India, are grounds on which the petitioner could be considered as a foreigner.

18. The petitioner claims citizenship under Art. 5 of the Constitution of India which runs as follows:

"At the commencement of this Constitution, every person who has his domicile in the territory of India and

(a) who was born in the territory of India; or

(b) either of whose parents was born in the territory of India; or

(c) who has been ordinarily resident in the territory of India for not less than five years immediately preceding such commencement, shall be a citizen of India".

The petitioner claims to be a citizen both under clause (a) and clause (c) of Art. 5 as he was born in the territory of India in 1922, as stated above; and after he attained his majority, he made India his permanent home; and, therefore, his domicile was in the territory of India. It is also his contention that he has been ordinarily resident in the territory of India for not less than 5 years immediately preceding the commencement of the Constitution.

19. As stated above, the affidavit in reply merely challenged the petitioner to produce all the relevant documents. There is no effective denial of the facts alleged in the petition. At the hearing of the petition, the Counsel for the petitioner produced before us for perusal the petitioner's birth certificate, his school certificate, the diploma of engineering given to him by the Engineering College at Poona and other documents referred to in the petition. The documents fully supported the averments made in the petition. His father died when he was only 7 months old. It is clear from the facts stated above that even his father had come to India to settle down permanently in India. Perhaps, his domicile was also India, as there is no evidence whatsoever before us to show that he ever went back to Iran after he once came to India to manage the restaurant of his sister. The mere fact that the petitioner's mother described herself as an Iranian or obtained an Iranian passport would not change the domicile of the father of the petitioner. Apart from that, the petitioner was not only born in India, brought up in India, educated in India, but after he attained majority, he served in the ordnance factory and started a business of his own in Sholapur in 1947 making India his permanent home. His wife was also permanently residing in India. He had never left India after his birth.

20. Having regard to the above facts, which are not at all effectively or properly traversed by the respondents, we have no doubt in our mind that at the commencement of the Constitution, i.e., on November 26 1949, the petitioner was domiciled in India. He became a citizen of India under Art. 5 as he was born in the territory of India and he had been ordinarily residing in the territory of India for not less than five years immediately preceding the commencement. "By domicile," as remarked by Lord Cranworth in Whicker v. Hume, (1858) 7 HLC 124 at p. 160.

"We mean home, the permanent home; and if you do not understand your permanent home, I am afraid that no illustration drawn from foreign writers or foreign languages will very much help you to it".

A more sophisticated definition of domicile is that it "is a conception of law which, though founded on circumstances of fact, gives to those circumstances an interpretation frequently different from that which a layman would give to them and it is a conception of law employed for the purpose of establishing a connection for certain legal purposes between an individual and the legal system of the territory with which he either has the closest connection in fact or is considered by law so to have because of his dependence on some other person".

The American Law Institute has provided a useful definition of domicile as "the place, generally the home, which the law assigns a person for certain legal purposes". This Court and the Supreme Court have applied the definition of domicile given by Mr. Justice Chitty in Craigish v. Craigish, (1892) 3 Ch 180 at p. 192, viz.,

"That place is properly the domicile of a person in which his habitation is fixed without any present intention of removing therefrom".

See Central Bank of India Ltd. v. Ram Narain, (1955) 1 SCR 697 = (AIR 1955 SC 36) and Michael Anthony Rodrigues v. State of Bombay, 58 Bom LR 825 = (AIR 1956 Bom 729).

21. Applying any of these definitions, it is clear from the facts of this case relating to the birth, conduct and life of the petitioner that he must be considered to have had Indian domicile prior to the commencement of the Constitution. His permanent home was in India from his birth and particularly from the time he attained his majority. Even assuming that his domicile of origin was Persia or Iran, as his father and mother hailed from Iran, his occupation is carried on in India and he and his family have been residing in Sholapur permanently and hence in law he acquired a domicile of choice in India prior to the commencement of the Constitution. The respondents have not been able to place any material before us which shows any present intention of the petitioner of removing himself from India or leaving the shores of India.

22. It is, however, contended by Mr. Naik on behalf of the respondents that it is not open to the petitioner to contend that he was a citizen of India as he had signed the forms referred to above under the Registration of Foreigners Rules and Section 6 (1) of the Citizenship Act. There is no merit in this contention, because, as stated above, the petitioner has clearly adumbrated in his petition the facts and circumstances in which he was made to sign these forms. It is also clear from these forms that even when signing these forms, he has correctly stated that he had no previous nationality and he was always from his birth an Indian citizen.

23. Mr. Naik submits that the story of the petitioner that he was induced by coercion and pressure by the police officers to sign these forms is a cock and bull story inasmuch as the petitioner was running a restaurant and store at Sholapur and was clever enough to get a certificate of nationality and domicile from the Taluka Magistrate suppressing these facts. There is no substance in this contention, because the petitioner had not suppressed any of the facts. On the contrary, when he was oppressed by the repeated blunders of the police officers in asking him to apply under the Citizenship Act and to register himself as a foreigner, he took legal advice and obtained the certificate of domicile and nationality. Even in the forms signed by him, as stated above, he described himself as a citizen of India.

24. Moreover, once the facts establish that he was a citizen of India under Art. 5 of the Constitution of India, it is now well settled that it is only the Central Government which has jurisdiction to decide whether he has acquired foreign citizenship. This question has to be decided by the Central Government as provided by Rule 30 of the Rules framed under the Citizenship Act, 1955. Unless the Central Govt. decides this question, such a person cannot be treated as a foreigner and cannot be deported from the territories of India. See State of U. P. v. Rahamatullah, AIR 1971 SC 1382 in which case, Rahmatullah was arrested for overstaying in India as a foreigner on July 11, 1963. On March 6, 1965 he was charged by the City Magistrate, Varanasi with the commission of an offence punishable under Section 14 of the Foreigners Act. The prosecution alleged that he was a Pakistani national and had on April 1, 1965 entered into India on a Pakistani passport dated March 15, 1955 and Indian visa dated March 22, 1955 obtained by him as a Pakistani national and even after expiry of the permitted period, he was overstaying without a valid passport or visa. The accused pleaded in that case that though he had entered India on a Pakistani passport, he was not a Pakistani national. On the contrary, he claimed to be an Indian citizen and, therefore, rightfully living in India. According to him, he had been born in India of Indian parents in 1932 and was an Indian citizen under the Constitution. The High Court of Allahabad in revision set aside the conviction ordered by the Magistrate and confirmed by the Sessions Judge as the High Court found on the facts relating to the life and conduct of the accused that he was not a foreigner when he entered India though he had obtained a Pakistani passport. The High Court also held that having not entered as a foreigner, his case was outside paragraph 7 of the Foreigners Order, 1948, made under Section 3 of the Foreigners Act. The order of acquittal passed by the High Court was confirmed by the Supreme Court after reviewing several authorities relating to the question of acquisition of foreign citizenship by a citizen of India; and the Supreme Court observed:—

"It seems to us to be obvious that till the Central Government determined the question of the respondent having acquired Pakistan nationality and had thereby lost Indian nationality, he could not be treated as a foreigner and no penal action could be taken against him on the basis of his status as a foreigner, being a national of Pakistan".

In our view, therefore, even in the instant case, the respondents were acting illegally in treating the petitioner as a foreigner notwithstanding the clear facts of his life and conduct which showed that he was a citizen of India. Section 2 (a) of the Foreigners Act, 1946 defines a foreigner as a person who is not a citizen of India. Having regard to all the facts and circumstances of the case including the forms relied on by the respondents, we find that there is nothing on the record before us to show that the petitioner was not a citizen of India.

25. We must, therefore, declare that the petitioner was a citizen of India at the commencement of the Constitution of India and continues to be so and is entitled to all the protection and rights guaranteed to a citizen of India under the Constitution of India. The respondents must also, therefore, be prohibited by an injunction from deporting the petitioner out of India and/or forcing him to take passport of any foreign country and/or taking any action which may be inconsistent with the constitutional status of the petitioner as a citizen of India on the basis of any of the orders referred to in the petition. The petition succeeds. Rule absolute. The respondents to pay the costs of the petitioner.

26. In view of these reliefs granted to the petitioner, the Counsel for the petitioner does not press for the reliefs prayed for in Civil Application No. 348 of 1971. Civil Application No. 348 of 1971, is, therefore, allowed to be withdrawn.

Order accordingly.

Suit No. 401 of 1964, D/- 27-7-1971.

Index Note:— (A) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 91 and 92 — The expression "terms" of a contract in S. 91 and the corresponding expression in S. 92 have no application to a statement contained in a writing which is in the nature of a condition precedent to the very formation of that contract.

Brief Note:— (A) The expression "terms" in Sections 91 and 92 must relate to statements, assertions or representations contained in a written contract which relate to the subject-matter of the contract and to something to be done or not to be done under the contract, and has no application to a provision in the nature of condition precedent to the very existence or formation of a contract. Index Note:— (B) Evidence Act (1872), S. 92, Proviso (6) — An extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of showing the circumstances in which the document came to be prepared and executed with a view to arrive at the true effect of the transaction to which the document relates.

Brief Note:— (B) An extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of finding out the meaning of the words which have actually been employed, or what is the same thing, in order to translate the language of the document by assigning a definite meaning to terms capable of such explanation with a view to arrive at the true effect of the transaction in question in cases in which the words used are such that one might suspect that they do not convey the intention correctly or in other words, there is some doubt as to what the words mean or how they are to be applied to the circumstances of the writer or to the facts existing at the time when the document was executed. (Para 3)

valent expression, it would be open to the Court, and indeed, it would be its duty to extract the intention of the parties and to see whether there is cogent evidence to indicate that the parties intended a binding contractual obligation to come into existence even before a writing was executed. M. P. Laud with A. H. Mehta and M. B. Rele, for Plaintiff; M. H. Shah with A. N. Mody, G. A. Thakkar and A. B. Divan, for Defendants Nos. 1 to 5.

ORDER:— Whilst the first plaintiff was being examined in-chief by Mr. Laud and was deposing to an interview between himself and plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 accompanied by a broker named Narayandas Budhwani and the first defendant and one Chandrakant Thakore, he deposed to the terms which were offered by the first defendant in regard to the businesses of Femina Stores and Meghdoot Restaurant which were proposed to be taken by the Plaintiffs under a conducting agreement, along with an option to purchase the same. The first plaintiff deposed that after those terms were proposed, there was a discussion which went on for about half-an-hour. The first plaintiff was then put a question, "what happened then?" At that stage Mr. Shah on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 raised an objection to the effect that in view of the plaintiffs' own case in para 7 of the plaint that the agreement in question had been reduced into writing in the form of annexure 'A' to the Plaint, no oral evidence could be permitted to be given having regard to the provisions of Sections 91 and 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. I have heard counsel on both sides at considerable length on that question of admissibility. Mr. Laud's contention on that question was twofold. First he contended that S. 91 barred the leading of oral evidence in cases in which a contract had been reduced into writing only in regard to the "terms" of that contract, and the statement contained in the concluding part of annexure 'A' to the Plaint that the transaction was subject to an agreement to conduct-cum-sale being entered within a month cannot be said to be a term of the contract between the parties. Mr. Laud pointed out that all the other statements contained in annexure 'A' to the plaint were terms of the contract which were in conformity that the oral contract pleaded in para 6 of the plaint. For that purpose, Mr. Laud also relied on Explanation 3 to Section 91 of the Evidence Act. The second contention of Mr. Laud was that he was in any event entitled to lead oral evidence for the purpose of showing the circumstances in which the provision relating to the execution of an agreement within a month came to be inserted in annexure 'A' to the plaint under proviso 6 to Section 92 of the Evidence Act which permits any fact to be proved which shows in what manner the language of a document is related to existing facts.

2. I will now proceed to deal with the first contention of Mr. Laud. I may state at the very outset that neither counsel has cited any authorities before me except authorities in the nature of standard works and dictionary to show what is the precise legal connotation of the expression "terms" in relation to a contract. Turning first to the plain language of Sections 91 and 92 of the Evidence Act, in my opinion, when those sections refer to the "terms" of a contract they necessarily postulate that there is a contract in existence, the statements contained in which are in the nature of terms. As a matter of plain language and grammatical construction I have, therefore no hesitation in taking the view that the expression "terms" of a contract in Section 91 and the corresponding expression in Section 92, have no application to a statement contained in a writing which is in the nature of a condition precedent to the very formation of that contract. It is the contention of Mr. Shah himself that the concluding words of annexure 'A' to the Plaint are in the nature of a condition precedent to the very formation of the contract, and that condition not having been fulfilled, no contract ever came into existence. As against that, it is the case of Mr. Laud for the plaintiffs that the statement contained in the concluding words of annexure "A" is a mere expression of a desire as to how the transaction was to go through. In either view of the matter, therefore, it cannot be said to be a term of the contract. In Murray's English Dictionary (1919 edn.) the expression "term" is given as having several meanings some of which have relation to the concept of a period of time with which we are not concerned. One of the meanings which however is applicable to the present case is given as "limiting condition" and the plural of the expression "term" is given as having the meaning of conditions or stipulations limiting what is proposed to be granted or done. It is then stated that the expression is rarely used in the singular, and the meaning of the expression when used in the singular is stated to be "that which is so required or demanded, a condition or prerequisite of something". The expression "terms" in the plural, therefore, means according to Murray's Dictionary, a condition or stipulation which limits what is to be granted or done, and in my opinion, therefore, it cannot apply to something which is in the nature not of a limitation of what is to be done under a contract, but of a condition precedent to the very formation of the contract. In distinguishing between "representations" and "terms" in relation to a contract, Anson on the Principles of the English Law of Contract (22nd edn.) at p. 114 appears to give to the expression "terms" the meaning of representation or assurances intended to be an integral part of the agreement. This again would, in my opinion, show that it can have no application to a statement or representation which is in the nature of a condition precedent to the very formation of the contract. On pp. 119-120 Anson deals with the distinction in the law relating to sale of goods between a condition and a warranty, but that I am afraid, is not of much assistance for the purpose of ascertaining the meaning of the expression "terms" used in Ss. 91 and 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. In dealing with the question of classification of terms, Chitty on Contracts (23rd edn.) Vol. I p. 279 para. 595 also deals with the distinction between conditions and warranties and the statements made in that paragraph are, therefore, also not of direct assistance for the purpose of determining the point of admissibility with which I am dealing. This much would, however, follow from the way in which the distinction between conditions and warranties has been dealt with both in Anson as well as in Chitty, that the expression "terms" connotes both conditions as well as warranties and that contracts are normally made up of a number of terms, some of which are regarded as major or essential terms and are, therefore, called conditions, and others are regarded as of minor importance and therefore, called warranties. From this also it would follow that the expression "terms" applies to provisions contained in contracts which have already come into existence and are legally enforceable. The proposition that Sections 91 and 92 are not applicable to just anything and everything that is contained in a written contract does not really need authority, but if authority were needed it is to be found in the decision of a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Venkatasubblah Chetty v. Govindarajulu Naidu, (1908) ILR 31 Mad 45, where it was held that oral evidence was admissible to show that the party liable on the contract contracted for himself and as the agent of his partners, and that such partners are liable to be sued on the contract though no allusion is made to them in the written contract. In that connection, referring to Ss. 91 and 92 of the Indian Evidence Act, it was stated in the Judgment (at p. 47) that the question as to who the contracting parties were was not one of the "terms of a contract" within the meaning of those sections. I hold that the expression "terms" in Ss. 91 and 92 of the Indian Evidence Act must relate to statements, assertions or representations contained in a written contract which relate to the subject-matter of the contract and to something to be done or not to be done under the Contract, and has no application to a provision in the nature of a condition precedent to the very existence or formation of a contract. On that ground alone, therefore, the objection raised by Mr. Shah to the admissibility of oral evidence for the purpose of showing the circumstances in which that provision came to be inserted in the writing annexure 'A' to the plaint must be rejected, and it is really not necessary for me to deal with the second ground which is urged by Mr. Laud to repel that objection. I will, however, briefly deal with the same also as it has been argued at some length.

3. The real question which arises in connection with the same is in regard to the scope and application of proviso 6 to Section 92 of the Evidence Act. It has been contended by Mr. Shah on behalf of defts. Nos. 1 to 5 that the said proviso must be limited in its application to cases which fall within one or other of the sections of Chapter VI of the Evidence Act which follow that proviso viz. Sections 93 to 98 thereof. The scope of Sections 91 to 98 of the Indian Evidence Act, including proviso 6 to Section 92 has been considered by me in the case of Belapur Co. Ltd. v. Maharashtra State Farming Corporation, AIR 1969 Bom 231 in which after considering various authorities on the point, I have summarised the legal position in the following terms (para 24):-

"The propositions that emerge from a consideration of these authorities on the subject are as follows: (1) Cases in the English Courts of Chancery have no application to the law of India as laid down in the Evidence Act. (2) In view of the provisions of Section 91 of the Evidence Act, no extrinsic evidence, oral or documentary, can be admitted to prove the terms of a contract, grant or other disposition of property, except the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents when admissible under the relevant provisions of that Act and the court must find out the expressed intention of the parties. The fundamental rule of construction is to ascertain the intention from the words used in the document which is considered to be the written declaration of the mind of the author. (3) If the words are clear in expressing that intention and the language applies to existing facts, extrinsic evidence is not admissible for construing the deed or for ascertaining the real intention of the parties e.g. surrounding circumstances cannot be considered with a view to holding that a document which is on the face of it a sale deed was intended to operate as a mortgage. (4) If, however, the words are such that one may suspect that they do not convey the intention correctly or in other words, there is some doubt as to what the words mean or how they are to be applied to the circumstances of the writer or to the facts existing at the time when the document was executed, extrinsic evidence is admissible, both under proviso (6) to Section 92 of the Evidence Act as well as in English law. In such cases, extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of finding out the meaning of the words which have actually been employed, or what is same thing, in order to translate the language of the document by assigning a definite meaning to terms capable of such explanation or by connecting them with the proper subject-matter, or in other words for the purpose of throwing light on the meaning of the words used with a view to arrive at the true effect of the transaction to which the document relates. The whole object in such cases is to place the Court, as near as may be, in the position of the parties to the document. (5) The subsequent conduct of the parties is, however, not relevant or admissible for the purpose of construing a written document. (6) If the language employed in the document is ambiguous, the question of admissibility or otherwise of extraneous evidence would be regulated by the provisions of Sections 93 to 98 of the Evidence Act. The plain meaning of the word "ambiguous" is, obscure, or of double meaning (Concise Oxford Dictionary). (7) In view of Section 92 of the Evidence Act, oral evidence can, in no event, be admitted to contradict, vary add to or subtract from the terms of the document, as far as the parties to that document are concerned."

I have also held (page 25) that proviso 6 to Section 92 of the Evidence Act is not an exception to the rule laid down in the main part of the section, as a proviso normally is, but is a substantive provision which itself lays down the law relating to the admissibility of extrinsic evidence as an aid to the construction of a document in cases in which it is necessary to find out how the document is related to existing facts. I have further held that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the question of contradicting, varying, adding to or subtracting from the terms of the document with which the main part of Section 92 deals, and does not take away or qualify anything that would, but for that proviso, have fallen within the substantive portion of that section. The position in regard to proviso (6) to Section 92 of the Evidence Act in view of what I have held in Belapur Co.'s case is that extrinsic evidence is admissible under that proviso for the purpose of finding out the meaning of the words which have actually been employed, or what is the same thing, in order to translate the language of the document by assigning a definite meaning to terms capable of such explanation with a view to arrive at the true effect of the transaction in question in cases in which the words used are such that one might suspect that they do not convey the intention correctly or in other words, there is some doubt as to what the words mean or how they are to be applied to the circumstances of the writer or to the facts existing at the time when the document was executed. The words "subject to an agreement to conduct-cum-sale to be entered within a month" used in the concluding part of annexure "A" to the plaint in the present case are capable of two possible meanings: one that the execution of a written agreement within a month was a condition precedent to the very formation of the contract: and the other that it is, the mere expression of a desire as to how the transaction was to go through. It is true that in English law the words "subject to a contract in writing" or equivalent words have generally been construed by courts in England to mean that the agreement is of no legal effect until a written document is executed (Chitty on Contracts (23rd Edn.) Vol. 1 p. 79, and Anson on the Principles of the English Law on Contract (22nd Edn.) pp. 53-54 and Cheshire on the Law of Contract (7th Edn.) p. 33). That, however, is not an inflexible rule. In fact, in the passage from Cheshire where this point is dealt with, it is stated (at p. 33) "Unless there is cogent evidence of a contrary intention, the courts, construe these words so as to postpone the incidence of liability till a formal document has been drawn up and signed," and (at p. 34). "The task of the Courts is to extract the intention of the parties both from the terms of their correspondence and from the circumstances which surround and follow it, and the question of interpretation may thus be stated. Is the preparation of a further document a condition precedent to the creation of a contract or is it an incident in the performance of an already binding obligation?" Referring to an observation of Lord Wright it is further stated in Cheshire (at p. 36) that Judges would always seek to implement and not to defeat reasonable expectations though they could not invent a contract which the parties had been too idle to make for themselves. It is, therefore, clear that the position in English law is that even in cases in which the expression used in a written contract is "subject to a written contract" or other equivalent expression, it would be open to the court, and indeed, it would be its duty to extract the intention of the parties and to see whether there is cogent evidence to indicate that the parties intended a binding contractual obligation to come into existence even before a writing was executed. It was sought to be contended by Mr. Shah that whatever might be the position in English law, the powers of the court in that behalf would be limited in this country by the statutory provisions of Sections 91 and 92 of the Evidence Act, but I see no reason why they should be so limited in view of the terms of proviso (6) to Section 92 of the Evidence Act which is, inter alia, intended to meet precisely such a situation. In fact, as indicated in my judgment in Belapur Co.'s case (para 24) the position in regard to the admissibility of extrinsic evidence under proviso (6) to S. 92 of the Evidence Act as well as in English law appears to be the same. Mr. Shah on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 to 5 relied strongly on the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Harichand v. Govind, AIR 1923 PC 47 where a question very similar to the question which arose before me arose before the Privy Council, the Plaintiff-purchaser contending that the two documents which formed the foundation of the suit constituted a completed contract, and the defendant-vendor urging that it was only in the nature of a provisional agreement conditional on the preparation of a formal document. In the trial court, the defendant had attempted to tender some oral evidence to show what actually took place on the occasion that the parties entered into the agreement relied upon by the plaintiff, but the trial judge had refused the application in a single sentence in these words: "I reject that evidence: irrelevant and inadmissible". The Privy Council took the view that the ruling of the learned trial judge was right and that under Section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act the evidence sought to be led was rightly rejected. It is however, clear from the judgment of the Privy Council that that statement in the judgment was based practically on a concession in the course of the argument before them for it has been stated (at p. 48, col. 2) that no attempt was made on appeal to take exception on behalf of the defendant to that part of the trial judge's order. It is for that reason that with that brief observation, the Privy Council did not think it necessary to refer further to that point. Under these circumstances, I do not consider the decision of the Privy Council in Harichand's case on which Mr. Shah has relied as his "trump card" to be a decision on the point which arises before me. In the event of my being wrong in the view which I have taken above, viz. that the statement contained in the concluding part of annexure "A" to the plaint is not one of the "terms" of the contract between the parties, I would still hold extrinsic evidence to be admissible under proviso (6) to Section 92 of the Indian Evidence Act for the purpose of showing the circumstances in which the said writing came to be prepared and executed, and this statement found place therein, with a view to arrive at the true effect of the transaction to which the document relates. I, therefore, overrule Mr. Shah's objection.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1727 of 1967, D/- 27-7-1971, to set aside order of Officer on Spl. Duty Revenue and Forest Deptt., Sachivalaya, Bombay, D/- 2-2-1967

Index Note: (A) Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act (8 of 1955), S. 2-A — The power under Section 2-A to hear appeal cannot be delegated by the State Government.

Brief Note: (A) The function of making a quasi-judicial decision like the one under Section 2-A cannot be delegated to another person or authority in the absence of statutory provision authorising such delegation. There is no provision in Section 2-A which enables the Officer on Special Duty to entertain appeal. The only authority competent to decide an appeal under Section 2-A (2) is the State Government i.e., the Minister incharge of the department concerned.

The fact that the Minister has countersigned the notes put up by the Officer on Special Duty does not necessarily mean that he applied his mind independently to the facts and contentions as he is required to do in exercise of his power to decide the appeal under S. 2-A. Merely signing below notes or agreeing to a

S. J. Deshpande, for Petitioner; S. P. Kurudukar (for No. 1), A. B. Naik, (for No. 4) and M. R. Kotwal, Asst. Govt. Pleader (for No. 6), for Opponents.

VAIDYA, J.:— This petition under Article 227 of the Constitution of India is directed against an order purporting to be of the Government of Maharashtra communicated to the petitioner's Advocate by an officer of the Government described as the Officer on Special Duty, Revenue and Forest Department in respect of an appeal filed by the petitioner before the Government of Maharashtra under Sec. 2-A of the Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act, 1954. By the impugned letter dated February 3, 1967, the Officer on Special Duty informed the petitioner's Advocate that the appeal filed by the petitioner on July 20, 1964 was disposed of as per Government memorandum dated February 2, 1967 and a note accompanying thereto.

2. The Government memorandum dated February 2, 1967 is addressed to the Collector of Osmanabad with reference to the appeal filed by the petitioner and proceeds to decide the dispute between the petitioner and opponents Nos. 1 and 2 as to whether opponents Nos. 1 and 2 are Kabiz-e-kadims within the meaning of Sec. 2 (1) (e) of the Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act. The memorandum states:—

"Government has given careful consideration to the appeal petition and the arguments advanced in it. It has also examined the arguments which had been advanced by the advocates of the parties in the course of the enquiry made into the appeal petition by the officer on special duty at the instance of Government.

It has perused the written arguments of the parties. For the reasons recorded in the enclosed note, Government considers that the appellant has no case and that no modification of the Tahsildar's order is called for in so far as the land described as survey number 60 of the village Ashiva is concerned, and that in respect of survey No. 1 of Sankaral it needs to be declared that on 20th July 1955 as also on 1st July 1960 Rukminibai widow of Ramsing was entitled to hold it as Kabiz-e-kadim along with Kishansing Pitambarsing and Umraosing and that the shares of the three holders in the lands were as under, etc. etc." The memorandum is signed "by order and in the name of the Governor of Maharashtra" by the Officer on Special Duty, Revenue and Forest Department.

3. The accompanying note is a lengthy note. It gives the checkered history of the litigation between the petitioner and opponents Nos. 1 and 2 since 1897 and the various proceedings before the High Court of Hyderabad and other authorities in the former Hyderabad State and the Revenue Tribunal and this Court. It summarises the arguments of the Advocates for the parties, who appeared and argued personally and also gave written arguments. There is nothing in the note to indicate as to who prepared the note, but it is not disputed that this note was prepared by the Officer on Special Duty, who heard the Advocates for the parties and recorded the written arguments and other materials before him.

4. The said order, memorandum and the note together are challenged in the above petition inter alia on the ground that the deciding authority under Section 2-A of the Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act was the Minister, Revenue Department of the Government of Maharashtra and he had not heard the parties before deciding the matter; and further that the hearing of the appeal by the Officer on Special Duty in the Revenue and Forest Department was incompetent because he was not the State Government, who alone could decide an appeal under Section 2-A of the Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act.

5. As this contention must succeed, it is not necessary for disposal of this petition to set out any other ground or the history of the litigation, which unfortunately commenced in 1897 when Balabal, the predecessor-in-title of the petitioner died. It is enough only to point out that the dispute had once come to this High Court at the instance of opponents Nos. 1, 2 and another as petitioners; and on July 31, 1962 in that matter, which was Special Civil Application No. 1461 of 1961, Chainani, C. J., and K. K. Desai, J., modified an order of the Revenue Tribunal with the following observations:

"It is not disputed that the lands vested in Government after the Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act came into force. The case of the first and third petitioners is that they are entitled to the grant of the lands under Section 6, as they were Kabiz-e-Kadims. Mr. Gupte has invited our attention to the judgment of the Judge of the Paigah Committee delivered on 13-6-1347 Fasli in which there are some observations that the ancestors of the first and third petitioners were in possession of the lands even in the lifetime of Balabai. It is not known on what evidence these observations were made. Mr. Gandhi who appears for the opponent, does not admit that the family of the first and third petitioners was in possession of the lands before they were assumed under Government management. He has contended that even assuming that the petitioners' family was then in possession of the lands, their rights, if any, came to an end when the lands were taken charge of by Government and that as the petitioners subsequently took lease from Government they cannot now claim any rights against the opponent. He has contended that the petitioners cannot, therefore, claim to be Kabiz-e-kadim. The question whether the petitioners are Kabiz-e-kadim and whether they are consequently entitled to the grant of the lands as occupants is, therefore, a disputed question, which can only be decided after proper enquiry. Such an enquiry has been directed by the Revenue Tribunal. We are informed that the officer competent to hold this enquiry is the Deputy Collector. We direct that the Deputy Collector should hold a full and detailed enquiry in the matter. He should allow both the parties to lead evidence and thereafter dispose of the matter as expeditiously as may be possible without paying any regard to the status of any party."

We are told that this Court had to direct the authorities not to have any regard to the status of any of the parties as there were some allegations with regard to the status of opponent No. 1 at that time. Thereafter the Deputy Collector sent it to the legally authorized officer to decide the question under Section 2-A viz. the Tahsildar, Taluka Ausa in District Osmanabad, who by his order dated May 5, 1964 decided the dispute in favour of opponents Nos. 1 and 2 holding that opponent No. 1 was the Kabiz-e-kadim of survey No. 60 of village Ashiya and opponent No. 2 was the Kabiz-e-kadim of survey No. 1 at Sankral. Feeling aggrieved by the said decision, the petitioner carried the appeal to the State Government under Section 2-A of the Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act.

6. Now, it is not disputed that, in connection with the said appeal, it was only the Officer on Special Duty, who heard the arguments of Advocates for the parties on Nov. 23 and 24, 1965, in the course of what he has chosen to describe as "an enquiry" in paragraph 6 of the note accompanying the memorandum, which is referred to above. Under Section 2-A (1) if any question arises whether any person is a Kabiz-e-kadim, permanent tenant or tenant, the State Government or an officer authorized by the Government shall decide the question. Where any question is decided by an officer so authorized by the State Government, any person aggrieved by such decision may file an appeal to the State Government under Section 2-A (2). The Government has not produced any notification authorizing the Officer on Special Duty, Revenue and Forest Department to hear an appeal or to hold any 'inquiry'. There is also nothing in Section 2-A (2) which enables the Government to authorise any such officer to hear the appeal against the decision of a Tahsildar, who admittedly was the officer authorized to decide the question within the meaning of Section 2-A (1).

7. It is a fundamental principle of administration of justice in civilized societies where rule of law is respected that normally the person or authority, who has to decide a question affecting rights and liberties of persons, must give a reasonable and fair opportunity to the parties concerned of being heard by that authority. Ordinarily none should be condemned or prejudiced unheard. It is not disputed that under the rules of business framed under the Constitution of India, the 'State Government' means in practice the Minister in charge of the department concerned. There is nothing in the orders annexed to the petition to show that the Minister in charge of the Revenue Department at the relevant time, who was concerned with the matter for the time being, had anything to do with the appeal. Mr. Kotwal, the learned Assistant Government Pleader, however, produced before us for our perusal the file relating to the matter in the Sachivalaya at Bombay and pointed out that the then Minister for Revenue had signed below the signatures of the Officer on Special Duty on the various notes put up in the file including the final note deciding the appeal and the memorandum disposing of the appeal which was put up to him for his approval. It is true that the then Minister for Revenue Department signed on January 29, 1967 the proposal for communicating the order as in the Government memo kept for his approval; and it is only thereafter that it appears that the Officer on Special Duty wrote the impugned letter dated February 3, 1967 and forwarded the memorandum dated February 2, 1967. It is also true that the memorandum, as stated above, refers to the perusal of the written arguments addressed by the Advocates for the parties. But it is difficult for us to believe that the written arguments and the oral arguments of the Advocates addressed to the Officer on Special Duty on November 23 and 24 of 1965 could have had any influence on the mind of the deciding Minister who passed the final orders, according to the file, on January 29, 1967.

8. The duty of the appellate authorities to apply the mind independently to the contentions of the parties, after giving a reasonable opportunity to the parties to be heard, has been emphasized by Courts in India in many decisions. For instance, in Tuljansa Janardhansa Pawar v. The Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay South, 52 Bom LR 421 = (AIR 1950 Bom 332) Chagla, C. J. and Tendolkar, J., pointed out at p. 423

"When an authority upon whom judicial functions are conferred has to decide or hear a case or an appeal, he can only do so provided he has heard all parties which are likely to be affected by the order which he is going to make. It is a fundamental principle of natural justice that no Judge or no person upon whom judicial powers are conferred can come to a judicial or a quasi-judicial decision without hearing all parties who are to be affected by his decision, and we must always assume that the Legislature who has knowledge of judicial principles and rules of natural justice impliedly, if not expressly, incorporate these rules whenever they confer judicial functions upon a person or an authority. If these rules of natural justice are to be excluded, then we must find in the statute an express provision to that effect". This Court has decided in a number of matters arising from the decisions in similar circumstances under Section 2-A of the Hyderabad Abolition of Inams and Cash Grants Act that the Minister deciding the appeal should give a hearing to the parties in these matters. In special civil applns. Nos. 1928 to 1932 of 1966 and 1415 of 1967 (Bom) decided by Abhyankar and Madon, JJ., it was observed:—

"We may also mention that it is not clear from the record as to which person actually disposed of the appeals. Under the law an appeal lies to the State Government; but the matter seems to have been dealt with and the arguments heard by an Officer on Special Duty. Whether that Officer on Special Duty had the powers to dispose of appeals or the matter had to be decided ultimately by the Minister or some other officer, is not clear from the record. If it so happens that the arguments were heard by one authority while the power to dispose of the appeal vested in some other authority, say the Minister, then the appellate order will also suffer from a serious defect. We are unable to find how the appeals were disposed of on the material placed before us".

In another judgment in special civil applications Nos. 812 and 948 of 1966 (Bom) decided by Abhyankar and Madon, JJ., on November 8, 1968, they observed:

"It is said that the ultimate decision of the appeal is given by the Minister in charge. Thus, the authority deciding the appeal on behalf of the State Government is the Minister in charge. Further, according to the State, the arguments in support of the appeal are heard by the Special Officer, in this case Mr. Ranade. We are unable to understand how an authority empowered to decide the Appeal can decide the matter when the arguments in support of the order or challenging the order are heard by some other authority or person. To ensure proper disposal of any appeal the authority empowered to decide the matter must itself hear the rival contentions of the parties in respect of the matter required to be adjudicated. On this ground also, therefore, the order in appeal suffers from serious defects of procedure which cannot possibly be permitted". Again in special civil application No. 395 of 1965 (Bom), Tarkunde and Gokhale, JJ., observed on January 19, 1966:—

"It appears that the appeal under Section 2-A was heard by the Officer on Special Duty, and Section 2-A provides that any question as to whether any person is a tenant or not shall be decided by the State Government or an Officer authorised by the Government The question, therefore, when it arises, would have to be decided either by the Minister concerned or by the Secretary of the Revenue Department so as to comply with the requirements of Section 2-A".

9. It is a well established principle of law that the function of making a quasi-judicial decision like the one under Section 2-A cannot be delegated to another person or authority in the absence of statutory provision authorizing such delegation. There is no provision in Section 2-A which enabled the Officer on Special Duty in the present case to hold what he described as an 'enquiry'. The only authority competent to decide an appeal under Section 2-A (2) is the State Government. The State Government could not delegate the power to the Officer on Special Duty.

10. It may be that in the absence of any statutory requirement the Minister was free to determine his own procedure reasonably. But that would not entitle him to delegate the power of hearing the parties to a subordinate Officer like the Officer on Special Duty in the Revenue and Forest Department. It is impossible to believe that the arguments, which admittedly were addressed to the Officer on Special Duty in November 1965, could have had any influence on the Minister, who actually decided the appeal in January 1967, as stated above. The fact that he has countersigned the notes put up by the Officer on Special Duty does not necessarily mean that he applied his mind independently to the facts and contentions as he is required to do in exercise of his power to decide the appeal under Section 2-A. Merely signing below notes or agreeing to a note put up by a subordinate officer cannot be said to be a proper or fair or reasonable way of deciding an appeal under Section 2-A. There is nothing in the orders annexed to the petition before us or in the file produced by Mr. Kotwal for our perusal to indicate that the Minister himself had actually applied his mind to the facts and contentions involved in the case.

11. In view of this position, the above petition was adjourned twice to enable the Government to file an affidavit in reply repelling the allegations of non-application of mind on the part of the deciding Minister made by the petitioner and to meet the contention of the petitioner that the Minister, who decided the matter, had not heard him. In spite of these adjournments, however, no affidavit in reply has been filed. It must be, therefore, presumed that the contention raised by the petitioner is correct. There is nothing before us to show that the Minister had personally applied his mind to the oral or written arguments of the parties or to the various contentions raised by the parties. Hearing of the parties by the Officer on Special Duty was not hearing by the Minister. Parties were, therefore, denied a reasonable opportunity of being heard by the Minister deciding the appeal. What has happened in this case attracts the following observations made by Vivian Bose, J., in Harla v. The State of Rajasthan, 1952 SCR 110 at p. 113 = (AIR 1951 SC 467):

"The thought that a decision reached in the secret recesses of a chamber to which the public have no access and to which even their accredited representatives have no access and of which they can normally know nothing, can nevertheless affect their lives, liberty and property by the mere passing of a Resolution without anything more is abhorrent to civilised man. It shocks his conscience."

With respect, the above remarks made regarding a secret Government Resolution may, in the facts and circumstances of this case, be applied to the memorandum disposing of the appeal and the note appended thereto as there is nothing on the record to indicate the process by which the Minister decided the appeal.

12. Now, Section 2-A confers large powers on the State Government and the officers authorized by the State Government to decide (1) whether any land is an inam; (2) whether any inam is held with or without conditions of service; (3) whether any inam is a community service inam or watan; (4) whether a commutation settlement in respect of any watan has or has not been effected; (5) whether any land held as inam is or is not alienable without the permission of the competent authority; or (6) whether any person is a Kabiz-e-kadim, permanent tenant or tenant. These are all, more often than not, complicated questions of facts as well as law. In the instant case, the facts are further complicated by the protracted and hotly contested litigation before the various authorities in the former Hyderabad State and in this State. The legality of the various orders passed in favour of the petitioner and against opponents Nos. 1 and 2 had to be considered very carefully by the deciding authority. We find nothing in the record before us to indicate that the Minister who was the deciding authority had applied his mind to any of these aspects of the case.

13. In view of this conclusion, the order communicated by the Officer on Special Duty on February 3, 1967 and the memorandum dated February 2, 1967 referred to above must be quashed and the matter should be remitted to the Government for disposing of the appeal in accordance with the law and the observations made hereinabove. Rule absolute. No order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

K. J. Abhyankar, for Petitioner.

ORDER:— This is a landlord's petition challenging the order passed by the Extra Assistant Judge, Poona. The respondent is a tenant of the suit premises belonging to the petitioner at a rent of Rs. 17/- per month. Because he was in arrears of rent for more than six months, therefore the petitioner had to serve a notice on the respondent. The notice was dated 17-8-1965 and the respondent was asked to quit by 30-9-1965. The petitioner claimed a sum of Rs. 176-90 p. As the notice was not complied, the suit was filed claiming arrears of rent and possession on three grounds, the first being arrears of rent for more than six months, the second was that the suit premises were required for personal use by the landlord and the third was that the respondent-tenant was keeping the premises locked and had not been using them.

2. The trial Court framed a number of issues on the pleadings of the parties and held that the petitioner had established that the respondent was a defaulter for a period of six months or more. He was of the view that the tenancy of the respondent-tenant was validly terminated under Section 106 of the Transfer of Property Act, though not under Section 12 (2) of the Bombay Rent Act. Accordingly, therefore, the trial Court dismissed the petitioner's suit for possession, but passed a decree for arrears of rent. Against this decree the landlord went in appeal.

3. The appellate Court considered several issues and found that the notice served by the petitioner is not valid, the demand therein being excessive. According to him, the notice being invalid, the tenant cannot be said to be not ready and willing to pay the arrears of rent accrued due upto the date of the notice. He, therefore, did not consider as to whether the respondent was or was not in arrears of rent for a period of more than six months on the date of the notice of demand issued on 17-8-1965 and whether he was not ready and willing to pay the arrears of rent.

4. The trial Court decided against the petitioner on the issue regarding the bona fide requirement by the petitioner as also the issue regarding the respondent not using the premises and keeping them locked. These findings of the trial Court were confirmed by the appellate Court, who dismissed the appeal with costs. This order of the learned Assistant Judge, Poona, is now challenged here by the petitioner-landlord.

5. It is argued by Mr. Abhyankar, learned advocate for the petitioner, that the learned Assistant Judge has committed an error in holding the notice invalid, inasmuch as the notice did not ask for any excessive rent from the tenant. The petitioner-landlord had already obtained a decree from the Small Cause Court, Poona, for a sum of Rs. 207/- and that the tenant was still in arrears of Rs. 293/-. The notice mentioned the amount of Rs. 511-90 p. The tenant had paid Rs. 335/-. Therefore, the petitioner-landlord claimed Rs. 176-90 p. by this notice. The notice is dt. 17-8-1965. The learned Asstt. Judge while considering the validity of the notice observed during the course of his judgment that by the notice of demand the petitioner not only claimed rent upto 15-8-1965, but also claimed rent due upto 15-9-1965. It is contended by Mr. Abhyankar on behalf of the petitioner that this notice was proper and legal since the tenancy was sought to be terminated by the end of 15th September 1965. The learned Assistant Judge was, however, of the view that the demand was excessive because the rent claimed for the period 15-8-1965 to 15-9-1965 had not become due and payable to the petitioner-landlord at the time of the said notice of demand. According to him, therefore, the demand was not lawful and the respondent-tenant was under no obligation to comply with the demand. According to the learned Assistant Judge as the demand was not lawful, the notice is illegal and the respondent-tenant cannot be said to be not ready and willing to pay the arrears of rent. Now, the point here for consideration is whether in the facts and circumstances of the case the view taken by the learned Assistant Judge is correct.

6. It is now well-settled that a liberal construction is put upon a notice to quit in order that it should not be defeated by inaccuracies either in the description of the premises or the name of the tenant or the date of the expiry of the notice; and that the test of its sufficiency is not what its contents would mean to a stranger ignorant of all the facts and circumstances touching the premises to which the notice purports to refer, but what they would mean to tenants presumably conversant with all those facts and circumstances and the mistakes, if any, should not be construed with desire to find faults, but they should be construed liberally. In the instant case it appears that the petitioner-landlord was under a mistaken belief while asking for rent for the period from 15-8-1965 to 15-9-1965. It is not that he meant that the rent would not be due to him on 15-9-1965. It may be that he remained under a wrong impression and thought that he could demand such rent since he was terminating the tenancy on and from 15-9-1965. In my view, therefore, this appears to be a mistake on the part of the petitioner committed while giving the notice. The Supreme Court in Civil Appeal No. 387 of 1964, decided on 5-4-1966, while considering validity of a notice, which demanded Rupees 7,000/-, when actually, according to the Courts below only Rs. 6,900/- were due, observed that they were not able to understand how the notice to quit under the Transfer of Property Act will be bad because of a mistake or over-sight in demanding more than was due under Section 12 (2) of the Rent Act. Their Lordships held that all that Section 12 (2) of the Rent Act requires is the notice by the lessor for payment of arrears of rent. Their Lordships further observed that it was true that such a notice shall contain the figure of the amount due as arrears of rent, but according to their Lordships, if there was a mistake in the amount specified in the notice, that did not, in their opinion, make the notice under Section 12 (2) bad or because of that mistake the notice to quit under the Transfer of Property Act bad. It appears to me that simply because by mistake or over-sight the landlord had demanded the rent for the month for which it was not due, that would certainly not make the notice invalid. The view taken by the learned Assistant Judge is therefore not correct.

7. For the aforesaid reasons I set aside the decree passed by the learned Assistant Judge, Poona, remand the record and proceedings back for finding on two issues which were framed by him and disposing of the appeal according to law.

If the landlord attains majority before the grant of the certificate although the application under S. 88-C was made when he was a minor, he cannot come within the category of a minor certificate holder and hence he would not be governed by Section 33-B (4). The category has to be decided on the date when the certificate comes into existence.

M. G. Chaudhary, for Petitioner; A. V. Datar, for Opponents Nos. 1, 2, 4 to 8.

ORDER:— The short point that arises in this petition is whether the petition for possession under Section 33-B of the Tenancy Act made by the petitioner was barred by limitation. The petitioner was a minor when the application under Section 88-C for exemption was made by him on September 31, 1961. The order that he was entitled to a certificate was made on July 31, 1963. The birth-date of the petitioner was June 12, 1945 and he attained majority on June 12, 1963. The certificate was in fact issued on August 30, 1963.

2. In pursuance of the certificate the petitioner served a notice upon Respondents 1 to 8 as required under Section 33-B (3) of the Tenancy Act. Thereafter on May 15, 1964 the instant proceeding under Section 33-B was initiated. On February 23, 1965 this application was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by limitation. This decision of the Tenancy Aval Karkun was confirmed in appeal by the Deputy Collector and in revision by the M. R. T. The instant petition is filed for quashing the three decisions of revenue forums.

3. Mr. Choudhary appearing for the petitioner contended that the starting period of limitation under Sec. 33-B for minors as provided for in Sec. 33-B (4) is within one year from the date on which the minor attains majority. The minor attained majority on June 12, 1963 and the notice was served and the application under Section 33-B were both made within one year from the date the minor attained majority. The fact that the petitioner was a minor when the proceedings under Section 88-C were instituted, cannot be disputed.

4. Mr. Choudhary's contention was that since the application under S. 88-C was made by the present petitioner when he was a minor, he becomes a minor certificate holder when ultimately the certificate is granted. This conclusion is irrespective of the fact whether the order passed in the application under S. 88-C for the grant of the certificate has been passed after the minor attains majority. According to Mr. Choudhary the final order passed in the proceedings under S. 88-C relates back to the date when the application is made. The application under Section 88-C was made by the petitioner on September 11, 1961 when he was a minor. If, therefore, this argument is accepted that the last order relates back to the initial making of the application, then certainly it could be contended that the person who made an application, since he was a minor at the date, becomes a minor certificate holder. He would then be governed by sub-section (4) of Section 33-C and any application made by him within one year of his attaining majority, would be within time.

5. However, there is no support for the contention advanced by Mr. Choudhary that the document relates back to the date of the application under Section 88-C in case of a minor and although the certificate in fact may have been granted after he attains majority, still he belongs to the category of a minor certificate holder.

6. A certificated landlord has been described in Section 33-A (i) as "a person who holds a certificate issued to him under sub-section (4) of Sec. 88-C". The relevant date, therefore, is the grant of the certificate and not the making of an application for obtaining the certificate. Unless the certificate comes into existence no person can be a holder thereof. The point of time, therefore, for considering whether sub-section (4) of Section 33-B applies is the date on which the certificate is granted. In the instant case the certificate was granted on August 30, 1963. On that date the landlord was a major. Even if the date of the order for grant of a certificate is taken to be the relevant date, then landlord cannot come within the category of a minor certificate holder for the simple reason that before the grant of the certificate he had attained majority.

7. In a litigation it is the duty of the party who applies as a minor to get the record corrected immediately upon his attaining majority. Because the petitioner failed in his duty in not getting his name on the record as a major, no advantage can be obtained by the said person. Since a certificate must be held, a certificate must be in existence and the category, therefore, has got to be decided on the date when the certificate could come into existence. In the instant case the certificate could have come into existence on or after July 31, 1963. On that date obviously the Petitioner was a major. He was, therefore, not a minor certificate holder, but he was a major certificate holder. He would, therefore, not be governed by Section 33-B (4) of the Tenancy Act.

8. An argument was further advanced by Mr. Choudhary that there is a decision of this Court which has extended the meaning of the expression "certificated landlord". In Parvatibai Ramchandra v. Mahadu Tukaram, 69 Bom LR 383 = (AIR 1967 Bom 428) a Division Bench of this Court held that the right of a certificated landlord to apply under Section 33-B does not lapse upon the death of the holder and that the same can be exercised within the specified time by his successor in interest. This judgment only shows that the right which the landlord obtains under the certificate granted under Section 88-C is a heritable right. The judgment has no bearing on any other point. It does not deal with the point as to from what time a person should be taken as a certificated landlord; whether from the date the certificate comes into existence or from an earlier date. Since I have held that unless the certificate comes into existence there cannot be a certificated holder, the argument based upon the decision in 69 Bom LR 383 = (AIR 1967 Bom 428) has no application.

9. A further argument was advanced by Mr. Choudhary that in any case as regards Narayan Yeshwant Godse (Respondent No. 1) the petitioner's claim should have been allowed. This argument was based upon a statement given by Respondent No. 1 on February 23, 1965 as follows:

"If the possession of the said half area in the land which I am doing as a tenant is given to the applicant plaintiff, I will have no objection whatsoever. I have no grievance remaining about this." Mr. Choudhary's contention on this point was that in respect of the property held by Respondent No. 1 as a tenant of S. No. 204 there should have been an order in favour of the petitioner in spite of the fact that his application was held to be barred by time. What was urged was that when the tenant admitted the claim and expressed his willingness to the passing of an order for possession in respect of the land which he held, it should have been held that the tenant has waived the right which he had obtained by rules of limitation. Mr. Choudhary's contention, therefore, was that although the petitioner might not have been given any relief in respect of the property held by other tenants, a relief in respect of the land held by Narayan Yeshwant should not have been denied to him. The point, however, is whether this point was taken by him before the Deputy Collector. I do not find from the judgment of the Deputy Collector that this point was at all pressed before him or even before the Tenancy Aval Karkun. Had this point been pressed before the Tenancy Aval Karkun and the Deputy Collector, those two authorities might have applied their mind to it and either upheld or rejected it. But the point cannot be raised for the first time in this Court acting under Art. 227. I, therefore, hold that the decisions of the revenue forums were correct and no interference is necessary.

A. F. O. No. 50 of 1971, D/- 16-4-1971 against order of D. D. Pol, Civil J. Sr. Divn. at Poona on Exh. 4 in Spl. C. S. No. 145 of 1969.

Index Note:— (A) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 38, Rr. 5, 6 — Scope and applicability — Order for furnishing security for producing property in Court when made.

Brief Note:— (A) The application for attachment before judgment under O. 38, R. 5 is in normal circumstances disposed of much prior to the hearing of the suit in which such application is made. The initial order that the Court makes under the above Rule 5 is a direction to the defendant to furnish security in the sum mentioned by the Court as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree or to appear and show cause why the defendant was not bound to do so. The order of attachment is thus initially issued under the last part of clause (1) of Rule 5 in the above manner. After the order of the above nature is made the final hearing of the application under Rule 5 takes place in accordance with the provisions in Rule 6. (Para 7)

Order under Rule 6 confirming the attachment and in the alternative giving option to the defendant to furnish security can only be made in cases in which the Court holds that the defendant was disposing of his properties or removing the same from jurisdiction of Court with intent to defraud and defeat his creditors. The question of the application for attachment before judgment is not liable to be once again considered at any subsequent stage i.e. at the time of making the judgment. (Para 7)

K. J. Abhyankar, for Appellant; J. E. Shinde for A. G. Sabnis, for Respondents: Nos. 1 and 2.

JUDGMENT:— This is an appeal on behalf of the original plaintiff from the order dated October 22, 1970, dismissing the plaintiff's application for attachment before judgment and directing that the surety Namdeo Laxman Bibave was not liable for payment of the amount due to the plaintiff under the surety bond dated July 25, 1969, and that the surety stood discharged.

2. Mr. Abhyankar for the plaintiff has contended that the learned Judge erred in thinking that the application Ex. 4 for an order of attachment before judgment had not been already disposed of completely by the prior order dated July 24, 1969, and by the execution of the surety bond dated July 25, 1969, in pursuance of the above prior order dated July 24, 1969. The impugned order has been made on the wrong footing that the application Ex. 4 for order of attachment before judgment had still remained outstanding for disposal. The order is entirely misconceived and not sustainable. Mr. Shinde for the surety Namdev Laxman Bibave has denied these contentions made by Mr. Abhyankar. He has submitted that the application Ex. 4 had remained outstanding to be disposed of and the finding in the impugned order that the defendant had not disposed of any of his properties to defraud his creditors is correct. The application for attachment before judgment has accordingly been rightly dismissed.

3. In connection with these rival contentions, the following are relevant facts:—

On or about June 17, 1969, the plaintiff instituted the present suit for recovering Rs. 10,165/-, interest and costs from the defendant. By application Ex. 4 filed on June 17, 1969, the plaintiff applied for attachment before judgment on the ground that the defendant was not the owner of any immovable property situated within the jurisdiction of the Court and the defendant was involved in heavy debts. The defendant had with ulterior and fraudulent intention to deceive his creditors sold away his Fiat motor-car and transferred a truck of his ownership in the name of a third party. The defendant owned the motor truck bearing No. BYL 5937, though he had purchased it in the name of his wife. The plaintiff applied for an order of attachment before judgment in respect of the above truck. On that application, an ex parte order for attachment before judgment was issued on June 20, 1969. The order directed attachment but stated: "If the defendant gives solvent security of Rs. 12,000/-, the attachment shall not be made. Notice; pay emergent process". It is clear that the warrant of attachment containing the above directions attaching the above truck was duly effected. The defendant thereupon filed his say by the affidavit dated July 24, 1969, Ex. 13. By this affidavit, the defendant denied the various allegations made by the plaintiff in the application Ex. 4, but he stated that without prejudice to these denials he was prepared to give an undertaking not to sell or dispose of any of his properties pending the hearing. His wife would also give such an undertaking. He, therefore, applied for raising of the attachment and delivery and/or return of the truck free of attachment. Upon the filing of this affidavit Ex. 13, the trial Court heard the pleaders of the parties and directed that the truck be released from attachment. "If the defendant gives solvent security for Rs. 12,000/-". This order was made on July 24, 1969 and the submission of Mr. Abhyankar has been that this is the final order whereby the plaintiff's application Ex. 4 for attachment before judgment was completely disposed of. The effect of the order was that attachment of the truck was confirmed subject, however to the option given to the defendant to get the attachment raised upon furnishing solvent security for Rupees 12,000/-. The defendant accepted the correctness of the above order as appears from the Nazir's report and the surety bond dated July 25, 1969. The Nazir reported that the defendant had produced surety of Rs. 12,000/-. The surety had agreed to produce solvency certificate. The attachment on the truck stood raised. I have no doubt that the truck was released from attachment upon execution of the surety bond by the present respondent.

4-5. This bond is dated July 25, 1969, and the relevant part thereof reads as follows:—

"x x x x I do hereby enter into an agreement with the Hon'ble Court that should the defendant fail to act upto any order that may be passed hereafter x x x x, then I and my heirs, executors, assigns or legal representatives shall bring and pay into Court, in cash, the sum of Rs. 12,000/- x x x x at any time the Hon'ble Court may order so. x x x x x".

6. The suit was heard and disposed of by the final judgment and decree dated October 22, 1970. The plaintiff obtained decree for Rs. 10,165/- and interest and costs as appearing in the judgment. Apparently, the defendant having been ordered to pay the above decretal amount to the plaintiff the present respondent as surety had become liable to pay the decretal debt under the above surety bond. An order to that effect should have been made by the trial Court. The trial Court, however, in my view, entirely wrongly proceeded to pronounce the impugned order along with its judgment in the suit on October 22, 1970. On the footing that the issues raised by the affidavit Ex. 13 by denial of the allegations in application Ex. 4 were outstanding to be decided, the trial Court proceeded to hold that the plaintiff's application for attachment before judgment was not sustainable. It found that the defendant had not transferred any of his properties fraudulently with intent to defeat his creditors. The trial Court, therefore, pronounced that the surety was not liable for payment of any amount to the plaintiff under the above surety bond. In the main judgment in the suit, in discussing the issue No. 6, the trial Court referred to the above application Ex. 4 and stated: "I have passed the orders on the application for attachment before judgment to day and I have held that the surety would be discharged and there would thus be no liability on the surety, but that only the defendant would be liable for the amount". In that very paragraph the trial Court noticed that the defendant had filed his own insolvency petition. The trial Court was aware that the defendant was likely to be adjudged insolvent and that the plaintiff was not in a position to recover the decretal debt from the defendant.

7. I have found it extremely difficult to appreciate the reasons why the trial Court proceeded to pronounce its findings on the issues raised on the application Ex. 4 by the denials in the affidavit Ex. 13 by the impugned order dated October 22, 1970. It is difficult to understand why these issues should not have been considered as completely heard and disposed of by the order dated July 24, 1969. The matter of the application for attachment before judgment under O. 38, R. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure is in normal circumstances disposed of much prior to the hearing of the suit in which such application is made. The initial order that the Court makes under the above Rule 5 is a direction to the defendant to furnish security in the sum mentioned by the Court as may be sufficient to satisfy the decree or to appear and show cause why the defendant was not bound to do so. The order of attachment is thus initially issued under the last part of Clause (1) of Rule 5 in the above manner. After the order of the above nature is made the final hearing of the application under Rule 5 takes place in

"6. (1) Where the defendant fails to show cause why he should not furnish security, or fails to furnish the security required, within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may order that the property specified, or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit, be attached.

(2) Where the defendant shows such cause or furnishes the required security, and the property specified or any portion of it has been attached, the Court shall order the attachment to be withdrawn, or make such other order as it thinks fit". I have no doubt that the Order dated July 24, 1969, is the order in accordance with the provisions in Rule 6. By that order, after hearing parties, the direction given was that the attachment of the truck should be raised on the defendant giving solvent security for Rs. 12,000/-. Such an order can only be made in cases in which the plaintiff's application for attachment before judgment is found sustainable under the above Rule 5. In cases in which it is found that the defendant was not disposing of any part of his property or removing the same from jurisdiction of the Court with intent to defraud his creditors, order directing the defendant to furnish security as made by the present order dated July 24, 1969, can never be made. In other words, order under Rule 6 confirming the attachment and in the alternative giving option to the defendant to furnish security can only be made in cases in which the Court holds that the defendant was disposing of his properties or removing the same from jurisdiction of Court with intent to defraud and defeat his creditors. It is abundantly clear that the order dated July 24, 1969, directing that attachment should be raised only if the defendant furnishes security in the sum of Rs. 12,000/- must be held to be order made upon the final hearing of the application Ex. 4. The order was complete disposal of that application. The order dated July 24, was made under Rule 6. It is difficult to appreciate why the learned Judge did not apply his mind to the contents of Rules 5 and 6 and considered the matter of the application Ex. 4 once again on the footing that it was not completely disposed of by the order dated July 24, and by execution of the surety bond by the present respondent on July 25. The question of the application Ex. 4 was not liable to be once again considered at any subsequent stage. The learned Judge made the impugned order by reconsidering the application Ex. 4 after it had been disposed of on July 24, 1969. The submissions made by Mr. Abhyankar are correct and are accepted. The learned Judge's observations in connection with the release of the respondent in this application from the surety bond as contained in the impugned order and the paragraph 8 of his judgment are contrary to law. The order and the above observations are accordingly set aside. The respondent is bound to discharge the decretal debt. The plaintiff will be accordingly entitled to enforce the surety bond in accordance with law. The respondent will pay costs of this appeal. The order dated October 22, 1970, is set aside.

VAIDYA, J.

Balku Laxman Khatik, Petitioner v. Biru Ramachandra Kotmire and another, Opponents.

Special Civil Appln. No. 1614 of 1967, D/- 16-4-1971 to set aside order of Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal at Poona. D/- 25-11-1966.

Index Note:— (A) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (58 of 1948), S. 88-C — "Holding" — The holding referred to in the section is the holding in respect of lands leased and not the other holdings of a landlord. (Para 6)

Index Note:— (B) Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act (58 of 1948), S. 33-B (5) (b) — Restoration of possession — Power and duty of revenue authorities.

The tenancy authorities have to ascertain the holdings of a landlord while deciding the question of restoring possession under Section 33-B (5) (b). If in finding out the holding of the landlord, it is necessary for the tenancy authorities to consider the factum of an alleged partition or validity of the partition deed they are bound to look at it and say whether it is a real partition. If it is found that the partition is a sham partition effected for the purpose of defeating the rights of a tenant, they can ignore the partition. (Para 8)

N. D. Hombalkar, for Petitioner; M. R. Kotwal, for Opponent No. 1.

ORDER:— The petitioner in the above Special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India is the tenant of S. Nos. 159/2-3, 162/3 and 189/7 totally measuring only Acres 3 and Gunthas 8, situate at village Are in Karvir Taluka of Kolhapur District. Respondent No. 1-landlord filed an application under Section 33-B of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, 1948, against him after obtaining a certificate under Section 88-C for recovery of possession of the said lands on the ground of bona fide requirement for personal cultivation. The application was granted by the Tenancy Aval Karkun on February 23, 1964. The order of the Tenancy Aval Karkun was set aside in appeal by the District Deputy Collector on October 27, 1964, observing as follows:—

"I am satisfied that comparative position of land in possession is not considered adequately by the lower Court. I, therefore, partly allow the appeal and set aside the order of the lower Court and remand to consider the issue of comparative land in possession as required under Section 33-B and then decide the matter. No other issue is open for consideration".

2. After the remand the Tenancy Aval Karkun allowed the parties to lead Evidence. The petitioner contended that the Registered partition deed dated December 22, 1956, under which the landlord had taken to himself only 3 Acres and 24½ gunthas and given 49 acres and 9 gunthas to his son and 37 acres and 4 gunthas to one of his two wives was disproportionately unequal and effected solely with a purpose of defeating the rights of the petitioner-tenant under the provisions of the Bombay Tenancy Act; and there was no partition in fact effected, as at the time of the date of the alleged partition, respondent No. 1, his son and wife were all living together and only at the time of the hearing of the application, they were living separately in houses Nos. 1857 and 1899.

3. The Tenancy Aval Karkun considered the evidence before him and found that there was tenant only in the suit lands, and it was, therefore, clear that the landlord had taken a very small portion of 3 acres and 24½ gunthas of land including the suit lands with an intention to withdraw the suit lands from the tenant although about 30 acres of land comes to the share of the applicant if an equal partition is made. The Tenancy Aval Karkun therefore ignored the alleged partition and found that respondent No. 1-landlord had already other lands larger in area than the lands with the tenant; and therefore, he was not entitled to possession of the lands in dispute in view of the provisions of Section 33-B (5) (b) of the Bombay Tenancy Act. Under that section the landlord shall be entitled to terminate a tenancy and take possession of the land leased but to the extent only of so much thereof as would result in both the landlord and the tenant holding thereafter in the total an equal area for personal cultivation. Respondent No. 1 had, if all lands measuring Acres 89 Gunthas 21, alleged to be partitioned are found to be held by him, larger area than the tenant; and therefore, by his order dated August 14, 1965, the Tenancy Aval Karkun rejected the application.

4. The said order was confirmed in appeal by the District Deputy Collector by his order dated January 17, 1966, after agreeing with the findings recorded by the Tenancy Aval Karkun. The said decisions were set aside by the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal in a revision application filed by respondent No. 1 landlord on the ground that as the holding of the landlord had already been considered, while granting the certificate under Section 88-C, it was not open to the Tenancy Authorities to consider once again the holding of the landlord.

5. The said decision of the Tribunal dated November 25, 1966, is challenged in the above petition. Mr. Hombalkar, learned Counsel for the petitioner, contended that the Tribunal has committed a manifest error in assuming that Section 88-C proceedings involve the consideration of the holding of the landlord notwithstanding that section requires only consideration of the 'lands leased'. This contention of Mr. Hombalkar must be upheld because the Tribunal has observed:—

"Section 88-C is very clear. It says only such landlord would be given exemption certificate whose land or holding is less than or equal to the economic holding as defined in Tenancy Act and whose income is less than Rs. 1,500/-....."

It appears that the Tribunal did not care to look into sub-section (1) of S. 88-C, which reads as follows:—

"88-C (1) Save as otherwise provided by Sections 33-A, 33-B and 33-C, nothing in Sections 32 to 32-R (Both inclusive) shall apply to lands leased by any person if such land does not exceed an economic holding and the total annual income of such person including the rent of such land does not exceed Rs. 1,500/-.

Provided that the provisions of this sub-section shall not apply to any person who holds such land as a permanent tenant or who has leased such land on permanent tenancy to any other person".

6. The holding referred to in the section is clearly the holding in respect of 'land leased' and not the other holdings of the landlord. The Tribunal, therefore, misconceived the section and approached the case illegally.

7. Mr. Kotval, learned Counsel for the landlord, however, submitted that although Section 88-C did not refer to the holding of the landlord, while considering the income of the landlord, it was necessary to consider the holding of the landlord; and once a certificate under Section 88-C was granted on the basis that the landlord had income less than

Rs. 1,500/-, it would not be open to the Tenancy Authorities to challenge that certificate by considering the other holdings of the landlord, which would yield more income. Mr. Kotwal is unable to say whether the holding of the landlord was in fact considered while granting the certificate under Section 88-C in connection with the income of the landlord, because no certified copy of the order granting the certificate is on the record. The certificate under Section 88-C, which is on the record, does not show that the holding of the landlord other than the leased land was considered. There is nothing on the record to show that while granting certificate under Section 88-C all the holdings of the landlord were taken into account. The Tribunal was, therefore, quite wrong in assuming that it was not open to the Tenancy Authorities to consider the holding while passing an order under Section 33-B, particularly having regard to the provisions of Section 33-B (5) (b) of the Tenancy Act.

8. Mr. Kotwal then submitted that the Tenancy Authorities had no jurisdiction to invalidate a registered partition-deed. This contention of Mr. Kotwal must be rejected because the tenancy Authorities have to ascertain the holdings of the landlord while deciding the question of restoring possession under Section 33-B (5) (b) of the Bombay Tenancy Act. If, in finding out the holding of the landlord, it is necessary for the tenancy Authorities to consider the factum of partition or validity of the partition-deed they are bound to look at it and say whether it is a real partition. In the present case the fact-finding authorities, viz. the Deputy Collector and the Tenancy Aval Karkun, disbelieved the landlord and held that the partition was a sham partition effected for the purpose of defeating the rights of a tenant. The terms of partition referred to above fully support their findings. It is difficult to believe that the partition was real when only the tenanted lands measuring acres 3 gunthas 8 and a small piece of land to make a total of acres 3 and gunthas 24 were allotted to the landlord and disproportionately unequal proportions were allotted to his son and his wife. In my judgment, the Deputy Collector and the Tenancy Aval Karkun were, therefore, right in ignoring the alleged partition between the landlord and his son and one of his wives; and in rejecting his application under Section 33-B.

9. In the result the judgment and order of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal dated November 25, 1966, is quashed. The order of the Tenancy Aval Karkun dated August 14, 1965, and the order of the Deputy Collector dated January 17, 1966, are restored.

10. Rule absolute with costs.

The word 'person' in expression 'leased by any person' in Section 88-C (1) means and includes where the land is owned and let by a number of persons, all these persons. The word cannot have a different meaning in Section 33-A which defines certificated landlord with reference to certificate under Section 88-C. Where, therefore, a person succeeds to the lands of deceased certificated landlord along with other adult heirs as tenant in common, he alone cannot terminate tenancy or apply under Section 33-B for possession of the lands from excluded tenant, unless such other heirs are also joined for the purpose. ORDER:— The subject-matter in dispute in this Special Civil Application under Art. 227 of the Constitution of India, consists of agricultural land S. No. 501/3 situate at Saswad in Poona District. This land and some other lands originally belonged to Ganpat Chavan, the Husband of respondent No. 1. The petitioner was the tenant of the above land. There was another tenant Laxman Jagtap in possession of some other lands of Ganpat. Ganpat applied for a certificate under Section 88-C of the Bombay Tenancy and Agricultural Lands Act, and obtained it on January 20 1959, in respect of the aforesaid land and the lands in possession of Jagtap. Unfortunately, Ganpat died thereafter. Respondent No. 1 alone claiming to be the sole heir of Ganpat, terminated the tenancy of the petitioner and of the aforesaid Jagtap under Section 33-B of the Bombay Tenancy Act and filed an application in the Court of the Tenancy Aval Karkun, Purandhar, for restoration of possession of the aforesaid lands on March 29, 1962.

2. Laxman Jagtap settled so far as he was concerned, the matter with respondent No. 1 by giving possession to her of the lands in his possession. The petitioner resisted the application on several grounds including the ground that respondent No. 1 could not terminate the tenancy relying on the certificate granted to her deceased husband; and further that even if she could do so, she could not file an application without joining her sons and daughters who were heirs and legal representatives of the deceased Ganpat. It was also contended that the landlady did not bona fide require the lands for personal cultivation. The Tenancy Aval Karkun overruled the contentions raised on behalf of the petitioner and ordered possession to be given to the landlady on September 16, 1964.

3. The petitioner carried an appeal to the Deputy Collector, who reversed the order on the ground that respondent No. 1 could not rely on the certificate granted to her deceased husband. Respondent No. 1 then filed a revision application before the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal against the decision of the Deputy Collector. The Tribunal by its decision dated March 17, 1967 set aside the order of the Deputy Collector relying on the decision of this Court in Parvati Ramchandra v. Mahadu, 69 Bom LR 383 = (AIR 1967 Bom 428). There Tarkunde and K. K. Desai, JJ. held that the right of a certificated landlord to apply under Section 33-B of the Bombay Tenancy Act for possession of land from an excluded tenant does not lapse on his death and can be exercised, within the specified time, by his successor in interest. The Tribunal applied the case to the facts of the present case and further held that as respondent No. 1 was the sole legatee of the will, it was not necessary for the sons and daughters to be joined in the application. The Tribunal, therefore, set aside the order of the Deputy Collector and restored the order passed by the Tenancy Aval Karkun.

4. The said decision of the Tribunal is challenged by Mr. Gole for the petitioner on the ground that the Tribunal wrongly applied the decision of this Court in Parvati's case, 69 Bom LR 383 = (AIR 1967 Bom 428) to the facts and circumstances of the present case. He submitted that in the present case Ganpat Chavan died living behind him his widow, two adult well placed sons and three daughters, as admitted by the widow herself, and that all these were Ganpat's heirs under the Hindu Succession Act. Mr. Gole also contended that although the will was relied on by respondent No. 1, it was not proved or produced in the proceedings, and in the absence of that will, it was wrong on the part of the Tribunal to have proceeded on the footing that respondent No. 1 was the sole legatee under the said will. He argued that even assuming that she was the sole legatee under the will, she could not make an application under S. 33-B as she derived her title under the alleged will from her husband, and as such did not fulfil the requirements of Section 33-B (5) (c) of the Bombay Tenancy Act, 1948. He urged that as she was not the only heir of deceased Ganpat, in the absence of the will, she alone could not terminate the tenancy or make an application without joining the sons and daughters. In support of his last argument, he relied upon the decision in Jainabai v. Bakaji Bhau, (1961) 63 Bom LR 637 (657) where it is held that the word 'person' in the expression 'leased by any person' in Section 88-C (1) of the Bombay Tenancy Act, means and includes where the land is owned and let by a number of persons, all these persons and that if they hold the land as tenants-in-common, an application by any one of them for exemption from the applicability of Sections 32 to 32-R of the Act must be in respect of the whole land in which he has an undivided share and the income, which will consequently be taken into consideration under S. 88-C (1) of the Act, will be the income of all these persons who own or have leased the land jointly. Mr. Gole contended that the same meaning should be given to the word 'person' used in the definition of the word 'certificated landlord' in Section 33-A (1) as the said definition is based on the certificate issued under Section 88-C. As the heirs of Ganpat Chavan succeeded as tenants-in-common under Section 19 (b) of the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, according to Mr. Gole, all of them must join in acting as certificated landlords.

5. In view of these contentions, the first question which arises is as to whether respondent No. 1 could terminate the tenancy of the petitioner and make an application under Section 33-B as the sole legatee under the will of the deceased Ganpat Chavan. Though there is some discussion of the will by the Tenancy Aval Karkun, no will was produced before him. There was no evidence except the bare statement of respondent No. 1 to show that there was a will. In the absence of production of will, it was wrong on the part of the Tenancy Aval Karkun and the Tribunal to assume that respondent No. 1 was the sole legatee under the will. I would have remitted the case to the trial Court, if it was necessary to decide whether respondent No. 1 was in fact the sole legatee under the will of deceased Ganpat Chavan.

6. I, however, think that it is not necessary to remand the case because, even assuming that respondent No. 1 was the sole legatee under the will she would be disqualified from terminating the tenancy in view of Section 33-B (5) (c), which reads as follows:—

"33-B (5) The right of a certificated landlord to terminate a tenancy under this section shall be subject to the following conditions, that is to say:

(c) The land leased stands in the Record of rights (or in any public record or similar revenue record) on the 1st day of January 1962 and thereafter until the commencement date in the name of the landlord himself, or of any of his ancestors (but not of any person from whom title is derived by assignment or Court sale or otherwise), or if the landlord is a member of a joint family, in the name of a member of such family".

7. The effect of this clause was considered by this Court in Parvati's case referred to above. It is observed at page 388:

"It cannot be assumed in the absence of adequate reason that the legislature did not intend to grant to the successor-in-interest the same limited protection which it granted to a small holder with limited income. There are, on the other hand ample provisions in the Act to ensure that the successor in interest of a certificated landlord would not be able to secure the benefit conferred by Section 33-B, if he is not himself a small holder with limited income. In the first place Clause (c) of sub-section (5) of Section 33-B provides that such a successor-in-interest would not be able to terminate the tenancy of the excluded tenant if his title is 'derived by assignment or Court sale or otherwise'. A donee or purchaser from a certificated landlord would be unable to terminate the tenancy of the excluded tenant."

In that case this Court dealt with two petitions. In the petition in Spl. C. A. No. 1878/64 it appears that the certificated landlord died leaving behind him as his only heir his widow. She was held to be entitled to make an application under Section 33-B as the successor-in-interest of her husband, notwithstanding the provisions of Section 33-B (5) (c). In the other Spl. C. A. No. 1962 of 1964 a certificate under Section 88-C was obtained by one Vithabai, the widow, and on her death in September 1961 her husband's sister Kamalabai claimed to be the legatee under Vithabai's will. It was contended on her behalf that besides being the legatee under the will, she was also the nearest heir of Vithabai and, therefore, the matter was remanded to the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal keeping open the contention urged on behalf of the tenant that Kamalabai being the legatee under the will executed by the widow Vithabai, did not fulfil the requirement of Section 33-B (5) (c) and was not entitled to terminate the respondent's tenancy. Mr. Gole, who also appeared in that case, says that at p. 389 of the report of that case clause (b) actually stands for clause (c) of sub-section (5) of Section 33-B.

8. It is, therefore, clear that in that case this Court held that a person who derived title by assignment, or Court sale or otherwise, through or from the certificated landlord, would not be able to terminate the tenancy of the excluded tenant. It is also clear that the point as to whether a legatee under the will did or did not fulfil the requirements of clause (c) of sub-section (5) of Section 33-B was not decided. The passage quoted above shows that the successor-in-interest who derives title through or from the certificated landlord by assignment, or Court sale or otherwise was expressly held to be not qualified to apply under Section 33-B. The word 'otherwise' in my judgment is wide enough to include 'under a will'. This Court has held, as pointed out earlier, that a donee or purchaser from a certificated landlord would be unable to terminate the tenancy of the excluded tenant. I cannot see any reason to distinguish a case of a donee or a purchaser from the case of a legatee under a will. I am, therefore, of the opinion that respondent No. 1 could not terminate the tenancy of the petitioner or make an application under Section 33-B as the sole legatee under the alleged will of Ganpat Chavan even assuming that such a will was executed, as stated by respondent No. 1.

9. The next question is as to whether she alone could make the application as the heir of her deceased husband under the Hindu Succession Act. Whether the property was self-acquired property of Ganpat or joint family property of Ganpat, under the Hindu Succession Act she would be entitled to a share therein along with her sons and daughters. She alone could not make an application under Section 33-B or terminate the tenancy. She could not be the Manager or Karta when there were adult male (?) sons in the family. (See Commissioner of Income-tax, M. P. v. Seth Govindram Sugar Mills, AIR 1966 SC 24). Under Section 19 (b) of the Hindu Succession Act all the heirs would be succeeding as tenants-in-common. Hence it would be necessary for all of them to terminate the tenancy and apply for possession. It is well settled that if they are holding the property as tenants-in-common, one of them alone cannot terminate the tenancy, and a notice of termination must be given by all or on behalf of all. Further as laid down by this Court in the aforesaid case of (1961)

63 Bom LR 637 the word 'person' used in the expression 'leased by any person' in Section 88-C (1) means and includes where the land is owned and let by a number of persons, all these persons. The word cannot have a different meaning in Section 33-A which defines 'certificated landlord' with reference to Section 88-C certificate. In the present case, it is clear that the sons and daughters of respondent No. 1 did not join respondent No. 1 in either terminating the tenancy of the petitioner or making an application for possession. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the application made by respondent No. 1 alone was not maintainable under Section 33-B.

10. For these reasons, the decision of the Maharashtra Revenue Tribunal is quashed; the order passed by the District Deputy Collector Baramati Division on March 31, 1966, is restored though for different reasons; and the application made by respondent No. 1 is rejected.

11. Rule absolute. No order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

Dhanomoy Thapa, Petitioner v. The State of West Bengal and others, Respondents.

Civil Order No. 2079 (w) of 1971, D/- 6-8-1971.

(A) West Bengal Public Land (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act (13 of 1962), Section 4 — Eviction of unauthorised occupant — No public purpose is necessary for ordering it even though the ultimate purpose is to de-requisition the land in question and hand over its possession to the real owners thereof. (Para 5)

(B) West Bengal Public Land (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act (13 of 1962), Section 4 — Constitutionality — As Section 4 provides guidance in the matter of exercise of power to evict unauthorised occupants of public land by requiring the authority to reach an objective satisfaction on two points it cannot be struck down as providing arbitrary discretion. (X-Ref:— Constitution of India, Article 14). ILR (1971) 1 Cal 470, Followed. (Para 9)

(C) West Bengal Public Land (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act (13 of 1962), Section 4 — Constitutionality — As Section 4 gives to the person alleged to be in unauthorised occupation, an opportunity to prove the contrary by requiring a reference to a Civil Court and also provides an appeal against the order of eviction, the special procedure in the section for eviction of unauthorised occupants cannot be said to impose an unreasonable restriction on the right of the citizens to hold property. (X-Ref: Constitution of India, Article 19 (1) (g).) (Para 10)

Kashi Kanta Maitra, Ashis Kumar Sanyal, for Petitioner; B. S. Bagchi, Saktinath Mukherjee, for Respondents Nos. 7, 8 and 9.

ORDER:— This writ petition is being heard on notice to the respondents and on contest by them. In this application the petitioner is disputing the validity of a proceeding under the West Bengal Public Land (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1962 and an order dated July 5, 1971 passed by the Appellate Tribunal under Section 7 of the Act.

2. Facts are shortly as follows: On an application by the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta a proceeding under Section 3 of the West Bengal Public Land (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act 1962 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act) was initiated against the present petitioner. The dispute relates to plot No. 54 in the Cossipore/Chit-pore open space at Talla Park since renumbered as No. 6, Talla Park Avenue. There is no dispute that this plot which belongs to respondents Nos. 7 to 9 is still under requisition by State of West Bengal. In the said proceeding under Section 3, on a due notice issued to the petitioner the collector held the necessary adjudication on June 11, 1964 passed an order under Section 4 (1) (a) directing petitioner's eviction therefrom. The petitioner preferred an appeal being Appeal Case No. 39 of 1964-65 before the Commissioner, Presidency Division. Although she succeeded at first and the appellate tribunal by an order dated February 8, 1965 set aside the order of the Collector, on review by an order dated July 31, 1965 the appellate tribunal confirmed the order of eviction passed by the collector. The petitioner moved this court under Article 226 of the Constitution and my learned brother P. K. Banerjee, J. by an order dated June 26, 1970 set aside the appellate order and directed rehearing of the appeal. The appeal being so reheard has again been dismissed by the impugned order dated July 5, 1971 and the Commissioner has now re-affirmed the original order of eviction passed by the Collector. It is this proceeding and the order which are the subject-matter of challenge in this writ petition.

3. The application is being contested both by the State as also by respondent Nos. 7-9 who were allowed to be made parties to the proceeding by the lower Appellate Tribunal.

4. The petitioner, it should be made clear in the very beginning, is not claiming any title to possess the plot and that she is in unauthorised occupation, is not seriously disputed by her. Two points have been pressed by Mr. Maitra in support of the application at the hearing. In the first place it has been contended by Mr. Maitra that the land under requisition being sought to be de-requisitioned in favour of the respondent Nos. 7 to 9 and for that purpose the present petitioner is being evicted from the said land but all these are being done without any public purpose. In particular, Mr. Maitra contends that there is no public purpose behind the present proceeding for eviction. Secondly, Mr. Maitra contends that the order should be struck down as it has been passed under the provisions of a statute which are void under the Constitution. The provisions are unconstitutional because they are violative of Article 14 and Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution.

5. So far as the first point raised by Mr. Maitra is concerned it does not appear to me that such a contention is at all well conceived. The statute lays down no requirement that there should be a public purpose for initiating proceeding under the provisions thereof except evicting people in unauthorised occupation of public lands. Furthermore I am unable to appreciate how a person in unauthorised occupation can seek to protect such possession against eviction under the process of law by pleading that he cannot be evicted except for a public purpose. It is not a case of requisition at all. Mr. Maitra may be right that the ultimate aim of the government is to de-requisition the plot but there is nothing irregular in it and in my view it would be just and proper for the State Government to de-requisition a plot and hand it back to the real owners if the purpose for its requisition has since ceased to exist and the land is being enjoyed by a person in unauthorised occupation. This being the position the first contention raised by Mr. Maitra is overruled.

6. The second point raised by Mr. Maitra is of some importance. It relates to the constitutional validity of the provisions of Sections 3 and 4 of the said Act. According to Mr. Maitra these provisions are unconstitutional from two aspects. Firstly, it is so because it violates Article 14 and secondly because it violates Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution. Further according to him these two provisions are discriminatory in so far as they provide for a supplementary procedure for eviction of persons from public lands which are far more prejudicial and drastic in nature than the ordinary procedure by way of a suit and the statute has left it to the discretion of the collector to decide whether he would adopt such a drastic procedure laid down in the Act in a particular case or not. Mr. Maitra also contends that the impugned provisions provide for unguided powers for collectors under the Act to evict people from properties solely on their subjective satisfaction and as such are not only discriminatory but impose unreasonable restriction on the fundamental right of citizens to hold property.

7. Giving anxious consideration to these contentions I find little substance in either of the two contentions of Mr. Maitra. To support the contention to the effect that the provisions are discriminatory Mr. Maitra naturally placed great reliance on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Northern India Caterers Ltd. v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 1581. But there the Supreme Court was considering the provisions of Punjab Public Premises and Land (Eviction and Rent Recovery) Act, 1951 which are materially different from the statute now under consideration. There the Supreme Court found that the statute not only provided supplementary remedy more drastic in nature than the ordinary available remedy by way of a suit but also found that the statute had left it to the absolute discretion of the collector to adopt one out of the two remedies. The Supreme Court observed:

"Section 5 does not lay down any guiding principle or policy under which the Collector has to decide in which cases he should follow one or the other procedure and, therefore, the choice is entirely left to his arbitrary will."

This court in the case of Rajendra Prasad Singh v. Union of India, 72 Cal WN 787 = (AIR 1968 Cal 560) (FB) adopted the same reasons in declaring Section 5 of the Public Premises (Eviction of Unauthorised Occupants) Act, 1958 to be void being violative of Article 14. The relevant provisions of both the Central and the Punjab Act are on same terms and as pointed out by the Supreme Court, Section 5 left the matter entirely to the absolute discretion of the competent authority but provided no guidance.

8. But in the statute now under consideration by me the provisions are materially different. Here the adjudication is by an independent authority. Under Section 3 when the collector forms an opinion on an appropriate application that the public land is in unauthorised occupation of any person or persons, he initiates the proceeding and issues the necessary show cause notice on the person or persons concerned. On cause being shown, the collector proceeds to dispose of the application under Section 4 the terms whereof are set out herein:

"4. (1) If, after considering the cause, if any, shown by the person in pursuance of a notice issued under Section 3 and any evidence adduced in support thereof, and any evidence which may be adduced by the owner and after making such further inquiry, if any, as he deems necessary,—

(a) the Collector is satisfied that no bona fide dispute regarding title to the public land exists and that the public land is in the unauthorised occupation of any person, he shall make an order directing such person—

(i) to vacate the public land and deliver possession thereof to the owner, and

(ii) to pay for the entire period during which he has been and continues to be in unauthorised occupation of the public land, damages at such rate, not exceeding double the rate of rent prevailing for similar lands with similar advantages in the vicinity, as may be prescribed, within such time as may be specified in the order; or

(b) the Collector is satisfied that the person concerned is not in unauthorised occupation of the public land or is of opinion that a bona fide dispute regarding title to the public land exists, he shall make an order cancelling the proceedings and referring the parties to the civil Court:

Provided that no order under this sub-section shall be made to the prejudice of any person who has had no opportunity of being heard.

(2) Where an order has been made under clause (a) of sub-section (1), the collector shall cause a copy of the order to be served in the manner referred to in sub-section (2) of Section 3." Section 7 provides for an appeal against the order of the Collector.

9. It is significant to note that here the statute had not left the matter entirely to the unguided exercise of discretion by the collector to decide whether remedy provided under the Act should be adopted and an order of eviction should be made or not. It may be true that he proceeds on his satisfaction but the satisfaction is not wholly subjective. The statute itself has laid down the guidance on two points. The statute requires that before the collector can pass an appropriate order of eviction he is first to be satisfied that no bona fide dispute regarding title to the public land exists and secondly that the person or persons are in unauthorised occupation. If on any of these two points the collector comes to an adverse decision then the mandatory direction of the statute is to refer the matter to the Civil Court. This in my view distinguishes the statute now under consideration from the one under consideration by the Supreme Court and this distinguishing feature takes it out of the mischief which led the Supreme Court to condemn the Act under their consideration. Even in that case the Supreme Court held there exists intelligible differentia between the occupiers of public premises and land and other occupiers. So if on my findings made hereinbefore the relevant provision cannot be struck down as providing arbitrary discretion, it cannot also be struck down only because it makes special provision for eviction of persons in unauthorised occupation of public land. This court in the case of Indurani Saha v. The State, ILR (1971) 1 Cal 470 overruled similar objection to the provisions now under consideration and I respectfully agree with the view expressed therein.

10. On the same reason as aforesaid I must also overrule the other contention that the statute imposes any unreasonable restriction on the right of the citizens to hold property. If a person is found to be in unauthorised occupation of public land, he cannot complain that the special procedure adopted for his eviction is unreasonable so long as such procedure is not condemned as discriminatory. If he is not a person in unauthorised occupation, the statute gives him ample scope to raise even a bona fide dispute and have the matter referred to a Civil Court. Further the order made by the collector is subject to a statutory appeal under Section 7 so that if the collector goes wrong, he can be corrected by the appellate tribunal. Such being the scheme of the Act and its provisions I am unable to accept the contention of Mr. Maitra that it imposes any unreasonable restriction on the citizens' right to hold property.

11. As all the points raised by Mr. Maitra in support of this application fail, the application fails and is dismissed on contest. There will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

Hindu Marriage Act (1955), Section 25 — "Passing any decree" — Benefit of the section is available to either party to a marriage that has been annulled by a decree of nullity under Section 12.

(Para 11)

A voidable marriage must be regarded as good and valid until annulled and there does not seem to be any difference between a decree passed under Section 12 and another under Section 13, so far as the availability of the benefit under Section 25 is concerned if it depends upon an existing marital relationship between the parties. The words "the wife or the husband" in Section 25 have been used as convenient terms to refer to the parties to a marriage whether or not the marriage is valid or subsisting, just as the word 'marriage' has been used in the Act to include a purported marriage which was void ab initio. Thus a wife who got her marriage with her husband annulled by a decree of nullity on the ground of impotency of the husband under Section 12 (1) (a) is entitled to get maintenance on her application under Section 25 subsequent to the passing of the decree of nullity.

JUDGMENT:— As S. K. Chakravarti and S. K. Datta, JJ. composing a Division Bench were divided in their opinion on a point of construction of Section 25 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, the case was assigned to me for hearing on that point. The point is stated by their Lordships as follows:

"Whether a wife who got her marriage with her husband annulled by a decree of nullity on the ground of impotency of the husband under Section 12 (1) (a) of the Hindu Marriage Act, is entitled to get any maintenance on her application under Section 25 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, subsequent to the passing of the decree of nullity".

2. The point arises for decision in this way. On August 1, 1968 a decree of nullity was passed by the learned District Judge of 24-Parganas on a petition under Section 12 (1) (a) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 presented by Sabita Rani Mondal, the opposite party in this Revisional Application, alleging that Sisir Kumar Kundu with whom she was married was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceeding. On May 3, 1969 she applied to the Court of the District Judge under Section 25 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 for an order on the said Sisir Kumar Kundu to pay to her a monthly sum of Rs. 75/- for her maintenance and support. Contesting this application Kundu raised a preliminary objection that an application under S. 25 (1) was not maintainable after a decree of nullity had been made. This objection was overruled by the court below. Kundu preferred an appeal to this Court from the order and also filed an alternative application in revision. S. K. Chakravarti and S. K. Datta, JJ. before whom the matter came up for hearing held that the appeal was not maintainable but entertained the revisional application taking different views on the point stated above. S. K. Chakravarti, J. was of opinion that Section 25 would not apply to a case where a decree of nullity has been passed declaring a marriage as null and void under Section 11 of the Act or where a marriage has been annulled under Section 12 and "would apply only to Section 13 and Sections 9 and 10". S. K. Datta, J. on the other hand took the view that "Section 25 is applicable to all decrees including decrees for nullity of marriages"

3. Section 25 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 is in these terms:

"Any Court exercising jurisdiction under this Act may, at the time of passing any decree or at any time subsequent thereto, on application made to it for the purpose by either the wife or the husband, as the case may be, order that the respondent shall, while the applicant remains unmarried, pay to the applicant for her or his maintenance and support such gross sum or such monthly or periodical sum for a term not exceeding the life of the applicant as, having regard to the respondent's own income and other property, if any, the income and other property of the applicant and the conduct of the parties, it may seem to the Court to be just, and any such payment may be secured, if necessary, by a charge on the immovable property of the respondent".

Section 25 (1) thus provides inter alia that either the wife or the husband can apply to the Court at the time when it passes any decree under the Act or subsequently for an order on the other side to pay a gross or periodical sum for the applicant's maintenance and on such an application the Court may make an order as prayed for but an order for payment of a periodical sum can only be for a term not exceeding the life of the applicant and shall be in force only so long as the applicant remains unmarried. We are concerned here with an application made subsequent to the passing of the decree. To find an answer to the question that arises in this case it will be necessary to refer to certain other provisions of the Act which may be done conveniently at this stage.

4. Section 5 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 lays down the conditions that must be fulfilled before a marriage may be solemnized between two Hindus. Of the six conditions specified in the section, Clause (i) requires that neither party should have a spouse living at the time of marriage, clause (iv) lays down that the parties must not be within the degrees of prohibited relationship, unless the custom or usage governing each of them permits of a marriage between the two, and clause (v) enjoins that the parties are not to be sapindas of each other, unless the custom or usage governing each of them permits of a marriage between the two. Section 9 provides for a decree for restitution of conjugal rights when either the husband or the wife has unreasonably withdrawn from the society of the other. Section 10 provides for a decree for judicial separation on any of the grounds specified in the section. Section 11 states that a marriage "shall be null and void and may, on a petition presented by either party thereto, be so declared by a decree of nullity if it contravenes any one of the conditions specified in clauses (i), (iv) and (v) of Section 5". Section 12 (1) dealing with voidable marriages provides that a marriage may be annulled by a decree of nullity if,—

(a) the respondent was impotent at the time of the marriage and continued to be so until the institution of the proceeding; or

(b) the marriage is in contravention of the condition specified in clause (ii) of Section 5; or

(c) the consent of the petitioner, or where the consent of the guardian in marriage of the petitioner is required under Section 5, the consent of such guardian was obtained by force or fraud; or

(d) the respondent was at the time of the marriage pregnant by some person other than the petitioner.

Clauses (b), (c) and (d) are not relevant for the present purpose. Section 13 (1) specifies the grounds upon which a marriage may be dissolved by a decree of divorce. Section 16 provides that children of marriages in respect of which a decree of nullity has been passed under either Section 11 or Section 12 shall be deemed to be legitimate children of the parties to the marriage notwithstanding such decree.

5. The Act thus contemplates five classes of decrees, for restitution of conjugal rights under Section 9, for judicial separation under Section 10, for nullity of marriage under Section 11 or Section 12, and for divorce under S. 13. A decree declaring a marriage as null and void under S. 11 is made in a case where the marriage was solemnized in contravention of any of the essential conditions for a Hindu marriage. Such a marriage is automatically void or void ipso jure and is regarded as never having taken place; a decree of nullity passed in such a case only serves to put that fact on record. A voidable marriage may also be annulled by a decree of nullity under Section 12. However, the distinction between a void and a voidable marriage is well known. A voidable marriage is valid marriage until annulled, though a decree of nullity passed in such a case purports to put the parties retrospectively to the position as if the marriage had been void from its inception. A voidable marriage however remains valid if not annulled during the lifetime of the parties to it, and cannot be impeached after the death of either of them.

6. Turning now to the point at issue, Chakravarti, J., seems to have reached his conclusion on the following steps of reasoning. The effect of a voidable marriage being annulled by a decree of nullity is that the marriage is to be regarded as null and void from its inception. Thus there is no difference between a void marriage and a voidable marriage annulled by a decree of nullity, in both cases the marriage is to be regarded as never having taken place. Section 25 (1) entitles only the 'wife' or the 'husband' to apply under the section. If the position after a decree of nullity has been passed is that no marriage had ever taken place between the parties, the relationship of husband and wife cannot be said to have ever subsisted between them; in any event, in case of a voidable marriage the relationship cannot be said to be subsisting after a decree of nullity has been passed. His Lordship finds support for the view taken by him from the difference in language employed in Sections 11 and 12 dealing with void and voidable marriages respectively, and in Section 13 which provides for the dissolution of marriage by a decree of divorce. His Lordship points out that Section 13 (1) describes the parties who can apply under the section as the 'husband' or the 'wife' whereas this description is absent in Section 11 and Section 12. Chakravarti, J. also refers to a decision of the Gujarat High Court, Mehta Gunavantray v. Bai Prabha, AIR 1963 Guj 242 in support of his view. This decision which is of a learned single Judge holds that "under Section 25 no application for permanent alimony or maintenance can be made subsequent to the passing of the decree for dissolution or annulment of marriage in proceedings for dissolution of marriage by divorce or for annulment of marriage by a decree for nullity" because "after the decree the parties cease to be related as husband and wife". I shall come back to this case later but it may be pointed out here that the decision does not altogether support the view taken by Chakravarti, J. in holding that Section 25 has no application where a decree for divorce under Section 13 has been passed.

7. The reasons given by S. K. Datta, J. in support of his opinion that "Section 25 is applicable to all decrees which a Court under the Hindu Marriage Act is entitled to pass including decrees of nullity of voidable or void marriages" may be summarised as follows:

(i) Section 25 gives to the Court the power to grant permanent alimony and maintenance at the time of passing any decree or at any time subsequent thereto. The expression "any" has been used in the widest connotation without any limitation and the provisions of the section would, therefore, apply to all the various kinds of decrees permissible under the Act.

(ii) As a matter of public policy, in the context of social condition prevailing in a Hindu society, Section 25 ought to be made applicable to cases where decrees of nullity have been passed.

(iii) It is a cardinal rule of interpretation that a statute should be given a meaning which is in harmony with its relevant provisions and consistent with the object which it seeks to achieve. Applying this principle of interpretation and having regard to the "intended object" of the Hindu Marriage Act which was to secure to the parties to a marriage "rights which are beneficial to them in the present context of social relations", the provisions of Section 25 must be held to apply to the wife or the husband as the case may be.

8. Section 25 (1) of the Hindu Marriage Act 1955 empowers a Court exercising jurisdiction under the Act to make an order under the section at the time of passing "any decree" or at any time subsequent thereto. "Any decree" would apparently include all possible decrees under the Act. The provision, however, has to be read as a whole to see if it contains any other word or expression limiting the application of the provision. One apparent qualification seems to be that an order passed under the section directing payment of alimony or maintenance shall remain in force "while the applicant remains unmarried". This would seem to suggest that the operation of the section was restricted to cases where a party was in a position to contract another marriage and would exclude decrees for restitution of conjugal rights and judicial separation from the scope of the section. It has however been held by a Division Bench of the Gujarat High Court in the case of Harilal v. Lilavati, AIR 1961 Guj 202, that it would not be correct to read in the expression "while the applicant remains unmarried" the legislature's intention to restrict the operation of the section only to decrees of nullity of marriage and for divorce but that the operation of the expression should be confined to those cases only where it is applicable, that is, to cases where the applicant is in a position to contract a lawful marriage. In coming to this conclusion their Lordships observed: "The intention was not to restrict the powers of the Court in granting permanent alimony and maintenance to an extremely limited class of cases, namely where the Court had passed a decree for divorce or of nullity of marriage The words "any decree" would not have been used if it was the intention of the legislature to restrict the operation of the section only to cases where a decree for divorce or of nullity of marriage was passed. The power was intended to be exercised at the time of the passing of any of the decrees referred to in the earlier provisions of the Act or at any time subsequent thereto".

9. The expression "while the applicant remains unmarried" does not arise for consideration in the present case; I referred to it so that the observations of the Gujarat High Court in AIR 1961 Guj. 202 quoted above may appear in the proper context. This decision supports the view taken by S. K. Datta, J. that Section 25 should be held to apply to all kinds of decrees permissible under the Act. The case of AIR 1963 Guj. 242, relied on by S. K. Chakravarti, J., does not appear to have noted this earlier and contrary decision of a larger bench of the same High Court.

10. It remains to be seen whether the words "wife" or the "husband" used in Section 25 refer to persons who can apply under the section were deliberately chosen to exclude parties to a voidable marriage that has been annulled under Section 12. The other classes of decrees do not arise for consideration in this case except incidentally. Whether the words have a significance as found by Chakravarti, J. and as held in Gunvantray's case, AIR 1963 Guj. 242 can be tested by reference to the point of time when an application under Section 25 is made. Section 25 permits an application to be made at any time subsequent to the passing of any decree under the Act. If it were essential that the person applying must be the 'wife' or the 'husband' in the sense that marital ties must be subsisting between the parties when the application is made, then persons whose marriage has been dissolved by a decree of divorce under Section 13 of the Act would also be excluded from the coverage of the section because at that point of time the parties no longer remain husband and wife. This is a position which follows logically if the terms 'wife' and 'husband' are read as indicative of an existing marital relationship and this is what has been held in Gunvantray's case. But the view that the benefit of the section is available when a marriage has been dissolved by a decree of divorce under Section 13 but not when the marriage has been annulled by a decree of nullity under Section 12 seems to be somewhat inconsistent if the words 'wife' and 'husband' are read in the sense in which Chakravarti, J. thinks they should be read. A voidable marriage must be regarded as good and valid until annulled and there does not seem to be any difference between a decree passed under Section 12 and another under Section 13, so far as the availability of the benefit under Section 25 is concerned if it depends upon an existing marital relationship between the parties. In the context of Section 25 the terms 'wife' and 'husband' occurring therein do not seem to have been chosen to signify an existing relationship at the point of time when an application under the section is made. If the terms are to be interpreted as Chakravarti, J. suggests, the section would apply only to two classes of decrees, decrees for judicial separation and restitution of conjugal rights. Such an interpretation which excludes from the scope of the section the majority of the five different classes of decrees that may be passed under the Act, does not appear to me to be a reasonable way of reading the section which states that it would apply to 'any decree' under the Act. It seems to me that the words "the wife or the husband" in Section 25 have been used as convenient terms to refer to the parties to a marriage whether or not the marriage is valid or subsisting, just as the word 'marriage' has been used in the Act to include a purported marriage which was void ab initio. No special significance also seems to attach to the fact that unlike Section 13, Sections 11 and 12 of the Act do not use the description 'husband' or 'wife' to refer to persons entitled to apply under these sections; the description is also absent from Section 10 under which "either party to a marriage" can present a petition for judicial separation. In the English matrimonial statutes also persons whose marriage has been dissolved by a decree for divorce or annulled or declared a nullity have been frequently described as the husband and the wife. S. 1 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1907 states that the Court may on any decree for dissolution or nullity of marriage order that "the husband shall secure to the wife" such gross sum or annual sum of money as it may deem reasonable. A similar provision with the same description of the parties occurs in Section 190 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 and S. 19 (2) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950. Section 16 (1) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1965 provides that in granting a decree of divorce or at any time thereafter, the Court may make an order requiring the husband to secure to the wife a lump or periodical sum and Section 19 of the Act states that Section 16 (1) shall apply in relation to nullity of marriage as it applies in relation to divorce.

11. Giving the words of S. 25 the meaning which they appear to bear in the context, I agree with S. K. Datta, J. that the benefit of the section is available to either party to a marriage that has been annulled by a decree of nullity under Section 12; whether it also extends to all other kinds of decree under the Act is not a matter on which it is necessary to express a concluded opinion in this case. I would not however like to rest my conclusion on the supposed public policy or the "intended object" of the Act which appear to have weighed with Datta, J. The Court is not concerned with public policy except so far as such policy is apparent from the provisions of the statute, and the object of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 manifested in its various sections did not disclose to me any special clue to the construction of S. 25.

12. Let the case be placed before the Chief Justice so that it may now be disposed of by the appropriate Bench.

Order accordingly.

Mihir Kumar Sarkar and others, Appellants v. State of West Bengal and others, Respondents.

A. F. O. O. No. 126 of 1970, D/- 5-7-1971, from judgment and order of Anil Kumar Sen, J., D/- 5-3-1970.

(A) West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948), Section 3 — Resort to requisition, whether mala fide — As the Act itself is constitutionally valid, resort to requisition proceedings under this Act cannot be said to be bad or mala fide on the ground that the Act does not provide for the same or similar opportunity as provided in some provision of another Act such as Section 5A of Land Acquisition Act. (Case law discussed).

Where two statutes cover the same field there is no constitutional bar which prevents the application of one or the other. (Para 14)

(B) West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948), Section 3 — Notice in case of requisition — As this special Act expressly excludes notice to owners of property in the event of requisition, provision for notice cannot be read into the Act on the basis of principles of natural justice. (Case law discussed). (Para 40)

(C) West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948), S. 3 (1) — Requisition — Validity of requisition cannot be challenged on the ground that requisition involves permanent change in the character of the property. (Para 42)

Thus requisition of fishery is not open to challenge. (Para 42)

(D) West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948), Sec. 3 (1) — Requisition order — Validity — Requisition order is not invalid on the ground that it required delivery of requisitioned property on the next day of the service of notice. (Para 34)

(E) West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act (2 of 1948) (as amended by West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Ordinance 1969), Section 3 — Requisition of area for residence of people living outside — In spite of presence of the words "for the people residing in such areas" in the preamble after the amendment in view of their deletion from the section, requisition of an area for residence of people living outside that area would not be invalid, (Case law discussed). (Para 44)

P. B. MUKHARJI, C. J.:— This is an appeal from the judgment and order of Mr. Justice Anil Kumar Sen dated the 5th March, 1970, discharging the Rule obtained by the appellants.

2. The appellants moved this court under Article 226 of the Constitution against the State of West Bengal, the Additional District Magistrate, 24-Parganas and the Collector (under West Bengal Act II) Alipore. In that application the appellants prayed inter alia for a writ of mandamus commanding the respondents to withdraw, recall and cancel the Order of requisition issued by the State of West Bengal on or about 5th November, 1969 and for incidental relief for injunction restraining the respondents, their officers and servants and agents from interfering with the possession of the appellants in respect of the said land notified. The appellants' challenge in this appeal is against the Government's Order of requisition of appellants' lands under the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948.

3. The facts briefly appear from the Order of Requisition itself. In the first place the Order recites:

"Whereas in my opinion it is necessary for creation of better living conditions in rural or urban areas by the construction or reconstruction of dwelling places in Mouza Dhapanagar, P. S. Bhangar, District 24-Parganas for I. W. Department of the West Bengal to requisition the land described in the Schedule below."

4. The Order then traces the authority for requisition of land to the Government Notification No. 20500 dated the 3-12-1963 read with the Notification No. 3094 LA dated 17-2-1963 published in the Calcutta Gazette Extra-ordinary of the 21st. October, 1963 at page 367. This notification authorises the Collector to exercise the power conferred by Sec. 3 (1) of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 (West Bengal Act 2 of 1948) as amended by Act VIII of 1954, XII of 1967 of 1962, XXII of 1963 and Act III of 1967.

5. In exercise of the power conferred by Section 3 (1) of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act 1948 the Collector requisitioned the land mentioned in the schedule and ordered:

"(1) possession of the land as described in the sch. by the Surveyor Shri S. Roy/Shri Ganguli on and from 8th November, 1969.

(2) the plan of the land may be inspected in the office of the Special Land Requisition Officer, Alipore."

6. The land in question falls within the reclamation of the Southern Salt Lake area in the Eastern outskirt of the city of Calcutta which is a well known big project of urban development.

7. The Order of Requisition is challenged on diverse grounds.

8. The first objection is that this requisition has been made by the Government in violation of the Court's order in Civil Rule No. 7132 (W) of 1968 giving opportunity to the respondents to proceed afresh in accordance with the law under the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act. The appellants' contention is that the respondents violated those directions by taking recourse to a different Statute, viz. West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 and not proceeding under the Land acquisition Act for which opportunity was given by these directions of the Court in that Civil Rule.

9. The context of this argument is provided by the following facts. The appellants claimed to be the owners of certain fisheries which are included in this requisition. The same area was covered by the declaration made by the Government under the Land Acquisition Act and dated the 21st. May, 1968. The appellants then disputed the validity of that declaration under the Land Acquisition Act in proceedings which were marked as Civil Rule No. 7132 (W) of 1968. By a judgment and order dated the 15th July, 1969 Mr. Justice B. C. Mitra set aside the said acquisition proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act on the finding that the object set out in the declaration was not the actual object for which the acquisition was being made.

10. On a close scrutiny of the nature and scope of the aforesaid proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act and the order made in the Civil Rule No. 7132 (W) of 1968 setting aside such proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, the contention of the appellants that the present proceedings under the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 violates such order cannot be sustained. In making the said Rule in the land acquisition proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act the material portion of the order of the court was as follows:-

"This Order will not debar the State Government from taking fresh proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act in accordance with the law, if it is so advised."

11. The order in these terms cannot be construed in our judgment to mean that it was a positive direction that any further proceedings for acquisition must have to be taken under the Land Acquisition Act and not under any other Statute permitting it or that it prevented the respondents from invoking the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. The words of the Order "if so advised" make that plain. Secondly the Rule made absolute in Civil Rule No. 7132 (W) of 1968 was not concerned at all with the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. Therefore in those proceedings there could be no occasion for any pronouncement by the Court about the rights under the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. Thirdly the order of the court as stated above proceeded on the short point in the Civil Rule No. 7132 (W) of 1968 that the object set out in the declaration under the Land Acquisition Act was not the actual object for which the acquisition was made under that Act. It is in the light of that finding that the order of the Court quoted above permitting the State Government to take fresh proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act in accordance with the law will have to be read. In other words the proper construction of the Order of the Court as set out above is in the first place that it permitted the State Government to invoke even the Land Acquisition Act "if so advised" provided the Government avoided the mistake of disparity between the objects set out in the declaration under the Land Acquisition Act and the actual object, and in the second place the Court did not fetter by that order in any manner the Government's statutory rights under any other statute like the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act and to take proceeding thereunder. We, therefore, overrule the first objection of the appellants.

12. The second objection of the appellants depends on the first to this extent that the appellants contend that the Government's recourse to the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act was mala fide because it could not proceed under the Land Acquisition Act. It was contended that the present step was a subterfuge on the part of the Government to deny the more liberal rights to the appellants which they could have enjoyed if fresh proceedings were taken under Land Acquisition Act. The main contention of the appellants on this ground was that the Government proceeded under this Statute, the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 to deprive the appellants of the opportunity to raise an objection under Section 5A of the Land Acquisition Act.

13. This objection must also fail in our judgment. If the special statute like the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 under which the present requisition is made is otherwise valid and if it does not provide for the same or similar opportunity as provided in Section 5A of another Act like the Land Acquisition Act, then that by itself does not make the proceedings under this Act viz. The West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 mala fide or bad on that ground. If different powers are provided by different Statutes it is open to the authority empowered thereby to take recourse to or even to change over from one to the other, so long as it is not a fraud upon the Statute or made with any collateral or mala fide motives. I shall cite three authorities on this point and in support of the view I am taking.

14. I shall begin with the decision of my own delivered as early as the 30th August, 1963 in Sachindra Mohan Nandy v. The State of West Bengal, AIR 1963 Cal 373. I held there (1) at pages 376-77 of that Report that the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act of 1948 as contemplated in Article 31 (2) of the Constitution cannot be held ultra vires on the ground that it violates Article 19 (f) of the Constitution of India and I also held at p. 396 that (2) the unqualified proposition that where two Statutes are available, one giving larger rights to the subject or the citizen and the other lesser, than the choice of Statute must be left to the subject or citizen and not to the State and must always be made in favour of the subject and against the Government, cannot be accepted as correct. A statute applies by force of its own strength and if two statutes cover the same field there is no constitutional law which prevents the application of the one or the other or compels the preference of one to the other. If both can be applied either one or the other can be applied or invoked by the State empowered to do so. If the statutes prescribed unequal procedure or law then the only way they can be challenged is on the ground of infringement of equal protection or equality of laws under Article 14 of the Constitution. If they survive the test of the challenge of Article 14 of the Constitution then no further question of unconstitutional preference in the application of one or the other statute on the ground of discrimination can any longer arise and (3) I further held at pages 379-80 of that report that the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 were indeed different in so far as they were intended to meet different purposes. Therefore if in the exigencies of a particular case the State Government chooses to apply the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 for acquisition of certain land instead of applying the slower proceedings prescribed by the Land Acquisition Act, the order of requisition cannot be challenged as discriminatory or unconstitutional. I maintain the view I expressed there. The Supreme Court in a recent Judgment, to which I shall make a reference, has also upheld the constitutional validity of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act of 1948.

15. The next decision is of the Assam High Court in Nadir Shah v. State of Assam, AIR 1960 Assam 18. Although this case does not deal with West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 yet it is relevant because it was concerned with a similar problem of competition between the Assam Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 and the Land Acquisition Act. There a Division Bench of the Assam High Court made the following observations at pages 19-20 of that report:

"As to the second point that the land was not acquired under the Land Acquisition Act but was being requisitioned under Assam Act 25 of 1948, we have examined the argument and, in our opinion, that is not ground for invalidating the requisition order made under Section 3 of the Assam Act. Once it is found that the order was for a public purpose, and that the order comes within the ambit of Section 3 (1) of the Assam Act, the question as to whether the acquisition should have been under the Land Acquisition Act, becomes immaterial for the purpose of examining the validity of the order of requisition. Apart from that, the ultimate purpose, as it appears, of the State Government is to acquire this land."

I respectfully agree with that view.

16. I shall close this series of citations by the next authority of the Supreme Court in Northern India Caterers (P) Ltd. v. State of Punjab, AIR 1967 SC 1581. Then the Supreme Court had to consider the correlated question between the Punjab Public Premises and Land (Eviction and Rent Recovery) Act (31 of 1959) with other Statutes. The principles were laid down by the Supreme Court in that decision at pages 1584-85 and at page 1588. The Supreme Court expresses the view there that the objects and reasons of the Punjab Act (31 of 1959) show that the legislature intended to provide a remedy which it thought was speedier than the one by way of suit under the ordinary law of eviction. There is nothing in this Act to warrant the conclusion that it impliedly takes away the right of suit by Government or that, therefore, it is substitutive and not supplemental. The significant observations made by Shelat J. delivering the majority judgment of the Supreme Court are in the following terms:

"With these reasonings I cannot agree. The Act does not create a new right of eviction. It creates an additional remedy for a right existing under the general law. It does not repeal the law giving the remedies of a suit or bar the jurisdiction of Civil Court to try a suit for eviction. The Government is at liberty to proceed against the occupants either under the Act or by way of a suit."

17. It will however be appropriate to conclude these citations with the latest observations of the Supreme Court in S. M. Nandy v. State of West Bengal where the Supreme Court takes the same view on the 19th February 1971 as I did on the 30th August, 1963. That Supreme Court decision is as yet unreported and was delivered in Civil Appeal No. 500 of 1967 (Since reported in AIR 1971 SC 963). Sikri C. J. delivering the judgment of the Supreme Court emphasised the point that the impugned Act viz. the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act was enacted in order to provide for requisition and speedy acquisition of land for public purpose. The learned Chief Justice of India was considering the challenge to the Bengal Act in these terms:

"Whether the West Bengal Land Acquisition Act, 1948 was ultra vires under Article 19 (1) (f) of the Constitution read with Article 19 (5)."

The Supreme Court in that case held the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 to be constitutional and made the following observations:

"We are, therefore, of the opinion that it is difficult to hold that restrictions imposed by the impugned Act are unreasonable. Fair price has been provided for requisition, which is determinable by Civil Court and ultimately by the High Court or the Supreme Court. Regarding the necessity for requisition it must necessarily be left to the State Government. It is true that there is no express provision to make a representation against an order of requisition but there is no bar to a representation being made after the order is served under Section 3 (2) of the Act. If representation raises a point which overrides the public purpose it would be favourably considered by the State Government or other Government authorities as the case may be."

18. This last point in the above observations is important inasmuch as it is also one of points of challenge made in the present appeal before us because it is contended that this West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act permits a requisition without giving even a hearing or opportunity to the person whose land is requisitioned. The answer of the Supreme Court is that although the West Bengal Act does not expressly provide for a representation, yet there is nothing to prevent a representation being made after the order has been served and the Government considering it, if such representation raises a point which overrides the public purpose. The view expressed by the Supreme Court is supported by a reference also to Section 6 of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act of 1948 providing expressly for releasing requisitioned land which "is not acquired", and "is to be released."

19. The substance of this objection is that the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 permits requisition to be made without notice to the person concerned. This is contended to be against the principles of natural justice. Section 3 of this Statute provides inter alia that "If the State Government is of the opinion that it is necessary so to do for maintaining supplies essential to the life of the community or for providing proper facilities for transport, communication, irrigation or drainage, or for the creation of better living conditions in rural or urban areas, not being an industrial or other area excluded by State Government by a notification in this behalf, by the construction or reconstruction of dwelling places, the State Government may, by order in writing, requisition any land and may make such further orders as appear to it to be necessary or expedient in connection with the requisitioning."

20. It goes on to provide in Section 3 (2) of that Act that an order under sub-s. (1) shall be served in the prescribed manner on the owner of the land and where the order relates to land in occupation of an occupier not being the owner of the land, also on such occupier.

21. It also appears from this provision that it does not require notice to be given to the owner or occupier before the order of acquisition is made, although it requires that the order of requisition after having been made, shall be served in the prescribed manner on the owner and/or the occupier of the land.

22. It is contended by the appellants that this is against the principles of natural justice and is a most unreasonable interference with the rights to property. In support of this contention the appellants have relied on a number of decisions and authorities of the Supreme Court. The first reliance is placed on the decision of the Supreme Court in M. Gopalkrishna Naidu v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1968 SC 240. This case however has no application to the facts and principles involved in the present appeal. That was a case under disciplinary jurisdiction concerned with the Fundamental Rules of service and departmental proceedings whose principles are not on a par with the principles of acquisition and requisition of property under special statutes. The Supreme Court observed there at page 243 of that report.

"The very nature of the function implies the duty to act judicially. In such a case if an opportunity to show cause against the action proposed is not afforded, as admittedly it was not done in the present case, the order is liable to be struck down as invalid on the ground that it is one in breach of the principles of natural justice."

23. These principles in my judgment relating to disciplinary jurisdiction under Rule 54 of the Fundamental Rules have no application to the principles and facts involved in the instant appeal. The second case on which reliance was placed by the appellants is the decision of the Supreme Court in the State Bank of India v. Rajendra Kumar Singh, AIR 1969 SC 401. That case also in my view has no application to the principles and facts involved in appeal. That was the case concerning Sections 517 and 520 of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to the order of return of seized property and laying down the principle that in such a context there should be given an opportunity of being heard to the aggrieved party before passing such order. That is a judicial proceeding and the order is the order of the Court and naturally the Court must hear the rival claimant before making any order of return of the seized property. The third case on which reliance was placed by the appellants is A. K. Kraipak v. Union of India, AIR 1970 SC 150. This again relates to an administrative enquiry under the All India Services Act, 1951 and discussed the principles of administrative or quasi-judicial power and in that context made the observations about the concept of natural justice. It will be thus seen that all these cases to which the appellants made reference have nothing to do with the principles of acquisition and requisition under Special Statutes with which the present appeal before us is concerned.

24. The importance, however, of the last decision in Kraipak's case, AIR 1970 SC 150 is that it tried to indicate that since the aim of quasi-judicial as well as administrative enquiries is to arrive at a just decision these rules should apply to both and the former classical distinction between the administrative action on the one hand and judicial or quasi-judicial action on the other, attracting the principles of natural justice to the latter and not to the former is breaking down in modern jurisprudence. In making that observation the Supreme Court discussed the recent trends in some decisions of the English Court of Appeal which I shall notice later in this judgment. That is the importance of this Supreme Court decision. It might only help the appellants to this extent in their argument that even if the order of requisition is to be regarded as a purely administrative decision or executive order the principles of natural justice must nevertheless be applied. This point of view can be accepted so far as it goes but must always be read subject to the limitations that when a special statute either expressly or by necessary implication excludes notice to the aggrieved party then the statute is to be obeyed provided of course the statute is constitutional in India. See the later decision of the Supreme Court in Union of India v. J. N. Sinha, AIR 1971 SC 40 at p. 42.

25. The appellants at this point tried to avail of the other observations in the Supreme Court Judgment in Civil Appeal No. 500 of 1987 (reported in AIR 1971 SC 963) quoted above in S. M. Nandy v. the State of West Bengal that although there is no express provision to make representation against the order, yet there is no bar to the representation being made after an order is served under Section 3 (2) of the West Bengal Act. That observation goes against the appellants because in the first place the Supreme Court in that decision upheld the constitutional character of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 even without express provision for notice before requisition. The absence of notice clause under that Act did not vitiate the validity of the Statute and it was open to the aggrieved party to make a representation against the order of requisition made without notice in the first instance but to come forward with a representation after the order has been served. In the second place no representation was in fact made in this appeal even after the order of requisition was served but an outright application was made to the Court challenging it under Article 226 of the Constitution. Thirdly even after requisition, the requisitioned land can be released if it is not acquired as provided in Sec. 6 of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act of 1948.

26. The last case on which the appellants relied on this point is a decision of the Supreme Court in, AIR 1971 SC 40. This decision is really against the contention of the appellants. It is clearly laid down there that when there is conflict between rules of natural justice and statutory provisions, statutory provisions must prevail and not rules of natural justice. See the observations of K. S. Hegde, J. at page 42 of that report. The learned Judge explained this doctrine by observing,

"It is true that if a statutory provision can be read consistently with the principles of natural justice, the Courts should do so because it must be presumed that the legislatures and the statutory authorities intend to act in accordance with the principles of natural justice. But, if on the other hand, a statutory provision either specifically or by necessary implication excludes the application of any or all the rules of principles of natural justice then the Court cannot ignore the mandate of the legislature or the statutory authority and read into the concerned provision the principles of natural justice. Whether the exercise of a power conferred should be made in accordance with any of the principles of natural justice or not depends upon the express words of the provision conferring the power, the nature of the power conferred, purpose for which it is conferred and the effect of the exercise of that power."

27. The real enquiry therefore in this appeal is whether the West Bengal Land (Requisition & Acquisition) Act, 1948 specifically or by necessary implication excludes the provision of notice as part of natural justice claimed by the appellants. In order to determine this question the words used in this statute, the nature of the power used or conferred and the purpose for which it is conferred and the effect of the exercise of such power are all relevant considerations.

28. I, therefore, proceed to examine this scheme of West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 to determine whether notice is expressly or by necessary implication excluded so far as requisition is concerned. I find from the analysis of this Statute that there is conscious and deliberate departure in the Act from the natural justice of giving prior notice in the case of requisition. This becomes apparent when the contrast is made between acquisition where the statute expressly provides for notice and requisition where it deliberately avoids provision for notice. I have already quoted Section 3 which does not mention any notice before requisition under this Act. On the other hand acquisition under the Act is provided in Section 4. In Section 4 (1) (a) it is expressly provided that the State Government may acquire any land requisitioned under Section 3 by public notice in the official gazette that such land is required for public purpose referred to in sub-s. (1) of Section 3. Immediately upon such publication the requisitioned land vests absolutely in the State Government free from all encumbrances and the period of requisition ends by reason of the provision of sub-sec. (2) of Section 4 of this Act. Section 4 immediately follows Section 3 of the Act. When Section 3 deals with requisition it does not mention the requirement of notice to be given before requisition, but immediately in the next Section when acquisition is mentioned in Section 4 there is the express provision for notice. I read these two sections in close juxtaposition to indicate the object and purpose of the statute to exclude notice in the case of requisition and to include notice in the case of acquisition.

29. Between the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 and the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 there is a time gap of more than half a century. Over this gap of more than 50 years the problems of compulsory acquisition and requisition of land have undergone many changes in law and in legal attitudes. They have acquired an urgency in the modern sociological context of law. Problems of modern society, congestion, density of population, influx of refugees, industrialisation, mechanisation, technology and urbanisation are some of the main forces which have produced different laws and legal attitudes in respect of acquisition and requisition. Social responsibilities attached to individual ownership of property are being recognised in laws gradually and slowly. I shall indicate briefly these changes by contrasting Land Acquisition Act, 1894 with the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. The contrast reveals the changing law on this subject.

30. The preamble of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 describes it "as an Act to amend the law for acquisition of land for public purpose and for company." It makes elaborate provisions for preliminary investigation and hearing of objections in Part II of that Statute, specially in Sections 4 and 5A of that Act. Section 4 deals with publication of preliminary notification and powers of officers. The first step there is to have a notification in the official Gazette declaring the Government's intention that land in locality is needed or is likely to be needed, for any public purpose. It is followed by giving any person interested in any land the right to object to the acquisition under Section 5A of that statute. The aggrieved person has a right to be heard in support of his objection. This is followed by an enquiry by the Collector who makes ultimately a report to the Government. The decision of the appropriate Government on that report is provided in that statute to be final.

31. The first difference between the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 and the older Land Acquisition Act 1894 is, therefore, that all preliminary investigation in Part II of the Land Acquisition Act is obviated in the former Act in the case of requisition thereunder. Secondly all the process of hearing objection under Section 5A of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 is avoided under the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 in the case of requisition. Thirdly the vesting of the land under the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act 1948 in case of acquisition is immediate under Section 4 (2) of that Act, when a notice of acquisition is issued under Section 4 (1a) of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. This is provided in Section 4 (2) of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. But this is not so immediate under the old Land Acquisition Act, 1894 by reason of Section 16 of that Act where vesting in the Government takes place only after the Collector has made the award and taken possession of the land. Fourthly, the preamble of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 expressly describes it to be "an Act to provide for the requisition and speedy acquisition of land for certain purposes". Therefore, requisition and speedy acquisition of land are the primary object of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948. I, therefore, read this preamble and the substantive provisions in the sections of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 to mean this that they were intended to provide for speedy acquisition. In order to do so they have provided that no notice would be required for requisition. Notice is only required under the West Bengal Act in the case of acquisition as provided in Sections 4 and 5 of that West Bengal Act. That is why acquisition under the West Bengal Act can only be made of land which has been requisitioned. Express recognition of this principle is to be found in Section 4 of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 which permits in sub-section (1a) the State Government to acquire any land requisitioned under Section 3 by publishing a notice in the Official Gazette that such land is required for public purposes. This is a significant difference between the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 which does not provide for land requisition but provides only for acquisition with perhaps the exception in the case of temporary occupation in respect of waste and arable land under S. 35 of the Land Acquisition Act 1894. Fifthly, while under the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act of 1948 there can be no acquisition of land without there being a requisition first, yet such requisition need not lead invariably to acquisition under the West Bengal Act because of the express provision made in Section 6 of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 providing that "Where any Land requisitioned under Section 3 is not acquired and is to be released from requisition, the State Government may, after making such inquiry, if any, as it considers necessary, specify by order in writing the person who appears to it to be entitled to the possession of such land." In appropriate cases the aggrieved party can invoke this Section 6 for release of the requisitioned land. There are other differences between Land Acquisition Act, 1894 but they are not material for purpose of this appeal. The general conclusion that follows from this comparative analysis and contrast of these two Acts is that no construction should be placed on the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 which will stifle or impede the main declared object of requisition and speedy acquisition of land.

32. A few more words are necessary to revert to the subject of the legal nature of requisition having regard to the argument made about administrative action on the one hand and judicial and quasi-judicial action on the other. The Supreme Court in Smt. Lila Vati Bai v. State of Bombay, AIR 1957 SC 521 in considering the legality and validity of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948 as amended by Bombay Act 2 of 1950 observed at page 529,

"An order like the one passed under Section 6 (4) (a) of the Bombay Land Requisition Act, 1948 is not in the nature of an order in Judicial proceedings between the Government on the one hand and other parties named." Apparently the order of requisition under the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 is of a similar nature. It is not in the nature of an order in judicial proceedings. Therefore, absence of express provision for notice before requisition of land under Section 3 of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 cannot ordinarily vitiate such requisition either on the ground of principles of natural justice or on the ground of infringement of fundamental rights of property under the Constitution of India.

33. To overcome these difficulties on the ground of natural justice the argument was advanced on behalf of the appellants that natural justice must be made applicable whether it is in the sphere of judicial or quasi-judicial acts or in purely administrative or executive decisions. I have already noticed that argument and I have expressed my view. I shall not repeat them here again. But it is, necessary to notice this new doctrine and observe its limits.

34. I shall begin by noticing a few decisions at this stage because they seem to indicate the wind of change in this branch of the law on this point. The pioneer to express this changing view is Lord Parker C. J. in Re H. K. (An Infant) 1967-2 WLR 962 where the learned Lord Chief Justice of England presiding in the Court of Appeal in the Queen's Bench Division made the following significant observations at pages 971 and 972 of that report,

"Good administration and an honest or bona fide decision must, as it seems to me, require not merely impartiality, nor merely bringing one's mind to bear on the problem, but acting fairly; and to the limited extent that the circumstances of any particular case allow, and within the legislative framework under which the administrator is working, only to that limited extent do the so-called rules of natural justice apply, which in a case such as this is merely a duty to act fairly. I appreciate that in saying that it may be said that one is going further than is permitted on the decided cases because heretofore at any rate the decisions of the courts do seem to have drawn a strict line in these matters according to whether there is or is not a duty to act judicially or quasi-judicially. It has sometimes been said that if there is no duty to act judicially or quasi-judicially there is no power in the court whatever to interfere I do not understand him to be saying that if there is no duty to act judicially, then there is no duty even to be fair."

35. These observations of the learned Lord Chief Justice of England were made in connection with actual words and language of the Commonwealth Immigrants Act, 1962 and the duties of the Immigrant Officers under that Act, which are very different from the provision of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948, which must ultimately govern and determine this appeal. See particularly the provisions of Sections 2, 3 and Sch. I of the Commonwealth Immigrants Act requiring notice on which this English decision is based and on which the Lord Chief Justice of England made the above observations. These observations were made in the most guarded language and with specific limitations plain from such words of the Lord Chief Justice as "limited extent," "the circumstances of any particular case allow," and "within the legislative framework under which the administrator is working." It will be inappropriate to take the Lord Chief Justice's observation without these limitations.

36. The next spokesman for this new view and attitude is Lord Denning M. R. in Schmidt v. Secretary of State for Home Affairs (1969) 2 WLR 337 where the learned Master of the Rolls observed at page 350 of that report:

"I quite agree, of course, that where a public officer has power to deprive a person of his liberty or his property, the general principle is that it is not to be done without his being given an opportunity of being heard and of making representations on his own behalf Some of the judgments in those cases were based on the fact that the Home Secretary was exercising an administrative power and not doing a judicial act. But that distinction is no longer valid. The speeches in Ridge v. Baldwin (1964) A. C. 40 show that an administrative body may, in a proper case, be bound to give a person who is affected by their decision an opportunity of making representations. It all depends on whether he has some right or interest, or, I would add, some legitimate expectation, of which I would not be fair to deprive him without hearing what he has to say."

Thereafter Lord Denning M. R. cites the observations of Lord Parker C. J. in the case above namely in Re H. K. (An Infant) 1967-2 WLR 962.

37. Lord Denning M. R. was dealing with a case in the Court of Appeal under the Aliens Order, 1953 whose provisions are not comparable with those of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948 relating to requisition.

38. The Supreme Court decision of two learned Judges J. C. Shah and G. K. Mitter, JJ. in State of Orissa v. Dr. (Miss) Binapani Dei, AIR 1967 SC 1269 made the following observations at page 1272.

"It is true that the order is administrative in character, but even an administrative order which involves civil consequences, as already stated, must be made consistently with the rules of natural justice after informing the first respondent of the case of the State, the evidence in support thereof and after giving an opportunity to the first respondent of being heard and meeting or explaining the evidence."

39. These observations however, were made in connection with an enquiry depending on complicated questions of fact where an order of compulsory retirement based on a certain disputed date of birth was involved and where the petitioner was not given the report of the Enquiry Officer who conducted the enquiry into the correct date of birth. These observations were made on the basis of facts and law which have no application to the facts and law of the present appeal before us.

40. As at present advised this Court is not prepared to subscribe to the doctrine that there is no distinction between judicial or quasi-judicial decisions on the one hand and purely executive and administrative decisions on the other. The very nature of the writs like mandamus on the one hand and Certiorari or Prohibition on the other stems from that distinction. If all administrative or executive decisions were to follow judicial or quasi-judicial procedures then that would in this Court's view lead to utter confusion and an impossible state of affairs and will mean disregard of the basic principles of executive action and judicial action which do not represent a merely formal or theoretical distinction but a qualitative distinction springing from the nature of the act itself. No doubt Lord Parker's observation that good and honest administration must act fairly is basic to law and any good legal administration but that only means that the executive or the administrative action should not be mala fide or for collateral purpose. Lord Parker's proposition must be read subject to the express limitations that the learned Lord Chief Justice himself used and which I have quoted above. Lord Denning's observations that the distinction is no longer valid following as they did Lord Parker's view, must be read subject to the same limitations. As at present advised this Court is of the opinion that an executive decision or action or an administrative decision is liable to be struck down if it is used mala fide or for a collateral purpose, on that ground alone, and not on the ground that there is no legal and juristic distinction between executive action and the judicial action. In any event in the case of an area completely covered by a special statute and specially in a field which is not covered by the common law I maintain the view that the statute must govern and its language and words are the determining factors. Many principles of natural justice today have been overcome by dictates of statute passed because of the needs of modern society and social welfare. To conclude where a statute either expressly or by necessary implication excludes notice to the aggrieved party in case of requisition of land for public purpose as in the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act, 1948, is to fly in the face of this statute. Where there is statutory silence there is scope for applying the principles of natural justice but where on a proper interpretation of the statute itself, expressly or by necessary implication, such notice is excluded then it will not be justifiable for any court to re-introduce it on the ground of principles of natural justice. That is also how read the latest pronouncement of the Supreme Court in Civil Appeal No. 500 of 1967 (reported in AIR 1971 SC 963) quoted above.

41. The next objection of the appellants to the order of requisition is that it is not for any public purpose but for the purpose of converting fisheries into dwelling places. The contention further is that it involves a total change in the character of the property. In short the appellant's argument on this point is that such an object cannot come within the sanction of Section 3 (1) of the West Bengal Act. In support of this argument it is contended for the appellants that requisition under Section 3 (1) of the West Bengal Act does not permit change in the character of the property and in particular it does not permit permanent change in the character of the property which is requisitioned under the statute. What is said by the appellants is that if the property is subsequently de-requisitioned after converting the fisheries into a highland the owners thereof are likely to suffer irreparable injury.

42. I have carefully considered this objection and I am unable to accept it. Among the expressed purposes for which land can be requisitioned under Section 3 (1) of that Act it is stated inter alia "for providing proper facilities for transport, communication, irrigation or drainage, or for the creation of better living conditions in rural or urban areas by the construction or reconstruction of dwelling places." The expressed declaration of such specific objects does not in my opinion put any limitation upon the Government about changing the character of the property requisitioned. We are of the opinion that so long as these purposes are carried out by "the construction or reconstruction of dwelling places," such requisition cannot be challenged on the ground that it involves permanent change in the character of the property requisitioned. The right to change the character of the property requisitioned appears expressly and is inherent in the Section itself. It is plain from the language of S. 3 (1) of the West Bengal Act that the property requisitioned may undergo the fundamental change in its character to serve the statutory purpose of requisition mentioned therein. Construction of dwelling places is an expressed purpose in Section 3 (1) of this Statute. That permits and means permanent change in the character of the property requisitioned. The further argument of the appellants is that conversion of the fisheries into highland or dwelling place would mean irreparable injury to the appellants as owners of fisheries is met by the same answer. To prefer men and their dwelling places to fisheries in an overcongested city like Calcutta howling for space for human habitation is a "public purpose" in modern sociology of law and statutes. The alleged injury to the owners of fisheries is a matter of compensation as provided in Section 7 of the West Bengal Act. We, therefore, overrule this objection of the appellants.

43. The next challenge to the order of requisition is that it is high-handed giving no time or hardly any time to the appellants. The argument for the appellants is advanced on the following lines. The impugned order is dated the 5th November, 1969. The order itself was served on the 7th November, 1969, calling upon the appellants to deliver possession on the very day following. The appellants contend that this is grossly insufficient notice and as such the order should be struck down. In the very first instance, Section 3 (1) as quoted above does not speak of any notice whatever. That section provides in Section 3 (2) that the order shall be served in the prescribed manner on the owner or occupier of the land. That has been done. The statute, therefore, does not provide for any particular notice or any minimum period of notice. The requirements of Section 3 (2) of the West Bengal Act have on the facts of this case been satisfied. No question of any notice or reasonableness of a period of notice in such circumstances can arise. The owner or occupier of a land upon whom the order of requisition has been served under Section 3 (2) of the West Bengal Act is expected to know what he is required to deliver by that order. It is, there, in our judgment not open to the appellants to urge that the order of requisition is bad because it stated "the plan of the land may be inspected in the office of the Special Land Acquisition Officer, Alipore" or that the schedule given thereunder should have given more specific details of the land to be requisitioned. The schedule is reasonably specific and clear and offer to have the plan inspected in the order of requisition was adequate enough even though time was short. In addition, the fact is that the owner or occupier of the land served with a notice of requisition of this character is expected to know what are his lands, of which he is required to make delivery of possession. In any event this consideration cannot in our judgment vitiate the order of requisition in the facts of this case and on the terms of the statute. It must also be borne in mind in this connection that the whole statute is for the object of "speedy acquisition" and requisition.

44. The next objection of the appellant to the order of requisition is that S. 3 (1) of the West Bengal Act permits only requisition for the purposes set out there "by the construction or reconstruction of dwelling places for people residing in such areas." The appellants contend that the limitation is contained in the words in the statute "for people residing in such area." They contend that construction or reconstruction of dwelling places for people who do not reside in such areas is not permissible under this Statute. It is the basis of this contention that the Salt Lake Reclamation Scheme provides also for people from outside who will also be entitled to come and reside in the dwelling places that may be constructed or reconstructed there. This argument proceeds on a wrong assumption of present law. This particular provision was amended by an Amendment Ordinance and known as the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) (Amendment) Ordinance, 1969 (West Bengal Ordinance 13 of 1969). This Ordinance was promulgated and published on the 16th October, 1969 before the order of requisition was made in this case. By virtue of Clause 2 of that Ordinance the express words "for people residing in such areas" in Section 3 (1) of the West Bengal Act were deleted and completely omitted from that section. The ambit therefore, of Section 3 (1) of the West Bengal Act has been widened. It is no longer intended for people residing in such areas. This Ordinance came into force on the 16th October, 1969 before the order of requisition and therefore this requisition is covered by that Ordinance amending the West Bengal Act of 1948. Since then the amendment made by the Ordinance has been re-enacted in West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Amendment Act of 1970 (West Bengal Act XVI of 1970). The argument was advanced for the appellants that although Section 3 (1) of the Act was amended as aforesaid, the preamble of the statute did not omit the words "for the people residing in such areas". But on well settled principles of the construction the preamble cannot override the express, clear and unambiguous language of the sections of the Act. See Lord Normand's observations in the House of Lords in Att. General v. Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover, 1957 AC 436 at pages 467-68. See also the Supreme Court decision in The State of Rajasthan v. Mrs. Leela Jain, AIR 1965 SC 1296 at page 1299. This argument in any event has completely lost its force by reason of Section 4 (2) of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Amendment Act of 1970 (West Bengal Act XVI of 1970) which validates past action inter alia in these terms: "Anything done or action taken under the said Act as amended by the Ordinance shall be deemed to have been validly done or taken under the said Act as amended by this Act as if this Act had commenced on the 16th October, 1969".

45. This disposes of all the arguments advanced for the appellants in this appeal. Certain additional grounds had been taken by the appellants but they were not pressed. They relate to the constitutional validity of the West Bengal Land (Requisition and Acquisition) Act under Articles 19 and 31 of the Constitution of India. Those points are already concluded by the latest Supreme Court pronouncement in favour of the constitutional validity of the West Bengal Act in Civil Appeal No. 500 of 1967 (reported in AIR 1971 SC 963) quoted above and in my own judgment in that case cited earlier in this judgment. These grounds are no longer available to the appellants. A minor point was also taken in the additional grounds alleging that on the face of the affidavit-in-opposition affirmed by Shri Atul Das Gupta in the Rule in question though it was Shri Das Gupta and not the Additional District Magistrate who passed the order of requisition, the order of requisition is bad because it was signed by the Additional District Magistrate who is alleged not to have applied his mind but mechanically signed the order of requisition. This was not seriously pressed before us in the appeal. We must state however that there is no substance in this ground at all. Section 3 (1) speaks of the "opinion" of the State Government. The opinion of the Government can be formed and based on the report of administrative officers and when the authority signs on the basis of that report it does not necessarily follow that the authority signs mechanically and without applying his mind. Non-application of the mind must be established as a fact. It is not so in this case. That ground must, therefore, fail.

46. For reasons stated above this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs assessed at five gold Mohurs.

SALIL KUMAR DATTA, J.

The Asansol Electric Supply Co. and others, Appellants v. Chunnilal Daw, Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 558 of 1966, D/- 24-2-1971.

(A) Companies Act (1956), Section 172 — Non-compliance — Effect — Provisions of Section 172 have been made expressly mandatory and for good reasons and the same must be strictly complied with to ensure the validity of resolutions placed at the meeting. Non-compliance of the said provisions would make such resolutions void and ultra vires. (Para 30)

(B) Specific Relief Act (1877), Section 21 (b) — Wrongful termination of service — Suit for declaration that service continues — (Civil P. C. (1908), Section 9).

The relationship between master and servant is often a matter of contract and if such contract is wrongfully terminated, the remedy of the aggrieved party lies in an action for damages and the court will not grant a declaration that a contract of service still subsists. Such declaration will amount to an order for specific performance of personal service which is practically forbidden in law. The position will however, be different when a statute intervenes in the relationship of master and servant and the employee is given a statutory status. If there is a violation of the provisions of the statute in terminating the service of such an employee, he will be eligible for a declaration that the order terminating the service is a nullity and that he continues to be in service.

Where the company by a resolution purported to terminate the employment of the plaintiff and according to the plaintiff such resolution was void and ultra vires, though the plaintiff cannot sue for enforcement of a contract for personal service, being barred under Section 21 (b) of Specific Relief Act, 1877, he is entitled to establish in a court of competent jurisdiction that the impugned resolution being in violation of mandatory provisions of the statute is a nullity and of no effect and thus has no existence in law. If it is found so, he would be entitled to such declaration and be further entitled to consequential and ancillary reliefs which flow from such declaration inter alia namely that he is the employee of the company and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's service under the company. Case Law discussed.

S. D. Banerjee, Dwijendra Nath Das and Nirmal Kumar Ganguly, for Appellants; Mrigen Sen and Provat Kumar Mukherjee, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT :— This is an appeal by a public company, the Asansol Electric Supply Company Ltd. and its four Directors against a judgment and decree of affirmance. The plaintiff Chunnilal Das, as an employee of the company instituted a suit inter alia for a declaration that certain resolutions purported to have been passed by the Board of Directors of the Company as also by its shareholders were illegal, void, inoperative and not binding on the plaintiff and also for some other reliefs. The plaintiff's case in short is that he was firstly appointed a Manager of the Company which appointment was confirmed by a special resolution passed at its General Meeting held on September 25, 1957 of the shareholders of the company, the plaintiff's designation was however changed from Manager to Supervisor, and, the remuneration fixed was Rs. 750/- per month with effect from January, 1958 and of annual increment of Rupees 10/- and dearness allowance of Rs. 180/- per month unless otherwise determined by the Board. It may be mentioned here that the plaintiff is a relative of the Defendant No. 2, the Managing Director of the Company and accordingly shareholders' approval was considered necessary in view of Section 314 of the Companies Act, 1956. By another resolution dated April 24, 1963 passed by the Board of Directors of the Company, the post of Supervisor was abolished with effect from May 1, 1963 and the plaintiff was appointed Store-in-Charge on the same pay and allowances. While he was engaged in the said office, a notice was issued on July 5, 1963 by the Board for a proposed extra ordinary general meeting of the company to be held on July 29, 1963 to consider and if thought fit to pass the resolution appended thereto, with or without modification, as a special resolution, also in view of Section 314 of the Act. In the said proposed resolution it was stated that the plaintiff was to be appointed a Store-in-Charge with effect from May 1, 1963 at a basic salary of Rs. 810/- per month. It appears that on that date a meeting of the shareholders was held when the plaintiff objected to the defendant No. 2 being in the chair which objection was overruled. The resolution which was notified to be proposed at the meeting by the notice of July 5, 1963 was neither placed nor moved and accordingly not passed at the said meeting. On the contrary a resolution was passed to the effect that the plaintiff was not to be appointed Store-in-Charge with effect from May 1, 1963 and further that the plaintiff had ceased to hold office as a Store-in-Charge with effect from the said date. On the same day, the defendant No. 2 informed the plaintiff by a letter that the plaintiff's service had been terminated with effect from May 1, 1963.

2. The plaintiff on the above allegations instituted the suit for declaration that the resolution of the Board dated April 24, 1963 as also the resolution of the General Meeting of July 29, 1963 were void, invalid, inoperative and not binding on the plaintiff, and, that further the service of the plaintiff as a Supervisor of the company had been continuing and the plaintiff was entitled to arrears of salary and allowances on account thereof. There was a claim for Rs. 3,000/- as damages for mental pain and agony as also loss of prestige in public estimation suffered by the plaintiff. The plaintiff was refused access to the company by the defendant and accordingly he instituted this suit for the aforesaid reliefs and for permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff in the discharge of his duties under his service with the company.

3. The suit was contested by the defendants who filed separate written statements denying the claims made in the plaint. The common defence as it appears from the written statement was that the plaintiff's service was lawfully and validly terminated and the resolution passed by the Board as also in the extra ordinary general meeting of the shareholders impugned in the plaint were valid and legal. It was also contended that the suit for enforcement of the personal contract of service was not maintainable and was barred under the provisions of the Specific Relief Act, 1877.

4. On a trial on evidence, the learned Munsif held that the resolution of the Board dated April 24, 1963 was legal and valid but the resolution passed at the extra ordinary general meeting of the shareholders on July 29, 1963 was bad, invalid and of no binding effect. Accordingly, the plaintiff was still in the employment of the company in the post of a Store-in-Charge and not as Supervisor as claimed and was entitled to the monthly salary and allowances from July, 1963 till the date of the filing of suit on September 30, 1963 which was determined at Rs. 1,168/-, as he was prevented by the defendants from doing the work of the company though the plaintiff had been willing to do his work in his service under the company. The claim for damages was rejected as not pressed. The defendants and their servants were restrained by injunction from interfering with the plaintiff's service in the said post until his service was determined according to law.

5. An appeal was preferred by the defendants and the appellate court also affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial court and dismissed the appeal. The present appeal is against the said decision.

6. Before we proceed to consider the merits of the appeal, it will be proper for an adjudication of the issues involved in the case, to have a clear idea about the resolution and letter impugned in the plaint. The resolution of the shareholders passed at the extra ordinary general meeting of the company on December 25, 1967 is to the following effect:—

"Resolved further that the designation of Sri Chuni Lal Daw be changed from Manager to Supervisor with immediate effect and that his remuneration be Rs. 750/- per month with effect from 1st January 1958 with an annual increment of Rs. 10/- and a dearness allowance of Rs. 180/- per month until otherwise determined by the Board of Directors". (Ex. 2).

7. The next resolution of the Board of Directors held on April 24, 1963 as communicated to the plaintiff by the letter of the company is to the following effect.

30th April, 1963.

Sri Chunnilal Daw,

Asansol.

Dear Sir,

We are appending below an extract of the resolution passed at the Board's meeting held on 24-4-1963 which will speak for itself.

"Regarding item No. 2 — it is resolved that the post of Supervisor be abolished from 1-5-1963 and Sri Chunnilal Das be appointed as Store-in-Charge on the same pay and Dearness Allowance from 1-5-1963. He will have to look after the Stores issue and receipts of materials, outdoor works, such as service connections, maintenance works etc, including store accounts".

Hence, you are hereby directed to take charge of the above on and from 1-5-1963.

Yours faithfully,

Ex. 2/h. For The Asansol Electric Supply Co. Ltd.

Sd/- Sanatan Daw,
Managing Director.

8. The next document is a notice of July 5, 1963 and the extracts from the said notice are as follows:

Notice is hereby given that an extra ordinary general meeting of the members of the company will be held on Monday the 29th day of July 1963 at the registered office of the company at Asansol at 3 P.M. to consider and if thought fit to pass the following resolution with or without modification as special resolution as required under Section 314 of the Companies Act, 1956.

"Resolved that Sri Chunnilal Daw be appointed as Store-in-Charge on a basic pay of Rs. 810/- and a Dearness Allowance of Rs. 180/- per month with effect from 1-5-1963, along with other usual amenities i.e. Provident fund, Bonus, Attendance Bonus, Gratuities Travelling Allowance etc. as are granted by the company to other employees. It is also resolved that members of the company consent to Sri Chunnilal Daw, who is a relative of Sri Sanatan Daw, the Managing Director of the company, holding and continuing to hold his present office as Store-in-Charge of the company with effect from 1-5-1963".
Explanatory Notes.

"Sri Chunnilal Daw was appointed as Manager from 1-1-1951 in the eighteenth ordinary general meeting held on 28-9-1951. Consent was given in the extra ordinary general meeting held on 11-4-1956. His designation from Manager to supervisor was changed in the extra ordinary general meeting held on 25-12-1957. His post of Supervisor was abolished from 1-5-1963 and he was appointed as store-in-charge from 1-5-1963 in the Directors' meeting held on 24-4-1963. Sri Chunnilal Daw being a brother of the Managing Director, Sri Sanatan Daw, the above said resolution requires the consent of the company to be accorded by a Special Resolution. Hence the proper resolution is sought to be passed as a Special Resolution of the company."

10. The last document which is a letter dt. July 29, 1963 by the company to the plaintiff is as follows:
No. 396/64.

Asansol 29th July 1963.

Sri Chunnilal Daw,

Asansol.

Dear Sir,

As your appointment as store-in-charge has not been passed in the extra ordinary general meeting held on 29-7-1963, your service has been terminated with effect from 1-5-1963.

You are therefore informed to have your dues on 6-8-1963.

Ext. 2/i.

Your faithfully, for The Asansol Electric Supply Co. Ltd.
Sd/- Sanatan Daw.
Managing Director.

11. Mr. Sankar Das Banerjee, assisted by Mr. D. N. Das, the learned counsel for the defendants appellants has contended firstly that suit as framed was not maintainable. According to him the suit was really one for wrongful dismissal for which the only remedy of the plaintiff was for damages as would be established in a court of law. There cannot be a suit for enforcement of a personal contract of service either by the master or by the servant and the court will not compel a man to continue to employ another man in service of a personal nature nor compel one to serve another. In support he also referred to Section 21 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 (Section 14 (1) (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1963). Mr. Banerjee further contended that a suit which prays for a declaration that the plaintiff is still in the service of the defendant employer is also not contemplated under Section 42 (new 34) of the Act. In short Mr. Banerjee's contention is that assuming the impugned resolution or letter terminating the service is bad in law, it is none-the-less a wrongful termination of service and the court under general law cannot direct the reinstatement nor make a declaration that the plaintiff continues to be in service of the company.

12. Mr. Mrigendra Mohan Sen, assisted by Shri Pravat Kumar Mukherjee the learned counsel for the plaintiff respondent contended that the suit was maintainable as a suit for declaration that the impugned resolution was bad, invalid, ultra vires and inoperative and if it is found to be so, his client would be entitled to ancillary reliefs which flow from such declaration. The plaintiff's case is not one of wrongful dismissal but of a declaration that the resolution passed by the shareholders was void so that in law there has been not a termination of service at all. As the resolutions in absence of compliance of the statutory requirement which was mandatory were invalid, illegal, ultra vires and so void, such resolutions did not exist in the eye of law and accordingly, the plaintiff was entitled to the declaration that the impugned resolution and also to the additional declaration that he continued to be in service and to other ancillary reliefs.

13. We shall now examine the respective contentions of the parties and consider the various rulings cited at the bar. The relationship between master and servant is often a matter of contract and if such contract is wrongfully terminated, the remedy of the aggrieved party lies in an action for damages and the court will not grant a declaration that a contract of service still subsists. Such declaration will amount to an order for specific performance of personal service which is practically forbidden in law. This will appear from Section 21, Clause (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 (new Section 14, clause (b)) which is in following terms.

"Section 21. The following contracts cannot be specifically enforced:—

(b) a contract which runs into such minute or numerous details, or which is so dependent on the personal qualifications or volition of parties, or otherwise from its nature is such, that the Court cannot enforce specific performance of its material terms;". In Dr. S. Dutt v. University of Delhi, AIR 1958 SC 1050, the Supreme Court was considering the case of an award which held that a Professor of an University had been dismissed wrongfully and mala fide, that the dismissal thus had no effect on his status and that he still continued to be a professor of the University. It was held that the award directed specific performance of contract of personal service, and as such a legal proposition is clearly erroneous in view of Section 21 (b) of the Specific Relief Act, 1877.

14. In the case of Vine v. National Dock Labour Board (1956) 3 All ER 939 it was held, in a case where the plaintiff's employment as a registered Dock Worker employed in the reserve pool by National Dock Labour Board was terminated by a disciplinary committee of the local board, that the local board, under the statutory scheme set up under the Dock Workers Regulation of Employment Order, 1947 had no power to delegate its functions to the disciplinary committee and that the order of dismissal accordingly was a nullity. It was held in such a case that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration that his name was never validly removed from the register as he would otherwise be disabled to work as dock worker and he continued to be an employee of the National Board. It was observed by Viscount Kilmuir, L. C., as follows:—

"This is an entirely different situation from the ordinary master and servant case. There, if the master wrongfully dismisses the servant, either summarily or by giving any insufficient notice, the employment is effectively terminated, albeit in breach of contract. Here, the removal of the plaintiff's name from the register being, in law, a nullity he continued to have the right to be treated as registered dock worker with all benefits which, by statute, that status conferred on him. It is, therefore, right that, with the background of this scheme, the court should declare his rights." It was also observed by Lord Keith of Avonholm that:

"Normally, and apart from the intervention of statute there would never be a nullity in terminating an ordinary contract of master and servant. Dismissal might be in breach of contract and so unlawful but it could only sound in damages."

15. As enunciated in the above case the position will however be different when a statute intervenes in the relationship of master and servant and the employee is given a statutory status. If there is a violation of the provisions of the statute in terminating the service of such an employee, he will be eligible for a declaration that the order terminating the service is a nullity and that he continues to be in service.

16. In Barbar v. Manchester Regional Hospital Board (1958) 1 All ER 322, the Hospital Board determined the plaintiff's employment who made an appeal under Clause 16 of the terms and conditions of service of hospital medical staff which had a statutory force. It was maintained on the part of the Minister that no appeal lay to him and no decision was reached by the Minister required under Clause 16. The plaintiff claimed that his service was never validly determined. It was held that the plaintiff's contract with the board was between master and servant, the termination of which could not be nullity and the plaintiff was not, therefore, entitled to a declaration that his employment had never been validly determined but he was entitled to recover damages for breach of the contract. A declaration was also granted as against the Minister that he acted in breach of statutory duty required under Clause 16 of the terms and conditions of service. This case was not equated to the case of (1956) 3 All ER 939 (supra). Here, the Court was of the opinion that despite the strong statutory flavour attaching to the plaintiff's contract, it was in essence an ordinary contract between master and servant and nothing more.

17. In Francis v. Municipal Councilors of Kuala Lumpur (1962) 3 All ER 633 the plaintiff was dismissed by the President but there was some irregularity and the dismissal was technically a wrongful dismissal. The plaintiff asked for a declaration that the termination of his employment was wrongful and he had the right to continue in the employment of the respondents and alternatively he claimed all damages for dismissal. It was observed by the Privy Council as follows:—

".....when there has been a purported termination of a contract of service a declaration to the effect that the contract of service still subsists will rarely be made. This is a consequence of the general principle of law that the courts will not grant specific performance of contracts of service. Special circumstances will be required before such a declaration is made and its making will be normally in the discretion of the court." In that case it was found that there was no circumstance which made it just or proper to make such a declaration.

18. In Vidyadaya University of Ceylon v. Silva (1964) 3 All ER 865, it was held by the Privy Council again that although the University was established and regulated by statute, that did not involve that contracts of employment made with teachers and subject to Section 18 (e) other than ordinary contracts between master and servant. In this case the respondent was not shown to have any other status than that of a servant and procedure by certiorari was not available where a master summarily terminated a servant's employment.

19. In the case of the Executive Committee of the U. P. State Warehousing Corporation v. Chandrakron Tyagi AIR 1970 SC 1244 after a review of the cases on the subject the Supreme Court observed:—

".....the position in law is that no declaration to enforce a contract of personal service will be normally granted. But there are certain well-recognised exceptions to this rule and they are: To grant such a declaration in appropriate cases regarding (1) a public servant, who has been dismissed from service in contravention of Article 311, (2) Reinstatement of a dismissed worker under Industrial Law by Labour or Industrial Tribunals, (3) A Statutory body when it has acted in breach of a mandatory obligation, imposed by a statute."

20. It was held in that case that the order of termination made in the breach of a service regulations would be contrary to such terms and conditions, but would not be in breach of any statutory obligation, as was the position in the case of Life Insurance Corp. of India v. Sunil Kumar Mukherjee, AIR 1964 SC 847. In the Warehousing Corporation case it was held that a breach had been committed by the appellant Corporation of regulation 16 (3) when passing the order of dismissal inasmuch as the procedure indicated therein had not been followed. The Act does not guarantee any statutory status to the respondent employee, nor did it impose any obligation on the appellant in such matters. Further there was no dispute that an authority who could pass an order of dismissal had passed the order. Accordingly the order was held to be merely wrongful making in consequence the Corporation liable for damages but such order could not be held to be one which had not terminated the service however wrongfully, or which entitled the employee to ignore it and ask for being treated as still in service.

21. Mr. Sen, in support of his contention about the maintainability of the suit for violation of mandatory provisions of law relied on the Bench decision in Ramkissendas Dhanuka v. Satyacharan Law (1946) 50 Cal WN 310, in which the Court was concerned with the purported resolution terminating employment of the Managing Agents. As such action was taken in violation of the provisions of the Articles of Association of the Company, though not those of 87B of the Indian Companies Act, 1913 as amended in 1936, it was held that the resolution was ultra vires. The Bench affirmed the judgment of McNair, J. who granted a declaration that the impugned resolution was void, inoperative and of no effect and also an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the management of the plaintiff company by its Managing Agents. The decision of this Court on this issue was affirmed on appeal by the Privy Council in Ram Kissendas v. Satya Charan Law AIR 1950 PC 81 and it was observed that the decree merely prevented dismissal or termination of the appointment of the Managing Agents and had not the effect of enforcing a contract of personal service.

22. Mr. Banerjee sought to distinguish this case pointing out that the said suit was by and on behalf of the shareholders of the plaintiff company while the managing agents were not even a party to the proceeding. He further contended that the present suit was not by and on behalf of the shareholders of the defendant company and an employee should not be granted a declaration prayed for as he for himself alone is not competent to challenge the legality or otherwise of the impugned resolution.

23. The contention need not detain us long; under Section 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure person who has a cause of action against another would be entitled to institute a suit for such reliefs as he may have against the offending party unless its cognizance is barred expressly or impliedly. In the instant case, the company by a resolution purported to terminate the employment of the plaintiff and according to the plaintiff such resolution is void and ultra vires. Though the plaintiff cannot sue for enforcement of a contract for personal service, being barred under Section 21 (b) of Specific Relief Act, 1877, there is no bar in his seeking a declaration from court that the impugned resolution is void and ultra vires. As pointed out by Mr. Sen, the plaintiff is most vitally affected by the said resolution which affords him the cause of action for the suit against the company and the fact that the shareholders are no parties to the suit, cannot in my opinion defeat the suit, nor is their presence necessary for adjudication of the issues involved in the proceeding.

24. The plaintiff has instituted the suit, as we have seen, for a declaration that the impugned resolution was void and ultra vires in that the mandatory provisions requisite for passing such resolution were not complied with. The suit therefore is not one against a wrongful dismissal nor one for enforcement of a contract of personal service. The plaintiff accordingly is entitled to establish in a court of competent jurisdiction that the impugned resolution being in violation of mandatory provisions of the statute is a nullity and of no effect and thus had no existence in law. If it is found so, he would be entitled to such declaration and be further entitled to consequential and ancillary reliefs which flow from such declaration inter alia namely that he is in the employ of the company and for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's service under the company. This is a far cry from a suit for declaration that a termination of service is wrongful or for enforcement of a personal contract of service. Section 21 (b) or Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 can thus be no bar to the suit for the said declaration, as it is not for enforcement of a personal contract of service but for a declaration of a legal right that a particular resolution of a company, affecting the claimant's status, is void for non-compliance of statutory provisions which are mandatory. On a consideration of the materials on record and the principles of law referred to above, I have no doubt in my mind that the suit as framed is maintainable in law and the plaintiff would be entitled to the reliefs if he succeeds in establishing that the impugned resolution is ultra vires and void for non-compliance of the mandatory provisions of the statute.

25. Mr. Banerjee strongly relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in Warehousing Corporation case, AIR 1970 SC 1244 and next contended that obviously the plaintiff had no statutory status nor there was any statutory obligation to be observed by the company in terminating the service of the plaintiff. The plaintiff accordingly could not seek for any declaration that he continued in service and his only remedy, if any, was for damages for the alleged wrongful termination and nothing beyond. He referred to Article 992 of Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition, Volume 25, wherein it is laid down that the remedy of a wrongfully dismissed servant is either to treat the contract as repudiated by the master and sue for damages or he may acquiesce in the master's wrongful act, treat the contract as rescinded in which case he may sue as upon a quantum meruit for the value of work done but not paid but he cannot pursue both.

26. It appears that the letter dated July 29, 1963 informing the plaintiff about the termination of his service was merely a communication by the Managing Director. It is not the Company's case that the service was brought to an end, with retrospective effect, by the Managing Director himself. The termination of service accordingly had its authority in the resolution of the shareholders. The plaintiff's case is that the said resolution was in breach of statutory provisions of the Companies Act, 1956 which are mandatory and accordingly was bad, invalid and inoperative. On such case, this suit is not really one for a declaration that the termination of service is illegal and wrongful but of a resolution being void and inoperative. In the Warehousing Corporation's case AIR 1970 SC 1244 there was no dispute that order of dismissal was passed by the competent authority, the dispute being about the non-observance of some regulation which according to the Supreme Court did not impose any mandatory obligation under the statute on the Corporation. In the Vines case, (1956) 3 All ER 939, the declaration that the order of the disciplinary committee terminating the employment of a dock worker was a nullity was granted in view of the finding that the local board had no authority to delegate such power to the disciplinary committee and further such order being a nullity the name of the worker was never removed from the register and he continued in the employ of the National Dock Labour Board. The other cases referred to above were considered as cases of wrongful dismissals arising from ordinary contracts of master and servant and the courts did not grant the specific performance of a personal contract of service though in Barbar's case (1958) 1 All ER 322 a declaration that the Minister acted in breach of statutory duty was given in his failure to hear the appeal against the order of termination of service.

27. The maintainability of a suit for declaration as here will thus depend on whether the impugned resolution terminating the employment is in breach of any statutory provision which is mandatory. This principle has been recognised in the Warehousing Corporation's case, AIR 1970 SC 1244 in which it has been stated that no declaration to enforce a contract of personal service will be normally granted, but there are exceptions and one such exception being when a statutory body acts in breach of a mandatory obligation imposed by a statute. The same view was taken by the Privy Council in the case of the High Commr. for India and Pakistan v. I. M. Lall AIR 1948 PC 121, in which the procedure in Section 240 (3) of the Government of India Act, 1935 had not been followed and the Court granted the declaration that the purported dismissal of the Civil Servant was void and inoperative and he remained a member of the Civil Service at the date of institution of the suit for such non-observance of the mandatory provisions of the statute.

28. Mr. Banerjee has also contended that a termination of service may also take place by preventing the employee from discharging his duties under the service. Reliance was placed on Batt's "Law of Master and Servant" (5th Edition page 270) in which doctrine of repudiation is also extended to cases when a master refuses to allow the servant to fulfil his contract of service and it was observed that a dismissal may be effected by such conduct. Similar view was taken in re: Rubel Bronze & Metal Co. Ltd. 1918-I KB 315 (321) which was cited in support. According to the plaint the allegations are that the plaintiff was forcibly prevented access into the office by the sons of the defendant No. 2 at his instance on July 30, 1963, when the plaintiff attempted to go to his office. These allegations which are denied in the written statement, constituted according to the company a termination of service and may be a wrongful one, argued by Mr. Das who also addressed me at times, for which the remedy would be a suit for damages. In fact, the plaintiff claimed Rs. 3000/- as damages in the present suit which was not pressed at the hearing.

29. This contention has no substance as it is not the case of the defendant that there was any termination of service apart from the impugned resolution and refusal to allow the plaintiff to discharge his duties must obviously be on the basis of the impugned resolution which is the plaintiff's case. Accordingly there was no occasion for termination of service by mere refusal to allow the plaintiff to discharge his duties from his service under the company.

30. In support of his contention that the resolution of July 29, 1963 was void and ultra vires, Mr. Sen has drawn my attention to Sections 171 and 172 of the Companies Act, 1956. Section 171 provides that a general meeting of a company may be called by not less than twenty one days' notice or a shorter notice, if consent is given thereto by 95% part of its paid up capital having voting right (sic.). Sec. 172 provides for the contents of the notice as also time and place of the meeting while Section 173 provides for explanatory statements of any special business. According to Mr. Sen the provisions of Section 172 are mandatory and no resolution can be validly passed unless the formalities of the said section are complied with and a resolution passed without compliance of the said requirements will be void and ultra vires. On a careful (sic) of the provisions of Section 172 of the Companies Act, 1956, I have no doubt that the contentions of Mr. Sen are correct and have to be upheld. I hold accordingly that the provisions of the said section have been made expressly mandatory and for good reasons and the same must be strictly complied with to ensure the validity of resolutions placed at the meeting and non-compliance of the said provisions would make such resolutions void and ultra vires.

31. In the instant case, the resolution to the effect that the post of Supervisor was to be abolished and that Chunnilal Daw was to be appointed a store-in-charge from May 1, 1963 and that he ceased to hold and to continue to hold his present office as store-in-charge of the company with effect from May 1, 1963 was never notified to the shareholders. Accordingly for default in compliance with the mandatory provisions of Section 172 of the Act the said resolution cannot but be held as invalid and void. It may be noted that resolutions which were notified to the shareholders were not moved at all and it has not been and cannot be argued that the impugned resolutions were amendments to the resolutions notified as indeed they are not so nor claimed as such.

32. Mr. Banerjee has drawn my attention to a decision of the Court of Appeal in re: Trench Tubeless Tyre Co. 1900-1 Ch. 408. In this case a resolution for voluntary winding up of the company by special resolution was legally passed. The notice of the confirmatory meeting included the appointment of a named person as liquidator; at the meeting the resolution for the appointment of the named liquidator was dropped and another person was appointed liquidator without further notice. This appointment was objected to by some debenture-holders but the Court of appeal overruling the objection held that:

"When a resolution for the voluntary winding-up of a company has been passed at a meeting called upon proper notice any one can at that meeting either with or without notice, propose the appointment of a liquidator....."

Everyone connected with companies should know that, as soon as a resolution for voluntary liquidation has been passed, the appointment of liquidator can be proposed and carried." The above decision was cited in support of the validity of the impugned resolution.

33. It does not clearly appear from the above decision whether there was any mandatory provision in the statute regarding appointment of a liquidator after a voluntary resolution for winding up is passed. In case of the Companies Act of our country, the provisions are expressly mandatory. In case of companies incorporated or deemed to be so incorporated under the Companies Act, which are accordingly bodies created by the statute, there is this express obligation provided in the Section 172 of the Act before a resolution can be adopted. The language of the obligation in Section 172 as already observed, clearly indicates its mandatory nature and accordingly the non-compliance will have the fatal consequence of rendering the resolution void and ultra vires. In the eye of law, such resolution is to be deemed as being never in existence. Such an event took place when the company, in the instant case, purported to pass a resolution which was not at all notified in gross violation of the mandatory obligations under the statute. The resolution impugned in the suit is accordingly void and ultra vires and has no existence in law. The plaintiff accordingly became entitled to a declaration prayed for in prayer (a) of the plaint. As consequential reliefs the plaintiff is also entitled to further reliefs as decreed by the courts below.

34. As all the contentions raised on behalf of the appellants fail the appeal is dismissed without however any order as to costs in the court.

35. Leave under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent is prayed for and granted.

36. As prayed for by the learned counsel for the appellant, let operation of this decree remain stayed for a period of three weeks from date.

Appeal dismissed.

ORDER:— This is an application by an erstwhile Income-tax Officer under Article 226 of the Constitution challenging the order of suspension dated 2nd

September 1965, the memorandum dated 9th September 1965 containing the charge-sheet against the said officer, the orders dated 30th April, 1966, 18th July, 1966, 3rd October, 1966, the enquiry report dated 29th March 1967, the show cause notice dated 29th April 1968 and the order of removal on the said officer dated 10th February 1969. The petitioner was appointed to officiate as an Income-tax Officer, Class II Grade III of the Income-tax Department, Calcutta, with effect from 22nd November 1954. Thereafter from 1956 to 1959 the petitioner served in various capacities in the districts of Bengal as Income-tax Officer as well as in Calcutta. In July 1959 the petitioner was made quasi-permanent and with effect from 8th April 1960 the petitioner was confirmed as the Income-tax Officer. On the 17th August 1960 the petitioner was posted as the Income-tax Officer 'E' Ward, Special Survey Circle IV, Calcutta. The petitioner also served the Special Survey Circle in various capacities as also in other districts of the Income-tax Department in Calcutta. In October 1963 the petitioner was transferred to hold the charge of D and E Wards of District III-A, Calcutta. It will be relevant at this stage to state that with effect from 30th November 1964 the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules 1955 were repealed by the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules 1964. The significance of this date would be evident later on. On the 2nd September 1965 the order of respondent No. 1 was passed under Rule 12 (1) of the Central Civil Services (Classification, Control & Appeal) Rules 1957 placing the petitioner under suspension. This is one of the orders which is under challenge in this application. On the 9th September 1965 the petitioner was charge-sheeted for violation of Rule 3 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules 1955. It would be relevant at this stage to refer to the said charge-sheet. There were two charges against the petitioner. It was stated firstly, that the petitioner while functioning as Income-tax Officer in the Special Survey Circle IV, Calcutta during the period from 9-8-58 to 10-5-61 contravened Rule 3 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules, 1955, inasmuch as,

(a) the petitioner made assessments in several cases in a dishonest and mala fide manner causing wrongful loss of revenue to the Government;

(b) the petitioner displayed gross negligence and/or inefficiency in the discharge of his official duties; and

(c) the petitioner tampered with the official records.

As a result of the enquiry by the enquiring officer the petitioner was exonerated of all the charges under several heads mentioned above by the enquiring officer. The disciplinary authority however disagreed with the findings of the enquiring officer in so far as sub-clause (b) of charge 1 referred to hereinabove, that is to say, that the petitioner displayed gross negligence and/or inefficiency in the discharge of his official duties. The disciplinary authority came to the conclusion that the said charge had been established. The second charge against the petitioner was that while functioning as Income-tax Officer in Special Survey Circle IV, Calcutta during the period 9th August 1958 to 10th May 1961 he failed to comply with the instructions issued by the Commissioner of Income-tax regarding procedure to be followed in making the assessments and thereby contravened Rule 3 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules 1955. The enquiry officer has exonerated the petitioner in respect of this charge. The disciplinary authority has also agreed with the said finding of the enquiry officer. On the 17th September 1965 the petitioner asked for inspection of certain documents. Thereafter on the 21st of September, 1965 the petitioner was asked to contact the Inspecting Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, Head Quarters for inspection of documents. On the 20th November 1965 Central Civil Services (Classification, Control & Appeal) Rules 1965 were promulgated by the President and the said Rules came into force on the 1st December, 1965. By the 1965 Rules the 1957 Rules were repealed. It would be necessary later on to refer to the terms in which the said Rules have been repealed in order to appreciate one of the contentions raised in this application. Between 6th December, 1965 and 14th April 1966 the petitioner asked for inspection of certain documents. The said prayers of the petitioner are contained in two letters dated 6th December 1965 which is Annexure F to the present petition and the letter dated 14th April, 1966 which is also Annexure F to the said petition. On the 30th April 1966, the respondent No. 1, the Commissioner of Income-tax, West Bengal I, refused to give the petitioner inspection of certain documents specified in the letters mentioned before on the ground that either these were not relevant or these were not available at that moment with the department. The said order of respondent No. 1 is contained in Annexure G to the present petition. On the 18th July 1966 one Mr. G. B. Seth, Inspecting Assistant Commissioner of Income-tax, Range IV, Calcutta was appointed to present the case before the enquiry officer against the petitioner. On the 18th

July 1966 the respondent No. 1 appointed respondent No. 3 under Rule 14 (2) of the Central Civil Services (Classification, Control & Appeal) Rules 1965 as the enquiring authority. Thereafter on the 30th September 1966 the petitioner requested the respondent No. 1 to permit him to engage a lawyer for representing the petitioner's case and the said prayer was refused. It would be relevant again to refer later on to the terms in which the said prayer has been refused to appreciate certain contentions raised in this application. On the 26th October, 1966 the first hearing took place before the enquiry officer and on the 7th February 1967 the second hearing took place. On the 29th April 1968 the petitioner received from respondent No. 1 a copy of the enquiry report submitted by the respondent No. 3 to the respondent No. 1. In the said report respondent No. 3 found the petitioner innocent of all the charges, as mentioned hereinbefore. In the said notice, however, it was stated by respondent No. 1 that he agreed with the findings of respondent No. 3 in so far as it related to charges 1 (a) and 1 (c) and charge No. 2. The respondent No. 1, however, intimated to the petitioner he had provisionally come to the conclusion that No. 1 (b) had been proved differing from the finding made by the respondent No. 3. The petitioner was given an opportunity of making representation. The petitioner showed cause on the 28th September, 1968. There was a further representation by the petitioner on the 4th January 1969. On the 10th February 1969 the respondent No. 1 passed the order removing the petitioner from service. Thereafter this application was moved under Article 226 of the Constitution and a rule nisi was obtained.

2. Counsel for the petitioner raised several contentions in this case. The first contention, that requires consideration is that the charges are vague, specially the charge in respect of which the petitioner has been found guilty. As mentioned hereinbefore the said charge was that the petitioner had contravened Rule 3 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules 1955 inasmuch as he had displayed gross negligence and inefficiency in the discharge of his official duties. It was contended that no particulars had been given of what was his duty and what acts he committed which might be termed as negligent. It was also urged that it had not been clearly stated what was the standard of efficiency and duty. I am unable to accept this contention. The said charge-sheet was sent along with the statement of allegations. The statement of allegations have detailed instances of several assessments and the circumstances under which the said assessments had been made. From the facts enumerated in the said statement of allegations which gave particulars of the dates of assessments, the file numbers, the names of the assesseees and the circumstances as appearing from the documents. The said facts were the basis upon which the charge of negligence was based. The question whether the charges were vague or not, cannot be judged in isolation. It was urged that there was no standard of duty or efficiency. I am of opinion that such standard of duty or efficiency must be judged from a common-sense point of view prevalent in a particular office or a particular department. Counsel for the petitioner referred me to several decisions. He first drew my attention to the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of R. Ananthanarayanan v. General Manager, Southern Rly., AIR 1956 Mad 220. There it was observed by the learned Judge that charges must be clear and specific. In so far as that proposition is concerned no exception can be taken to that proposition. In the aforesaid decision the Madras High Court was concerned with the charge made in the context of Rule 3 of Railway Service (Safeguarding of National Security) Rules 1954. The said Rule was differently worded from the present Rule with which I am concerned in this application. Furthermore, in so far as the Madras High Court expressed the view that the said Rule 3 was indefinite even when read in the context of expression 'national security', the same view has not been approved by the Supreme Court in the case of P. Balakotiah v. Union of India, AIR 1958 SC 232. Counsel for the petitioner then referred me to the decision of Sinha J. (as his Lordship then was) in the case of Amulya Ratan v. Deputy Chief Mechanical Engineer, Eastern Rly., AIR 1961 Cal 40. There Sinha J. expressed the opinion that the charges must be specific and must give all particulars. That is a proposition which is well-settled and I respectfully agree with the said observation. But whether charges are specific and give all particulars must be judged in the context of a particular charge and particular set of facts. Reliance was then placed on the decision in the case of Surath Chandra Chakraborty v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1971 SC 752. There the Supreme Court observed that if a person was not told clearly and definitely what the allegations were on which the charges preferred against him were founded, he could not possibly by projecting his own imagination, discover all the facts and circumstances that might be in the contemplation of the authorities to be established against him. The Supreme Court observed that the whole object of furnishing the statement of allegations was to give all the necessary particulars and details which would satisfy the requirement of giving a reasonable opportunity to put up defence. There, it is to be noted, that the statement of allegations was never sent to the delinquent in that case. In the instant case, as mentioned herein-before, the charges were supported by a statement of allegations where detailed facts have been stated. Therefore, in my opinion, the aforesaid decision cannot help the petitioner. Having considered the propositions of law mentioned herein-before and having considered the charges in this case, as well the fact that in the instant case the charges were supported by statement of allegations wherein detailed facts of several assessments had been given, I am of opinion that the charges in respect of which the petitioner had been found guilty cannot be termed as vague or indefinite.

3. The next contention that was urged was that Rule 3 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules 1955 was vague and as such ultra vires. It was secondly contended that the said rule contained an expression of pious wish and could not be the subject-matter of any charge.

4. R. 3 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules 1956 states as follows:—

"Rule 3. General— Every government servant shall at all times maintain absolute integrity and devotion to duty."

Rules of conduct may and do vary from time to time. They, however, at a particular point of time reflect the enlightened conscience of a society. Simply because, however, such rules are variable from age to age it cannot be said that at a particular point of time they become either non-existent or vague. They must at all times be judged from a robust commonsense point of view on a reasonable standard. In this connection it may be appropriate to refer to the observations of Banerjee, J. in the case of Sripati Ranjan Biswas v. Collector of Customs, AIR 1964 Cal 415 at p. 417. Considering the same identical Rule, that is to say, Rule 3 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules B. N. Banerjee, J. observed:

"Integrity is uprightness, honesty or purity. Devotion to duty is faithful service. Modern approaches to life have changed many ideals, which used to be held sacred. Such approaches have also worked a change in our sense of the sublime. But even then the idea of right and wrong has not been forgotten and the difference between honesty and dishonesty, fidelity and faithlessness wholly lost. It is sometimes argued with sophistry that it is difficult to prescribe the outside limits of integrity in a complex system of modern administration, in which considerations of expediency occasionally outweigh other considerations. Considerations of expediency may be irresistible at times but their evils are merely to be put up with and not to be extolled or prescribed as standards of life and work. If a public officer is required to maintain integrity and to be devoted to duty, he is merely asked to keep within the bounds of that administrative decency, which goes by the name of civilized administration. In my opinion, no vagueness or indefiniteness attaches to the language used in Rule 3 above quoted. A public Officer is not at liberty to amass fortune by taking illegal gratifications, even though willingly given. In the view taken by me, Rule 3 does not offend against Article 14 or 19 of the Constitution."

I am in respectful agreement with the aforesaid observations. Counsel for the petitioner in this connection also referred me to the decision in the case of AIR 1956 Mad 220 for the argument that the Rule was vague. It must, however, be remembered that in so far as the Madras High Court expressed the opinion of indefiniteness about the Rule 3 of the Railway Services (Safeguarding of National Security) Rules, 1954, the same has been disapproved by the Supreme Court in the decision referred to hereinbefore. In view of what has been said hereinbefore and the rule read in the manner I have indicated above it appears to me that the said rule does not contain a mere pious hope but a clear mandate for the rule of conduct, and as such is not void on the ground of vagueness.

5. Counsel for the petitioner next contended that the Conduct Rules of 1955 were repealed by Conduct Rules of 1964 and, as such, the same became inoperative. Rules of 1964 came into effect on the 30th November as mentioned hereinbefore. It was, therefore, urged that the petitioner could not be proceeded for breach of 1955 Conduct Rules in the manner as had been done. To consider this argument it would be relevant to refer to Rule 25 of the Central Civil Services (Conduct) Rules, 1964. The said Rule 25 provides as follows:

"25. Repeal and Saving— Any Rules corresponding to these rules in force immediately before the commencement of these rules and applicable to the Government servants to whom these rules apply are hereby repealed; Provided that any order made or action taken under the rules so repealed shall be deemed to have been made or taken under the corresponding provisions of these rules."

It would be apparent from the terms of the repeal that only rules applicable to the government servants after coming into operation of 1964 rules have been repealed. Rules of 1964 cannot be operative in respect of government servants for their past conduct. The significant words are 'to whom these apply'. Rule is operative in future. It is prospective. It does not deal with the past conduct of the government servants. Therefore, strictly it does not apply to the government servants in respect of conduct prior to 1964. Therefore, from that point of view, in this case as the allegations of the charges related to period prior to the coming into operation of the 1964 rules, the said rules of 1964 would not apply and the petitioner would be governed by the 1955 rules. The second aspect of the matter is that if any action is taken under the repealed rules that action shall be deemed to have been taken under the corresponding provisions of the new rules. Under the new rules there is a corresponding provision. Rule 3 sub-clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) taken together provide the same thing in substance as Rule 3 of 1955 Conduct Rules. Rule 3 of 1964 Rules is in the following terms:

"3. General— (1) Every Government servant shall at all times—

- (i) maintain absolute integrity;
- (ii) maintain devotion to duty; and
- (iii) do nothing which is unbecoming of a Government servant.

(2) (i) Every Government servant holding a supervisory post shall take all possible steps to ensure the integrity and devotion to duty of all Government servants for the time being under his control and authority;

(ii) No Government servant shall, in the performance of his official duties or in the exercise of powers conferred on him, act otherwise than in his best judgment except when he is acting under the direction of his official superior and shall, where he is acting under such direction, obtain the direction in writing, wherever practicable, and where it is not practicable to obtain the direction in writing, he shall obtain written confirmation of the direction as soon thereafter as possible."

I am, therefore, of the opinion that there is no substance in this contention on behalf of the petitioner.

6. The main contention that requires consideration in this case is whether reasonable opportunity had been given to the petitioner to defend himself at the enquiry. Counsel for the petitioner urged several points in support of his argument that no reasonable opportunity had been given. He first urged that in denying inspection, particularly inspection of the documents as mentioned hereinbefore, there had been denial of reasonable opportunity to the petitioner. As I have mentioned before by a letter dated the 6th of December, 1965 the petitioner had asked for inspection of certain documents. These were additional documents, namely, additional to the documents which had been relied on by the prosecution to prove the alleged guilt of the petitioner. The said documents, that is to say, the documents which the prosecution wanted to rely have been given inspection. By another letter dated 14th April, 1966, the petitioner again asked for several other documents. By the letter dated 30th April 1966, inspection of certain documents was allowed by the Commissioner but certain documents were refused inspection on the ground that some of these were not available at that moment and some of these were irrelevant. Looking at the list of the documents, it appears to me that the claim made by the petitioner in respect of some of these was exaggerated. Even, however, there were certain documents which prima facie appear to me to be relevant. The petitioner has alleged in paragraphs 15 and 16 of the petition that the petitioner had not been given inspection of all the relevant and necessary documents. In paragraph 9 of the affidavit in opposition filed on behalf of the respondents it has been stated that all relevant and necessary documents had been given inspection and some of the documents which were not allowed inspection were irrelevant. In this state of affairs counsel for the department produced before me the records of the enquiry. It appears from the said records produced that on the 26th October, 1966, the petitioner made another application for inspection including some of the documents which he had claimed previously. On the 26th October, 1966, in the order sheet there was an endorsement by the enquiry officer that documents Nos. 1 to 6 were admitted to be relevant by the officer and should be given inspection and so far as other documents were concerned, certain other directions were given. Thereafter it is recorded in the order sheet that on the 13th December, 1966, the petitioner had completed inspection of the documents and had said that he did not wish to examine any witness. In this connection it would be also relevant to refer to the enquiry report which appears at page 105 of the present petition. In paragraph 5 the enquiring officer has stated that on the 26th October, 1966, that is to say, when he made the application, the petitioner was heard in person in presence of the presenting officer regarding the relevancy of the documents and the petitioner had stated that he wanted only 453 files to prove from them that the orders made by the other officers in the same district were similar to those made by the petitioner which formed the subject matter of the enquiry. It was suggested to the petitioner that he could inspect certain sample files and then he was asked to give a list of such files to the presenting officer for making arrangement for inspection. On the 13th December, 1966, in the enquiry report it has been stated by the presenting officer that Shri Singh had completed the inspection of the documents. Therefore, it appears to me that reading the enquiry report in the context of the entries in the order sheet the petitioner had inspection of all the relevant documents — documents which he considered relevant for inspection and which he insisted for production at the time of the enquiry. There was some argument by counsel for the petitioner that these documents were not the original documents mentioned in the letters previously referred to hereinbefore. However, I am not able to appreciate this contention. The list of the documents had been mentioned and reading the letter of the 26th October in conjunction with the entries in the order sheet and in conjunction with the remarks of the enquiry officer in the enquiry report it is clear to me that all relevant documents had been given for inspection to the petitioner. I must further observe that the petitioner had not stated in this petition the fact that the petitioner had made further prayers for inspection during the enquiry and that he was allowed inspection of certain documents. Such conduct on the part of the petitioner does not disclose a free and frank approach to the Court.

7. The next contention of counsel for the petitioner on the ground of reasonable opportunity was about the fact that the prayer for being represented by a lawyer had been refused unreasonably. Under Rule 15 (5) of the Central Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1957, there was a discretion with the disciplinary authority to permit the petitioner to be represented by a lawyer in certain contingency. That discretion must always be carefully exercised. In this case firstly a contention was raised that that discretion had not been ex-exercised at all inasmuch as in refusing the prayer by the letter dated the 3rd of October, 1966, the respondent No. 1 had completely misdirected himself. But reading the letter dated 3rd October 1966. I am unable to accept that contention. My attention was drawn to a decision by Anil Kumar Sen, J. in the case of Harbilas Biswas v. Union of India, Civil Rule No. 1988 (W) of 1966 — judgment delivered on 26-3-1970 (Cal). There the enquiry was held against a delinquent officer more or less under similar circumstances and the delinquent in that case had been refused the assistance of a lawyer. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that there was no denial of reasonable opportunity in the facts and circumstances of that case. Whether by refusal of the assistance of a lawyer there is any denial of reasonable opportunity is essentially a question of fact. It must, however, be emphasized that the rule enjoins for the officer to exercise a discretion and before exercising the discretion the officers must consider the complexity of the case and the nature of the case. I must observe that practically in all the departmental enquiry cases that have come up before me I have hardly come across any instance where representation by a lawyer has been permitted. It is sometimes urged that the rule had been made nugatory by the manner in which the discretion was being exercised in refusing the assistance by a lawyer to the delinquents in the departmental enquiries. Such impression should not be created and must be attempted to be avoided. In this case, however, the enquiry was in respect of certain assessments. It was in respect certain assessment in the Income-tax Department and the most relevant fact was the general method of doing assessment in the department, there was hardly any scope of oral testimony. Taking these factors into consideration and taking into consideration the fact that as a result of the enquiry proceedings, the delinquent was found not guilty, I am unable to accept the contention that the petitioner, was, in this case denied reasonable opportunity to defend himself by refusal of the assistance by a lawyer. It has to be remembered that in his representation to the respondent No. 1, the delinquent had not chosen to ask for a personal hearing or to be represented by a lawyer. It also appears from the records that the delinquent himself was a qualified person. He has a degree of the Bachelor of Law and also a degree of Master of Arts, University of Calcutta. Reference may be made to the first annexure of the affidavit in reply from which the aforesaid qualifications of the delinquent would appear. Counsel for the petitioner drew my attention to the observations of the Special Bench in the case of Nripendra Nath Bagchi v. Chief Secretary, Government of West Bengal, 65 Cal WN 361 = (AIR 1961 Cal 1) (SB). The facts of that case were entirely different and, therefore, it is not necessary for me to consider the said aforesaid decision in detail. I am, therefore, of the opinion that there has been no denial of reasonable opportunity to the petitioner by not affording to him the assistance of a lawyer in the enquiry proceedings.

8. The next contention about the denial of reasonable opportunity was the non-compliance with the provisions of the Office Manual. It was urged that the said Office Manual if not mandatory was directory and there should have been substantial compliance with the said procedure for holding departmental enquiry laid down in the Office Manual. My attention was drawn to Ch. X (c) to Paras 41, 42 & 43. The only point that was urged in respect of breach of the Office Manual was that the charges should have been related to the offences of recent origin. It was urged that events which had taken place more than three years prior to the framing of the charges should not have been the basis for the framing of the charges. Looking at the nature of the charges it appears to me that the rule enjoined in substance that stale matters should not be revived. In this case after the assessments had been made, in order to find out whether these had been improperly made it was necessary to find that out by proper investigation before framing the charges. Taking that factor into consideration I am of the opinion that there has been substantial compliance with the requirements of the procedure for departmental enquiry as laid down in Chapter X (c) of the Office Manual.

9. It was next contended that there was a violation of the rights of the petitioner in not consulting the Union Public Service Commission in respect of this punishment. I am unable to agree. It was only when the President was the disciplinary authority, consultation with the Union Public Service Commission was required. In this connection no rule or provision of law has been shown to me which enjoys consultation with the Union Public Service Commission.

10. Next contention of counsel for the petitioner was that the 2nd show cause notice mentioned hereinbefore indicated that the same was biased and prejudiced. No grounds in support of this contention was advanced. I am unable to accept this contention.

11. Next contention of counsel for the petitioner was that there should have been another show cause notice, because, counsel for the petitioner contended that it was the disciplinary authority who was disagreeing with the findings of the enquiry officer. Counsel further contended that the 2nd show cause notice was against the penalty proposed and, therefore, it did not offer any reasonable opportunity to the petitioner. I am, however, unable to accept this contention. Article 311 of the Constitution, sub-clause (2) specifically provides for this kind of show cause notice. This is in compliance with Article 311 (2). Reference may be made to the observations of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in the case of Sreedhariah v. Dist. Supdt. of Police, AIR 1960 Andh Pra 473 at para 18, and to the case of Ghanshyamdas. Srivastava v. State of Madhya Pradesh. AIR 1968 Madh Pra 132. The said show cause notice was also in compliance with R. 15 (4) (i) (b) of the Central Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1965. I am, therefore, unable to accept the contention that there should have been another show cause notice in the facts and circumstances of this case. I am also unable to accept the contention that the show cause notice was bad because it was only against the penalty proposed. Counsel for the petitioner drew my attention to the case of State of Assam v. Bimal Kumar Pandit, AIR 1963 SC 1612. I am, however, of the opinion that the aforesaid decision does not support the said contention of counsel for the petitioner.

12. Next contention of counsel for the petitioner was that the order of removal was not a speaking order and, as such, was bad. He drew my attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of M/s. Travancore Rayons Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1971 SC 862, to the decision in the case of Mahabir Prasad v. State of U. P., AIR 1970 SC 1302, to the decision in the case of Mohinder Singh Babbra v. State of Punjab, 1971 Lab IC 554 (Punj) and to the decision in the case of Tes-teels Ltd v. N. M. Desai, AIR 1970 Guj 1, (FB) and to the decision in the case of AIR 1960 Andh Pra 473. It is true that the quasi judicial authorities should indicate in the orders the reasons for making the orders. In this case, however, the final order of removal, that is, Annexure 'C' cannot and should not be considered in isolation. It is not necessary for me to refer to the aforesaid decisions in detail because in so far as the aforesaid decisions lay down the proposition that the quasi judicial authorities should indicate the reasons, I am in respectful agreement with the said proposition. But if the reasons can be found out either from the order itself or from other documents it would not be proper to strike down the order merely because the formal reasons had not been recorded in the order itself. In the instant case the order of removal cannot and should not be read in isolation. This has to be considered along with the letter dated 29th of April 1966 whereby the Commr. had given detailed reasons for disagreement with the enquiring officer. If annexure 'A' is read in conjunction with annexure 'L', then it would be apparent what are the reasons that impelled the Commissioner to pass the final order. Furthermore, in paragraph 5 of the order dated 10th of February, 1969, the Commissioner has stated that a representation had been made and he had considered the representation and that was the representation of the petitioner in which the petition had stated that the finding that the disagreement with the enquiring officer was merely based on suspension, surmise, conjecture and presumption. The Enquiring Officer has considered that contention and has not been able to accept the same. The disciplinary authority has referred to his reasons recorded in the Memorandum dated 29th of April 1968. Read in the aforesaid light, it cannot be said that the order for removal passed by the disciplinary authority did not state the reasons and it suffered from the infirmity that it was not a speaking order. I am, therefore, unable to accept this last contention of counsel for the petitioner.

13. This application is, therefore, dismissed.

14. Rule nisi is discharged.

15. Interim order, if any, is vacated.

16. There will be no order as to costs.

17. I direct the Dept. to file a correct copy of the order sheets dated 26th of October, 1966 and 13th of December, 1966. Let the correct copies of the order sheet along with the correct copy of the letter dated 26th of October, 1966 be kept as exhibits in this Court.

18. By consent of parties, there will be a stay of operation of this order from date for six weeks.

Application dismissed.

 Pendency of criminal case on the same ground on which order of detention is made does not make the order of detention invalid — It also does not show malice in law. (Para 10)

Naranarayan Gooptu, Indrajit Sen and B. Malkhandi, for Petitioner; Priti Bhushan Burman and Bhaskar Sen, for State.

N. C. TALUKDAR, J.— This Rule was issued on an application under Section 491 of the Code of Criminal Procedure praying for a writ and/or order and/or direction in the nature of habeas corpus on behalf of the detainee, Sunil Kumar Samaddar, and is against the State of West Bengal through the Secretary, Home Department, Superintendent Hooghly Jail, the Assistant Secretary, Home (Special) Government of West Bengal and the District Magistrate, Hooghly.

2. The applicant before us has been detained under Section 3, sub-section (1) read with sub-section (3) of the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 (President's Act No. 19 of 1970) by an order, being Order No. 247/J. M./P. V. A. dated the 25th December, 1970 passed by the District Magistrate, Hooghly. By a further order No. 248/J. M./P. V. A. dated 25-12-1970, the applicant was directed by the said District Magistrate to be detained in the Hooghly Jail. The petitioner is stated to have been arrested on the 24th December, 1970 and served with the grounds of detention.

3. A copy of the order of the detention marked as annexure 'A' to the petition moved in this Court is as follows:

"No. 247/J. M./P. V. A. dated, Chinsurah, the 25-12-1970

Whereas I am satisfied with respect to the person known as Shri Sunil Samaddar S/o Lt. Rajendra Nath Samaddar of Bhunpur P. S. Pandua, Dist. Hooghly that with a view to preventing him from acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of Public Order, it is necessary so to do. I, therefore, in exercise of the powers conferred by sub-section (1) read with sub-section (3) of Section 3 of the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970, (President's Act No. 19 of 1970) make this order directing that the said Shri Sunil Samaddar be detained.

Given under my hand and seal of office. District Magistrate, Hooghly."

The grounds of detention as annexed are:

"(1) On 5-12-1969 at about 08.30 hrs. at Sargoria Mouza you along with your associates after forming unlawful assembly forcibly harvested the paddy crop from the lands of Shri Bejoy Keshob Kumar and Shri Charan Tulshi Bhattacharjee of Baidyapur, P. S. Kalna and took away same depriving them from their legal ownership of the crop. (2) On 7-6-1970 at about 07.00 hrs. at Bhunpur you along with your associates assaulted Shri Tarak Das Kumar and others of Bhunpur and wrongfully confined them till the arrival of police party while they were proceeding to Boinchee with a cart load of boiled paddy for husking purposes. (3) On 23-6-1970 morning you along with your associates went to the land of Shri Tara Pada Banerjee of Inchura, P. S. Pandua and did not allow his labour to cultivate land.

(4) On 23-6-1970 morning you along with your associates went to the land of Shri Tara Pada Banerjee of Inchura, P. S. Pandua and assaulted the labourers who were ploughing land and threatened to murder them.

(5) On 28-6-1970 at about 22 hrs. you along with your associates being armed with bomb formed an unlawful assembly in front of the Bhunpur Police Camp and exploded towards the police personnel with a view to injure them.

(6) On 19-12-1970 at about 14.30 hrs. you along with your associates formed an unlawful assembly and violated the order promulgated u/s 144, Criminal Procedure Code and abducted one Jahangir Sattar S/o Lt. Abdus Sattar, Ex-Labour Minister, West Bengal and assaulted him with deadly weapon at Rajimna village, P. S. Pandua.

(7) On 24-12-1970 at 12.30 hrs. you along with your associates gheraoed the arresting police party after forming an unlawful assembly at Bhunpur P. S. Pandua during the time of arrest pelted brick, brickbats towards them causing damage to the vehicle and also assaulted some of the police personnel causing injuries on their persons."

4. Mr. Naranarayan Gooptu, Counsel (with Messrs Indrajit Sen and B. Malkhandi, Advocates) appearing on behalf of the applicant has challenged the order of detention on a three-fold ground. Mr. Gooptu contended in the first instance that the grounds are vague and indefinite, preventing the applicant from making an effective representation to the authorities denying him thereby the right guaranteed under Article 22 (5) of the Constitution of India. The next contention of Mr. Gooptu is that there is malice in law vitiating the order of detention inasmuch as amongst others, specific cases were pending over the same subject-matter, constituting also the grounds of detention. The third and last contention of Mr. Gooptu is that the grounds of detention are neither proximate nor relevant, there being no direct or causal connection or nexus with the purpose of detention under the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970. In support of his submissions Mr. Gooptu referred to several cases which will be considered in their proper context. Mr. Priti Bhushan Burman, advocate (With Mr. Bhaskar Sen, Counsel) appearing on behalf of the respondent joined issue. He contended that the objection on the ground of vagueness is quite unfounded as will be borne out by the grounds themselves and the detainee was not handicapped in any manner to make an effective representation to the authorities against the order. Mr. Burman next contended that there is no malice in law and that there is no bar to an order of detention merely because a criminal case is pending over the same subject-matter on which the order of detention is passed. Mr. Burman lastly contended that the grounds of detention are not in any manner irrelevant as alleged or at all and that there is a proximate connection or nexus with the purpose of detention under the Act. An Affidavit-in-opposition affirmed on 6-3-71 by the respondent No. 3, the District Magistrate, Hooghly was filed.

5. Before we proceed to consider the grounds of detention it will be pertinent to consider the provisions of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970. The West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 (President's Act No. 19 of 1970) is a new enactment, highlighted by a notable departure from the earlier piece of legislation on the subject viz., the Preventive Detention Act IV of 1950 and for a proper appreciation, the said provisions should be considered in the light of the principles of Preventive Detention. The law of Preventive Detention is not an emergency law but an extraordinary enactment. Preventive Detention is a palpable exception to the basic canon of Western Jurisprudence that a man is innocent until proved guilty. In such Acts, as has been observed by David H. Bayley in his book on "Preventive Detention in India", "the requirements of stability warred with the benefits of permissiveness". The concept of preventive detention though a chequered one is as old as the hills. Flickering glimpses thereof as found in the East India Company Act, 1780 were focussed more prominently in the East India Company Act, 1784; forged thereafter strongly in the Bengal Regulation of 1812; reinforced in the Bengal State Prisoners' Regulations, 1818 and the State Prisoners' Regulations of Madras and Bombay as also the State Prisoners' Act, 1850; given a clearer shape in the Defence of India Act, 1915; vested with a distinct form in the Defence of India Act, 1939; specifically incorporated in Article 22 (3) of the Constitution of India; culminating in the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 (Act IV of 1950); and ultimately resurrected in the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 (President's Act No. 19 of 1970).

6. The object of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970 is a specific one viz., "to provide for detention with a view to preventing violent activities and for matters connected therewith." Section 3 (2) of the said Act is a significant addition, constituting a distinct departure from the Preventive Detention Act IV of 1950 and while attempting to define the expression "acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order" it gives only a qualified definition thereof, excepting in Section 3 (2) (a) (ii) and 3 (2) (c). The definition however has been made exhaustive by the use of the word "means". The expression "mean" has been defined in the Shorter Oxford English Dictionary, revised and edited by C. T. Onions, as "to intend to have a particular reference" or "to intend to indicate or to convey." According to the Rules of Interpretation of Statute the word "mean" has a specific connotation. A reference may be made to the observations of Lord Esher, Master of the Rolls, in the case of Gough v. Gough, (1891) 2 QB 665. When a statute incorporates the phrase "mean" and not "include", in relation to certain things or acts, "the definition is a hard-and-fast definition, and no other meaning can be assigned to the expression than is put out in the definition." Roland Burrows in his "Words and Phrases Judicially defined" has referred to the definition of the word "mean" by Mr. Justice Stringer; it is "Explanatory and restrictive in contradistinction to the use of the word 'includes', which is extensive." Accordingly, in the periphery of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970, the meaning of the expression "acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order" is not as wide as in the Preventive Detention Act, 1950, having been circumscribed within the ambit of Section 3 (2) (a) to (e). To put it in a short compass, the sine qua non of the provisions incorporated in Section 3 of the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 are "(a) acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the state or the maintenance of public order; (b) such acts must be within the bounds of Section 3 (2) (a) to (e); (c) the same must take place against the backdrop of violent activities, to prevent which the Act came into force; and (d) the overriding consideration of the State Government for such detention being preventive and not punitive. Anything short of this would be long off the mark.

7. It is against the background of the aforesaid provisions and in the light of the affidavits affirmed as also the submissions made by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respective parties that we will now proceed to consider the grounds of detention. The grounds of detention, which are seven in number, are spread over a period of one year and nineteen days. The first ground refers to some acts taking place on 5-12-1969 when the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 was in force and the next ground is separated therefrom by over six months. We will take up in the first instance ground No. 1 for consideration. The first ground set forth above relates to the forcible harvesting by the detainee and his associates of some paddy from the lands of Shri Bejoy Keshab Kumar and Shri Charan Tulsi Bhattacharya of Baidyapur, P. S. Kalna depriving them thereby of their legal ownership of the crop. Mr. Gooptu appearing on behalf of the detainee has contended that the first ground is not tenable and does not justify the order of detention. The steps of his reasoning are that (a) it is vague (b) it does not affect the maintenance of public order (c) that there is malice in law because a criminal case is pending over the same subject-matter and (d) that it is neither proximate nor relevant, there being no direct or causal connection with the purpose of detention under the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 and being outside the bounds of Section 3 (2) (d) or even (e) thereof, as urged on behalf of the respondent, it is de hors the statute and constitutes no nexus. Mr. Burman joined issue on each of these steps of reasoning.

8. As regards the first prong of attack on ground No. 1 on account of vagueness, a reference to ground No. 1 would make it abundantly clear that it is not so. It has been stated that on the date and time mentioned the detainee along with his associates formed an unlawful assembly and forcibly harvested the paddy crops from the lands of two specific persons of a particular village as named therein. It is difficult to find any vagueness therein and apprehend that it would stand in the way of making an effective representation on the part of the detainee. In paragraph 3 of the petition it has been stated that the said allegations are false to the knowledge of the detaining authority and that the detainee being a school teacher, he had nothing to do with the harvesting of paddy. It was further stated that in any event it is in the nature of a private dispute outside the ambit of the Act. The District Magistrate, Hooghly in his affidavit-in-opposition affirmed on the 6th March, 1971, in reply thereto, has denied in paragraph 6 the allegations in general and in particular that the grounds of detention are neither false nor untrue nor mala fide as alleged or at all. He further stated that in making the order of detention in question he satisfied himself that the grounds of detention were in existence and that those were individually and collectively connected with the purpose for which detention order was made. He also specifically denied the allegation of vagueness and averred that the activities mentioned therein related to the maintenance of public order. As to the cases on the point of vagueness we need not multiply the number. The test is now well-settled. In the case of Dr. Ram Krishna Bharadwaj v. State of Delhi, AIR 1953 SC 318 at p. 319, the test is laid down as "whether the ground mentioned is so vague as to render it difficult, if not impossible, for the petitioner to make an adequate representation to the appropriate authorities." In the case of Rameswar Shaw v. District Magistrate Burdwan, AIR 1964 SC 334 it has again been observed that "if some of the grounds supplied to the detainee are so vague that they would virtually deprive the detainee of a statutory right of making a representation, that again may introduce a serious infirmity in the order of his detention." In a Calcutta case viz., the case of Kamakshya Mukherjee v. The State of West Bengal, AIR 1968 Cal 596 it has been held by the Division Bench (R. N. Dutta and N. C. Talukdar JJ.) that "the proper yard-stick according to us to find out vagueness is whether the said grounds as served on the detainee enable him to make an effective representation to the authority concerned. Anything short of that will be long off the mark and prejudice the detainee." The Supreme Court also observed in the case of Moti Lal Jain v. State of Bihar, AIR 1968 SC 1509 at p. 1513 that "the grounds must not be vague or indefinite and must afford real opportunity to make a representation against the detention." We respectfully agree with the said observations and applying the said test to ground No. 1 we find no vagueness. The contention of Mr. Burman in this context that the ground is not vague in any manner, as alleged or at all, accordingly succeeds and the submissions made by Mr. Gooptu in this behalf fail.

9. The second prong of attack of Mr. Gooptu on ground No. 1 that it does not constitute any activity wherefrom it can be deduced that the detainee was acting in any manner prejudicial to the maintenance of public order, as alleged or at all, is also not tenable on ultimate analysis. The best as to what constitutes a disturbance of public order is now settled and without multiplying the number of cases, we would refer to the observations of Chief Justice Hidayatullah made in the case of Arun Ghosh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 1228 at p. 1229 that "public order was said to embrace more of the community than law and order. Public order is the even tempo of the life of the community taking the country as a whole or even a specified locality It is the degree of disturbance and its effect upon the life of the community in a locality which determines whether the disturbance amounts only to a breach of law and order." Turning now to ground No. 1 we agree with Mr. Burman that the same may constitute an act which is prejudicial to the maintenance of public order. The detenu and his associates formed an unlawful assembly on the date in question and harvested paddy from the lands of the two persons mentioned therein applying force and the avowed intention on their part was to deprive the owners of their legal ownership. As the Chief Justice of India observed in the above mentioned case "An act by itself is not determinant of its own gravity. In its quality it may not differ from another but in its potentiality it may be very different." We respectfully agree with the said observations and applying the said yard-stick to the acts stated in ground No. 1 we hold that same does affect prejudicially the maintenance of public order. The order of detention accordingly is not bad on this count, if not otherwise so, and the contentions of Mr. Burman on the point succeed.

10. The third branch of attack on ground No. 1 is that it is vitiated by malice in law because of the pendency of a criminal case on the self-same ground. In paragraph 3 of the petition, whereupon the Rule was issued, it has been stated that the said allegations form the subject-matter of a criminal prosecution, being case No. G. R. 490 of 1970 under Sections 147/379 Indian Penal Code pending before the Sub-divisional Judicial Magistrate, 1st Class, Chinsurah. It has further been stated that the said allegations are false and the detention of the applicant on the basis of the said allegations is mala fide, illegal and wrong. The District Magistrate in paragraph 6 of the Affidavit-in-opposition affirmed on the 6th March, 1971 denied the allegations that the grounds of detention are false, untrue or mala fide and further stated that he was satisfied that the activities mentioned in the said ground and also in the other grounds related to the maintenance of public order upon a personal consideration of the materials. The law on the point is also well-settled and it is not necessary to cite all the cases excepting a few bearing on the point. In the case of M. B. Malyali v. Commr. of Police, AIR 1950 Bom 202 at p. 205 Chief Justice Chagla delivering the judgment of the Court observed that "the powers of detaining authority are very wide under the law as it exists today. The Government may detain a person even though the grounds clearly disclose that he could have been prosecuted under the ordinary criminal law with regard to those very grounds. The detaining authority may, as I pointed out earlier, detain a person although a criminal court has acquitted him in respect of the same charge for which he is being detained under the Security Act." A reference may also be made to the case of Ramanlal Rathi v. Commr. of Police Calcutta, AIR 1952 Cal 26 wherein Mr. Justice P. B. Mukharji (As His Lordship then was) delivering the judgment of the Court observed that "the satisfaction is of the appropriate government and not of the Courts. Such satisfaction as laid down in Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act is not limited to be based on the existing laws of the land. Fundamentally therefore operation of the existing laws of the land or the determination of the offences by courts under such laws and the result arising therefrom whether of acquittal or discharge or even of conviction cannot be allowed to operate as a restriction on the powers of the government to detain under Section 3 of the Preventive Detention Act." Mr. Justice Guha Roy and Mr. Justice Sen held in the case of Shanichari Deb v. State of West Bengal, (1955) 59 Cal WN 545 that "there is nothing to prevent the authorities from proceeding under the Preventive Detention Act even when there are specific proceedings under the ordinary criminal law against a particular person." The same view was taken again in the case of Priyatosh Mazumdar v. The State of West Bengal, AIR 1963 Cal 589 wherein Mr. Justice Debabrata Mukherjee and Mr. Justice D. N. Dasgupta held that "the fact that there are parallel proceedings in existence one in court and the other by way of detention, does not by itself vitiate the order of detention." In a more recent decision of the Calcutta High Court viz., in the case of Sk. Sanwar Ali v. The State of West Bengal, (1968) 72 Cal WN 627 the Division Bench (R. N. Dutt and N. C. Talukdar JJ.) held that "a consideration of the court and the consideration of the Government are in these contexts different and do not belong to the same realm of scrutiny." Mr. Gooptu also referred to the case of Sudhir Kumar Saha v. Commr. of Police Calcutta, AIR 1970 SC 814 at page 815. But the facts there are distinguishable and do not establish the extreme proposition put forward by Mr. Gooptu. Mr. Gooptu ultimately relied on two unreported decisions of the Supreme Court in support of his contention viz., the case of Ram Singh v. Commr. of Police, Calcutta, Writ Petition No. 398 of 1969 D/-18-12-1969 (SC) and the case of Deep Chand Sharma v. State of West Bengal, Writ Petitions Nos. 403 and 470 of 1969 D/- 18-12-1969 (SC) wherein Mr. Justice Hegde delivered the judgments of the Court in both the cases. The facts are again quite distinguishable and ultimately the said cases do not warrant the contention of Mr. Gooptu. In the case of Ram Singh Their Lordships proceeded on the footing that "quite clearly the authorities have not borne in mind the distinction between maintenance of 'law and order' and maintenance of 'public order'". In the case of Deep Chand Sharma again Their Lordships found that two of the criminal cases were withdrawn and the other two cases were likely to be withdrawn and that it was submitted that those cases were being withdrawn for want of evidence. Their Lordships considered the explanation offered on behalf of the respondents to be wholly unacceptable because in any event the officer who conducted the searches and the witnesses who were present at the time should have been available in support of the prosecution case. It is on this ground substantially that Their Lordships proceeded and held that the impugned order was made for collateral ground. The facts in the present case are, however, quite different and applying the principles referred to above we uphold the submissions made by Mr. Burman that ground No. 1 does not disclose any malice in law and the contentions of Mr. Gooptu in this behalf accordingly fail.

11. The fourth and last prong of Mr. Gooptu's attack on ground No. 1 is the absence of proximity or nexus. In this context, Mr. Gooptu's contentions are two-fold viz., (a) that the acts complained of having taken place on 5-12-1969 when the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 was in force but was not taken into consideration for an order of detention under the said Act, cannot constitute a relevant ground for detention under the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 on 25-12-1970 and (b) that in any event the said acts are outside the ambit of Section 3 (2) (a) to (e) of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970. Mr. Priti Bhushan Burman, on behalf of the respondents contended that both these branches of submissions made by Mr. Gooptu are unwarranted and untenable inasmuch as in the first instance there is no bar in law to such a consideration by the detaining authorities merely because the impugned acts had taken place under the earlier Act but were not taken into consideration under the said Act; and secondly that the said Acts dovetail indeed into the definitions given in Section 3 (2) (d) and (e) of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970. A reference to the said ground would make it clear that the Act referred to had taken place on the 5th December, 1969 and on that date the Preventive Detention Act, 1950 was in force. The point at issue therefore is whether by itself it will establish the absence of any proximate connection with the purpose of detention and render the said ground to be irrelevant. The act complained of apparently was not taken into consideration for the purpose of detention under Act IV of 1950 while it was in force. It does not also appear in the first blush to have any direct or causal connection with the purpose of detention of the person concerned under the President's Act No. 19 of 1970. The gap of a little over one year between the first ground and the order of detention would not ipso facto make the ground irrelevant but we cannot overlook the material fact that the act complained of had taken place while the earlier Act was in force but was not taken into consideration for the purpose of an order of detention passed under the said Act. It is further to be considered that no less than six other grounds referring to acts taking place after the expiry of Act IV of 1950, have been catalogued in the grounds of detention under the President's Act No. 19 of 1970. We accordingly uphold the contentions of Mr. Gooptu that the said ground No. 1, referring to acts taking place on 5-12-1969 when Act IV of 1950 was in force, has no direct or causal connection with the object of detention under the President Act on 25-12-1970. The second branch of Mr. Gooptu's submission in this context has also much force behind the same viz., that the act complained of in ground No. 1 does not come within the ambit of either Section 3 (2) (d) or (e) of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970, and is accordingly de hors the statute and irrelevant. Mr. Burman's contentions in this context are not sustainable. The acts complained of in ground No. 1 do not come within the bounds of clause (d) to Section 3 (2) of the said Act inasmuch as the same does not make out an offence punishable with imprisonment for life or imprisonment for a term extending to seven years or more or any offence under the Arms Act, 1959 or the Explosive Substances Act, likely to disturb public order. The said acts again do not come within the ambit of clause (e) to Section 3 (2) of the said Act, because the same does not relate to a person referred to in clauses (a) to (f) to Section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure committing any offence punishable with imprisonment where the commission of such offence disturbs or is likely to disturb public order. It is therefore abundantly clear that the acts referred to in ground No. 1 dated 5-12-1969 do not come within the bounds of either clause (d) or (e) to Section 3 (2) of the President's Act, No. 19 of 1970 and are as such de hors the statute and irrelevant. The second branch of Mr. Goopu's submissions relating to the fourth prong of his attack on ground No. 1 accordingly succeeds.

12. Mr. Burman thereafter made a further submission that in any event, in order to detain the person concerned, there need not be any such past activity as stated in the definition given in any one of the clauses (a) to (e) to Section 3 (2) of the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 but that the detaining authorities may proceed even on an apprehension that the detenu may commit such acts, affecting thereby the security of the State or public order and accordingly to prevent him from committing the same, he may be detained. Mr. Burman has tried to interpret the provisions of Section 3 (2) (a) to (e) in general and of Section 3 (2) (d) and (e) in particular, in a manner not intended by the lawmaking authority. The ratio of his arguments are not sustainable and are far-fetched viz., that the acts catalogued in the aforesaid provisions need not be actually committed but merely on an apprehension that those are likely to be committed, the person concerned can be detained to prevent the likelihood of such a commission in future. Such an interpretation only gives an unduly extended connotation to the said provisions, encroaching upon the liberty of the subject. There cannot be an order of detention merely on the apprehended ground that detenu is likely to commit such acts like those stated in the aforesaid provisions unless and until in the past the said detenu has committed any such acts giving rise to such an apprehension. Bereft of such previous activity, the apprehension would be merely anticipatory and not preventive. It is pertinent in this context to understand what is meant by the expression "Preventive." As was observed by Mr. Justice B. K. Mukherjee (as His Lordship then was) in the case of Gopalan v. State of Madras, AIR 1950 SC 27 at page 91 that "there is no authoritative definition of the term 'preventive detention' in the Indian Law. The expression has its origin in the language used by judges or the Law Lords in England while explaining the nature of detention under Regulation 14 (b) Defence of Realm Consolidated Act, 1914 passed at the outbreak of the first world war, and the same language was repeated in connection with the emergency regulations made during the last world war. The word 'preventive' is used in contradistinction to the word "punitive". Mr. Justice Mukherjee proceeded to quote the words of Lord Finlay in the case of Rex v. Halliday, 1917 AC 260 at p. 269 that "It is not the punitive but the precautionary measure" and laid down that "the object is not to punish a man for having done something but to intercept him before he does it and to prevent him from doing it." It means that restraint whose object is to prevent probable or possible activity which is apprehended from a would be detenu on grounds of his past activities. It is pertinent also to refer to the observations of Lord Macmillan in the case of Liversidge v. Anderson, 1942 AC 206 at page 254 that "the question is one of preventive detention justified by reasonable probability, not of criminal conviction which can only be justified by legal evidence". The interpretation of the word 'Preventive' as given above viz; to prevent probable or possible activity which is apprehended from a would-be detenu on grounds of his past activities does not justify this further submission of Mr. Burman seeking to give an extended definition to the said word.

13. This branch of Mr. Burman's contention would be a dangerous proposition encroaching on the liberty of the subject. For example, a citizen merely shining a knife, in the instance given by Mr. Burman, cannot ipso facto be deemed to be acting in any manner prejudicial to the security of the State or the maintenance of public order within the bounds of Section 3 (2) (d) and (e) of the Act as it would be only far-fetched to assume that with the said knife, he may or is likely to commit any such acts as described in the said clauses. A citizen, against whom there is no previous allegation, shining his knife may not do so for the proverbial pound of flesh but for the less dramatic purpose of peeling some vegetables. The physical appearance again of a person or any defect in his character may not be appealing but that does not constitute a ground for an apprehension on the part of the detaining authority that he is likely to commit any of the acts catalogued within the bounds of Section 3 (2) (a) to (e) of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970 and as such should be prevented from committing the same by being detained. This will be an extreme proposition unsustainable on merits and encroaching dangerously on the liberty of the subject. A lean and hungry looking Cassius may be dangerous in the estimate of Julius Caesar — "Yond Cassius has a lean and hungry look: he thinks too much. Such men are dangerous". Again a man who has no music in him may not be considered to be persona grata in the Merchant of Venice — "A man that hath no music in himself, nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds, is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils". But what is good enough for a Shakespearean character is not sufficient for the requirements of the President's Act No. 19 of 1970. To give effect to Mr. Burman's submissions would be to legislate and as Francis Beacon observed, in his "Essay on Counsels, Civil and Moral: of Judicature," "Judges ought to remember that their office is Jus dicere, and not jus dare; to interpret law and not to make law or give law". It would be inexpedient to read more into the Act than the law-making authority did ever intend and he thinks that have been left open for the protection of the liberty of the citizen, should not be allowed to be walled upon such circumscribed interpretation of law, not even intended by the law-making authority.

14. The method of construction, in such cases, encroaching on the liberty of the subject, must be a strict one and cannot be so expansive as Mr. Burman submitted. It would otherwise result in girdling the earth. In the case of Barnard v. Gorman, 1941 AC 378 Lord Wright cited with approval at page 393 the well-known dictum of Pollock, C. B. in Bowditch v. Balchin, (1850) 5 Ex. 378 that "In a case in which liberty of the subject is concerned, we cannot go beyond the natural construction of the statute". Lord Atkin also elaborated the same in the well-known case of 1942 AC 206 at page 244 that "Amid the clash of arms, the laws are not silent. They may be changed but they speak the same language in war as in peace". Lord Atkin further referred to Alice in Wonderland and underlined the observations of Humpty Dumpty that "when I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean neither more nor less". It is also pertinent to refer to his further observations "that the words have only one meaning" and that "I protest, even if I do it alone, against a strained construction put on words with the effect of giving an uncontrolled power of imprisonment to the minister." A reference in this context may also be made to the case of AIR 1970 SC 814 Mr. Justice Hegde observed at page 815 that "the freedom of the individual is of utmost importance in any civilized society. It is a human right. In our Constitution it is a guaranteed right". The said observations are material and it is held that this being the cornerstone of our liberty, such freedom can only be deprived of by due process of law and it is further held that in the instant case there has been an encroachment on the said freedom and as such the order of detention should be set aside. Justice is in accordance with law and the law, in this case, is as incorporated in the President's Act No. 19 of 1970. Grounds which are de hors the said Act are irrelevant and repugnant and entitle the detinue to be set at liberty. Lord Wright aptly observed in connection with the duty of the Home Secretary in the case of 1942 AC 206 referred to above that "It is the duty which he must discharge on his own responsibility to the utmost of his ability, weighing on the one hand the suspects' right to personal liberty and on the other hand the safety of the state". The courts have their duty no less than the same and the suspects' rights to personal liberty and the security of the state or the interest of public order should equally be weighed to the utmost ability. This delicate equipoise should always be borne in mind and if the same is tilted it would result in the tilting of the apple-cart. "Fiat Justitia Ruat coelum — let justice be done though heavens may fall". The second branch of Mr. Burman's submission on the fourth prong of Mr. Gooptu's attack on ground No. 1 accordingly fails and Mr. Gooptu's contentions in this behalf accordingly succeed.

15. Mr. Burman thereafter made an ancillary submission that the absence of nexus or relevancy of one ground only, out of the several ones mentioned, would not be sufficient to render the order of detention invalid. He contended that the proper test in such matters is to take the total effect of all the grounds together for deciding whether a particular ground is relevant or vague and that in any event the ground purported to be irrelevant or vague must be a vital one. Mr. Gooptu joined issue and both the learned counsel cited several cases in support of their respective submissions. We will now, proceed to consider the said cases. Mr. Burman referred in the first instance to the case of Dwarka Das Bhatia v. The State of Jammu and Kashmir, AIR 1957 SC 164 wherein Mr. Justice Jagannadhadas delivering the judgment of the court observed at page 168 that "In applying these principles, however, the court must be satisfied that the vague or irrelevant grounds are such as, if excluded, might reasonably have affected the subjective satisfaction of the appropriate authority. It is not merely because some ground or reason of a comparatively unessential nature is defective that such an order based on subjective satisfaction can be held to be invalid". Mr. Burman overlooked the further observations made in this context by the Supreme Court viz., that "where power is vested in a statutory authority to deprive the liberty of a subject on its subjective satisfaction with reference to specified matters, if that satisfaction is stated to be based on a number of grounds or for a variety of reasons, all taken together, and if some out of them are found to be non-existent or irrelevant the very exercise of that power is bad". Their Lordships further observed that "That is so because the matter being one for subjective satisfaction, it must be properly based on all the reasons on which it purports to be based". The next case cited by Mr. Burman is the case of Saberuddin Shaikh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1964 Cal 231 wherein Mr. Justice Debabrata Mookerjee delivering the judgment of the court observed at page 233 that "We think that the detention order was made on the totality of the facts contained in the particulars attached to the ground and it would not be right to take a particular and study it in isolation from the rest". Apart from the facts of the said case being distinguishable from those in the present one, the extreme view taken therein has not been supported by several Supreme Court decisions which will be referred to and considered presently. The next case cited by Mr. Burman is another Calcutta case viz., the case Md. Pearoo v. The State, AIR 1969 Cal 157 wherein Mr. Justice R. N. Dutt delivering the judgment of the court observed at page 158 that "But when we take into consideration the other grounds it appears that the detenu was said to have been indulging in similar activities till 1967 and that gives ground No. (1) proximate connection with the detention order or, in other words, with the purpose for which the detenu is being detained, namely, maintenance of public order. Ground No. 1 in the said case recited an incident taking place on August 31, 1966 and it was submitted on behalf of the detenu that the same had no proximate connection with the order of detention made on February 5, 1968. Their Lordships ultimately held that this gap of time by itself would not be sufficient and the factum of the detenu indulging in similar activities will invest ground No. 1 with proximity. Ground No. 1 in the present case is not being impugned only on the ground of gap of time but also on the further ground of apparent irrelevancy because of the provisions of the new Act whereunder the detenu has been detained. The Supreme Court also considered these principles in a different manner and the same would be referred to presently. Mr. Burman ultimately referred to the case of Kalyanmal Agarwalla v. District Magistrate, Midnapore, AIR 1970 Cal 12 wherein Mr. Justice R. N. Dutt and Mr. Justice T. P. Mukerji considered ground No. (a) in that case in the context of grounds (b) and (c) therein and held that ground (a) should be held to have proximate connection with the purpose for which the detenu was being detained viz., maintenance of supplies essential to the community. In the facts of the said case Their Lordships observed that the allegations in ground (a) related to similar acts prejudicial to the maintenance of supplies essential to the community. In any event we will have to consider the principles laid down in this context by the Supreme Court inasmuch as the law declared by the Supreme Court shall be binding on all the courts under Article 141 of the Constitution of India. Mr. Gooptu cited several cases and we will proceed to consider those as bearing on the point at issue. He referred to the case of AIR 1953 SC 318 wherein Chief Justice Patanjali Sastri delivering the judgment of the court observed at page 320 that "We are of opinion that this constitutional requirement must be satisfied with respect to each of the grounds communicated to the person detained, subject of course to a claim of privilege under clause (6) of Article 22. That not having been done in regard to the ground mentioned in sub-paragraph (e) of paragraph 2 of the statement of grounds, the petitioner's detention cannot be held to be in accordance with the procedure established by law within the meaning of Article 21". The next case cited in this context is the case of Shibban Lal Saksena v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1954 SC 179 wherein Mr. Justice B. K. Mukherjee (As His Lordship then was) delivering the judgment of the court observed at page 181 that "In such cases, we think, the position would be the same as if one of these two grounds was irrelevant for the purpose of the Act or was wholly illusory and this would vitiate the detention order as a whole". The next case on the point cited by Mr. Gooptu is the case of AIR 1964 SC 334 wherein Mr. Justice P. B. Gajendragadkar (as his Lordship then was) delivering the judgment of the court observed at page 337 that "There is also no doubt that if any of the grounds furnished to the detenu are found to be irrelevant while considering the application of clauses (i) to (iii) of Section 3 (1) (a) and in that sense are foreign to the Act, the satisfaction of the detaining authority on which the order of detention is based is open to challenge and the detention order liable to be quashed". The next case is the well-known case of Ram Manohar Lohia v. The State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 740 wherein Mr. Justice A. K. Sarkar (as his Lordship then was) delivering the judgment of the court containing of the majority view observed at page 747 and 748 that "The result then is that the detention order mentions two grounds one of which is in terms of the rule while the other is not. What then is the effect of that?

..... This question is clearly settled by authorities. In AIR 1954 SC 179, it was held that such an order would be a bad order, the reason being that it could not be said in what manner and to what extent the valid and invalid grounds operated on the mind of the authority concerned and contributed to the creation of his subjective satisfaction which formed the basis of the order. Mr. Gooptu finally cited a more recent decision of the Supreme Court viz., the case of Puskar Mukherjee v. The State of West Bengal, AIR 1970 SC 852. Mr. Justice Ramaswami delivering the judgment of the Court observed at page 859 that "But it is well established that the constitutional requirement that the grounds must not be vague must be satisfied with regard to each of the grounds communicated to the person detained subject to the claim of privilege under clause (6) of Article 22 of the Constitution and therefore even though one ground is vague and the other grounds are not vague, the detention is not in accordance with procedure established by law and is therefore illegal. We respectfully agree with the said observations of the Supreme Court and held that the irrelevancy of one or some grounds would be sufficient for rendering the order of detention as a whole to be invalid. As regards the other branch of Mr. Burman's contention that ground No. 1 being not a vital or essential one should be left out of consideration; it may be pointed out that this purported insignificant ground dating back to the 5th December, 1969 was taken into consideration for the purpose of detention on 25-12-1970. In paragraph 3 (ii) of the affidavit-in-opposition by the respondent No. 3 the District Magistrate, Hooghly, it has been averred that "I satisfied myself that the grounds and each of them were in existence and I concluded that the grounds for detention collectively and each of them separately were with the purpose for which the detention order in question was made". In paragraph 6 again it was stated that with regard to the first ground along with the others that "In making the order of detention in question, I satisfied myself that the grounds of detention were in existence and that these were individually and collectively connected with the purpose for which detention order was made". In view of the said statements, the wind is taken out of the sails of Mr. Burman's argument, that the said ground is not a relevant one for constituting the satisfaction of the detaining authority. The contention of Mr. Gooptu is accordingly upheld, viz. that the ground No. 1 in the order of detention is neither proximate nor relevant, there being no direct or causal connection or nexus with the purpose of detention under the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970 and accordingly the order of detention as a whole is not in accordance with law.

In view of the finding above that the order of detention as a whole is bad inasmuch as the acts referred to therein are neither proximate nor relevant, being without any direct or causal connection or nexus with the purpose of detention under the West Bengal (Prevention of Violent Activities) Act, 1970, it is not necessary to enter into the merits of the other grounds of detention. We would only place on record our appreciation of the able assistance rendered to this court by the learned counsel appearing on behalf of the respective parties.

In the result, the Rule is made absolute; We hold that the impugned order of detention is illegal and invalid; and we direct that the detenu may be released forthwith.

Let the order go down at once.

AJAY K. BASU, J.:— 16. I agree with the order that the detenu should be released forthwith.

Rule made absolute.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 45 (V 59 C 7)RAMENDRA MOHAN DATTA, J.

International Coal Corporation,
Plaintiff v. Pure Sitalpur Coal Concern
Ltd. Defendant.

Suit No. 165 of 1970, D/- 21-6-1971.

(A) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 21 — Arbitration of suit disputes — Share-holders can object intervening in third party's suit against company when a director, becoming Special Officer under consent order in company's another suit wherein restraint order against directors also had been passed, files an agreement for arbitration of that third party's suit to gain control over the company. (X-Ref:— Partnership Act (1932), Section 19 (c)) — (Companies Act (1956), Sec. 402 (e)). (Paras 17, 23 and 25)

Appointment of special officer cannot be by consent of parties but it is a power of the court to be sparingly used only when specially necessary. He is an officer of the court and his powers and functions which will vary according to the facts of the case however must be only such that he can run the company in the best interest of the organisation and its members under the court's supervision. He cannot have unlimited powers unless specifically empowered and must take directions from the court periodically. His powers cannot also be to enable him to achieve his own end or of his group.

(Paras 16 and 19)

When in view of that restraint order no directors are functioning and the special officer, an interested party having been a director, has managed to get so appointed and by that arbitration agreement he will be able to get full control of the company it is necessary that he should have taken directions from the court before trying to so settle that suit which might affect the interests of a group of the directors or share-holders. The shareholders therefore can interfere and object to the filing of that agreement showing how their interests are affected.

(Paras 17 and 19)

Even if that agreement has been signed by only one partner of the plaintiff-firm, they cannot however question the authority of that partner relying on Section 19 (c) Partnership Act as that clause being concerned only with the extent of implied power of a partner is inapplicable and such an objection can be raised only by the partners or parties to the suit. They are parties neither to the suit nor to that agreement. A partner is also not prohibited from agreeing on behalf of the firm for arbitration of a dispute.

(Para 23)

(B) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 21 — Calcutta High Court Rules under — Agreement to refer suit disputes to arbitration cannot be accepted if it is simply put in — Compliance with those rules is necessary. (Para 25)

Ojha v. Gunwantra Ojha 5, 7, 8

Mitter and S. C. Sen, for Plaintiff; Deb, for Defendant.

ORDER:— A terms of settlement is sought to be put in whereby all disputes in respect of the above suit have been agreed to be referred to arbitration as per agreement dated July 31, 1971. The said agreement has been made an annexure to the said terms of settlement.

2. By an interlocutory order made in this suit, Ghose, J., by an order dated 22nd May, 1970 appointed two joint receivers being the respective representatives of the plaintiff and the defendant herein and directed them to run the colliery belonging to Messrs. Pure Sitalpur Coal Concern Limited (hereinafter called the said company). By the said order the plaintiff, in this suit, inter alia, agreed to advance a sum of Rupees two lakhs and the said joint receivers were directed to invest the same in the said company for the purpose of running the said colliery. The joint receivers were also directed to pay up the sum by stated instalments. It was further directed that the said joint-receivers would stand discharged from further acting as joint-receivers subject to their filing of accounts, when the dues of the plaintiff firm would be fully paid off by them, and in that event they would make over possession of the said colliery to the defendant company.

3. The admitted position is that the plaintiff firm in pursuance of that order advanced a sum to the extent of Rs. 36,000/- only and the balance sum had not been advanced by them. The claim in the suit herein is for a sum of Rs. 1,91,616.15 paise.

4. By clause 3 of the said arbitration agreement, which is annexed to the said Terms of Settlement, it is agreed that all interim orders made in this suit including the order for the appointment of joint receivers would stand vacated. By clause 4 it is also agreed that after such discharge the joint receivers would hand over possession of assets, books, papers and documents of the company to the company "represented by Kashavlal Ojha a Special Officer appointed in suit No. 2029-A of 1967 by an order dated 18th May, 1971". The said Special Officer appointed in Suit No. 2029-A of 1967 by the order dated 18th May, 1971 signed both the arbitration agreement as also the Terms of Settlement on 31st May, 1971. For and on behalf of the plaintiff one of the partners, one Ashok Kumar H. Mehta signed both the arbitration agreement as also the Terms of Settlement describing himself as a partner on 31st May, 1971. One B. B. Sinha has also signed the Terms of Settlement as late as on 3rd June, 1971 for and on behalf of Pure Sitalpur Coal Concern Limited but without indicating in which capacity he has so signed. The above is the actual position with regard to the arbitration agreement annexed to the Terms of Settlement proposed to be put in.

5. Mr. Deb appearing on behalf of some of the shareholders of the defendant company has raised several objections. The locus standi of Mr. Deb's clients for interfering with the putting in of the Terms of Settlement being challenged, Mr. Deb argues that the company at present has no directors. All the directors have ceased to exist because the company has not held any annual general meeting for the last about 7-8 years. He refers to an Order of A. N. Sen, J. made on 4th September, 1967 in Suit No. 2029 A of 1967 (Cal) (Keshavlal Ojha v. Gunwantrai Ojha) which ran as follows:

"Mr. B. B. Sinha is directed to keep a separate account in respect of transactions, other parties are restrained from acting as directors. Interim order to continue."

6. By virtue of that order and under authority from the said B. B. Sinha, one Promoderai Amritlal Ojha, one of the shareholders in the group for whom Mr. Deb is appearing, was acting as the Liaison Officer of the defendant company. Mr. Deb contends, that the company is being run properly and its position has improved to a great extent since the appointment of the said joint-receivers; now the whole group of Keshavlal Ojha is in collusion and in conspiracy with Gunwantrai Ojha and a few others and have now been trying to oust the said joint receivers and the said Promoderai Ojha from the management of the colliery business of the said company. The said Keshavlal Ojha thereby now intends to have full control over the said defendant company by adopting this round-about process. Mr. Deb contends that prior to the order dated 4th September, 1967 the said Promoderai Amritlal Ojha and a few other members of the Ojha family in that group were acting as directors of the said company but now by adopting this method Keshavlal Ojha's group will have complete control over the defendant company to the complete ouster of the said Promoderai Amritlal Ojha and the group to which he belongs. Mr. Deb contends that B. B. Sinha who was previously a director has since automatically ceased to be a director by retirement by rotation because the company has not called any annual general meeting for the last about 7-8 years. Accordingly, it is contended that since there are no directors of the defendant company the shareholders have become vitally interested in the affairs of the company.

7. To show how and in what manner Keshavlal Ojha became the Special Officer and how he is seeking to have complete control over the said company, Mr. Deb contends that by the Consent Order dated 18th May, 1971, Keshavlal Ojha got himself appointed as a Special Officer at a monthly remuneration of Rs. 1,500/- to manage the affairs of the company till the disposal of the said suit No. 2029 A of 1967 (Cal). The said Keshavlal Ojha was to maintain accounts of the dealings and finance of the company till the disposal of the said suit. By that order the said B. B. Sinha was discharged from the obligation of keeping separate accounts in terms of the ad-interim order dated 4th September, 1967 and the filing of accounts by him pursuant to the said order was dispensed with. The said consent Order also provided that all the directors of the defendant company were restrained from acting as directors of the company till the disposal of the said suit being Suit No. 2029 A of 1967.

8. After the said Consent Order was passed Mr. Deb's clients came to know about it and filed a suit for setting aside the said Consent Order on the ground of fraud and collusion. On the 2nd June, 1971 on an ex parte application of Mr. Deb's clients made in their said suit, this court made an ad-interim order of injunction restraining the defendants i.e., the parties to the Suit No. 2029A of 1967 (Cal) including the said Company, their agents and servants from giving effect to or acting upon the compromise and/or the Consent Order dated May 18, 1971 passed in suit No. 2029 A of 1967. The said application was made returnable by 7th June when the said Interim Order was varied; the relevant portion thereof provides:

"I appoint Mr. B. B. Sinha and Mr. Keshavlal Amritlal Ojha as the joint Special Officers without security to carry on the business of M/s. Pure Sitalpur Coal Concern Limited until the disposal of this application."

9. After providing for some other directions the said order also provided: "save as aforesaid the ad-interim Order passed herein is varied to this extent."

10. It is argued that the net position has been that the Consent Order dated 18th May, 1971 remains stayed but the said B. B. Sinha and the said Keshavlal Ojha were appointed as joint Special Officers of the company in the Suit filed by Mr. Deb's clients to carry on the business of M/s. Pure Sitalpur Coal Concern Limited.

11. For all these reasons as stated above Mr. Deb contends that his clients are to a great extent interested in resisting the filing of the terms of Settlement inasmuch as apparently the terms might appear to be quite innocent but, if put into action, this will have far-reaching consequences and will adversely go to affect the interest of the company as well as of Mr. Deb's clients. That being the position Mr. Deb prays for leave to intervene and to object to the terms being filed on its merits also.

12. Mr. Mitter on the other hand argues that Mr. Deb's clients have admitted the position in their petition before the Appeal Court that B. B. Sinha was acting as the director of the said Company and on that basis the said Promodrai Amritlal Ojha was so long holding the power of Attorney from the said B. B. Sinha and as such was looking after the business of the said company.

13. Mr. Sen on behalf of the plaintiff firm contends that just as the shareholders have no say in the matter of the internal management of the company, when the company is managed by the board of directors, except in certain special circumstances as provided by the Statute, similarly, the shareholders cannot also have any say in a matter where the Special Officer is acting on behalf of the company. It is argued that Mr. Deb's clients have no locus standi to interfere into the putting in of the Terms of Settlement in this suit and the court should not grant them leave to intervene in this matter.

14. It is necessary here to determine the position and the powers of the Special Officers and in what manner they should function after their appointments.

15. The position and the powers of a Special Officer have not been provided in the Companies Act, 1956. It is settled law that to run the affairs of the company such as this, a receiver should not be appointed. In order to remove a deadlock in a company this Court often had to resort to the appointment of a Special Officer of the company so that the affairs of the company could be run most beneficially by way of interim measure through the said Special Officer under the supervision of the Court in the pending matter. It is admitted by and on behalf of all the parties herein that since quite some time past a practice has grown up in this court to make such appointments, in a suitable case if the court so thinks fit and proper solely with a view that there might not be any deadlock in the company and so that the affairs of the company might be conducted in a suitable manner through such Special Officer. As to what would be the powers and functions of such Special Officers have not been laid down in any of the decided cases of this court.

16. In my opinion, the powers and functions of a Special Officer must vary in accordance with the facts of each case but such powers and functions must be such so as to enable him to run the affairs of the company in the best interest of the company and its members and under the supervision of the Court. Accordingly, it is always desirable and, I should say, incumbent upon the Special Officer to take directions from time to time from the Court appointing him as such Special Officer so that the interest of the company might be, protected in the best possible manner. In any event, his powers and functions should not be, and indeed, cannot be, such so that he would be in a position to achieve his own end or that of his group by sacrificing the existing interests of the other group of shareholders without an order from Court to that effect. Being the sole Special Officer he cannot have that unlimited power in respect of the Company unless the Court specifically clothes him with such powers. Being an Officer of the Court if he would do that, that would be a misuse of his powers. He must not, without an order of the Court do such things that the interest of the company would suffer in his hands and his acts would, in any way, be prejudicial to the interest of the shareholders or creditors or contributories of the company. In my opinion, for the purpose of deciding this case it is not necessary for this court to say anything more about the powers and functions of the Special Officer. Suffice it to say, that in exercising powers as such Special Officer and in functioning in that position such Officer shall always look to the interest of the company and whenever any step has to be taken by him which would be likely to be of controversial nature, the said Officer is bound to take directions of the court and to act in accordance with such directions,

As a sole Special Officer his position and powers are much lesser than that of the board of directors which runs the business of the company in accordance with the powers entrusted to it by the Memorandum and the Articles of the Company and by the Statute. A Special Officer being an Officer of the Court remains answerable to the Court for his acts and conduct and as such must obtain the necessary directions from the Court appointing him to clothe himself with special powers. In that respect his position and powers are different from that of a director or of a board of directors. He cannot have the full powers of a director unless the court vests him with such powers.

17. In respect of this company, namely, Pure Sitalpur Coal Concern Limited by the order of A. N. Sen, J., dated 4th September, 1967 all the directors have ceased to act as directors. Only B. B. Sinha was directed to keep accounts of the company in respect of the transactions of the company. In the present suit two joint-receivers were appointed as such receivers in order to look after the business of the colliery. By the Consent Order dated 18th May, 1971 all these are sought to be given a go-by. Keshavlal Ojha, the Special Officer is himself an interested party but he seeks to come into the picture by means of the Consent Order where the court did not have the opportunity to go into the question after hearing the parties but on the basis of such consent had passed the said order dated 18th May, 1971. By virtue of these powers derived by the Special Officer from the said Consent Order the next step he took was to settle this Suit with the plaintiff firm so that he could take full control over the company by obtaining the discharge of the said two joint-receivers and of the said Liaison Officer who was acting under the authority of the said B. B. Sinha under the said Power of Attorney. According to Mr. Deb, the Special Officer by means of such consent order in a suit which has been kept pending for the purpose of allowing the Special Officer to function and which cannot remain pending after the dispute with Gunwantrao Ojha is settled, now seeks to clothe himself with all the powers to have full control over the company and to run its affairs without any sanction of this Court. He has created himself the Special Officer in a Suit in which he was one of the plaintiffs-directors with the help of some of the other directors but now in this suit which is a suit between the said company and an outsider, by consent he seeks to oust the joint-receivers and to have full control over the colliery. If the directors have been restrained from functioning as directors and if the company's affairs are sought to be managed in this manner, I see no reason why the shareholders cannot come in to intervene and bring it to the notice of the Court in what manner their interests are being sacrificed by obtaining and utilising the various orders of this Court obtained by the consent of the parties in the pending suit.

18. Accordingly, in my opinion under such circumstances, the shareholders have certainly a say in the matter and can legitimately come up before the court and ask for leave to intervene to bring it to the notice of the Court in what manner the Court's Officer has been behaving in respect of a particular company and whether he should be allowed to file the Terms of Settlement or not. In my opinion, Mr. Deb's contentions are acceptable and sound. I hold that it is a fit case where I should and, accordingly, I give his clients leave to intervene in this matter.

19. In my opinion, the parties by consent cannot appoint a special Officer of a company. That is a power which a Court can exercise, and indeed very sparingly, if the Court thinks fit under special circumstances by taking into consideration the interest of the company its shareholders, contributories and its creditors. The parties by their acts by means of a Consent Order cannot jeopardise the interest of the shareholders of the company or of the directors or creditors of the company by making an appointment of a Special Officer over a company.

20. While deciding this matter I will not seek to lay down the circumstances under which a Special Officer should be appointed by Court or what should be their powers, rights or liabilities but all that I need observe here, in this case, is that if a practice of this nature has grown up let it grow up as a healthy one and not as a corrupt one. Let it not be utilised to seek one's own gain by sacrificing the interests of the general body of the shareholders or of the company. Accordingly, in a case where the Special Officer is allowed to function and the entire body of the directors are restrained from functioning as such directors, and more so, when the Special Officer appointed happens to be an interested party, in the sense that he was previously acting as a director of the company and there are groups of directors who are fighting amongst each other, the Special Officer appointed by Court, in all fairness and in the interest of the company and of all persons concerned in the company ought to take directions from the Court before settling any pending matter which would go to affect the interest of a particular group of directors or shareholders of the company. In this case not only that Keshavlal Ojha was not at present in the management of the company but one of Mr. Deb's clients Promodrai was now acting as the Liaison Officer under the authority of the said B. B. Sinha whom the Court authorised to keep accounts and to run the company and the colliery is being run by the joint receivers under certain directions of the Court. It is quite obvious that by the Consent Order dated 18th May, 1971 not only Keshavlal is trying to get control over the company but at the same time Promodrai and the joint receivers who are actually managing the affairs of the colliery and as such the main business of the said company, are sought to be removed without obtaining the prior sanction of this Court. It is contended that the said Suit No. 2029A of 1967 (Cal) (Keshavlal Ojha v. Gunwantrao Ojha) is purposely being kept alive and the said consent order has been sought to be obtained by way of an interlocutory order even though, it is apparent that nothing remained in the said Suit. The purpose is to allow Keshavlal to act as the Special Officer of this Court as long as possible by ousting the other persons as indicated above.

21. Mr. Deb contends that the Terms of Settlement ought not to be allowed to be put in because the same has not been properly signed by the parties to it. Mr. Deb contends that the terms, sought to be put in, should have been signed by the Joint Special Officers describing themselves, as such Joint Special Officers appointed in the Suit to Mr. Deb's clients being Suit No. 246 of 1971 (Cal) (Mukundrai Ravishankar Trivedi v. Keshavlal Amritlal). As stated above the terms have been sought to be signed by Keshavlal as Special Officer in Suit No. 2029A of 1967. Mr. Mitter on the other hand, contends that at the relevant point of time when the said signature was put in, the said Special Officer was appointed as such and accordingly, that was his correct designation on that date and consequently there is no irregularity in his signature. On this point, I have already expressed my views as stated above.

22. It is argued by Mr. Deb that under the provision of Section 19 (2) clause (c) of the Partnership Act, 1932 one partner has got the implied authority, and the implied authority of such a partner does not empower him, to compromise and to reduce any claim or portion of a claim by the firm. Accordingly Mr. Deb argues that the Terms of Settlement have not been duly signed by both the partners and hence should not be allowed to be filed. Mr. Mitter on behalf of the defendant and Mr. S. C. Sen appearing on behalf of the plaintiff at that time asked the Court's permission so that the other partner who was also present in the court, if necessary, could put his signature on the Terms of Settlement.

23. Both Mr. Mitter and Mr. S. C. Sen also argue that in any event, the provision of Section 19 of the Partnership Act has no application in the facts and circumstances of the case in as much as the said provision only relates to the extent of the implied powers of the partners to act on behalf of the firm. There is no provision anywhere to the effect that one partner cannot sign on behalf of the firm in referring a dispute to arbitration. Moreover, it is only the partners or those who are parties to the Suit who can agitate the point relating to the authority of one partner to bind the other in referring a dispute to arbitration. In any event, they contend that Mr. Deb's clients cannot take up the said point because they are neither parties to the Suit nor parties to the settlement nor of the said arbitration agreement. Accordingly, in so far as the signatures of the partner of the plaintiff firm on the terms of settlement as also on the arbitration agreement are concerned, the same do not suffer from any defect. I think that that is the correct way of reading the provision of Sec. 19 and accordingly, the contention of Mr. Deb on this point must be rejected.

24. Mr. Deb next argues that clause 4 of the said arbitration agreement, which has been made a part of the Terms of Settlement, if allowed to be given effect to, would be in conflict with the latest order that has been passed by this Court whereby both Keshavlal Ojha and B. B. Sinha have jointly been appointed the Special Officers in the suit filed by Mr. Deb's clients. The said clause 4 of the said arbitration agreement provides that the said joint receivers will hand over possession of the assets, books, papers and documents belonging to the defendant company "represented by Keshavlal Ojha Spl. Officer appointed in Suit No. 2029A of 1967 by order dated 18th May, 1971." It is true that clause 4 of the arbitration agreement relates to the time when the said Terms and the arbitration agreement were signed, namely, on 31st May 1971 but, in any event, the said agreement, if allowed to be put in will be in conflict with the later orders passed by this Court whereby the said consent order dated 18th May, 1971 has been stayed and the Joint Special Officers have been directed to act jointly and not singly and as such must necessarily, be entitled to the possession of such books etc. in terms of their order of appointment. I uphold the contentions of Mr. Deb on this point.

25. But the most vital objection which has been raised by Mr. Deb is that there is no petition before this court whereby the matters in suit could be referred to arbitration. If the provisions of Section 21 of the Arbitration Act, 1940 has to be taken recourse to, then there must be an application in writing before this Court. Arbitration rules have been framed in respect of the said section by this Court whereby the application must be, by way of petition. The rules framed by this Court even though they are procedural in nature are meant to be followed and in the absence of compliance of such rules under S. 21 of the Arbitration Act the Court cannot be said to have been properly moved and the court's jurisdiction to determine the Suit cannot be taken away except under the said provision.

26. Mr. Mitter realised the defect in putting in the Terms of Settlement and as such after the point was taken and in the midst of the arguments he came prepared with a petition. He now seeks to present the petition before this Court in order to entitle his clients to put in the Terms of Settlement whereby all disputes in respect of Suit No. 165 of 1970 are agreed to be referred to arbitration. The matter has been argued at great length on the basis of the Terms of Settlement which is sought to be put in by Mr. Mitter and I feel, I should not allow Mr. Mitter to present the petition at this stage in this proceeding. I hold that this Terms of Settlement cannot be filed without complying with the rules provided by this Court. This petition is accordingly not entertained and is returned.

27. On the question of the signature of B. B. Sinha Mr. Deb argues that he has not indicated in which capacity he has put his signature there. B. B. Sinha has signed the same for and on behalf of Pure Sitalpur Coal Concern Limited. Mr. Deb has also brought to my notice the date when the said B. B. Sinha has put his signature, namely, 3rd June, 1971. According to Mr. Deb, in any event, only one director cannot sign the Terms for and on behalf of the company. It must be signed by Board's resolution and in a case where there is no such Board it must have the approval of the general body of the shareholders and in a case where a Special Officer has been appointed he should sign on behalf of the company after obtaining the prior directions to that effect from the court. Mr. Deb has referred to several English decisions and also of this Court but it is not necessary to discuss them because both Mr. Mitter and Mr. S. C. Sen have admitted the principles laid down therein.

28. The last point of Mr. Deb is that the plaintiff is also in collusion and in conspiracy with Keshavlal and his group; the plaintiff in pursuance of the order dated 22nd May, 1970 made by Ghose, J., was to advance a sum of Rs. 2 lakh to the defendant company; the plaintiff failed to comply with the said order but only put in a sum of Rs. 36,000/-. Accordingly, the plaintiff has an interest to compromise the suit by appointing their own arbitrators and getting an award in their favour without complying with the order of Ghose, J., with the help of Keshavlal. It is alleged that the arbitrators are near relations of the partners of the plaintiff firm.

29. By considering all these points, in my opinion, Mr. Deb's arguments have great force behind them and as indicated above, I have no hesitation to accept them. In my opinion, the Special Officers appointed herein being Officers of the Court must obtain prior directions from the appropriate Court before they are advised to refer to arbitration the subject-matter of the dispute in a pending suit in which the company is involved and more so, when none of the directors of the company are functioning as such directors. I am further of the opinion that neither the arbitration agreement nor the Terms of Settlement have been properly signed except as indicated above and in any event the matter cannot be agreed to arbitration without a petition. Accordingly, I reject the same. There will be no order as to cost.

Companies Act (1956), Section 113

ORDER:— This application has been made by Raigarh Trading Co. Ltd. against Asiatic Oxygen Ltd. & ors., for, inter alia, delivery of 28,500 equity shares of Rs. 10/- each in the respondent Asiatic Oxygen Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as the Company) belonging to the petitioner; in the alternative for issue of duplicate certificates for the aforesaid 28,500 equity shares of Rupees 10/- each and delivery thereof to the applicant. This application has been made on a Judge's Summons dated 8th October, 1969 under Section 113 of the Companies Act, 1956.

2. In this application Surajmal Nagarmal, a partnership firm was given liberty to intervene. The said firm has also filed Affidavit. There is no dispute before me that Raigarh Trading Co. Ltd., the applicant is the registered holder of the said 28,500 equity shares of Rupees 10/- each in the Company. The only dispute before me is as to whether the Company delivered the said shares to the Petitioner. The Company alleges that the Company duly delivered the said shares to one Dinesh Chandra Sarkar representing the applicant, who in his turn delivered the said shares to M/s. Surajmal Nagarmal through Biswanath Deora as and by way of pledge for the due repayment of loans granted by Surajmal Nagarmal to the Petitioner. On the nature of affidavit evidence it is difficult to come to any conclusion as to whether the company delivered the said shares to the applicant represented by the said Dinesh Chandra Sarkar who in its turn pledged the same with Surajmal Nagarmal. For deciding the said fact this application has to be tried in evidence.

3. But, in my opinion, it is not necessary for me to try this application on evidence inasmuch as I am of the opinion that an application for delivery of shares under Section 113 of the Companies Act, 1956 does not lie. For that the Companies Act, 1956 provides for no special remedy. A suit has to be filed for that.

"(1) Every company shall, within three months after the allotment of any of its shares, debentures or debenture stock, and within two months after the application for the registration of the transfer of any such shares, debentures or debenture stock, complete and have ready for delivery the certificate, of all shares, the debentures, and the certificates of all debenture stock allotted or transferred, unless the conditions of issue of the shares, debentures or debenture stock otherwise provide.

The expression 'transfer' for the purpose of this sub-section, means a transfer duly stamped and otherwise valid, and does not include any transfer which the company is for any reason entitled to refuse to register and does not register.

(2) If default is made in complying with sub-section (1), the company, and every officer of the company who is in default, shall be punishable with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees for every day during which the default continues.

(3) If any company on which a notice has been served requiring it to make good any default in complying with the provisions of sub-section (1), fails to make good the default within ten days after the service of the notice, the Court may, on the application of the person entitled to have the certificate or the debentures delivered to him, make an order directing the company and any officer of the company to make good the default within such time as may be specified in the order; and any such order may provide that all costs of and incidental to the application shall be borne by the company or by any officer of the company responsible for the default."

4. Sub-section (1) of the said Section imposes an obligation upon the company to have ready for delivery the certificates of all shares etc. within three months after the allotment of such shares or debentures or debenture stock or within two months after application for the registration of transfer of any such shares, debentures or debenture stock in the absence of any conditions of issue of the shares, debentures or debenture stock to the contrary. Sub-section (2) of the said Section provides for levy of fine up to the limit of Rupees 500/- per day for the period during which the company fails to comply with the provisions of sub-section (1) upon the company and every officer of the company. Sub-section (3) of the said Section authorises "the person entitled to have the certificates or the debentures delivered to him to apply to Court on the failure of the Company to make good the default mentioned in sub-section (1) within 10 days after the service of a notice upon the company requiring the company to comply with the provisions of sub-section (1) of the said Section and make good the default in regard thereto. Upon such application the Court under sub-section (3) is empowered to make an order directing the company or any officer of the company to make good the default within the time mentioned in the order.

5. Section 113 of the Companies Act, 1956 is in identical terms as Section 80 of the English Companies Act of 1948. Rule 7 of the Rules of the Supreme Court (Companies) (No. 2) 1948 of England enumerates the applications which shall be made by motion. Rule 8 of the said Rules enumerates the applications which have to be made by summons. Sub-rule (i) of Rule 8 of the said Rules enumerates applications in regard to delivery of certificates or debentures under Section 80 (3) of the Act. Rule 11 (a) of our Companies (Court) Rules, 1959 sets out the applications which shall be made by petition. Rule 11 (b) of our Rules provides that all other applications under the Act or under the said Rules have to be made by a Judge's summons in the manner provided in the Rules.

6. Form of the summons for such applications under the English Rules was cited and relied upon by Mr. S. B. Mukherjee. The said forms appear in pages 1093 and 1094 of Palmer's Company Precedents, Vol. I, 17th Edition. Mr. Mukherjee contends that the words "in regard to delivery" as appearing in Rule 8 of the English Rules as well as in the form of the summons mentioned above show that sub-section (3) of Section 80 of the English Act and Section 113 of our Act really authorises a person entitled to the delivery of shares or debentures to apply for delivery of the same.

7. I am unable to accept the said contention of Mr. Mukherjee. The words "in regard to delivery" in my view mean 'for the purpose of delivery'. Sub-section (1) to Section 113 imposes an obligation upon the company to complete and to have ready for delivery the certificates of shares, debentures or debenture-stocks allotted or transferred in the circumstances and within the time mentioned above. The failure to do so, as we have noted earlier, entails, visiting with imposition of fine under sub-section (2) upon the company or any of the officer of the company who is liable for such default. Sub-section (3) of the said Section empowers the Court to make an order upon the company or any officer of the company only to make good the default in complying with the provisions of sub-section (1) to the said Section.

8. The failure to comply with the requirements of sub-section (1) to the said Section thus shall be visited with penal consequences. In that view of the matter, in my opinion, the said sub-section has to be construed strictly (See AIR 1952 SC 156; See also Maxwell on Interpretation of Statutes 11th Edition pages 254-55). The said sub-section nowhere provides for delivery of the certificates of share or debentures or debenture-stocks but only enjoins upon the company to have the same ready for delivery. The said words in the sub-section, in my opinion, should not be construed in such a way as to give an extended meaning to the words "to have them ready for delivery." The sub-s. (1) does not impose an obligation upon the Company to deliver the said shares etc. Thus, in my opinion, sub-section (3) to the said Section does not authorise a person to have an order for delivery of the said shares. In that view of the matter, in my opinion, this application is misconceived and must fail.

9. In the premises, this application is dismissed. In the facts and circumstances of this case, I do not, however, make any order as to costs.

10. Certified for Counsel as against respective clients. All interim orders shall stand vacated. Operation of the order is stayed for four weeks.

Application dismissed.

Tapash Chandra Roy, for Appellant;

Binoy Bhushan Choudhury, for Respondent.

JUDGMENT:— This is defendant-tenant's appeal against a concurrent judgment, decreeing plaintiff's suit for recovery of possession. The plaintiff's case is that he is the owner of premises No. 11-D, Monoharpukur Road and the defendant had been a tenant under him in respect of Suit No. 1 in the ground floor thereof at a rental of Rs. 75/- per month and pump charge of Rs. 5/- per month, the tenancy being according to English Calendar month. The defendant became defaulter in payment of rent from November 1966 as alleged deposits with the Rent Controller were invalid. It was alleged, that, the defendant was guilty of conduct which was a nuisance or annoyance to neighbours including the landlord as he forcibly prevented landlord's men from using a passage leading to the pump room and inspecting the reservoir of water which supplied water to seven flats of the said premises and if the pump and motor were damaged supply of water to tenants would be curtailed. It was alleged that the tenancy was duly determined by a notice to quit but as the defendant failed to vacate, the suit was instituted praying a decree for recovery of possession on eviction of the defendant therefrom on the aforesaid grounds.

2. The suit was contested by the defendant, who filed written statement denying all material allegations in the plaint. It was stated that he was not a defaulter in payment of rent as rent for November, 1966 was deposited with the Rent Controller as the landlord refused to accept rent and rent thereafter was duly deposited with the Rent Controller. As to the passage leading to the pump room, it was stated that the said passage was within his tenancy and it was also denied that he was guilty of any conduct which would amount to nuisance or annoyance as alleged. An additional written statement was filed by the defendant and it was stated that rent was tendered every month to the landlord and on his refusal it was being deposited with the Rent Controller and as such he was not a defaulter. In those circumstances it was submitted that the suit should be dismissed.

3. The suit was tried in evidence before the learned Munsif, who held that the notice determining the tenancy was valid and legal and was duly served. It was further held that the passage leading to the pump room was not a part of the defendant's tenancy and it was unthinkable that it could be used only on permission of the defendant as claimed. It was found that the defendant was guilty of causing nuisance or annoyance to the landlord and inmates of the house. The learned Munsif further found that there was no evidence to indicate that the landlord refused any Money Order in respect of rent remitted to him. The rent for October, 1966 was sent by Money Order which was duly accepted but as far as rent for November, 1966 the story of tender by the tenant was a myth. Accordingly it was held that the tenant was a defaulter from November, 1966. In those circumstances the suit was decreed for recovery of possession as also for mesne profits from Nov., 1968 to be ascertained in a proper proceeding under Order 20, Rule 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

4. An appeal was preferred against the said decision by the tenant and it was held by the appellate court, in concurrence with the trial court, that the plaintiff was never unwilling to receive rent as would also appear from Ext. 7 and other letters. The defendant's story of tender was thus a "simple falsehood" and the deposits with the Rent Controller were invalid. The defendant accordingly was held to be a defaulter. As to the other grounds of eviction it was held that the passage was not included within the tenancy of the defendant and the defendant often obstructed the work of inspecting the reservoir through the said passage. P. W. 1 the plaintiff's engineer, who inspected the reservoir, stated that if the water level fell and the pump was operated then the entire machinery would be burnt out. The appellate court held that the defendant was prone to give obstruction and such systematic obstruction amounted to nuisance or annoyance. In that view the appeal was dismissed and the trial court's order was affirmed. The present appeal is against the said decision.

5. Mr. Tapash Chandra Roy, the learned Advocate appearing for the defendant, challenged the findings of the Courts below as to the acts of nuisance and annoyance by the tenant-defendant. He referred to the evidence of P. W. 1 according to whom the obstruction to the inspection of the pump room and reservoir was done in October, 1966 and it is to be remembered that the suit was instituted on 7th November, 1968. There is no oral evidence that there was such obstruction on earlier occasions and according to Mr. Roy there was no material for the appellate court for its findings that there was systematic obstruction by the tenant which was accepted as causing annoyance and nuisance. Mr. Chakraborty the learned Advocate for the respondent referred me to the correspondence wherein the landlord has referred to systematic obstruction to inspection of pump room and reservoir. Mr. Chakraborty contended that the findings are based on materials on record and being finding of fact cannot be challenged in second appeal.

6. Clause (e) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 sets out the conduct of the tenant or person residing in the premises which is a nuisance or annoyance to neighbours including the landlord is a ground for eviction of tenant from the premises under his tenancy. Annoyance or nuisance has not been defined in the Act and accordingly it has to be understood in the normal connotation according to plain and sober notions of living. According to judicial decisions, nuisance is anything which interferes with the normal comforts of human life or endangers the health and safety of the neighbour while annoyance is wider and covers anything which reasonably troubles or disturbs the mind or pleasure not of a fanciful or skilled person but of an ordinary sensible person, though it may not amount to physical detriment or discomfort. It is not possible to lay down any rule of law applicable to every case as it will be at all times a question of fact with reference to the surrounding circumstances.

7. Undoubtedly in the facts of the present case, systematic obstruction by the tenant to inspection of pump room and reservoir, would amount both to nuisance and annoyance. On the one hand it will interfere with the normal comforts of neighbours by way of suspension or diminution of water supply, endangering even their health and comfort. On the other hand it will disturb the mind of the landlord and other inmates of the premises, with the prospect of their discomfort and possible damage or loss that may thereby be caused. This position has not been denied, as he could not, by Mr. Roy.

8. The real question for determination is whether there has been such systematic obstruction to the inspection of the pump room and reservoir by the tenant. The landlord admittedly did not accompany his engineer in such inspection and the engineer, who is P. W. 1, had complained that there had been the instance of such obstruction in October, 1968 and prior to that he inspected the pump room and reservoir. The same fact was deposed to by P. W. 3 and apart from this instance of obstruction, there is no evidence of any other obstruction, except what is contained in Ext. 7 (h), a letter which, in absence of evidence in support by the persons who usually carried the inspection, cannot be accepted as proving the systematic obstructions. A single instance of such obstruction in October, 1968, in absence of evidence of any prior obstruction, cannot, in my opinion, be accepted for holding the tenant guilty of acts of annoyance or nuisance to neighbours including the landlord. The landlord is not accordingly entitled to a decree on this ground. It may be mentioned that the finding about the passage to the pump room as not appertaining to the defendant's tenancy are findings of fact and cannot be challenged and in fact has not been challenged by Mr. Roy.

9. The next question to be considered is whether the defendant is a defaulter from November, 1966. This is undoubtedly a finding of fact and cannot be assailed in second appeal. But Mr. Roy has taken some additional grounds in view of the change of law that has taken place in the meantime. Sec. 17 (4) as it was at the time of the institution of suit is to the following effect:—

"If a tenant makes deposit or payment as required by sub-section (1), or sub-section (2) no decree or order for delivery of possession of the premises to the landlord on the ground of default in payment of rent by the tenant shall be made by the Court but the Court may allow such costs as it may deem fit to the landlord:

Provided that a tenant shall not be entitled to any relief under this sub-section if he has made default in payment of rent for four months within a period of twelve months."

10. By the West Bengal Premises Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1969 published in Calcutta Gazette of 31st October, 1969, which was deemed to have come into force on August 26, 1968 (Act 4 of 1968), a new proviso as set out hereunder was substituted in place of the above proviso—

"Provided that a tenant shall not be entitled to any relief under this sub-section, if, having obtained such relief once in respect of the premises, he has again made default in the payment of rent for four months within a period of twelve months."

Further in sub-section (4), in place of words "sub-section (2) or sub-section (2-A)" were substituted. After the amendment, a default for four months or more would thus be curable on compliance of the provisions of sub-sections (1), (2) and (2-A) of Section 17 of the Act as the said amendments were made applicable to pending suits including appeals. Mr. Roy drew my attention to an application filed on December 9, 1968 by the defendant in the suit within the time prescribed in which it was stated that the defendant had deposited rent upto November, 1968 and the rent was "now" payable from December 1968 together with the pump charges. In these circumstances it was prayed that the court would be pleased to pass an order for permission to deposit the monthly rent from December 1968 onwards in this Court and there was further prayer to the effect that the Court may "pass such other or further order or orders as your honour may deem fit and proper." This application was disposed of ex parte and such permission was given and the amount equivalent to rent from December 1968 onwards was being deposited in the suit. Mr. Roy contended that the said application though filed under Section 17 (1) of the Act as stated in its title should have been treated as one under Section 17 (2) of the Act and disposed of in accordance with law. In support of this contention reliance was placed on the decision in Gunwantrao v. Satyanarayan, (1971) 75 Cal WN 372 in which this Court considered the tests by which an application though purported to have been made under Section 17 (1), could be treated as one under Section 17 (2). According to Mr. Roy the tests laid down in the said decision were satisfied in this instant case. It was accordingly contended that if the application is treated as one under Section 17 (2), the trial court would have determined the amount of rent to be deposited in court or paid to the landlord fixing the time within which the amount should be deposited or paid, so that the defaults if any, could be cured and the tenant could be entitled to relief against a decree for possession. Mr. Chakraborty has disputed the above contention firstly because according to him there was nowhere in the four corners of the petition any dispute as to the amount of rent payable, which was a sine qua non of an application under Section 17 (2) and the same view was taken in the decision stated above. Mr. Chakraborty further contended that the dispute to be raised must be a bona fide dispute while in the present case even in the additional written statement the tenant made a statement that he tendered rent every month prior to deposit with the Rent Controller. This case of tender was found by the courts below to be a myth and there was really no bona fide dispute in this respect. Reliance was placed in the decision of Tarak Nath v. Lt. Col. Karuna Kumar Chatterjee, (1958) 62 Cal WN 830 at p. 836, where it was held that only bona fide dispute come under Section 17 (2) and mere raising a dispute will not attract the provisions of the section. Reliance was also placed in G. P. Press v. Naraindas, (1960) 64 Cal WN 157 at p. 161 in support. Mr. Chakraborty further contended that issue now raised would be a mixed question of law and fact, and not taken in the courts below, and cannot be taken for the first time in this court and he referred me to the decision in Krishnapasuba v. Dattatraya Krishnaji, AIR 1966 SC 1024 which supported the above contention.

11. In view of the change of law which has taken effect after the decision of the lower appellate Court and has been given retrospective effect, an issue when it does not involve any question of fact, may in any event be taken even for the first time in this Court. The point for my consideration is whether the application filed on December 9, 1968 could be taken as an application under Section 17 (2). Mr. Chakraborty contended that there was no dispute involved or raised in the application and such dispute, as I have already stated, even if it was there, was not according to the plaintiff, bona fide. As to the bona fides of the dispute, it appears from written statement that the defendant claimed that he was not a defaulter as alleged in the plaint in view of the deposits of rent made by him with the Rent Controller which according to the plaintiff were illegal deposits. There can thus be no doubt that the defendant by his denial in the said application that he was not a defaulter raised a dispute on the question of default. It appears also that such dispute was bona fide as in view of the deposits made with the Rent Controller of which there is no dispute, the defendant's case was that he was not a defaulter while according to the plaintiff such deposits were invalid in law. The defendant tried to validate the deposits by a story of prior tender which was disbelieved by the Courts. But that story related to the question of validity of deposit and not to the deposits themselves which according to the defendant would disprove the plaintiff's case of default and would also require consideration in determining the amount to be deposited in court or paid to the plaintiff by the defendant.

12. As to the point whether the petition should be treated as one under Section 17 (2), it is necessary to refer to some rulings of this Court.

13. In Smt. Parameswari Debi v. Nandalal, C. R. 3340 of 1966, D/-20-2-67 (Cal), it was held that though the petition in the said proceedings was stated to be one under Section 17 (1) asking for permission to deposit at the rate of rent paid, it was in substance one under Section 17 (2). Further even though in the petition it was not stated that there was any dispute, as a matter of fact there was a dispute, as according to the defendant the deposits were to be made at the rate of Rupees 250/- per month, while according to the plaintiff the rate was Rs. 550/- per month. Further there was the omnibus prayer of the nature referred to in the case of Gunwantral (1971) 75 Cal WN 372. The Court held that the application was intended to be one under Section 17 (2) and the petition contained prayer for a direction from court regarding the amount payable and the trial court should have treated it as such. In Gunwantral's case, the court did not accept the application as being in substance one under Section 17 (2), as the said application was merely one for deposit and there was no omnibus prayer to the court for passing such other or further orders as would be deemed fit and proper. In the present case against the background of the plaint case that the defendant was a defaulter, there was a positive statement that all rent from November, 1966 had been duly deposited with the Rent Controller. There was thus a dispute implicit in the said application which was raised by the defendant and by the omnibus prayer the defendant impliedly prayed for determining the amount of rent payable as was pointed out in the said decision. The trial court accordingly erred in not passing appropriate orders on the said application before passing a decree on ground of default and the appellate court also erred in confirming the said decree which thus cannot be sustained.

14. In the result, this appeal succeeds and is allowed without any order as to costs in this Court. The judgments and decrees of the courts below are set aside. The case is now sent back to the trial court for disposal of the suit in accordance with law, taking into consideration the ground of default now available to the plaintiff, in view of my decision that on the other ground relating to nuisance and annoyance the plaintiff is entitled to no relief. The trial court will first take up the application filed by the defendant on Dec. 9, 1968 treating it as one under sub-section (2) of Section 17 of the Act and will dispose of the said application as also the suit in accordance with the provisions of sub-sections (3) and (4) of Section 17 of the Act.

15. Let the matter be disposed of as expeditiously as possible and let the records be sent down at once.

Appeal allowed.

ORDER:— This is an application, inter alia, for, reconsideration of an order passed by me on August 26, 1970 under Section 17 (3) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956, hereinafter referred to as the Act directing the striking out of the defence of the petitioner so far as delivery of the possession of the premises in suit was concerned. The said order was passed by me under Section 17 (3) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 on the ground that the defendant had failed to pay the landlord or deposit either in Court or with the Rent Controller an amount equivalent to the rent in respect of the six tenancies mentioned in the plaint for the month of May 1969, that is, a period after the institution of the suit.

2. On March 6, 1969, the suit was filed by the plaintiff against the defendants for recovery of possession of the premises in suit which were the subject-matter of six different tenancies. The Writ of Summons was served on the defendants on April 7, 1969. The defendants entered appearance and filed written statement on or about May 5, 1969. On February 28, 1969 an application was made by the plaintiff in this suit, inter alia, for striking out the defence of the defendants so far as the recovery of possession was concerned on grounds of various defaults made in payment or deposit of rent mentioned in the petition filed in the said proceeding. After hearing the said application I held that the defendant No. 2 had defaulted in paying or depositing an amount equivalent to rent in respect of the tenancies which are the subject-matter of the suit for the month of May 1969. In that view of the matter, I directed the defence so far as recovery of possession was concerned in the suit to be struck out as mentioned earlier. This application, is made in the inherent jurisdiction of this Court to reconsider and recall the said order and rehear the said application on merit.

3. The defendant No. 2 who is the petitioner in the instant application alleges that in fact there was no default in payment or deposit of rent in accordance with the provisions of the statute in respect of the said tenancies for the month of May, 1969. The petitioner has stated that the petitioner through one Govindlal Das on or about June 10, 1969 tendered to the landlord through one of its Directors, Durga Prosad More a total sum of Rs. 537.28 p. In respect of the six tenancies of the defendant at premises No. 97, Vivekananda Road, Calcutta "on account of rent and/or amount calculated at the rate of rent for the month of May 1969". Durga Prosad More refused to accept the said sum tendered to him in cash, as stated in sub-paragraph (i) of paragraph 13 of the petition in the instant application. In sub-paragraph (ii) of the said paragraph it is stated "upon such refusal to accept the rent so tendered" Mr. Das went to the Beadon Street Post Office and remitted the said total sum of Rs. 537.28 p. by Money Order to the landlord.

4. The post office obviously as the agent of the petitioner duly tendered the said sums to the landlord. On June 12, 1969 the landlord refused to accept the said sums so tendered. The petitioner received back the Money Order in respect of the said six tenancies on June 16 and 17, 1969. On June 20, 1969, the said sum of Rs. 537.28 P. in respect of the said six tenancies were duly deposited with the Rent Controller in accordance with the provisions of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956. Mr. Bhabra submitted that the said sum of Rs. 537.28 P. was tendered to Durga Prosad More as the Director of the landlord and was wrongfully refused to be accepted by the said Durga Prosad More as such landlord. Thus there was payment of the said sum to the landlord as contemplated by Section 17 (1) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956. Secondly, Mr. Bhabra submitted that even if the said tender be deemed not to be payment to the landlord as contemplated by Section 17 (1) of said Act, the said sums were deposited within the time mentioned in proviso to Section 22 (1) of the said Act. According to Mr. Bhabra, the petitioner had 15 days under proviso to sub-section (1) of Section 22 of the said Act to deposit the money with the Rent Controller from the respective dates when he had received back the Money Order remitted by him.

5. It is to be noticed that Section 17 (1) of the Act contemplates payment to the landlord or deposit in Court or with the Rent Controller; it does not mention the word "tender". Section 38 of the Indian Contract Act enunciates the law of tender in India. Section 38 of the Indian Contract Act is set out hereunder:—

"38. Where a promisor has made an offer or performance to the promisee, and the offer has not been accepted, the promisor is not responsible for non-performance, nor does he thereby lose his rights under the contract.

Every such offer must fulfil the following conditions:

(1) It must be unconditional.

(2) It must be made at a proper time and place, and under such circumstances that the person to whom it is made may have a reasonable opportunity of ascertaining that the person by whom it is made is able and willing there and then, to do the whole of what he is bound by his promise to do.

(3) If the offer is an offer to deliver anything to the promisee, the promisee must have a reasonable opportunity of seeing that the thing offered is the thing which the promisor is bound by his promise to deliver.

An offer to one of several joint promisees has the same legal consequences as an offer to all of them."

It is clear, therefore, from the said section that it discharges a promisor from performing his promise and keeps intact his rights under the contract where the promisor offers to perform unconditionally the promise to the promisee and is prevented by him from doing so. According to Mr. Bhabra as soon as the tenant tendered the rent to the landlord as stated in paragraph 13 (i) of the petition herein and such rent was refused to be accepted by the landlord, the tenant was absolved from all liabilities or obligations under Section 17 (1) of the said Act. Mr. Bhabra relied on the case of Jagat Tarini Dasi v. Nabagopal Chaki, (1907) 5 Cal LJ 270, wherein it was held as follows:—

"Now it is well settled, that while a tender does not extinguish the indebtedness, a valid tender which is kept good stops the running of interest after the tender; see Gyles v. Hall, (1726-2 P. Wms. 378); Wallace v. McConnell, 1839-13 Peters (US) 136 and Bissel v. Heyward, (1877-8 Otto (US) 580). "It was argued, however, that this rule is not applicable to cases under the Bengal Tenancy Act, and that in order to stop interest, a tenant must prove, that after improper refusal of a tender validly made, he deposited the amount due in Court under the provisions of Section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

In support of this position, reliance was placed upon the decision of this Court in Rangit Singha v. Bhagabutti Charan, (1900-7 Cal WN 720). It may be conceded, that there are observations in that judgment which lend some apparent support to the contention of the respondent; but upon closer examination of the facts of the case, which we have ascertained from the records, it appears to be clearly distinguishable. There it was alleged that rent had been tendered and improperly refused, and upon this basis alone, it was contended that interest would cease to accrue from the date of the tender. There was not the remotest suggestion, nor any proof whatever, that the tender had been kept good. Under these circumstances, the learned Judges held that the tenant could not successfully claim to be relieved of his liability to pay interest, unless he proved a deposit under Section 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Judges did not lay down, that even if it was established, that not only had a valid tender been made, but also that it had been kept good, the tenant would continue to be liable for interest until such time as he could make a deposit under Section 61 of the Act. In the first place, such a view would be totally opposed to the well established principle, that a valid tender which is kept good stops the running of interest. (See the judgment of Wilde, C. J. in Dixon v. Clark, (1848-5 CB 365). The principle of the plea of tender is, to use the language of Mr. Justice Clifford in Colby v. Reed, (1878-9 Otto (US) 560) that the defendant has always been ready to perform the contract, and that he did perform it as far as he was able, by tendering the requisite money, the plaintiff himself having prevented a complete performance by his refusal to accept the tender (See also Bullen and Leake on Precedents of Pleadings, 3rd Ed. p. 693). That principle is substantially embodied in Section 38 of the Indian Contract Act, and was recognised by the Judicial Committee in Buta v. Municipal Committee of Lahore, (1900 ILR 29 Cal 854)."

6. Mr. Bhabra also cited (1913) 18 Ind Cas 442 (Cal) which follows the aforesaid decision in (1907) 5 Cal LJ 270. Mr. Bhabra then cited the case of Gopal Banerjee v. Manindra Nath Dey, (1966) 70 Cal. WN 864 and contended that the penal consequence visiting upon a default in payment or deposit of rent or money equivalent to rent in terms of Section 17 (1) of the said Act should be construed strictly and where there is any doubt as to whether the default has taken place or not the section should be construed in favour of the tenant for whose benefit the said West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act was enacted. Thus in the instant case a liberal construction should be given to the word 'pay' in Section 17 (1) and where there has been a valid tender by the tenant the same should be held to have satisfied the requirements of payment contemplated by the said section.

7. Mr. Kapoor on the other hand contended that tender of rent to be effective and binding must be followed by deposit either in Court or with the Rent Controller in strict compliance with the provision of Section 17 (1) of the Act to enable the tenant to get the benefit of Section 17 (4) of the said Act. Mr. Kapoor relied on the case of Dinanath Mondal v. Fatik Chand Seal, (1966) 70 Cal WN 1086. Mr. Kapoor further contended that Sections 21 and 22 of the said Act are not applicable to cases of deposit with the Rent Controller under Section 17 (1) of the said Act and thus rent or amount equivalent to rent if deposited with the Rent Controller has to be deposited within 15th of the month following that for which rent was deposited in accordance with the provision of Section 17 (1) of the said Act. Mr. Kapoor relied on the Special Bench case of Siddheshwar v. Prokash, 68 Cal WN 30 = (AIR 1964 Cal 105) (SB). In order to appreciate the contentions of Mr. Kapoor on this point the relevant portions of Sections 21 and 22 of the said Act are set out hereunder:—

"21. Deposit of rent by the tenant.—

(1) Where the landlord does not accept any rent tendered by the tenant within the time referred to in Section 4 or where there is a bona fide doubt as to the person or persons to whom the rent is payable, the tenant may deposit such rent with the Controller in the prescribed manner.

(Provided that where any rent is remitted by the tenant to the landlord by postal money order, the date of issue of the postal money order shall for the purposes of this sub-section, be deemed to be the date of tender of such rent by the tenant to the landlord.)

(2) The deposit shall be accompanied by an application supported by an affidavit by the tenant stating—

(a) the premises for which the rent is deposited with the description sufficient for identifying the premises;

(b) the period for which the rent is deposited;

(c) the name and address of the landlord, or the person or persons claiming to be entitled to such rent;

(d) the reasons and circumstances for the application for deposit of the rent;

Provided that in the case of deposits of rent for successive months during any continuous period, no affidavit in support of application shall be required after the first deposit if the reasons and circumstances which led the tenant to make the first deposit remain the same.

22. Time-limit for making deposit and consequence of incorrect particulars in application for deposit—

(1) No rent deposited under Section 21 shall be considered to have been validly deposited under that section for purposes of clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 13, unless deposited within fifteen days of the time fixed by the contract in writing for payment of the rent or, in the absence of such contract in writing, unless deposited within the last day of the month following that for which the rent was payable.

Provided that where any rent remitted to the landlord by postal money order within the time referred to in Section 4 is returned to the tenant by the postal authorities as undelivered either on account of the landlord having refused to accept payment thereof or for any other cause such rent may also be validly deposited for the purposes of the said clause within 15 days from the date on which it is so returned to the tenant.

(2) No such deposit shall be considered to have been validly made for the purposes of the said clause if the tenant wilfully or negligently makes any false statement in his application for depositing the rent, unless the landlord has withdrawn the amount deposited before the date of institution of a suit or proceeding for recovery of possession of the premises from the tenant.

(3) If the rent is deposited within the time mentioned in sub-section (1), and does not cease to be a valid deposit for the reason mentioned in sub-section (2), the deposit shall constitute payment of rent to the landlord as if the amount deposited has been valid legal tender of rent if tendered to the landlord on the date fixed by the contract, or, in the absence of any contract, on the fifteenth day of the month next following that for which rent is payable."

In the said case of 68 Cal WN 30 = (AIR 1964 Cal 105) (SB) Sidheswar v.

Prokash it was held that deposit of rent in terms of Section 21 of the said Act which is deemed to constitute payment of rent to landlord under sub-section (3) of Section 22 of the said Act is not equivalent to payment of rent contemplated in Section 17 (1) of the said Act. Section 17 (1) of the said Act is set out hereunder:—

"17 (1). On a suit or proceeding being instituted by the landlord on any of the grounds referred to in Section 13, the tenant (shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section (2), within one month) of the service of the writ of summons of him (or where he appears in the suit or proceeding without the writ of summons being served on him, within one month of his appearance) (deposit in Court or with the Controller or pay to the landlord) an amount calculated at the rate of rent at which it was last paid, for the period for which the tenant may have made default including the period subsequent thereto upto the end of the month previous to that in which the deposit or payment is made together with interest on such amount calculated at the rate of eight and one-third per cent. per annum from the date when any such amount was payable upto the date of deposit, and shall thereafter continue to deposit or pay, month by month, by the 15th of each succeeding month, a sum equivalent to the rent at that rate."

Sections 21 and 22 appear under Chapter IV of the said Act which is headed "deposit of rent". Section 17 on the other hand does not contemplate payment or deposit of rent but of a sum or amount equivalent to rent. Thus the character of the money that is paid or deposited under Section 17 (1) is undefined whereas the character of money deposited under Section 21 of the Act is defined and fixed as rent. Section 21 contemplates deposit of rent for the purposes of Section 13 (1) of the Act. In the case of Kaluram v. Baidyanath, AIR 1965 SC 1909, Sections 17, 21 and 22 of the said Act were considered. It was held that the scheme of Section 17 (1) is a complete scheme by itself; the Legislature intended that in suits or proceedings to which Section 17 (1) applied payment of rent by the tenant to the landlord must be made as prescribed by Section 17 (1). Section 17 (1) was enacted for the purpose of controlling the relationship between the landlord and the tenant in the manner prescribed by the said Section after a suit or proceeding for ejectment was instituted and the other provisions of the said Act namely Sections 21 or 22 could not control or govern the provisions of Section 17 (1). I am of the opinion therefore that deposit of rent even with the Rent Controller as introduced by amendment in Section 17 (1) after the decision of the said case of AIR 1965 SC 1909 by the Supreme Court and the said case of 68 Cal WN 30 = (AIR 1964 Cal 105) (SB) by the Special Bench of this Court has, not altered the position in any respect. The deposit in terms of Section 17 (1) with the Rent Controller must be made within the time mentioned in the said sub-section. The time will not be extended by operation of other sections like 21 or 22 of the said Act. In that view of the matter, I am of the opinion that although the fact of tender of rent and refusal of the landlord to accept the same in respect of month of May 1969 was not expressly brought to my notice, at the time of hearing of the previous application, the same even if brought to my notice, could not have changed my decision in the said application.

8. Section 17 of the Act has been enacted not only for the benefit or protection of the tenant but in my opinion for the benefit and protection of the landlord as well. Although a default in payment or deposit of an amount equivalent to rent in accordance with the provisions of the sub-section (1) of Section 17 shall be visited with striking out of the defence of the tenant so far as recovery of possession of the premises is concerned, that will not entitle the Court to put a liberal construction on the word 'payment' used in the said sub-section. The principle of tender which in my opinion is a principle of the law of contract between parties cannot be made applicable to and included in the word 'payment' in Section 17 (1) of the said Act. The obligation to pay an amount equivalent to rent or deposit the same within the time mentioned in the said sub-section is a statutory obligation and cannot be governed or modified by applying thereto the contractual principles of tender. In my opinion, literary meaning must be given to the word 'pay' in the said sub-section which will mean that the payment must be actual delivery of or parting with money physically.

9. In any event in my opinion, however, construction of the word 'pay' in Section 17 (1) is not of any importance for deciding the instant application.

10. As noted earlier although in paragraph 13 (i), the petitioner said that the petitioners through Mr. Das tendered to Durga Prosad More the said total sum of Rs. 587.38 P. as "rent and or amount equivalent to rent," in sub-paragraph (ii) of the said paragraph, the petitioner himself has stated that what he tendered through Mr. Das was rent which was refused to be accepted by the landlord. On the basis of affidavit evidence, it is clear therefore that the petitioner intended to tender and in fact tendered rent to the landlord. The landlord certainly was not obliged to accept any rent after institution of the suit and service of the notice to quit. That being so, it was not a valid tender. In my opinion, the landlord was justified in refusing to accept the same. For the aforesaid reasons, the application must fail. In my opinion, there is no new reason for which I should recall the order passed by me and reconsider my decision.

11. In the premises, this application is dismissed with costs.

12. The operation of this order shall remain stayed for eight weeks.

Application dismissed.

ANIL KUMAR SEN, J.

Gostha Behari Ghose, Petitioner v. University of Calcutta, Respondent.

C. R. No. 1746 (w) of 1969; D/- 6-8-1971.

(A) Calcutta University Act (2 of 1966), Section 58 — First Statutes under (1968), Statute 100 (1), Proviso — Where a trust managing a college is registered after the commencement of the Statutes, the trust would be deemed to have been 'created' after such commencement notwithstanding execution of the trust prior to such commencement and the terms and conditions of such trust will require the approval of the Syndicate of the University. Consequently, in absence of such approval, the terms and conditions of the trust relating to constitution of the governing body of the College will not be operative and the governing body will have to be reconstituted in terms of Statute 93.

N. C. Chakravarti, Santinath Mukherji, and Satyajit Banerji, for Petitioner; G. P. Kar and B. K. Dutta (for Nos. 1 to 4); A. D. Mukherji, and M. M. Mullick (for Nos. 5, 6, 7, 10, 12, 13 and 14), for Respondents.

ORDER:— This Rule was issued on a Writ petition. The dispute involved is one over reconstitution of the governing body of Nandalal Ghose B. T. College on the enforcement of the Calcutta University First Statutes, 1966 (SC) (hereinafter referred to as the First Statutes).

2. The first two petitioners are the shebaitis of Sri Sri Lakhi Janardan Thakur. By a deed dated May 17, 1968 they conveyed certain lands and a two storied building to petitioners 3 to 5 and respondents 5 and 9 as trustees for setting up a B. T. College to be named after late Nandalal Ghose, the father and grandfather of the petitioners 1 and 2 respectively. Under the said deed the settlees were constituted members of a provisional committee who would establish the college contemplated by the trust. But the deed further provided that after such establishment the committee or the governing body of the college would be formed according to law, rules and regulations of the University of Calcutta for the management of the said college. In such committee, however, a settlor or one of their successors will be a life member and further a settlor or settlors' successors will nominate one local member.

3. The settlees established a college. On March 26, 1968 they applied to the University authorities for affiliation of the said college from the academic session 1968-69. On a report submitted after enquiries by Sri K. K. Mukherjee and Sri A. C. Banerjee the Calcutta University Syndicate by a resolution dated July 5, 1968 granted affiliation subject however to the implementation of certain conditions set out in the enquiry report. On such affiliation the college was run from the beginning of the academic year 1968-69.

4. By an appropriate notification issued under Section 58 (4) of the Calcutta University Act, 1966 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act) the State Government brought into force the First Statutes, the First Ordinances and the First Regulations framed by the Vice Chancellor under Section 58 (2) of the said Act with effect from September 18, 1968. Chapter 7 of the First Statutes provides for constitution, powers and functions of the governing bodies of colleges and the tenure of its members. Two Statutes 93 and 100 are relevant for our present purpose and they are set out hereunder:—

93. (1) Save as otherwise provided in Statute 100 the Governing Body of a college shall consist of the following members, namely:—

(a) the Principal of the college, who shall be the Secretary of the Governing Body, ex-officio;

(b) two members to be elected from amongst themselves by the whole-time teachers of the college at a meeting to be convened for the purpose by the Principal of the college and presided over by him;

(c) in the case of a college receiving recurring financial aid from the State Government, one member to be nominated by the State Government;

(d) three members to be nominated by the Syndicate of whom at least one shall be a woman in the case of a Women's College or a co-educational college;

(e) besides the members, if any, required to be included in the Governing Body of the college under the terms and conditions of any donation to the college, such other members, being representatives of the donors of the college to whose donations no such condition is attached, as may be chosen in the following manner, that is to say,—

(i) where the number of such donors exceeds five, two members, and

(ii) where the number of such donors does not exceed five, one member, to be elected by such donors by postal ballot:

Provided that after the commencement of these Statutes, no condition shall be attached to any donation to a college requiring representation in the Governing Body of the college, and Provided further that no teacher or salaried employee of the college who is a donor shall be entitled to be so elected.

(2) The members of a Governing Body as stated under paragraph (1) shall, at their first meeting, elect a person as the President of the Governing Body and such President may or may not be elected from amongst such members.

(3) The names of all persons elected or nominated as members or the President of every Governing Body shall be reported by the Principal of the college to the University.

(4) All disputes about the election or nomination of the members or the President of every Governing Body shall be referred to the Syndicate and its decision thereon shall be final.

100. (1) In the case of a college managed by any Trust or Registered Society or under a scheme laid down by a competent court, the constitution of the Governing Body shall in so far as the terms and conditions of such Trust, Articles and Memorandum of Association of such registered Society or such scheme, as the case may be, so require, continue as such:

Provided that, after the commencement of these Statutes, the terms and conditions of any such Trust, the Articles and Memorandum of Association of any such Society or any such scheme shall require the approval of the Syndicate before such Trust is created, such Society is registered or such scheme is submitted to the court.

(2) The provisions of Statutes 94 to 99 shall apply to a college referred to in paragraph (1), in so far as such provisions are not inconsistent, as the case may be, with the terms and conditions of the Trust, the Articles and Memorandum of Association of the Registered Society or the scheme concerned.

5. On October 31, 1968 Sri A. C. Banerjee, the Inspector of Colleges issued a circular to all heads of affiliated colleges including the petitioners' college requesting the college authorities to reconstitute their respective governing bodies in accordance with First Statutes and report the same to the University for approval on or before December 31, 1968. According to the petitioners there having been material mistakes in the original trust deed dated May 17, 1968 and the trustees having met with difficulties in acting upon the same, it was decided to amend the trust deed dated May 17, 1968

(hereinafter referred to as the earlier deed). Further according to the petitioners in furtherance of the said decision by a deed of modification dated September 5, 1968 (hereinafter referred to as the later deed) the earlier trust was amended. It is not in dispute that such amendment was in material particulars including exclusion of certain plots originally conveyed and inclusion of some new plots. That apart, there was material alteration regarding the provision as to the constitution of the governing body. While the earlier deed provided that such governing body should be constituted according to rules and regulations of the University of Calcutta subject only to there being two representatives of the settlors, the later deed provided for a Trust Board which would control, manage and administer the college. Such Board shall consist of ten members, five of whom would be permanent. The permanent members would be two shebait, the settlors or their successors and three others nominated in the deed itself to be succeeded on their death or relinquishment of office by person or persons to be nominated by the senior shebait. The five non-permanent members are the principal, two representatives of the teachers, two persons interested in education selected by the permanent members. The deed further provided that the permanent members shall have power to co-opt two other members in the interest of the college. This later deed though alleged to have been executed on September 5, 1968 was not registered until December 31, 1968 and there is a serious dispute between the parties on its bona fides and the actual date of its execution. According to the respondents this later deed was executed long after September 18, 1968 when the First Statutes came into effect and was antedated only to defeat the provisions of Statute 93 thereof.

6. On December 31, 1968 the petitioner No. 4 wrote a letter to the University informing it about the amendment of the trust and therewith forwarded a copy of the later deed. On February 25, 1969 Sri A. C. Banerjee, Inspector of Colleges wrote a letter to the college authorities informing them that the later deed was placed before the college committee of the University on January 14, 1969 for consideration when the said committee adopted the following resolution:

1. Resolved that the committee regrets that the trust deed cannot be approved as it was registered on 31-12-1968.

2. That the Secretary be requested to reconstitute the governing body of the college in accordance with First Statute 93 framed under the Calcutta University Act, 1966 without further delay."

The petitioners now before this court however claim that they had no knowledge about this letter which was suppressed by the Principal, respondent No. 5 until the last week of April, 1969.

7. On the basis of the aforesaid letter dated February 25, 1969 of the University the governing body was reconstituted all between the Principal and the President of the existing governing body, respondents 5 and 10 respectively. It was so reconstituted with respondent No. 5, the Principal, respondents 6 and 7 as teachers' representatives and the petitioner No. 2 as the donors' representative. Respondent No. 10 by two letters dated April 25 and May 6, 1969 forwarded the names of the members of the reconstituted governing body to the University and the University on its part on May 13, 1969 nominated respondents 12, 13, and 14 as the University's nominees to the governing body. The governing body so reconstituted was approved by the University on May 26, 1969 and it is claimed that on May 25, 1969 at the first sitting the newly constituted managing committee elected respondent No. 10 to be the President of the committee. The petitioners to this court disown all knowledge of these facts about reconstitution at all material times except a notice to the petitioner No. 2 of the first sitting of the reconstituted managing committee on receipt whereof he lodged a strong protest with the University authorities and then moved this court on May 28, 1969 and obtained the above Rule.

8. On the Writ petition as it now stands on the amendment allowed by this court, the present petitioners are disputing the reconstitution of the governing body effected in the manner set out hereinbefore under the First Statutes on twofold grounds. In the first place, the petitioners claim that they come within the purview of Statute 100 and as such the Trust Board as provided in the later deed should be the governing body and reconstitution of the governing body under Statute 93 is unauthorised. Secondly, it is claimed by them in the alternative that the reconstitution was not made in accordance with Statute 93 but was made irregularly really by the respondent No. 5 to suit his own interest by suppressing material facts from the existing governing body and particularly the petitioners to this court. Strong reliance is placed on a letter dated May 16, 1969 of the respondent No. 10 to the Inspector of Colleges. In this letter the respondent No. 10 clearly acknowledged that the reconstitution was not constitutionally effected by the existing governing body and that his earlier letter dated May 6, 1969 was initiated in an irregular manner. On the claim as aforesaid the petitioners have prayed for an appropriate mandate upon the respondents directing them not to give effect to the disapproval of the trust dated 5-9-1968 as conveyed by the Inspector of Colleges by his memo dated February 25, 1969, not to give effect to the reconstitution dated May 26, 1969 and to accept the deed dated September 5, 1968. There is also a prayer for an appropriate mandate directing the members of the reconstituted governing body to forbear from acting as such.

9. Two sets of the respondents are contesting this Rule. The first set consists of the University, The Vice Chancellor, The Inspector of Colleges and the Deputy Inspector of Colleges being respondents 1 to 4. Two affidavits have been filed on their behalf respectively on September 23, 1970 and April 7, 1971. According to them as already indicated hereinbefore the later deed is not a bona fide one. It was an antedated deed created only for the purpose of avoiding Statute 93 of the First Statutes and as such the University had lawfully rejected the same. They further claim that the University being informed of the reconstitution by the President of the existing governing body under the material clauses of Statute 93 the University forwarded its own nominees to the governing body and the governing body so reconstituted was constituted in accordance with law. In this view the said respondents are strongly contesting the claim of the petitioners.

10. This Rule is being contested by respondents 5, 6, 7, 10, 12 and 13. An affidavit has been filed on their behalf but in substance it reads as an affidavit of respondent No. 5. It has been sworn by the said respondent No. 5 on November 14, 1970. There is a further affidavit by the said respondent no. 5 filed on March 30, 1971. In these affidavits, it is also claimed that the later deed is not a bona fide one. That the reconstitution under Statute 93 was lawfully made. It is, however, not disputed by these respondents that such reconstitution was effected between the Principal and the President, respondents 5 and 10 and not by the existing governing body. Although it is claimed that it was so done to the knowledge of all the petitioners to this Court, it is however clear that such reconstitution was not sponsored by the existing governing body or its Secretary nor was it approved by such a governing body. On these allegations these respondents too are contesting the claim of the petitioners.

11. Mr. Chakraborty appearing in support of this Rule has first contended that the University authorities misconceived the legal position in not approving the deed of modification dated September 5, 1968 on the ground that it was registered on December 31, 1968. It is only on such misconception the said authorities proceeded to consider that Statute 100 has got no application and that the governing body is to be reconstituted under Statute 93. According to Mr. Chakraborty the University authorities lost sight of the provisions of Section 47 of the Registration Act by virtue of the provisions whereof notwithstanding registration on a later date the said deed is to take effect from the date of its execution viz., September 5, 1968 and thus bring it within the purview of Statute 100. In my view, however, there are two impediments to the acceptance of this contention of Mr. Chakraborty notwithstanding the provisions of Section 47 of the Registration Act.

12. In the first place, under the proviso to Statute 100, if a trust within the meaning of Statute 100 (1) is to be created after commencement of these statutes, the terms and conditions of such trust shall require a prior approval of the Syndicate. Otherwise such a trust does not have the benefit of the said Statute. On the facts of the present case therefore the question that arises for consideration is as to when was the trust created. Even if by virtue of Section 47 of the Registration Act the deed is given a retrospective effect from the date of execution still can it be said to have been created on a retrospective date. In my view Mr. Mukherjee is right in his contention that when both execution and registration are necessary ingredients to the creation of the trust, the trust is not created until both the requirements are fulfilled. The term 'create' in this proviso bears the meaning of bringing into legal existence. For so doing registration is an essential requirement. Therefore, when one registers such a deed and thus completes the creation on a date subsequent to the commencement of these statutes the proviso comes into play and a prior approval of the Syndicade becomes a legal necessity. Section 47 of the Registration Act might give a retrospective effect to the trust but that does not derogate from the position that the trust itself was created on the date it is registered.

13. Incidentally, Mr. Saktinath Mukherjee who followed Mr. Chakraborty to give replies contended with reference to the provisions of the Sections 1 and 5 of the Indian Trusts Act that the endowment being a charitable one no registration whatsoever is at all necessary in the present case. But in my view, this contention is not well founded. It is quite clear on the settlement itself that the settlors transferred immovable properties of the value of more than hundred rupees in favour of named trustees who are to hold it for a specific purpose of charity. An endowment so created attracts 17 of the Registration Act and the deed does not become operative unless it is registered. This view appears to follow by implication from the decision of this court in the case of Bhupati Nath v. Basanta, 40 Cal WN 1320 = (AIR 1936 Cal 556).

14. The next difficulty for Mr. Chakraborty lies in the fact that on the pleadings the true date of execution of the deed of modification is seriously disputed. While according to the petitioners it was executed on September 5, 1968, according to the respondents it was not executed till after September 18, 1968 but was antedated in order to defeat the provisions of Statute 93. In my view, such a dispute cannot appropriately be decided in a summary proceeding like the present one and on the materials now before me. While to support their own case the petitioners rely on the document and an affidavit in support thereof, the respondents on the other hand, refer to certain circumstances including some intrinsic to the document itself which may raise a strong suspicion that the document was not executed on the date it bears. My attention has been drawn to the fact that this deed of modification was executed on a stamped paper purchased by one Tara-pada Sur on February 6, 1968 i. e. on a date even prior to the original deed. Next my attention has been drawn to the admitted position that notwithstanding the circular of the University dated October 31, 1968 this deed of modification was not brought to the notice of the University authorities on any date prior to December 31, 1968. Inordinate and unexplained delay in the matter of registration had also been a matter of adverse comments by the learned Advocates for the respondents. Petitioners' claim that later deed was duly acted upon by the parties since September 1968 has strongly been denied by the respondents and there is no evidence of its corroboration; as pointed out earlier such deed was not disclosed to the University or its authorities before 31-12-1968 and there is no evidence that the University ever accepted such a deed or acted upon its terms. No doubt my attention has been drawn by Mr. Chakraborty to two resolutions dated July, 6, 1968 and September 15, 1968 made annexures 'A' and 'B' to the affidavit-in-reply filed on February 18, 1971 but I am unable to place any reliance upon those two documents as, in my view, on the importance of these documents they ought to have been disclosed in the original petition and not in the affidavit-in-reply. On this evidence only and in view of the complicated nature of dispute raised on facts it is not possible for me in this summary proceeding to find out what is the true date of execution of this deed of modification. As Mr. Chakraborty's contention rests entirely on an assumption that this deed was executed on a date prior to September 18, 1968 but registered on later date and when on my findings made hereinbefore there is no solid foundation for such an assumption, Mr. Chakraborty cannot succeed in this contention of his even on the provisions of Section 47 of the Registration Act. On these conclusions I must overrule the first contention raised by Mr. Chakraborty in support of this Rule.

15. The next contention of Mr. Chakraborty is to the effect that assuming that Statute 93 applies even then the reconstitution is not in accordance with the said Statute. According to Mr. Chakraborty the reconstitution should not have been effected by respondent No. 5 alone in collaboration with respondent No. 10 without the knowledge and concurrence of the existing governing body or the Secretary thereof. He has further submitted with reference to the statements set out in paragraph 24-A of the petition that there was no proper or bona fide election of teachers' representatives or donors' representative and that there had been no government nominee to the governing body. Much of the facts set out in the petition to support the aforesaid alleged irregularities in the reconstitution have been seriously disputed by respondent No. 5 in his affidavit. Strangely however the respondent, No. 10 had not filed any affidavit to deny an admission of his own in the letter dated May 16, 1969 made annexure 'G' to the petition to the effect that the reconstitution was not effected in a regular manner. This letter dated May, 16, 1969 which is not denied or controverted by the author thereof was described by the Registrar of the University in his affidavit as "manufactured for the purpose of creating false evidence." Such is also the claim of respondent No. 5. I, however, agree with Mr. Chakraborty that such a statement on the part of a responsible officer of the University is highly irresponsible when it is clearly admitted by the learned Counsel for the University that the original of the said document was found in the relevant file from the custody of the University itself in course of inspection of documents. Furthermore, upon the admitted facts of the present case there had been clear infringement of Statute 93 (1) (e) when the member required to be included in the governing body under the terms and conditions of even the first donation of the earlier deed had not been brought into the governing body.

16. But notwithstanding these facts I must uphold the contention of Mr. Kar who is appearing on behalf of the University that any dispute of the present nature should not be gone into in this proceeding at this stage in view of the provisions of Statute 93 (4) of the First Statutes referred to hereinbefore. According to Mr. Kar the dispute raised by Mr. Chakraborty in this regard is a dispute about the election or nomination of members to the governing body which should first be referred to the Syndicate for adjudication, and should not be taken up by this Court in this jurisdiction. Statute 93 (4) on its terms well supports this contention of Mr. Kar. But Mr. Chakraborty strongly contends that a statutory regulation like Statute 93 (4) cannot take away or abridge the jurisdiction conferred on this Court by Article 226 of the Constitution so that notwithstanding the aforesaid provision relied on by Mr. Kar this court can go into and adjudicate in a Writ proceeding as to whether an election or nomination of members to a governing body had lawfully been made in accordance with the Statute or the regulations made thereunder.

17. In my view, there may not be any dispute on the principle that no statute can impose any restriction or abridge the jurisdiction conferred on this court by the constitution. But a statute without excluding such a jurisdiction can provide for regulation for the enforcement of rights or obligations created by such statute. It is well settled that where a right or liability is created by a statute which gives a special remedy for its enforcement the remedy provided by the statute only must be availed of. This Rule which was originally laid down by Willes J. in Wolverhampton New Water Works Co. v. Hawkesford (1859) 6 C. B. (N. S.) 336 and was approved by the House of Lords in Neville v. London Express News Paper Ltd., (1919) AC 368, by the Privy Council in Attorney General of Trinidad and Tabago v. Gordon Grant and Co., (1935) AC 532 and by the Supreme Court in N. P. Poonnuswami v. Returning Officer, Namakkal, AIR 1952 SC 64. It is no doubt true that in the case of N. P. Poonnuswami the Supreme Court on the provisions of Article 329 (b) held that the jurisdiction of the High Court was excluded but the decision did not rest entirely on the exclusion of the jurisdiction itself. On the other hand, the Supreme Court approved an earlier decision of this court in the case of Hurdutrai v. Official Assignee of Calcutta, 52 Cal WN 343. In that case the question which arose for consideration was as to whether Sections 55 and 56 of the Presidency Town Insolvency Act excluded the jurisdiction of the Ordinary Civil Court or not and whether matters coming within the purview of the said provisions should be left to the Insolvency Court or not. In considering the said issue Mukherjee J. observed, "we are inclined to hold that Ordinary Civil Courts have concurrent jurisdiction in matters coming under Sections 55 and 56 of the Presidency Town Insolvency Act though they can decline to exercise such jurisdiction on grounds of expediency and refer the assignee to the Insolvency Court." Therefore, the pertinent question is not one as to whether the jurisdiction of this court is excluded or not but whether on the ground of expediency the parties should be made to seek remedy provided by the Statute or the statutory regulation the rights and obligations whereunder are sought to be enforced. Now in the present case the rights and obligations relate to election to a governing body of an educational institution affiliated to the University itself. The University itself would be expected to be better conversant with the affairs of institution under its administrative control. So also the requirements of the regulations with reference to the facts relating to each institution. The regulation itself provides that all disputes relating to such election should properly be adjudicated by the Syndicate. That being the position, in my view, there can be no doubt that the most expedient manner in which such disputes are to be adjudicated is by availing the remedy provided by the regulation and not by substituting a proceeding under Article 226 of the Constitution for the remedy so provided. That also appears to be the intention of the regulation itself on my reading. In this view I find ample support for the contention of Mr. Kar that in view of the provisions of Statute 93 (4) this court should not go into a dispute as raised by Mr. Chakraborty but should on the other hand, relegate the parties to seek appropriate remedy from the Syndicate itself. On the conclusions as above I must overrule the second contention raised by Mr. Chakraborty.

18. As both the contentions raised in support of this Rule fail the application fails and the Rule is discharged.

19. There will be no order for costs.

20. As the Rule is discharged, all interim orders are vacated.
Rule discharged.

Sankar Ghosh with Bhaskar Gupta, for Petitioner; Salil Hazra, for Respondent.

ORDER:— This is an application for removal of the named Arbitrator and appointment of an Arbitrator in terms of an arbitration agreement between the parties dated the 27 of Jan., 1967. The application is made under Section 8 (b) read with Explanation to Section 9 and Section 11 of the Arbitration Act.

2. The relevant facts are that by a contract in writing dated the 27th of January, 1967 between the parties the petitioner was appointed as clearing/handling and transport agents of the respondents in respect of a complete 1200 tons a day capacity cement making plant including its spares, tools and tackles as also for such other consignments as may be desired by the Director, Government Cement Factory on behalf of the Government of Uttar Pradesh being supplied by Messrs. Fives Lille Cail of Paris, France or by any suppliers at Calcutta Port or Dum Dum Airport on the terms and conditions contained in the said agreement.

3. The said agreement dated the 27th of January, 1967 in clause 28 contained an arbitration clause as follows:

"In case of any disputes, differences or questions arising between the parties herein touching or arising out of this agreement or the subject-matter thereof, the same will be referred to the Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department for arbitration and his decision shall be final and binding on the parties. The Arbitrator may from time to time with the consent of the parties enlarge the time for making and publishing the award."

4. It is alleged by the petitioner that various works were done under the said contracts and bills were submitted by the petitioner to the respondent out of which a sum of Rupees 502786.75 still remains due and payable by the respondent to the petitioner. The respondent is alleged to have been raising various disputes in regard to the payment of the said bills of the petitioner and have not paid the same. It is alleged by the petitioner that demands were made both orally and in writing from the respondent to pay the said sums but the respondent has failed and neglected to do so and in consequence the petitioner by a cable dated the 11th of November, 1968 regretted that no payment has been received by them in respect of their outstanding bills and asked for remittance of Rs. 75,000/- on account and requested them to intimate when the matter between them can be finalised. The respondent by their telegram dated the 11th of December, 1968 intimated that as per their account no amount was payable to the petitioner and also asked for sending the Accountant of the petitioner for scrutiny of the bills. The petitioner by their telegram and letter dated the 19th February, 1969 to the Director, Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla Project, Mirzapur pointed out that the allegations of the respondent were incorrect and inter alia requested to send the due amounts and if the said sum is not paid petitioner gave notice that they will take necessary steps for safeguarding their interests. Thereafter various correspondences and telegrams ensued between the parties and ultimately on the 17th/20th of July, 1970, the petitioner regretted that no payments were received by them in respect of their outstanding bills amounting to Rs. 5,02,786.75 and pointed out that under clause 17 of the contract between the parties payments of the bills should have been made within 30 days upon presentation and although more than one year has elapsed after the presentation of the bills no payment has been received by the petitioner and they finally invoked the arbitration clause of the contract and called upon the respondent to nominate and appoint the arbitrator in terms of the arbitration clause within 15 days thereof otherwise the petitioner gave notice that they will appoint a person as the sole arbitrator to proceed with the matter. Copy of the said letter was also sent to the Secretary Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department, the nominated arbitrator under the agreement with a request to enter upon the reference. As no reply was received by the petitioner to their said notice dated the 17th/20th of July, 1970 the petitioner again wrote a letter to the Director, Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla Project dated the 22nd of August, 1970 with a copy to the Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh Industries Department, Lucknow stating that as one month has elapsed after the appointed arbitrator was requested to enter upon the reference in terms of the arbitration agreement for adjudicating the disputes and differences between the parties, the petitioner gave notice that they have no alternative but to move the Court for appointment of an arbitrator without any further reference to the respondent. Thereafter the petitioner by a letter dated the 12th of September, 1970 addressed to the Secretary Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department, Lucknow with a copy to the Director, Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla Project, again gave a notice as the dispute between the parties has not been referred to the arbitrator in terms of the arbitration clause in the agreement and requested the appointed arbitrator, that is, the Secretary to enter upon reference forthwith on receipt of the said letter and fixing the date of the meeting of the arbitrators for preliminary directions etc. As there was no response either from the appointed arbitrator or the Director of Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla Project, the petitioner finally by a letter dated the 7th of January, 1971 to the Director Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla Project gave a notice under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act that they have appointed Dr. Tapas Banerjee, Barrister-at-Law as a sole Arbitrator to adjudicate the disputes that have arisen between the parties and the respondent to call upon to concur in such appointment within 15 days after the service of the said notice and if they failed to concur, the petitioner would apply to appropriate Court for appointment of Dr. Banerjee as the sole Arbitrator with directions to enter upon reference and make an award. It is only after the said notice under the Arbitration Act being served on the respondent, the Director, Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla Project replied by a letter dated the 29th of January, 1971 and contended that it is only the Secretary to the Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department who can be appointed as sole Arbitrator for adjudication of disputes between the parties and the points of dispute have already been referred to by the petitioner to the Secy., Govt. of Uttar Pradesh, the Arbitrator whose decision is awaited. It was also contended that the agreement does not provide for appointment of any other person as the Arbitrator. By a letter dated the 6th of Feb., 1971 the respondent intimated the petitioner that as the petitioner by their letter dated the 7th of Jan., 1971 has referred to the Government for orders the Government is examining the same with reference to the arbitration proceeding desired by the respondent and in the meantime the Deputy Director, Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla Project by the said letter alleged that six bills of the petitioner have not been received by them and asked for copies of the same to enable them to examine the said bills. There were certain internal correspondences of the respondent which have been annexed to the affidavit-in-opposition of Sukhamay Ghosh affirmed on the 26th of May, 1961 referring to the views taken by the respondent's Departments including Law Department, according to which there was no dispute to be referred to the arbitration and as such there cannot be any question of appointment of an arbitrator and neglect or refusal on the part of the arbitrator to act and appointment of sole Arbitrator under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act. Finally, the respondent by a lengthy letter dated the 15th of April, 1971 addressed to the petitioner inter alia contended that as there is no dispute between the parties and the matter is pending investigation by the respondent and after their investigation if any dispute arises then the disputed matter can be referred to adjudication of the Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department in terms of the arbitration clause and as there was no dispute Section 8 of the Arbitration Act has no application. Thereafter on the 20th of April, 1971 the petitioner made this application for removal of the appointed arbitrator under the agreement and appointment of Dr. Tapas Banerjee, Barrister-at-Law or such other person as the Court deemed fit and proper as Arbitrator to adjudicate the dispute between the parties.

5. Mr. Sankar Ghosh with Bhaskar Gupta appearing for the petitioner submitted that the disputes between the parties arising out of the contract are covered under the arbitration clause and in spite of the notice under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act, the respondent has failed to appoint any Arbitrator and order should be made as prayed for. Mr. Ghosh submitted that from the facts it is quite clear that the Arbitrator named in the arbitration agreement, that is, the Secretary Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department, has neglected or refused to act in spite of repeated requests by the petitioner by their letters dated 17th/20th of July, 1970 and final letter dated the 7th of January, 1971 as the said appointed Arbitrator did not comply with within one month from the requests made by the petitioner to enter on and proceed with the reference within the meaning of the explanation to Section 9 of the Arbitration Act. In these circumstances, there has been positive failure, neglect and refusal on the part of the appointed Arbitrator. As such he is liable to be removed under Section 11 (1) of the Arbitration Act and the sole Arbitrator Dr. Tapas Banerjee should be appointed to adjudicate the disputes as notice under Section 8 (1) (c) of the Arbitration Act has been duly served on the respondent and the respondent having failed to comply with the notice the petitioner is entitled to the order asked for.

6. Mr. Salil Hazra appearing for the respondent was fair enough to concede that he cannot sustain the stand taken by his Client that there is no dispute between the parties. As such there cannot be any reference to arbitration in terms of the arbitration agreement. He contested the application mainly on the ground that there is no wilful or deliberate failure or neglect on the part of the named arbitrator that is the Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department to enter upon or proceed with the reference as he was labouring under a misapprehension or misconception as to the legal position of existence of a dispute at this stage. He submitted that in order to invoke Section 8 there must be neglect or failure or refusal to act on the part of the arbitrator which must be deliberate and wilful. Mr. Hazra referred to passage of Russell on Arbitration, 18th Edition page 99 wherein two English cases have been referred. — Re Hawley and North Staffordshire Rly., (1848) 2 De G. & Sm. 33, and Burkett Sharp and Co. v. Eastcheap Dried Fruit Co. and Perera, (1962) 1 Lloyd's Rep. 267 in which Court held that in the facts and circumstances of those cases there were no refusals to act on the part of the arbitrators. He also referred to the decision Nandaram Hanutram v. Raghu- nath & Sons Ltd., 93 Cal LJ 92 = (AIR 1954 Cal 245) where Bachawat, J., held that the existence of dispute or difference is a condition precedent to the exercise of the jurisdiction by the arbitrator under the arbitration clause and a dispute implies an assertion of a right by one party and a repudiation thereof by another. But the repudiation by the other party may be either express or implied and may be by words or by conduct. But as Mr. Hazra has already conceded and rightly, that he cannot now contend that no dispute has arisen between the parties as such the decision of Bachawat, J., is no longer relevant for the purpose of deciding the present application. Mr. Hazra further contended that the parties should be bound by their agreement and the disputes must be referred to the named arbitrator under the agreement where in the facts and circumstances as are disclosed by the correspondence between the parties including the internal correspondence of the respondent that there was a misconception in the mind of the arbitrator as to the correct legal position and as such he cannot be said to have refused to act or there is any failure or neglect on the part of an arbitrator under the agreement. As such the parties should refer the disputes to the named arbitrator and Mr. Hazra submitted that the Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department should be appointed as Arbitrator to adjudicate the disputes between the parties and the matter to be referred to him.

7. I may note here that the notice of the application with the leave of the Court has been duly served on the arbitrator, that is, the Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department but he has not chosen to appear to make any representation to this Court or explain the circumstances which are now alleged by the respondent, as to why he did not enter upon and proceed with the reference after the dispute was specifically referred to him by the petitioner and he was asked to enter on the reference. It is significant that, the named arbitrator never replied to the petitioner in spite of the fact he had been served with the letters dated 17th/20th July, 1970, 12th September, 1970 and 7th January, 1971 by the petitioner. It is sought to be contended by Mr. Hazra that the arbitrator communicated with the respondent and as such the respondent came to know that the arbitrator was taking the same view as the respondent and their Law Department took on the subject-matter, that is, as there no dispute has arisen between the parties, the appointment of the arbitrator is premature. I may quote here a relevant statement contained in a letter from S. N. Acharya, Sanyukt Sachiv to the Director, Government Cement Factory, Dalla dated the 31st of March, 1971 which is as follows:—

"Here the dispute is yet to be referred to the Secretary (Industries) and recourse to Section 8 will be had only when he neglects or refuses to act. The Factory can send its reply to the notice of the above lines."

8. The notice referred to in the said statement in the letter dated the 31st of March 1971 is the notice of motion of this application served by the petitioner on the respondent.

9. Mr. Hazra has also referred me to all the correspondence between the parties and the internal correspondence of the respondent and submitted that in the circumstances when the arbitrator is labouring under a misconception of legal position he cannot be said to have refused to act or failed or neglected to act and the application for appointment of an Arbitrator by Court under Section 8 or removal of the arbitrator under Section 11 of the Arbitration Act do not arise. He further contended that the Arbitrator has not accepted the appointment as there is no evidence before the Court that the arbitrator signified his assent either to the petitioner or to the respondent accepting the office of the arbitrator in terms of the arbitration agreement. Mr. Hazra further contended that in the arbitration agreement the sentence "his decision shall be final and binding on the parties" signifies that the arbitrator was a persona designata and the parties intended not to supply the vacancy in case he refuses or neglects to act in terms of the arbitration agreement. It may be noted that this point has not been taken in the affidavits but it is now being argued from the Bar. Moreover, in my view, the contentions of Mr. Hazra are untenable as the arbitration clause itself is quite clear and the arbitrator is the incumbent in the office of the Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh at the time of reference of dispute to arbitration and can never be construed as an arbitration by a persona designata. Further the point not being specifically taken in the opposition it cannot be allowed to be taken from the Bar as that is a question of fact which the petitioner had no opportunity to deal with and assuming respondent can take that point as I have already held that by interpretation of the arbitration clause it cannot be said that there was any intention as appearing in the said agreement that the vacancy of the arbitrator created by his neglect or refusal to act was not intended to be supplied. I cannot accept the contentions of Mr. Hazra for obvious reasons. Position as disclosed in the correspondence between the parties and the internal correspondence is that the arbitrator is completely under the control and spell of the respondent and lacks in the fundamental conception as to the powers and duties of an arbitrator and as such is incapable of acting as an arbitrator in the disputes between the parties and discharge his judicial function impartially without being influenced by the views and orders of the respondent. In my view, if he is allowed to be the arbitrator to adjudicate the dispute between the parties whole purpose and object of the arbitration would be frustrated. The conduct of the respondent and the appointed arbitrator being the present Secretary to the Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department raises no doubt in my mind that it would be injustice and against all principles of equity and good conscience to refer the matter to the appointed arbitrator in the facts and circumstances of this case.

10. Mr. Bhaskar Gupta cited a Division Bench decision of the Madras High Court in K. G. S. Venkatanarayana v. K. G. S. V. R. Lakshmidheva-amma, (1947) 2 Mad LJ 520 wherein a dispute between the members of a Hindu Joint family was referred by an agreement in writing to an appointed arbitrator after a criminal proceeding was instituted in the Bombay Magistrate's Court by a party. In fact, there were alternative arbitrators that is, in case of failure of one other will act as an arbitrator. After the said agreement to arbitration the criminal proceeding was withdrawn from Bombay Court but each of the two named arbitrators refused to act. Thereafter an Advocate's notice was sent to each of the named arbitrators requesting them to reconsider the matter and consent to act as arbitrator. One of the arbitrators replied immediately and declined to act as an arbitrator. The other arbitrator neither acknowledged the receipt of the Advocate's notice nor replied to it. Thereafter a fresh criminal proceeding was started in Bombay Presidency Magistrate's Court, about two and half months after the notice of the Advocate was received by one of the arbitrators who did not reply to the said notice, suddenly gave notice to the parties that he will hold the reference of the arbitration at his residence. It was contended that the said arbitrator not having acknowledged the receipt of the Advocate's letter clearly indicated that he had no intention to act as an arbitrator in the matter and as such the criminal proceeding in Bombay Presidency Magistrate's Court was started. It was also contended that the opposite party had approached the arbitrator and caused the arbitrator to enter into the reference under pressure. As such there will be no impartial justice before the arbitrator. In spite of such notice the arbitrator proceeded ex parte and made an award. The award was challenged and was set aside on the ground that there was no valid appointment of arbitrator as the arbitrator having refused to act cannot subsequently without a fresh submission by the parties enter into reference and the award was invalid. In that decision Gentle. C. J. at pages 521-22 has held:

"When asked by the respondent. In the letter of July 15, to reconsider his refusal and to act as arbitrator. Mr. Venkata Seshayya did not even acknowledge the letter. The Explanation to Section 9 of the Arbitration Act provides that the fact that an arbitrator, after a request by either party to enter on and proceed with the reference, does not within one month comply with the request, may constitute a neglect or refusal to act within the meaning of Section 8. Assuming the respondent's letter of July 15, addressed to Mr. Venkata Seshayya, was a request within the contemplation of the section, in the light of his earlier refusal and since he did not comply with the request contained in the letter within one month, his conduct must constitute further refusal to act.

"Acceptance of the office by the arbitrator appears to be necessary to perfect his appointment. It has been so decided in the case of an umpire, and it would seem to be only reasonable that an appointment should not be considered to be effective until the person appointed has agreed either expressly or tacitly to exercise the functions of the office."

In Sadik Husain v. Kaniz Zohra Begam, (1911) 38 Ind App 181 (PC) it was observed by the Board at page 751:

"It appears to their Lordships that, when an arbitrator is nominated by parties, his refusal to act is signified as clearly by his refusal to accept nomination as by any other course he could pursue. His refusal to act necessarily follows, for he has not performed the first action of all, namely, to take up the office by signifying his assent to his appointment."

The notice dated October 1, sent by Mr. Venkata Seshayya, by which he purported to make directions in the arbitration by fixing the date for the inquiry, was given after he had expressly refused to act; and, assuming the respondent's advocate's letter of July 15 (which Mr. Venkata Seshayya ignored) was notice contemplated by the Explanation to Section 9, after his omission to comply with the notice within one month, which omission was further refusal to act, as contemplated by the Explanation. Even if the respondent's letter of the 15th July was not such a notice, his refusal to act had been expressed five months before he purported to give directions as arbitrator and had not been withdrawn. In either event, Mr. Venkata Seshayya had done nothing regarding his appointment as arbitrator by the agreement of April 28, before he sent his communication of October 1, save to express and to indicate refusal to act.

In my view, when he wrote the communication of October 1, the time had passed within which he could have accepted the appointment and that that communication itself was not such acceptance. Before he wrote it, he did not take up the appointment by signifying his assent to it and he had divested himself of the character of an arbitrator. Further, there was no fresh submission by the parties to the arbitration".

11. In my view, although the facts in the Madras Case are somewhat different from the present one, but the principle, when an arbitrator should be held to have refused to act within the meaning of Explanation to Section 9 has been stated and I have no hesitation in applying the principle to the facts of this case where as I have already held that the arbitrator has refused to act after being called upon by the petitioner to enter on and proceed with the reference within the meaning of Explanation to Section 9 of the Arbitration Act.

12. I will once again briefly analyse the fact which appears from the admitted correspondence. The contract was entered into on the 27th of January, 1967 and it appears that the work under the contract was completed before November, 1968. The petitioners by their telegram dated the 11th of November, 1968 sent to the respondent recorded with regret that after discussions no payments of their outstanding bills have been received. There was no response to the said telegram and the petitioner again by another telegram dated 23rd of November, 1968 requested the respondent to remit payment of the outstanding bills and also referred to the telephonic talk in the meantime. Thereafter, for the first time, the respondent responded by a telegram completely denying any liability to the petitioner as in the respondent's account nothing was found payable to the petitioner. Thereafter it appears that various letters were exchanged between the parties and also a telegram dated the 6th of July, 1970 sent by the petitioner to the respondent on the subject but nothing happened. Ultimately, by the notice dated 17th/20th of July, 1970 sent to the respondent and copy to the named arbitrator the petitioner invoked the arbitration clause in the contract and called upon the respondent to nominate and/or appoint the said arbitrator within 15 days and also requested the named arbitrator to enter into the reference. There was no response from the respondent or the arbitrator. The named arbitrator had not the ordinary courtesy to acknowledge the receipt of the letter to the petitioner although the said letter was a formal notice under the Arbitration Act on the face of it. Thereafter the petitioner by a series of letters addressed to the respondent and the said arbitrator being letters dated 22nd August, 1970, 12th September, 1970 and 7th January, 1971 requested formally the arbitrator to enter on and proceed with the reference and asked the respondent to take steps in the matter of the reference but no reply or response was received by the petitioner either from the respondent or the arbitrator. It was only for the first time by the letter dated the 29th of January, 1971, the respondent through the Director, Uttar Pradesh Government Cement Factory, Dalla, replied to the statutory notice under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act dated the 7th of January, 1971 served by the petitioner on the respondent which is set out hereunder:—

Dear Sirs,

Please refer to your letter No. RK/U-3/71/36. dated 7-1-71 purporting to be a notice under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act, 1940, for appointment of Sri Tapesb Banerjee as Sole arbitrator for adjudicating in the dispute between you and the Factory administration.

Section 28 of the agreement entered with you only provides for appointment of Secretary to Government of Uttar Pradesh Industries Department, as sole arbitrator for adjudicating in the dispute between you and the factory administration arising out of the contract for clearance of consignments from Calcutta Port and their handling at the Port as well as at the destination point entered with you. The points in dispute have already been referred by you to the Secretary to Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department and his decision in the matter is awaited. The agreement does not provide for appointment of any other person as arbitrator and, as such, we totally disagree with contents of your letter under reference.

Yours faithfully,

For Director.

14. In the circumstances the petitioner naturally had no other alternative but to make this application under the Arbitration Act for removal of the named arbitrator and appointment of arbitrator by the Court and took out a notice of motion on the 1st of April, 1971 of this application and served the same on the respondent. The respondent after receiving the notice of the application through the Director, Government Cement Factory, Dalla, by a long letter dated 15th of April, 1971, inter alia, contended that there was no dispute between the parties as the Gov-

13. After the said letter the respondent sent another letter dated the 6th of February 1971 to the petitioner in continuation of the said letter dated the 29th of January, 1971 which is as follows:—

No. D-7-1485/

Dated, Dalla, February 6, 1971.

From:

The Director, Government Cement Factory, Dalla (Mirzapur)

To

M/s. Gopal & Kumar, 14, Netaji Subhas Road, Calcutta-1.

Dear Sirs,

In continuation of this office letter No. D-7 (XXIVL)/67-68-1424 dated January 29, 1971, I am to say that your letter of January 7, 1971 has been referred to Government for orders and they are examining it with reference to the arbitration proceedings desired by you. We shall revert on the subject as soon as Government's orders in the matter are received. In the meanwhile I am to say that your undermentioned six bills included in the list of outstanding bills sent with your letter of RK/V-3/70, dt-17-7-1970 do not appear to have been received by us.

ernment was examining the alleged claim of the petitioner and after examination, the Government will know the position and after that if any dispute remained that may be referred to arbitration. In substance they alleged that there is no ground for petitioner's present application and the same being premature. It is clear from the conduct of the respondent that their whole idea is to delay the settlement or adjudication of the dispute between the parties which has arisen in 1968 under the contract as long as possible under various pleas. It also appears that the arbitrator is completely under the control and influence of the respondent and in fact Mr. Hazra has clearly admitted before me that the arbitrator did not think it necessary to make any communication to the petitioner but he intimidated the respondent that he was holding the same view with the respondent that there is no dispute existing between the parties, as such the question of invoking the arbitration clause has not arisen, being premature. The matter being under consideration of the respondent and until an order is made by the Government on the subject no dispute can arise. The whole attitude of the respondent and the arbitrator seems to me against all principle of natural justice, common sense and complete denial of ordinary rights of a citizen. The respondent and the arbitrator seem to have taken the law in their own hand and acted in a high-handed manner denying the legal rights of the petitioner under the said contract and it is only after services of the statutory notices under Section 8 of the Arbitration Act and the notice of motion of this application they are setting up all sorts of frivolous and untenable pleas which cannot be entertained or accepted in a Court of law. The submission of Mr. Hazra on behalf of the respondent that as the arbitrator was labouring under a misapprehension as to the basis of his jurisdiction, being the existence of dispute under the contract, and there was no dispute yet as the respondent is still considering the alleged claim of the petitioner, that is why, the arbitrator thought it fit not to show the ordinary courtesy of replying to the series of the requests made by the formal notices to him to enter upon and to proceed with the reference. In the circumstances it is clear from the conducts of the respondent and the arbitrator that the named arbitrator i.e., the present Secretary, Government of Uttar Pradesh, Industries Department is an unfit and incapable person to act as an arbitrator in terms of the arbitration agreement between the parties.

15. As I have already held that the arbitrator has neglected and refused to act within the meaning of the Explanation to Section 9 of the Arbitration Act he is liable to be removed under Section 11 (1) of the Arbitration Act and the petitioners are entitled to an order in this application.

16. In the result, I make an order appointing Dr. Tapas Banerjee Barrister-at-Law, of No. 1/1B, Deodar Street, Calcutta-19 as an arbitrator to adjudicate the dispute which has arisen between the parties in respect of the agreement dated the 27th of January, 1967 and he is to enter upon the reference on a signed copy of the minute of this order and he is to make his award within four months from the date of his entering reference. I am appointing Dr. Tapas Banerjee not as the appointed arbitrator of the petitioner but as an arbitrator whom I think a fit and proper person to adjudicate the disputes between the parties. The respondent to pay the costs of this application. The arbitrator and all parties to act on a signed copy of the minutes and the petitioner to complete the order.

Order accordingly.

JUDGMENT:— This is the defendants' appeal against the judgment of concurrence decreeing the plaintiffs' suit for declaration of title and joint possession. The plaint case is as follows:

The suit property is comprised in Dag No. 1973 in Khatian No. 46 measuring 60 acres in P. S. Hanskhali in District Nadia. The suit land was settled by the landlord in 1926 by registered pattah to Moala Bux and Mahiruddi Mondal. The defendants are the heirs and legal representatives of Mahiruddi. After the death of Moala Bux his brother Jalil Mondal and on his death Fakir Chand inherited the property and had been in joint possession. Fakir sold the suit property to the plaintiffs by a kobala dated August 13, 1956, but as the plaintiffs went to take possession, they were prevented from taking possession by the defendants. Accordingly, the suit was filed on August 20, 1956 by the plaintiffs for a declaration of their 8 annas title and joint possession with the defendants.

2. The suit was contested by the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who filed their joint written statement stating that the settlement was, in fact, taken by Mohiruddi and Moala Bux had no title to it. This jama was sold in auction for arrears of rent and Mohiruddi instituted proceedings under Section 37-A of the Bengal Agricultural Debtors' Act before the Special Debt Settlement Board, Ranaghat and obtained return of the jama on the basis of the decree under the award and the decretal dues had been paid off. Moala Bux having no title. Jalil and thereafter Fakir obtained no interest in the property and never had any possession. The suit was, accordingly, misconceived, not maintainable in law and barred by limitation.

The suit was tried on evidence before the learned Munsif who came to the finding that the settlement was taken both by Moala Bux and Mohiruddi, and, exclusive possession of Mohiruddi was not established. It was further held that the plaintiffs acquired 8 annas interest in the suit property and they were entitled to the reliefs prayed for in the suit. The suit was, accordingly, decreed.

3. An appeal was preferred by the defendant and the appellate court affirmed the findings of the trial court. A new point was taken in respect of the proceedings under Section 37-A of the said Act. Mohiruddi got back the property under the provisions of the award passed in the said proceedings and duly paid the amount under the award. According to the appellate court the title of Moala Bux was not thereby affected though possession was given to Mohiruddi by the Board. There was also no case of ouster or assertion of any hostile title by the defendants. Accordingly, the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration and joint possession prayed for in the suit. The present appeal is against the said decision by the appellants.

4. Mr. S. C. Mitter, the learned Advocate appearing for the appellants, has contended that on an interpretation of the relevant provisions of the Section 37-A of the Act. it would appear that the sale in the execution of the decree extinguished the title of the judgment-debtors in the jama. When one of the debtors applied for setting aside the sale, and on the basis of the award passed in his favour the sale is set aside and the land was restored to him, such act amounts to a negation of the title of the other co-sharers. The other co-sharers accordingly could claim no interest or title in the property and there was no provision for reverting title to them.

5. Mr. Mukunda Behari Mullick, the learned Advocate for the plaintiffs-respondents contended that the award, which set aside the sale that extinguished the title of all co-sharers, revived the title of all co-sharers. He referred to Section 9 (3) of the Act which provided that in case of payment of the debt by a debtor applicant pursuant to an order of the Board, the other persons so liable for the debt, would be liable to contribute to the debtor applicant in respect of the sum paid by him under the said order. This Section 9 provides for settlement of ancestral or joint debts and not of debts which culminated in a decree and an auction sale of the holding. According to Mr. Mullick the same principle should be extended to the cases covered by Section 37-A of the Act.

6. There is no dispute that the application under Section 37-A can be made by any of the debtors as provided in sub-clause (III) of clause (b) of sub-section (1) of Section 37-A, reserving such right to "such person" which may be liable for the debts jointly with others. This was so held in Sudarshan v. Karunasindhu, AIR 1949 Cal 625, and it was also held that for relief under Section 37-A, it is not necessary that all the debtors should join the application, following the decision in Gopi Ballav v. Aswini Kumar, 51 Cal WN 859 = (AIR 1948 Cal 31).

7. In Gopi Ballav's case, it was noted that though the sale was set aside, nothing was said about title and it was observed by Chakravarti, J.: (as his Lordship then was) speaking for the Court as follows:

"If such an order (setting aside the sale under sub-section (8) is made, the position which results is that since the section says nothing about this, title apparently reverts to all the original owners, although the application might have been made by some of them, but possession is restored only to the applicant or applicants." (P. 862) (of Cal WN) = (at p. 33 of AIR).

The Court also noted that possession is to be given to the applicants who are to be deemed as the debtors and the non-applicants, if the title reverted to them, may alienate their shares, but neither they nor their transferees can obtain possession so long as the debt is not paid off, for which period the property must remain in possession of the applicants under the terms of the section. The real question was posed in the above case in the following terms:—

"When the debt is paid off, a question may well arise, as to whether the applicants will be entitled any longer to retain their exclusive possession. It will then have to be decided whether the section really revives the title of even the non-applicants and, in effect, makes a gift of them of their shares, although gift of a deferred character, or whether title really vests in the applicants alone, although it is not expressly so said."

The question was not finally answered as it was not necessary in the facts of the case before the Court. Mr. Mitter also referred to a decision in Lankeswar Halder v. Ram Gopal, 88 Cal LJ 180 = (AIR 1953 Cal 323) where it was held that to give the joint debtors the right of the benefit of the provisions of Section 37-A, it was necessary for them to make application within the period of limitation. The Court was concerned, in this case, with the question as to whether the application by other co-sharers was barred by limitation, and the case really was not concerned with the question of title in the property the sale of which was set aside.

8. Section 37-A provides an elaborate scheme for setting aside sales of immoveable property in execution of the decrees and restoration of possession thereof. In fact the object of the Amending Act II of 1942 which was inserted as Section 37-A was for the protection of the holdings of the debtors who lost them by hurried decrees and sales effected by the landlords and creditors. In short, the material provision in sub-section (1) is that the application for relief can be made by anyone of the joint debtors when the property is sold in execution of a decree relating to a debt. Under sub-section (2) the application has to be made to the Board. Sub-section (4) gives the power to the Board to make an estimate of the average annual gross receipts derivable from the property sold during 1934 to 1938. Under sub-section (5), after the estimate is made, an award shall be made by the Board directing the applicant to pay annually in cash to the decree-holder half of the value of annual gross receipts until debt is extinguished or until 20 years have expired from the award and also annual rent, with further direction to pay in cash half of the cash receipts toward bona fide mortgage subject to which the property was sold. Under sub-section (7), after the award is made, the applicant shall be deemed to be the debtor. In sub-section (8) it is provided that on presentation of the copy of the award to the Civil Court, at whose order the property was sold, such Civil Court shall direct that the sale be set aside and the debtor, meaning the applicant, with his under raiyat, if any, shall be restored to possession of the property. By sub-section (9) the debtor so restored to possession under sub-section (8), shall not, during the period the debt remains unsatisfied or until expiration of 20 years, alienate by sale, lease, gift or other form of transfer or create any charge thereon and any alienation or charge so made shall be void.

9. These sub-sections do not make any provision about title in respect of the property, and, it appears to me that no provision was necessary in the circumstances. If the sale is set aside, the legal effect would be that there was no sale at all, the further effect whereof would be that the title of the original holders in the property was never disturbed but remained in them all through and we have seen that protection of holdings sold in execution of a decree for debt is the purpose of the Act including the amending Acts. Though the title of the original holder thus remains with them in spite of the sale since set aside, the applicant who moves for the award is put in possession of the property, for enabling him to pay of the instalments under the award from the usufructs of the property so long as the debts or subsisting mortgage are not paid off. This is an indirect mode of obtaining contribution from the co-sharers which, in case of other debts, is provided in Section 9 (3). For securing the due payment under the award, the debtor in possession has been denied the right to alienate the property or create any charge thereon during the period the award remains unpaid or until expiration of twenty years from the award. The other co-sharers are not under any restriction as to transfer but their transferees will not be entitled to possession of the property till the debt is paid off or the expiration of twenty years from the award when the debt is to be deemed to have been satisfied. On such satisfaction of the debt, the right of the co-sharers to possession springs into force, while their title to the immoveable property remains unaffected on account of the sale being set aside on the filing of the award.

10. Accordingly. I am unable to accept the contention of Mr. Mitter that only the applicant for the award which in due course sets aside the sale would be entitled to the property. Further, the preservation of the title will not mean a gift of the property to the non-applicant debtors, as the payments for satisfaction of the debts under the award will be made from the usufructs of the property. This interpretation is, thus, consistent with the notions of equity and if legislature thought otherwise, we would find express provisions conferring title of the property to the applicant debtor, which in view of the manner, as provided, in which the debt is to be satisfied, could mean an unfair advantage to the applicant debtor at the cost of his co-sharers who failed to join or apply for some reason or other, thereby frustrating the objects for which the Act and its amendments have been enacted. Accordingly the transferee from a co-sharer would be entitled as in the present case to a declaration of title and possession jointly with the defendant as prayed for in view of the satisfaction of the debt under the award.

11. As the contentions raised on behalf of the appellants fail, this appeal is dismissed, without, however, any order as to costs in this Court.

Leave under Clause 15 of the Letters Patent is prayed for and is granted.

Appeal dismissed.

ORDER:—This matter has come up before me for review of taxation of the Bill of Cost No. 272 of 1967 and for an order, Inter alia for varying and/or setting aside the findings of the Taxing Officer given on 12th August, 1970. The matter in question arises out of an application made before A. N. Sen J by one of the parties herein claiming the following reliefs:—

(a) Time to file the report by the Special Referee be extended by two months from date of the order to be made hereon;

(b) The Special Referee be directed to proceed with the reference in terms of the consent decree and orders dated 8th March, 1965 and 26th August, 1965;

(c) That the Special Referee be directed to follow the procedure laid down by the reference rules of this Court and in the Code of Civil Procedure;

(d) The Special Referee do proceed with reference in respect of matters and/or issues which arise under the consent decree and not to bring in matters which are beyond the scope of enquiry;

(e) The orders by Special Referee for filing of additional or amended statement of facts by oral application on behalf of plaintiff may be set aside;

(f) In the alternative, Special Referee do file a special report as to why the plaintiff is allowed to file the additional statement of facts in the manner sought to be done and at this stage:

(g) Costs of and incidental to this application may be paid by the plaintiff, and

(h) Such further order or orders be made as to this Hon'ble Court may seem fit and proper.

2. That application was moved before A. N. Sen J. on a notice of motion and an order was made inter alia to the following effect:

"And it being made clear that this Court in setting aside the order of the Special Referee as hereinafter mentioned only on the ground that he made the order without a proper application and without giving the defendant opportunity to oppose the same and that this Court is not setting aside the said order on the ground that such an order should not have been made.

It is ordered that the time for the Special Referee to file his report herein be and the same is hereby extended by six months from the date hereof. And it is further ordered that the orders of the said Special Referee for filing of additional or amended statement of facts by oral application on behalf of the plaintiff be and the same is hereby set aside. And it is further ordered that the plaintiff be at liberty to make proper application before the Special Referee for leave to file the additional statement of facts and that such application for leave shall have to be moved upon notice thereof to all the defendants with a copy of the proposed additional statement and also the grounds on the basis of which it is sought to be made and that the defendants be at liberty and entitled to oppose the said application if so advised by using affidavit and that the said Special Referee shall thereupon decide the question in accordance with law upon the materials placed before him. And it is further ordered that the parties concerned and the Special Referee do act on a copy of the minutes of this order signed by an officer of this Court being shown to them and it is further ordered that each party do bear and pay its own costs of and incidental to this application to be if necessary taxed by the Taxing Officer of this Court."

3. When the matter came up before the Assistant Taxing Officer it was contended on behalf of the applicant that the matter before A. N. Sen J. should have been moved by chamber summons and not by way of notice of motion and the bill of cost should be allowed in accordance with the scale of fees or charges prescribed for chamber summons. The Assistant Taxing Officer upheld the contention. The matter was heard on appeal by the Taxing Officer on 12th August, 1970 and the same was set aside by the said Taxing Officer. It has now come up before this Court for review.

4. Two points are involved in this application. Firstly, whether the application before A. N. Sen J. was such that it should have been moved by way of chamber summons or by way of a notice of motion and secondly, if it was to be moved on chamber summons whether at the stage of taxation the charges should be allowed by the officer concerned on the basis as prescribed for chamber summons.

5. As regards the first point the question is to be decided with reference to the Original Side Rules of this Court. Chapter VI, Rule 11 enumerates 18 items which are to be disposed of in chambers by a Judge. Items Nos. 12, 13 and 18 thereof are relevant for the purpose of consideration of this application and they are set out as follows:—

"12. Applications for time to plead, for leave to amend, for discovery and production of documents, and generally all applications relating to the conduct of any suit or matter.

13. All proceedings in execution, or otherwise under a decree or order.

18. Such other matters as are not expressly required to be disposed of in Court and which the Judge thinks fit to be heard in Chambers, and such other applications as are directed to be made in Chambers."

6. The main Chapter which concerns an application to be made in a pending reference matter is Chapter XXVI of the Original Side Rules which deals with Reference Rules. The relevant rules under the said Chapter XXVI are Rules 50 and 51 which are as follows:

"50. Any officer taking a reference may at any time, pending the reference or on its conclusion, apply for the opinion of the Court on any question which may arise on the reference and for such purpose may report specially. Such special report may be made at the instance of any of the parties or of the officer himself, and shall be brought before the Court or Judge, within such time and by such party as the officer shall direct, by motion on notice that such special report may be confirmed, discharged or varied or that any directions may be given thereon; and on the hearing of such motion the same may be confirmed, discharged or varied as the Court or Judge shall deem just, or such direction may be given as shall appear to be necessary or expedient in that behalf.

Where such special report is not brought before the Court or Judge in accordance with the directions given, the officer may himself place the same before the Court or Judge, and such directions may be given as may be thought necessary."

51. In case an officer refuses or declines to make a special report when requested by a party so to do, such party may apply to the Judge in Chambers, on summons to the other parties to the reference, for an order requiring the officer to report specially.

The Judge may in his discretion make such order, upon such terms as to costs and otherwise as he may think fit."

7. Another provision under the Original Side Rules which need consideration are items 54 and 55 of Appendix Z which prescribes a list of prescribed Chamber Matters.

8. Chapter XX of the Original Side Rules deals with matters relating to Motions and Rules Nisi and Rule 3 thereof will required consideration in deciding this application. The said R. 3 is set out as follows:

"3. Except wher otherwise provided by Statute or prescribed by these rules, all applications, which in accordance with these rules cannot be made in Chambers, shall be made on motion after notice to the parties affected thereby, unless, according to the practice existing at the time of the passing of these rules, an order might be made ex parte in the first instance; but the Court, where satisfied that the delay cause by proceeding in the ordinary way would or might entail irreparable or serious mischief, may make any order, ex parte, upon such terms as to costs or otherwise, and subject to such undertaking, if any, as the Court may think just, and any party affected by such order may move to set it aside."

9. In the light of the above provisions, the facts leading to the said application made before A. N. Sen J. have to be considered. In the pending reference proceeding before the Special referee directions were given whereby the plaintiff was to file an additional statement of facts. The same was objected to by the clients of Messrs. J. N. Mitra &

Co. who requested the Special Referee to make a Special report seeking the view of the Court about the filing of such additional statement of facts. The Special Referee declined to do so. Thereupon Messrs. J. N. Mitra & Co. on behalf of the defendant Nos. 1 to 6 and 8 made the said application before A. N. Sen J.

10. The several prayers made herein if considered together would substantially make it an application relating to the conduct of the reference proceedings pending before the Special Referee.

11. In my opinion, the said application before A. N. Sen J. is essentially an application made under Chapter XXVI Rule 51 which expressly provides that such an application has to be made to the Judge in Chambers on Summons to the other parties to the reference. Under the said provision the Judge may, in his discretion, make such order as he would think fit.

12. The sum and substance of the said order of A. N. Sen J. was to the effect that the Special Referee should not have made the order on the oral application of the plaintiff and should have given an opportunity to the defendants to oppose the said application. Obviously that order has been made by the learned Judge under Rule 51 Chapter XXVI of the Original Side Rules. Chapter VI Rule 11, Item 13 of the Original Side Rules contemplates that all proceedings under a decree could be made by Chamber Summons. So also under Item 21 all matters relating to the conduct of any suit or matter should be done by Chamber summons.

13. Mr. B. C. Dutt appearing on behalf of the clients of Mr. H. K. Mitter, Solicitor, contended that Chapter XX Rule 3 should be applied and such a matter should be made by way of notice of motion as has been done before A. N. Sen J. In my opinion, that provision has no application in the facts and circumstances of the application which was disposed of by A. N. Sen J. That provision cannot have any application when there is an express provision prescribed by the said Original Rules dealing with such matter. Accordingly, I cannot accept that contention. Mr. Dutt then contended that the said application before A. N. Sen J. must have been made under Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the said section had to be invoked in the interest of justice inasmuch as the Special Referee failed to do justice by his said order. It is settled law that Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure can have no application when there is an express provision whereunder the application can be made. Lastly, Mr. Dutt contended that in deciding the said application A. N. Sen J. should be deemed to have taken into consideration the maintainability of the said application by way of Notice of Motion and that point should not be re-opened and re-considered at the stage of taxation. In other words, that point was finally decided by A. N. Sen J. and the application for re-opening the same over again at the stage of taxation would be barred by res judicata.

14. I have already held that for the purposes of taxation the application before A. N. Sen J. was such that it should have been moved by way of Chamber Summons and not by way of Notice of Motion. The Court at that stage must have proceeded on the basis that it was a proper application to be disposed of in Court. The point was neither urged nor decided by the learned Judge. In that view of the matter for the purposes of taxation unless otherwise ordered the point should be gone into at that stage.

15. On the second point my attention has been drawn to the rule of practice which is being followed by the Taxing Office in such matters ever since 1917 pursuant to the Rulings of Chitty and Chaudhury JJ. The said practice direction provide as follows:

"Note by the Regr. (Mr. Hechle as Taxing Officer) on 14-5-1917

I suggest that the profession should be informed that in future if application which can be made in Chambers are made in Court the Taxing Officer will in the absence of a certificate tax the costs of the application as of a Chamber application.

"I see no particular objection of the Registrar in writing to the incorporated Law Society to remind them of what are properly Chamber matters but I think the attorneys ought to learn the Rules for themselves. I do not allow them to evade responsibility or to plead ignorance of the Rules with regard to paragraph 2 of the Note (I felt that I must take it that the Court considered that the application in question was proper for disposal in Court) I think that Counsel should not be allowed on taxation unless there has been a special certificate to that effect. This should apply to matters which have by inadvertence been dealt with in Court though they were really Chamber matters. It is the duty of the Counsel and Attorneys to see that the application is made in the proper place."

C. W. Chitty,
15-5-1917."

Chaudhury J. "I do not think it is any use to write to the incorporated Law Society Chamber application if made in Court should be taxed as Chamber application unless otherwise directed by the Court. The mere fact they are disposed in Court sometime, does not affect the question of taxation-I do not usually certify for Counsel in Chamber application.

A. Chaudhury
17-5-1917."

"The Taxing Office will please note and act accordingly.

16. The said directives were being followed ever since 1917 in similar matters and accordingly such a practice has become the law of the Court. As observed by Tindal C. J. in Scales v. Cheese, (1844) 12 M & W 685 at p. 687 "Every Court is the guardian of its own records and master of its own practice."

17. In my opinion, since this practice has existed since at least 1917 I see no reason why the same should not be adhered to without even questioning the reason for doing so. In the case of Hanutmull Boid v. Federation Bank of India in Suit No. 2020 of 1947 (Cal) a similar point was raised in taxation and the same came up before G. K. Mitter J. who by his judgment and order D/- 13-9-1961 (unreported) disallowed the fees of counsel charged on the basis of a motion and allowed the fees on the basis of a Chamber application.

18. That being the position I decide that the Bill of cost No. 272 of 1967 in so far as the same related to the application which was disposed of by A. N. Sen J. should be passed in accordance with the charges prescribed for Chamber Summons and not as that of Notice of Motion. The applicant having succeeded should get the costs from Mr. Dutt's clients who opposed. Certified for Counsel.

19. Let the Registrar Original Side circulate the order in a concise form as a practice direction for the benefit of the profession and of the Taxing Office.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 81 (V 59 C 15)

S. K. CHAKRAVARTI, J.

Lalit Mohan Ghosh, Appellant v. Atal Mondal and others. Respondents.

A. F. A. D. No. 2231 of 1961, D/-14-I-1971.

Tenancy Laws — Bengal Tenancy Act (8 of 1885), Section 48-C, Proviso — Tenant remaining in continuous possession by asserting title as Korfa-tenant for more than 12 years after expiry of lease — Tenant acquires non-ejectable right under proviso to Section 48-C. (X-Ref:— T. P. Act (1882), Section 116). (X-Ref:— Limitation Act (1963), Articles 64-65). (Para 2)

Even if the doctrine under Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act is applied, continuous possession have been assented to by the landlords. Otherwise it seems impossible to accept the proposition that the landlords would allow the erstwhile right to continue in possession for about 25 years after the expiry of the lease. The tenants had been holding over to the knowledge of the landlord continuously, openly, by asserting title as korfa tenants for more than 12 years, and under the doctrine of adverse possession have also acquired a non-ejectable right. JUDGMENT:— The only point that arises for determination in this appeal by the defendants is as to whether the plaintiff could claim a right to be declared as Korfa-Raiyats under the defendants-appellants even after the expiry of the period of lease of their predecessor-in-interest, without any direct evidence to show that the landlords had given consent to such holding over.

2. Admittedly, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs was one Annada and he was in possession of the case-land on the basis of a Kabuliyat for a term of 7 years expiring with the last of the term does not necessarily create a tenancy of any kind (Gopal Chandra v. Khater Karikar, 33 Cal WN 1207 = (AIR 1930 Cal 262)) and though the assent of the lessor cannot be inferred merely from his delay in taking steps to evict the lessee (Ratan v. Farshi, (1907) 11 Cal WN 826), but in a case where the tenant retained possession for 11 years after the expiration of the lease, the Court inferred that there was tenancy by holding over (Safar Ali v. Abdul Majid, 31 Cal WN 282 = (AIR 1927 Cal 279)). The very fact that for about 24 years since the expiration of the term of the lease the erstwhile korfa-tenant continued in possession would go to show that the tenant had been holding over with the consent of the landlord. In Ratan's case the suit was brought within one year and 7 months after the expiry of the lease. That was too short a period to lead to a different conclusion. Mr. Mitra has also relied on the decision of this Court in (Paramananda Singh v. Syjou Singh, 24 Cal LJ 30 = (AIR 1917 Cal 219)). That was a case where the tenancy was governed by Act VIII of 1869. The period of the lease expired with the 12th of April 1907 and on the 8th and 15th of October 1910 notices had been served on the defendants who were also tenants, to quit. So the period was not long enough to raise an inference of consent on the part of the landlord. Moreover, in that case Their Lordships had also observed that the position might have been different if the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act had governed that case. Therefore, that case does not lay down any proposition that there cannot be any such holding over. Moreover, there is a clear decision of this Court in Gosta Behari v. Panchanon, AIR 1959 Cal 601 which would go to show that such a suit by the tenant would be admissible. That was also a case where the tenant was in possession on the basis of a Kabuliyat and on the expiry of that Kabuliyat the landlord filed a suit for ejectment but that suit was dismissed on account of bar of special limitation prescribed in Article 1-3 to Schedule III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore the landlords filed a suit claiming damages for use and occupation from the expiry of the lease to 1353 B. S. with an alternative claim for rent. This Court held that whatever may be the ground for dismissal of the suit the fact remains that the respondents under-riayats were continuing to occupy their land without any break or interruption and the appellant landlord was no longer entitled to eject them. Mr. Mitra wants to distinguish that case on the ground that there an intervening suit to eject had been dismissed, but in my view that fact is not very much material. In this case also the plaintiffs acquired a non-ejectable right. A korfa tenant can be ejected under Section 48-C of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Certainly he could be ejected under Clause (c) of Section 48-C, on the ground that the term of his lease had expired, but there is a proviso to the main Section 48-C, and, under that proviso, an under-riayat shall not be liable to ejectment on the ground that the term of his lease has expired if he has been in possession of his land for a continuous period of 12 years whether before or after, or partly before and partly after the commencement of the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act 1928 or has a homestead thereon. In this particular case, it is already in evidence that Annada and after him his heirs have been in continuous possession of land since 1332 B. S. Therefore, under this proviso to Sec. 48-C they have acquired a non-ejectable right in the case-lands and even if the doctrine under Section 116 of the Transfer of Property Act is applied, there is also evidence to show that it must have been assented to by the landlords. Otherwise it seems impossible to accept the proposition that the landlords would allow the erstwhile right to continue in possession for about 25 years after the expiry of the lease. The tenants had been holding over to the knowledge of the landlord continuously, openly, by asserting title as korfa tenants for more than 12 years, and under the doctrine of adverse possession have also acquired a non-ejectable right, (vide Saroj's case, (1941) 45 Cal WN 126, and the cases reported in 22 Cal LJ pp. 119-54) = (AIR 1915 Cal 625 and AIR 1915 Cal 787).

3. Mr. Mitra contends that at the most it may be stated that the landlord's suit would be barred but the tenant cannot file a suit for a declaration of his tenancy right. I do not think that this proposition is a sound one. What actually happens in such a case is that the tenant acquires an indefeasible title to the land by holding it over for a period of 12 years continuously and whether he is a defendant or a plaintiff is not a relevant factor at all.

4. The result, therefore, is that this appeal fails and is dismissed.

5. There will be no order as to costs in this Court.

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 82 (V 59 C 16)
RAMENDRA MOHAN DATTA, J.

Karam Chand Thapar and Bros. (Coal Sales), Plaintiff v. Inder Mohan Kapoor, Defendant.

Suit No. 4243 of 1969, D/- 13-1-1971.

Letters Patent (Calcutta), Clause 12 — Leave under — If defendant will be put to great hardship amounting to injustice when the suit is permitted to be tried in Calcutta High Court leave granted at the time of institution of the suit must be cancelled on a revocation application. (Paras 7 and 8)

At the time of granting leave the balance of convenience of the parties is a relevant factor. It cannot however be considered when the leave is sanctioned ex parte. Then it can be properly determined while revocation of the leave is sought. (Para 1)

The balance of convenience must be shown to be overwhelmingly in favour of the suit being heard by a court other than that granting the leave. Whether the defendant will be seriously prejudiced resulting in injustice when the revocation is not made must be considered. (Para 2)

Thus when in a suit by an employer against an ex-employee the entire evidence is available at Madras, the workshop of the defendant, and it will be tremendously costly to call all the witnesses to Calcutta High Court which has granted the leave and almost the whole of the cause of action has arisen in Madras, great hardship amounting to injustice will be caused to defendant if the suit is allowed to be tried by the Calcutta High Court. Therefore the leave must be revoked. (Paras 5, 7, and 8)

ORDER:— In my opinion, if the materials which are now being placed before the Court had been available to the Court at the time of granting such leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent then the court, in its discretion, would not have granted the leave considering the balance of convenience of the parties. In exercising its discretion in granting leave under clause 12 it is always relevant for the Court to consider the question of balance of convenience but it is not possible for the Court to consider the same when the Court grants this leave ex parte at the time of the institution of the suit. Therefore the proper time to consider the balance of convenience is the time when the application for revocation of the leave under clause 12 is heard.

2. To succeed in an application for revocation of leave on the ground of balance of convenience, a strong case has to be made out. In other words, a mere balance of convenience would not be enough but it must be such that it would be overwhelmingly in favour of the suit being heard by a Court other than the Court granting the leave. The paramount consideration for the Court in such a case would be to consider whether in acquiring jurisdiction it would cause serious prejudice resulting in injustice to the defendant if the suit would be permitted to be proceeded with in the Court where it has been instituted with such leave.

3. In my opinion, this is a case where leave ought to be revoked on the basis of the following considerations.

4. The plaintiff has its branch office at Madras. Its registered office is at Calcutta. The defendant resides at Madras. The defendant was appointed as the plaintiff's branch manager at Madras in 1958. As such branch manager the defendant looked after the plaintiff's business in the territory allotted to the Madras branch as per instructions received from Calcutta. Under the supervision of the defendant the books of account and records were maintained at the Madras office. The defendant got his monthly salary and other remunerations at Madras and earned a share of the profit as commission at Madras. The defendant acted as such branch manager till May 23, 1969 when his services at Madras were terminated by the plaintiff. During his service as branch Manager the defendant withdrew various amounts and the same were recorded in a mutual, open and current Account maintained at the said Madras branch. The plaintiff claims herein recovery of such amount to the extent of Rs. 1,10,154.59 P. from the defendant. The plaintiff's further allegation is that the defendant was bound in a fiduciary character and/or charged with the duty of looking after and/or protecting the interests of the plaintiff and its business including the collection of all outstandings due to the plaintiff and protection of all stores and stocks of the plaintiff at Madras. In breach of trust and/or neglect of duty the defendant failed and neglected to recover or take any steps for the recovery of several large sums of money amounting to a sum of Rs. 1,50,000/- with the result the plaintiff has suffered loss to that extent. Besides the same the defendant also failed and neglected to account for 570 tonnes of coal valued at Rs. 67,197.30 paise. The total claim against the defendant is for a sum of Rs. 3,70,264.62 paise. In annexure 'C' to the plaint a long list of the names of the parties from whom moneys have not been realised by the defendant to the total extent of Rupees 1,10,154.59 paise have been set out. They are mostly of places in and around Madras.

5. It would clearly appear that practically the entire evidence is available at Madras and it would be a tremendously costly affair to call the various witnesses who might be necessary to be called both to prove and to disprove the allegations in the plaint. The entire books of account must be at Madras. It is no doubt true that the plaintiff might be in a position to bring down all these books from its Madras office to Calcutta but it would be extremely difficult for the defendant to call his witnesses, who must all be in or around Madras, if the defendant has to succeed in his defence. In fact, the defendant has set out the names of five witnesses who are residents of Madras. Those persons dealt with the books of account and other ledgers in the Madras office of the plaintiff. They are within the control of the plaintiff. If the defendant has to call them at Calcutta they have to apply for and to obtain leave of office for several days from the plaintiff from time to time and it is difficult to predict whether such persons will be willing to travel this long distance to Calcutta on their own or at the expenses to be provided by the plaintiff. In all probability and very likely the defendant has to bear their expenses for coming down to Calcutta if such persons would at all be granted leave by the plaintiff to give evidence against the plaintiff and in favour of the defendant. The long list of parties practically all of whom are in or around Madras, might be relevant witnesses at the trial to disprove the various charges made against the defendant by the plaintiff in this suit. At least some of them might be called by the defendant. The sum involved is a very large sum and the defendant no doubt has to take proper steps to contest this suit. In paragraph 20 of the affidavit of the defendant it has been stated that 7 Madras Banks undertook financial assistance in respect of the transactions complained of by the plaintiff. The employees of these Banks and their books might be relevant at the trial of the suit. In short practically the whole of the cause of action excepting a little part thereof arose within the jurisdiction of the Madras Court.

6. The learned Advocate General placed the various terms and conditions of the agreement whereby the defendant was appointed the branch manager and contended that the agreement was entered into at Calcutta and considering the balance of convenience from the point of view of the plaintiff the suit should be allowed to be proceeded with in this Court.

7. In my opinion, the defendant will be put to a great hardship and inconvenience if the suit is allowed to be proceeded with in the Calcutta High Court. On the contrary, considering the facts and circumstances of this case the plaintiff will not in any way, be prejudiced if the suit is proceeded with at Madras where the plaintiff carries on business through its branch office and can well have all the evidence available there. If the defendant has to defend the suit at Calcutta the hardship and inconvenience which would be caused to him would amount to injustice.

8. Accordingly, I have no hesitation to uphold the contention put forward on behalf of the defendant and to revoke the leave under clause 12 of the Letters Patent which was granted at the time of instituting this suit. Upon such revocation being ordered the plaint is liable to be and is hereby directed to be taken off the file with liberty to the plaintiff to present this plaint with suitable modifications at the proper and convenient Court at Madras.

9. I accordingly make an order in terms of prayer 1 of the Summons and I direct that each party would pay and bear its or his own costs. Certified for counsel.

Order accordingly.

C. R. Dutt, for Petitioner; Somnath Chatterjee, Naranarayan Gooptu, S. K. Dutt, B. N. Sett and Sinil Mukherjee, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— Much of the sting has been taken away from this Contempt proceeding by the passage of time. The petitioner and his wife are the sole share-holders and Directors of Metro Engineering Works Private Limited which has its office and factory at No. 38 Kansaripara Road within the Bhowanipore Police Station. It is alleged that in June 1967, the workers of the aforesaid Company 'gheraoed' the supervising staff on several occasions and also staged a 'gherao' at the residence of the petitioner, and in spite of repeated requests, the Police authorities failed to take any action in regard thereto. On the 19th July, 1967, in an application under Article 226 of the Constitution, the petitioner obtained from this Court a Rule, viz., C. R. 1285 (W)/67 calling upon the State of West Bengal some officials of the State, the Commissioner of Police and the Officer-in-charge Bhowanipore Police Station being respondents Nos. 1 to 6 and 17 workers being respondents Nos. 7 to 24 and the Metro Engineering Works Private Limited Workers Union, represented by Shri Asoke Kumar Bose being respondent No. 25, to show cause as to why a Writ in the nature of Mandamus should not be issued directing the respondents Nos. 1 to 6 to discharge their statutory obligations in protecting the rights of the petitioner and why a Writ in the nature of Certiorari should not be issued to quash the relevant records connected with illegal obstruction, trespass and demonstrations carried on by the members of the aforesaid Union.

2. There was also an Interim order in the following terms:—

"An interim order of injunction restraining respondents Nos. 7 to 24 from preventing the petitioner, his servants and agents from carrying on any trade or business, ingress to or egress from the said office premises at 38 A, Kansari-para Road, Calcutta, or obstructing movement of goods to and from the said premises or from committing assault or trespass at the said premises and restraining the said respondents from calling upon other workers and employees of your petitioner's company to join in any of the said unlawful activities."

3. There was a further interim order directing the respondents Nos. 5 and 6, the Commissioner of Police and the Officer-in-charge Bhowanipore Police Station to provide for such assistance as the petitioner might need for removal of petitioner's manufactured goods from his factory at 38 A, Kansari-para Road, Bhowanipore, Police Station. Liberty was given to the petitioner to serve the respondents Nos. 7 to 24 at the factory site at 38 A Kansari-para Road, Calcutta-25.

4. It is claimed in the present petition that the aforesaid interim order of injunction was duly communicated to the respondents Nos. 7 to 25 by the petitioner's Advocate on the 19th July, 1967. It is further alleged that on the 28th July, 1967, the petitioner's authorised representative accompanied by the Sub-Inspector of Police Bhowanipore Police Station went with 2 Lorries and 18 Coolies to take delivery of the petitioner's manufactured goods from the aforesaid factory where they were obstructed by the said Ashoke Kumar Bose, the President of the aforesaid Union and some of the Workers including the respondents Nos. 7 to 24 and the said Asoke Kumar Bose forced Niranjana Choudhury, the representative of the petitioner, to write a statement and to retire with the Lorries and the Coolies. It is further alleged that the said Niranjana Choudhury recorded the aforesaid facts in a letter to the Officer-in-charge of the Bhowanipore Police Station on the same date. It is further alleged that the said Asoke Kumar Bose wrote a letter to the Labour Commissioner, Government of West Bengal on the 25th July, 1967, referring therein to a press news which had appeared in "The Statesman" on the 21st July, 1967 that an injunction had been issued on the workers restraining them from trespassing, demonstrating and indulging in acts of violence or threatening the officers of the company with assault or preventing them from carrying on their trade or business. It is submitted that in spite of his knowledge of the prohibitory order issued by this Court on the 19th July, 1967, the said Asoke Kumar Bose and his associates being the respondents Nos. 7 to 24 deliberately disobeyed the orders of this Court by preventing the petitioner's Lorries from entering the Factory premises and driving the said Lorries away by a threat of dire consequences. It is further alleged that the said Asoke Kumar Bose aided, abetted and incited the respondents Nos. 7 to 24 to unlawfully remain in the said premises and to cause obstruction to the execution of this Court's order.

5. On this petition a Rule being C. R. 2442 (W) of 1967 was issued by this Court on the 6th December, 1967, calling upon the opposite parties Nos. 7 to 13 and 15 and 25 to show cause why they should not be dealt with for contempt for the alleged violation of the Court's order dated the 19th July, 1967, in Civil Rule 1285 (W) /67 or why such other or further order or orders made as to this Court may seem fit and proper.

6. As there was some dispute, as to whether Asoke Kumar Bose was one of the persons against whom the aforesaid Rule had been issued, at the time that Rule was attempted to be served on him, by an order from this Court it was directed that the Rule obtained as against Respondent No. 25 stood discharged and Asoke Kumar Bose was added as respondent No. 26.

7. In response to the Rule issued on the respondents by the order dated 6th December 1967 as modified by order dated 8th December 1969 as mentioned above the respondents other than the added respondent No. 26 have appeared, shown cause and have taken up a common attitude, namely that in doing what they did they had been influenced by Shri Asoke Kumar Bose who was the President of their Union and they did not realise that they were wilfully disobeying the orders of this Court and that they had acted believing the representations made by the said Asoke Kumar Bose. All the respondents against whom the Rule was issued (excepting respondent No. 26) have tendered unqualified apology to this Court and have prayed for being treated leniently. On enquiry I find that these respondents have been taken back in their jobs and they are at present working under the petitioner and that possibly explains their change of attitude. As the main contest now is against the respondent No. 26, nobody is taking any objection to the apology being accepted by this Court. The unqualified apology tendered on behalf of the other respondents is therefore accepted. The Rule obtained by the petitioner against the respondents Nos. 7 to 24 is discharged. There will be no order for costs.

8. This brings me to the main contest. In his affidavit-in-opposition Shri Asoke Kumar Bose has denied the allegations in the petition that on 28th July, 1967 he refused to allow the petitioner's representative and the Lorries with the Coolies to enter into the said Factory premises or to take away any of the manufactured goods stored therein. He also denied that he had used any threat of violence or that he had forcibly extracted any statement from the petitioner's representative Niranjana Choudhury. He however admits that he was inside the Factory premises between 8-30-9-30 a.m. on that date. He further avers that instead of threatening Niranjana Choudhury he rather escorted him to safety outside the Factory premises from the threat of physical violence from the other workers and that the said Niranjana Choudhury voluntarily made a statement to the Sub-Inspector of Police who was also present. So far as the notice of the order of injunction of this Court appearing in "The Statesman" is concerned, this respondent states that on seeing that report he wrote to the Labour Commissioner, Government of West Bengal in discharge of his duties as the President of the Union for the intervention of the Government for obtaining redress of the grievances of the workers.

9. In this state of the affidavits I suggested that the matter do stand to trial on evidence so that the allegations and the counter-allegations might be decided. The learned Counsel for the petitioner, however, submitted that the matter should be decided on the affidavits and on the facts on the record, and no expensive litigation involving taking down of oral evidence of several witnesses should be undertaken in the circumstances of the case. He submitted that on the affidavits it is clear that on the 21st July, 1967, the respondent Asoke Kumar Bose had knowledge from the notice published in "The Statesman" that an order of injunction had been passed by this Court restraining the workers of the petitioner's company from trespassing, demonstrating and indulging in acts of violence of threatening the officers of the company with assault or preventing them from carrying on their duties. If in spite of the aforesaid knowledge the petitioner aided and abetted the other respondents in deliberately disobeying the order of this Court, he should be found guilty of contempt and should be dealt with accordingly.

10. Mr. Chatterjee, the learned Counsel for respondent No. 26, has pointed out that when an order of injunction against respondents Nos. 7 to 24 was obtained from this Court on the 19th July, 1967 the respondent Asoke Kumar Bose was not a party to the Rule. Again when the alleged act of contempt was committed on the 28th July 1967, neither was the said respondent a party to the proceedings nor was any notice of the order of the Court served on him. It was only on the 31st August, 1967, that the petitioner's Advocate informed him of the order of this Court dated the 19th July 1967. Even on the 6th December 1967 when the Rule for contempt was obtained this respondent was not made a party respondent, but only the union as represented by him was made a party respondent. It was only subsequently that the cause title of the application was amended by making Asoke Kumar Bose as respondent No. 26 after discharging the Rule obtained against the respondent No. 25 which was represented by said Bose as a trade union leader. Mr. Chatterjee has submitted that it is now well-established that a proceeding for committal for contempt for disobedience of the order of this Court cannot be made against a person who was not a party to the proceedings in which the order was made and on whom no notice of the order was served. For this proposition he relied on the case of Tarafatullah Mandal v. S.N. Maitra reported in AIR 1952 Cal 919. There the question was whether a contempt proceeding could be maintained against certain officials of the Government for disobedience of an order passed in a matter in which the Government was a party, but the officers concerned were individually not made parties. In that case P. B. Mukharji J. (as his Lordship then was) made the following observations:

"It is, however, always essential even in India that an individual or an officer who is not a party to the proceeding resulting in the order alleged to have been disobeyed but who is sought to be proceeded against in contempt, must be served with a copy of the order or judgment to be enforced. It is proper course in my opinion, to insert the names of the individuals or the officer in the Rule Nisi and to serve it on him specifying the nature of the contempt with which the individual or officer served is charged.

Before a proceeding for contempt can succeed, it is of paramount importance to establish first, the service of the order of the Court said to have been disobeyed upon the person alleged to have committed contempt thereof, secondly the precise act of contempt, thirdly — the precise responsibility of the contemner in the act of contempt, and fourthly the date of the alleged contempt being subsequent to the service of the order said to have been disobeyed. These are the four indispensable requisites and failure to establish any one of them must mean dismissal of the petition for contempt".

11. It must be accepted that the first and the last of the aforesaid conditions are not satisfied in the present case, namely that the order dated the 19th July, 1967 was not served on respondent No. 26 and that the alleged act of contempt was anterior to the service of the order. In this case the order was only communicated to the said respondent by the petitioner's Advocate on August 31, 1967 even though the alleged act of contempt was committed on the 19th July, 1967. Not only is this decision binding on me, it has also my respectful concurrence. A. N. Ray, J. (his Lordship as he then was) had considered this question in the case of Sri Sri Iswar Mitto Gopal Jew v. Angur Bala Mullick reported in 70 Cal WN 1150 where his Lordship observed that the foundation of an application for contempt is personal service of the order alleged to have been violated unless it could be shown that he was evading service, and his Lordship relied on the aforesaid decision of the Division Bench.

12. Mr. Chatterjee has argued that even assuming that the respondent No. 26 could be charged with contempt on the ground that he had knowledge aliunde of the prohibitory order of this Court, it has not been established that he had committed any act of trespass. The allegations in the petition charge him with definite acts of disobedience of the order and the only allegation of aiding and abetting is that of inciting the other respondents in threatening the representative of the petitioner. It is submitted that a proceeding for contempt being a quasi-criminal proceeding a strict degree of proof is necessary in order to punish a person for such conduct.

13. Reliance has been placed on a decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Debabrata Bandopadhyaya v. State of West Bengal reported in AIR 1969 SC 189 where it has been observed as follows:

"A question whether there is contempt of court or not is a serious one. The Court is both the accuser as well as the judge of the accusation. It behoves the court to act with as great circumspection as possible making all allowance for errors of judgment and difficulties arising from inveterate practices in courts and tribunals. It is only when a clear case of contumacious conduct, not explainable otherwise, arises that the contemner must be punished."

14. It is submitted that in this case the respondent No. 26's contention is that he was present at the factory premises on the material date as the President of the Union to protect the interests of the workers. This seems to be supported by his communication to the Labour Commissioner. In the absence of any oral evidence establishing that there was any act of trespass, it is very difficult to say if there was any violation of the prohibitory order of this court by respondent No. 26 by committing trespass in the petitioner's factory.

15. Mr. C. R. Dutt, the learned Counsel for the petitioner, has referred me to Halsbury's Laws of England (Third Edition) Volume 8, page 21 where it has been stated:

"Strangers to actions. A stranger to an action who aids and abets the breach of a prohibitory order obstructs the course of justice, and this contempt is punishable by committal or attachment. The punishment is inflicted, not for a technical infringement of the order, but for aiding and abetting others in setting the court at defiance."

16. Certain authorities in support of the above proposition as set out in Halsbury was also cited by Mr Dutt. I do not think that anybody would challenge the legal proposition set out therein that a stranger would be liable for contempt if he deliberately obstructs the course of Court's justice by aiding and abetting others. He would certainly be liable for contempt, but before he could be so committed, it must be proved that the order complained of had been served on him or he had knowledge otherwise of the contents of that order and that he had deliberately chose to flout the order in order to obstruct the course of justice. In this case, as I have already pointed out, in the absence of oral testimony, it is not possible for me to determine whether there was actual and wilful disobedience to the orders of this Court. The other authority cited by Mr. Dutt is a passage from the Supreme Court in the case of Bunna Prasad v. State of U. P. reported in AIR 1968 SC 1348, where in paragraph 10 their Lordships quoted with approval an observation of a previous decision reported in AIR 1962 SC 1089 at page 1094:—

"In order to justify committal for breach of a prohibitive order it is not necessary that the order should have been served upon the party against whom it has been granted, if it be proved that he had notice of the order aliunde, as by telegram or newspaper report, or otherwise, and knew that it was intended to be enforced, or if he consented to the order, or if he was present in Court when the order was pronounced, or when the motion was made although he left before the order was pronounced."

17. But the above observations were made in respect of a person who was a party to the proceeding. It has no application to a stranger. In the case of a stranger the knowledge of or notice of the prohibitory order must be established to the satisfaction of the Court in order to establish that the person concerned had deliberately chose to flout the order of the Court in order to obstruct the course of justice.

18. As I am not satisfied in this case that the respondent No. 26 was deliberately obstructing the prohibitory order made by this Court after having had knowledge of its passing, I must hold that this Rule as against respondent No. 26 must be discharged, and it is ordered accordingly. There will be no order for costs.

19. In the result this Rule is discharged as against all the respondents against whom it was issued. There will be no order for costs.

Petition dismissed.

(A) Civil Procedure Code (1908), Order 6, Rule 17 — Amendment of plaint in appeal — Amendment of plaint practically changing the nature and character of the suit and raising fresh issues triable on evidence, cannot be allowed at the belated stage of appeal. (Para 7)

(B) Civil Procedure Code (1908), Order 41, Rule 27 — Additional evidence in appellate court — Where the mortgage was referred to in the plaint with full particulars and in fact the legality and validity of that mortgage as also the proceedings arising therefrom are the subject-matter of challenge in the suit as also in the appeal, the appellate court can allow the defendant to produce certified copy of the registered mortgage deed in question as it is necessary for the appellate Court to consider that document in greater detail for reaching the decision in appeal. (Para 8)

(C) Trusts Act (1882), Section 66 — Beneficiary's charge — Where the trustee has mixed up his own fund with the funds of the trust estate, the beneficiary is entitled to a charge on the property bought or acquired out of mixed fund to the extent of trust money applied. (X-Ref:— Section 63). (Case law discussed). (Para 14)

The funds of the trust estate with interest invested in the property remains at all times a charge on such property so acquired. For such declaration, before a relief is granted, the amount of trust fund that was utilised for the acquisition of the property has to be ascertained. The beneficiary is entitled on that basis to relief as provided under Sections 63 and 66. An action would lie for such relief but no relief, can be granted unless the amount of the trust estate invested in the said properties is ascertained in accordance with law and the suit is for declaration of charge on such properties for the said amount and interest thereon if found admissible. (Para 14)

(D) Trusts Act (1882), Section 64 — "Transferee" and 'conveyance', meaning of — Where the mortgagee at the time of execution of the mortgage deed acted in good faith and without any knowledge of the trust, the trust property in the hands of mortgagee in good faith for consideration, cannot be followed by the beneficiary. The mortgagee is entitled to protection under Section 64. (X-Ref:— Section 63). (Case law discussed). (Paras 18 & 19)

The word used in Section 64 is 'a transferee' and not a purchaser. The transferee includes the purchaser as also other transferees of title of properties in transactions like mortgage, or exchange. Such transferee, to be entitled to protection, must act in good faith without notice of trust, either at the time when purchase money was paid which connotes a buyer for price paid or when conveyance was executed which connotes other transferees.

(Para 18)

Further, the word "conveyance" in Section 64 includes documents of sale, mortgage, charge, exchange and other transfer of property, so that the protection under that section is available to mortgage. (Para 18)

Apurbadhan Mukherjee, Jyotir Lal Das and Ram Sankar Mazumdar, for Appellant; Pramatha Nath Mitra, Chandra Nath Mukherjee (for No. 3), for Respondents.

SALIL KUMAR DATTA, J:— This appeal is by the plaintiff against a judgment and decree dismissing his suit. The case of the plaintiff as stated in the plaint is as follows:—

2. The grand-father of the plaintiff, Ramani Mohan Chatterjee (since deceased) left considerable properties in Government Securities, shares of Companies, debts payable by different parties as also landed properties. He left a will with a codicil whereby his two sons, Rajat and Jagat (defendant 1) were given specified annuities during their life time and there were provisions for others also. The trustees appointed by the will were directed to hold the residue of the estate upon trust during the natural life of the said sons and after their death to divide the estate with its accumulations of income in equal shares amongst his grand sons through the said sons. The trustees were empowered to sell the properties belonging to the estate and invest them under such stocks, funds, shares, securities, landed properties or otherwise as they would think fit. The trustees or their survivors were empowered to appoint new trustees or trustees in place of deceased or retiring trustee or trustees. The will, which was executed on September 13, 1918, and the codicil were duly probated on March 8, 1919. The executors named in the will duly administered the estate since then till January 28, 1927 and by a deed dated January 29, 1927 new trustees namely Rajat, Jagat and Tapan Mohan, a cousin of Jagat were appointed and all the properties belonging to the estate were assigned to the said new trustees by the said instrument which was registered. Shortly thereafter, Tapan Mohan resigned from the office of the trustees and surviving trustees namely Rajat and Jagat began to administer the estate as such trustees. On or about March 6, 1931 a sum of Rupees 34,000 was withdrawn from the estate account with the Imperial Bank of India now the State Bank of India and was lent to Benoyendra Das and his brothers against the mortgage of premises No. 24-C, South Road, Entally being the suit properties (since known as 24-C and 24-D, Dr. Suresh Sarkar Road) Calcutta. The said mortgage was enforced by Rajat and Jagat by a mortgage suit and in execution of the decree they purchased the suit premises and obtained possession thereof in 1936 or 1937. Thereafter they made various improvements and additions to the said premises with the funds of the trust estate. The plaintiff averred that as the said properties were acquired with the estate funds and improvements made thereon with the same funds, they belonged to the trust estate of Late Ramani Mohan Chatterjee. Rajat and Jagat had no means, having no or small income, to acquire personally such valuable properties which were well worth rupees two and a half lakhs. In or about January 22, 1948 they mortgaged these properties as their personal properties to Hindustan Co-operative Insurance Society Ltd. (Hereinafter referred to as Society) for securing its loan to them for a sum of Rs. 70,000/-, and the Society obtained the mortgage decree in enforcement of the said mortgage in Title Suit No. 171 of 1953. Thereafter the assets of the Society vested in the Life Insurance Corporation of India, the defendant No. 3 herein, hereinafter referred to as the Corporation. The decree had since been put into execution in Title Execution case No. 11 of 1957 of the Seventh Court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipore for realisation of the decretal dues by sale of the suit properties.

3. Under the provisions of the will, Rajat and Jagat had no right to the corpus of the estate and the grand-son or grand-sons of the testator were the owners of the estate. Rajat died on April 2, 1958 leaving him surviving his widow, Smt. Jyotsna Devi; defendant No. 2. The plaintiff, the only son Jagat and also the only grand-son of Ramani Mohan was entitled to the trust estate including the suit properties subject only to the annuity payable to the defendant No. 1 during his life time. It was stated that neither Rajat and Jagat had any right to mortgage the suit properties which belonged to the estate of Ramani Mohan Chatterjee and the said properties were not affected by the mortgage created by them nor liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree. The plaintiff in or about November, 1957 came to know for the first time about this mortgage and filed a claim case being Miscellaneous Case No. 90 of 1957. Thereafter, on the plaintiff's application this Court which granted the probate, discharged Jagat from further acting as trustee as aforesaid, and, appointed the plaintiff as the sole trustee by order dated May 28, 1958 and since then the plaintiff had been in possession of the said premises as the sole trustee. The plaintiff filed the suit in the said circumstances for a declaration that the said premises were acquired with the funds of the estate of late Ramani Mohan and as such belonged to his estate and further the mortgage decree obtained by the Society did not affect the said properties which thus were not liable to be sold in execution of the said mortgage decree.

4. The suit was contested only by the Corporation by filing a written statement wherein all material allegations in the plaint were denied. It was averred that the sum of Rupees 34,000/- lent by Rajat and Jagat on March 6, 1931 was out of their own funds and mortgage was taken in their own names. The mortgage suit was filed by them personally, resulting in decree in their favour personally and in the title execution case following the properties were purchased by them in their personal names, in their interest and for their own benefit. Since then they had been in exclusive possession of the properties as their personal properties on assertion of their own title by mutating their names as owners in the Collectorate as also in the Corporation of Calcutta. They also made various improvements to the properties and had been realising rent from tenants ever since to the exclusion of alleged executors and to the knowledge of the plaintiff. There was a further allegation that the plaintiff having allowed Rajat and Jagat to hold out and represent the properties as their own, he was estopped from setting up his own title thereto. It was further averred that the Society was a bona fide transferee mortgagee for valuable consideration without notice of the trust and accordingly the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief in the suit against the Society or its successor the Corporation. There was an amendment to the written statement whereby it was further averred by way of addition to the original written statement that the Society was a bona fide transferee for consideration without notice, after taking reasonable care to ascertain that the transferors had power to transfer the premises in suit and it acted in good faith as a bona fide mortgagee thereof.

5. The suit was tried on evidence before the learned Judge when parties adduced evidence oral and documentary. The learned Judge on a consideration of materials on record came to the conclusion that the suit properties were acquired by withdrawal from the trust account and they belonged to the trust estate but the mortgagee Society was a bona fide mortgagee without notice of the trust. Accordingly, the suit properties were liable to be sold in execution of the mortgage decree passed against Rajat and Jagat and the plaintiff was not entitled to the declarations prayed for in the suit. As a result the suit was dismissed.

6. Against the said decision the plaintiff preferred this appeal while the Corporation filed a cross-objection challenging the findings of the trial Court that the suit properties belonged to the trust estate. This appeal was filed on September 18, 1958 and on April 9, 1970 the appellant filed an application under Order 6, Rule 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure for amendment of the plaint. The proposed amendment is to the effect that as trustees it was beyond the power and authority of Rajat and Jagat to mortgage the properties to the Society which also thus had no right to enforce the mortgage and accordingly the mortgage decree was not enforceable against the properties. This application is opposed by the Corporation who has filed an affidavit-in-opposition in support to which there is affidavit-in-reply by the appellant.

7. On hearing the learned Advocates and on a consideration of the materials on record, it appears that the parties went to trial on the issue as to whether the properties were acquired from the funds of the trust estate and as such they belonged to the trust and whether the suit properties were affected by the mortgage in favour of the Society and the decree passed in the mortgage suit and thus liable to be sold in execution of the said decree. There was never any issue in the suit as to whether the mortgage was beyond the power and authority of the trustees under the trust and it is to be remembered that the properties were standing in the name of the trustees personally and was dealt with by them as such. The proposed amendment, in our opinion, will practically change the nature and character of the suit raising fresh issues triable on evidence. In these circumstances, we do not think that it would be fair and proper to grant amendment of the plaint prayed for by the appellant at this belated stage. The application, in the circumstances, is dismissed without any order as to costs.

8. The Corporation has filed on June 24, 1971 an application for admission of additional evidence which is the certified copy of the registered mortgage executed by Rajat and Jagat in favour of the Society dated January 22, 1948 for enforcement of which the Title Suit No. 171 of 1953 was instituted. There is no reason why such document could not be filed in proper time. But even so the mortgage was referred to in paragraph 8 of the plaint with full particulars and in fact the legality and validity of this mortgage as also the proceeding arising therefrom are the subject-matter of challenge in the suit as also in the appeal before us. In view of the contentions raised by the appellant Corporation as also the argument advanced in opposition by the appellant thereto, it is, in our opinion, necessary for us to consider the provisions of the said document in greater details for enabling us to reach our decision in the appeal. We, therefore, allow this application without cost and direct that the certified copy of the mortgage mentioned above be admitted in evidence dispensing formal proof thereof and marked as Ext. Z as the secondary evidence of the original mortgage which was filed in the said Title Suit No. 171 of 1953 and thus formed inseparable part of its records.

9. Mr. Apurbadhan Mukherjee, the learned Advocate appearing for the appellant, has contended that the Court below has found that the suit properties belonged to the trust estate and that being so the trustee could not treat the properties as their own. Under Section 63 of the Trusts Act, the beneficiary was entitled to follow the properties in the hands of the Society and thereafter of the Corporation and obtain requisite declarations prayed for in the suit. Further Section 64 affords no protection either to the Society or the Corporation as the instant transaction is a mortgage and not a sale and the said section protects only bona fide purchaser in good faith for consideration without notice of the trust. In support, reference was made to the decision in Sivaswami Iyer v. Thirumudi Chettiar, AIR 1930 Mad 405 in which it was held that simple mortgagee could have no protection under Section 64. The reliance was also placed on the decision in Official Assignee of Madras v. T. Krishnaji Bhat, AIR 1933 PC 148 in which it was held that the beneficiaries are entitled to follow up the asset acquired out of trust funds which form the part of such asset and to a charge thereon. Mr. Mukherjee further contended that the onus to establish that the Society was a bona fide transferee without notice of the trust lay entirely on the Corporation. That onus however was not discharged and no director or competent person of the Society or the Corporation came to depose that the Society was such transferee. The only evidence that was given on this issue was by an assistant solicitor of the firm of solicitors who was engaged in the transaction of mortgage and even so it would not appear from such evidence that proper and bona fide enquiry was made by the Society or its solicitors to establish that the Society was a transferee without notice. For all these reasons, Mr. Mukherjee contended that the trial court should have decreed the suit as prayed for.

10. Mr. Pramathanath Mitra the learned Advocate appearing for the Corporation, contended in support of the cross-objection that the account with the Imperial Bank of India which was withdrawn by Rajat and Jagat at the material date on March 6, 1931 was not a trust account nor the amounts which were transferred to the said account were also from such trust account (Ex. 8). The said account was maintained and operated as the personal account of Rajat and Jagat and not as a trustees and it was also obvious that the personal funds were mixed up with trust funds without any scope for identification (vide deposits of Rs 2,000/- on June 7, 1928, Rs. 500/- on June 14, 1928 from S. B. a/c.) while the account at times was overdrawn.

He also drew our attention to the amount of Rs. 34,000/- which was lent to Benoyendra Das and others on the said date was overdrawn in the said account as loan granted by the Bank and not a withdrawal from the funds in credit of the said account and accordingly it could not be said that the amount that was invested in the mortgage was a part of the trust funds. It may be that the said loan was repaid by the realisation of the assets of the trust estate but that did not make the said mortgage a part of the trust asset. If this amount of loan was repaid by the trust fund, the trustees would be guilty of breach of trust only to the beneficiary for such fund misappropriated but the beneficiary will not be entitled to follow the properties. In support, he referred to the observations made in Lewin (16th Edition) p. 653 as also to the decision in Denton v. Davis (1812) 18 Ves. 499 = 34 E. R. 406 for the proposition that if property is acquired by borrowed money and the loan is repaid by sale proceeds of estates under the settlement, the purchased lands could not be treated as purchased by the trust money and liable to the trust of the settled estates. Mr. Mitra further contended that the properties were mortgaged to the Society by way of English mortgage which is really a transfer of the legal interest in the property subject to a right of redemption only. Such mortgage as English mortgage was accepted in England as a sale as the terms of the deed would indicate and this conception of English mortgage must be deemed to govern the provisions of Section 64 of our Trust Act which came into force sometime before the Transfer of Property Act though both these statutes are of 1882. Accordingly Mr. Mitra contended that Section 64 covered the instant transaction and as such the beneficiary is not entitled to any relief against such bona fide mortgagee.

11. Mr. Apurbadhan Mukherjee has further submitted, in reply to the contention of Mr. Mitra that the amount invested in mortgage of Benoyendra was out of loan from the Bank, that such amount was granted as a loan to the trustees by the Bank on the security of shares and Government papers which were lodged with the Bank. He referred to the receipts granted by the Bank Ext. 2 as also Ext. 1 and contended that the loan was not a loan simpliciter to the trustees but was one against the security of the trust estate and as such the properties acquired were impressed with the trust.

12. Examining the respective contentions of the parties, it will appear that the account wherefrom the amount of Rs. 34,000/- was withdrawn was opened on February 15, 1927 and on that date a sum of Rs. 2428-15-1 was credited by transfer from the balance of the account of Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, Rajani Mohan Chatterjee, Mohi Mohan Chatterjee, executors of the estate. It would also appear that various amounts were deposited and withdrawn in the said account which stood in the name of Rajat, Jagat and Tapan Mohan in their personal names and not as trustees. It is also in evidence of Tapan Mohan that Rajat and Jagat had really no income, so as to support the deposits in the said account as being their personal income. Nonetheless, the account was opened and operated as the personal account of Rajat and Jagat, Tapan Mohan having retired after a short period. There is no evidence that all the amounts which were credited in the account arose out of the asset or securities of the trust and it may be that the some amounts belonged to Rajat and Jagat personally. It is obvious, therefore, that the trustees mixed up their personal fund though insignificant with the funds of the trust estate. Just immediately before March 6, 1931 a small amount was lying in credit in the same account. On March 6, 1931, a sum of Rs. 2,000/- was deposited and an amount of Rupees 34,000/- was withdrawn from the said account. A dispute was raised by Mr. Mitra but we have no doubt that this amount was invested in the mortgage of the suit properties to secure the loan to Benoyendra and others. On this date, therefore, even assuming the sum of Rs. 2,000/- as belonging to the trust estate of which there is no specific evidence, a sum of about Rs. 31,000/- and odd appears to have been lent by the Bank to Rajat and Jagat personally. Now there is no evidence to indicate that this loan was granted by the Bank to them as trustees against the securities of the trust estate referred to by Mr. Mukherjee. Even though it may be that the Bank will not advance any amount except against securities, in absence of any specific evidence it could not be said that the loan was against any security of the assets of the trust estate. No evidence was called for from the Bank by the plaintiff to substantiate his case that the mortgage was obtained through a loan secured by the assets of the trust while the plaint case was that Rs. 34,000/- was withdrawn from trust account. In absence of such evidence in respect whereof the onus was with the plaintiff, it could not be said that the loan was accommodated against the assets of the trust estate. It may also be true that this loan was repaid by Rajat and Jagat out of the realisations of the trust estate but that will not make the amount of Rs. 31,000/- or the interest of Rajat and Jagat in the suit properties as mortgagees a part of the trust estate. It was observed in (1812) 18 Ves 499 = 34 ER 406 (supra), approved by Lewin in his "Trust". that—

"It appears, that the defendant borrowed money for this purchase; and he applied part of the money arising from the sale of the settled estates in paying off part of that debt. That cannot be represented as a purchase made with the trust money; supposing land, purchased with the produce of the trust estate, would have belonged to the trust."

13. There can be no dispute as pointed by the Privy Council in the case of Official Assignee of Madras, AIR 1933 PC 148 (supra), pursuant to the doctrine of following the trust fund which has been provided in Section 66 of the Trust Act, that the beneficiary would be entitled to a charge upon the assets in the hand of third parties for the amount of trust fund invested in such assets. In re Hallet's Estate, Knatchbull v. Hallet (1880) 13 Ch. D 696 (at p. 709) Jessel M. R. observed:—

".....where a trustee has mixed the money with his own, there is this distinction that the cestui que trust or beneficial owner, can no longer elect to take the property, because it is no longer bought with the trust-money simply or purely, but with a mixed fund. He is, however, still entitled to a charge on the property purchased, for the amount of the trust-money laid out in the purchase; and that charge is quite independent of the fact of the amount laid out by the trustee as including all persons in a fiduciary relation....."

14. It is obvious that on the authority of the above decisions, the beneficiary is entitled to a charge on the property bought or acquired out of mixed fund to the extent of trust money applied, however much it may have changed or altered in its nature or character. Accordingly the funds of the trust estate with interest invested in the property remains at all times a charge on such property so acquired. For such declaration before a relief is granted, it has to be ascertained the amount of trust fund that was utilised for the acquisition of the property. The beneficiary is entitled on that basis to relief as provided under Sections 63 and 66 of the Act in view of what has been stated. Before those sections however, are made applicable to the fact of this case, it cannot be said that the trust property has come into hands of a third person inconsistently with the trust except in respect of the amount of the trust assets which could be said on evidence to be in the credit of the trust estate and invested in assets acquired on the material date that is on March 6, 1931. An action would be lie for such relief but no relief in our opinion, can be granted to the plaintiff in this suit unless the amount of the trust estate invested in the said properties is ascertained in accordance with law and the suit is for declaration of charge on such properties for the said amount and interest thereon if found admissible.

15. The next question for consideration is whether the mortgagee is entitled to any protection under Section 64 of the Act assuming that Section 63 is otherwise applicable. We have noted the contentions of Mr. Mukherjee who relied on provisions of the section which, according to him, is confined only to a case of sale while according to Mr. Mitra it will also apply to a case of English mortgage which is in effect a sale. The proposition that English mortgage is an absolute transfer or sale was not accepted by the Privy Council in the case of Ramkin-kar v. Satyacharan, 43 Cal WN 281 = (AIR 1939 PC 14) in which it was held that under the Indian law a mortgage of a lease does not amount to a transfer of the whole and absolute interest nor does it create a privity of estate between the lessor and the mortgagee. The decision in Bengal National Bank Ltd. v. Jankinath, 31 Cal WN 973 = (AIR 1927 Cal 725) which held that an English mortgage was a transfer of absolute interest subject to equity of redemption was not accepted on the view that the interest which is inconsistent with sale retained by the mortgagor was a legal and not merely equitable interest. Mr. Mitra's contention that English mortgage should be treated as a sale regard being had to the conception of English law at the time when the Trusts Act came into force on March 1, 1882 before the Transfer of Property Act which came into force on July 1, 1882, does not appeal to us and it will not be proper to import the concepts of English law to our law, particularly after the judgment of the Privy Council has referred to above. It will appear that if such interpretation was intended to prevail, as suggested by Mr. Mitra, after the Privy Council's decision there would have been suitable amendments to the Trusts Act in respect of Section 64 for retaining such import.

16. Mr. Mitra further contended that "purchase" in law means acquisition of land by lawful act as opposed to acquisition of title by act of law as devolution of interest by succession, and purchase will include a mortgage. In support he has relied on the definition of purchase in law dictionary which gives the widest connotation to purchase as stated above while according to Mr. Mukherjee the purchase can only mean a transfer of ownership for price and never a mortgage which is not a transfer of ownership. If we turn to the provision of Section 64 of the Trusts Act it will appear that certain transferees had been given protection against the provisions of Section 63. Both the sections referred to properties in the hands of a third party and in Sivaswami Iyer's case, AIR 1930 Mad 405 (supra) it was observed that the protection is only with reference to the properties in the hands i. e. possession of the alienee and not to a transfer by way of simple mortgage. In our opinion the word "in the hands of a third party" includes possession of the moveable properties or of the immovable properties including cases where transfer of title takes place. It is not always co-extensive with the actual possession but also includes cases where there is transfer of title of properties.

17. Section 64 provides as follows:—

64. "Savings of rights of certain transferees. Nothing in Section 63 entitles the beneficiary to any right in respect of properties in the hands of (a) a transferee in good faith for consideration without having notice of the trust, either when the purchase-money was paid, or when the conveyance was executed, or (b)"

It would appear that the word used is "a transferee" and not a purchaser. It also further provides that transferee must act in good faith in the transaction without any notice of trust either at the point of time when purchase money was paid or when the conveyance was executed. If transferee was intended to mean or be co-extensive with buyer or purchaser, then suitable word would have been used as has been used in Section 92 of the Act. The transferee includes the purchaser as also other transferees of title of properties in transactions like mortgage, or exchange. Such transferee, to be entitled to protection, must act in good faith without notice of trust, either at the time when purchase money was paid which connotes a buyer for price paid or when conveyance was executed which connotes other transferees. "Conveyance" according to Wharton's "Law

Lexicon" is an instrument which transfers property from one person to another and under Law of Property Act, 1925, Section 205, includes mortgage, charge, lease, assent, vesting declaration, and every other assurance of property or any interest therein. Under different statutes in British Law, 'conveyance' means any deed which transfers a title in property. In Section 5 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, 'transfer of property' means an act by which one conveys a property. 'Conveyance' defined in Section 2 (10) of the Indian Stamp Act, 1899, includes a conveyance on sale and every instrument by which property, whether moveable or immovable, is transferred inter-vivos which is not otherwise specifically provided by Schedule 1 or Schedule 1-A as modified under the Bengal Amendment Act, 1922.

18. Though the Trusts Act came into force in 1882, a few months earlier than the Transfer of Property Act, the word "Conveyance" in Section 64 must be deemed to have such connotation as was in the prevailing British laws as also in effect accepted in the subsequent Indian statutes. It would thus appear that "Conveyance" in Section 64 of the Trusts Act should have such a connotation as including any deed whereby interest in properties is transferred and this interpretation finds support in the use of the word "transferee" instead of "buyer" in the said section. Accordingly we are of opinion that the word "conveyance" in Section 64 includes documents of sale, mortgage, charge, exchange and other transfer of property, so that the protection under that section is available to mortgage with which we are concerned. In Chartered Bank v. Imperial Bank of India, Australia and China, AIR 1933 Cal 366 (370) it was held that even if trust receipts created trust, it could not affect the defendant bank who having no notice of them, bona fide gave valuable consideration for the goods pledged (Section 64, Trusts Act). It would also appear incongruous that while under Section 64, according to the appellant, protection is given to purchasers in good faith without notice while the third party in exchange in similar circumstances would be denied of the protection for no apparent reason and the same will be the position in regard to mortgages.

19. As to the question of notice, the evidence adduced on behalf of the solicitors is not quite satisfactory in regard to the investigation of title of the properties. There is however evidence that the solicitors firm was entrusted with the completion of the transaction and in normal course of events it would be unreasonable to think that the solicitors firm would advise an improper transaction of mortgage in respect of properties which are the subject of the trust. In the requisition on title (ex. M), a specific enquiry was made in regard to the properties as to whether they were subject to trust and the solicitors acting for Rajat and Jagat did not state in their reply to the requisition that there was any trust relating the properties. It would further appear that in declaration that was obtained from Rajat and Jagat, prior to mortgage ext. J. there was a specific declaration by them that the properties are their personal properties. Even if the searches were made it would not indicate that the properties were subject to any trust. The mortgage to Benoyendra Das as also the decree following, the certificates of sale issued by Court Corporation Tax receipts are all in the personal names of Rajat and Jagat. It would, therefore, appear that there could not be notice of any trust in the said circumstances and to impute the knowledge of a trust on the Society from the statement of account would be beyond reasonable scope of enquiry. For all these reasons, we are of opinion that the Society at the time of execution of the mortgage deed acted in good faith and without any knowledge of the trust and is therefore entitled to protection under Section 64 of the Act.

20. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. The cross-objection in the view we have taken succeeds to the extent that the property was not acquired out of the trust fund nor formed part of trust estate and the finding in the judgment contrary thereto is set aside. There would be however no order as to costs in the cross-objection.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 95 (V 59 C 19)
MASUD, J.

Sm. Sovabati Dassi, Appellant v. Kashi Nath Dey and another. Respondents.

Suit No. 952 of 1959, D/- 2-9-1971.

Hindu Law — Religious endowments — Shebaitship — Nature of — If can be transferred by gift or will — Principles — Sole shebait under a deed of settlement held had validly transferred his shebaiti right by his will under the Dayabhag School.

A shebaiti right can be transferred by will according to the facts and circumstances of a case. The distinctive feature of a shebaiti right is that it cannot be absolutely alienable like all other properties inasmuch as it is an office enjoining certain religious and spiritual duties to perform. Similarly as there is an element of property also in the concept of shebaiti right the view that it cannot be transferred at all can no longer be accepted. Thus, unless there is an absolute bar under Hindu Law or an express prohibition in the deed of religious endowment, there should not be any limitation of the power of a shebait to transfer his shebaiti right by gift or by will. (Paras 6, 11)

The general limitations under which such transfer is permissible may be set out as follows:—

(a) The transfer of shebaiti right is permissible if such transfer is not contrary to the intentions of the founder as expressed in the Deed of Endowment unless an ancient or reasonable custom or usage has been followed to the contrary.

(b) Where there is perpetual or hereditary line of succession of shebaitship prescribed by the founder in his Deed of Endowment a particular shebait cannot change the line of succession by any Deed of transfer unless the shebait transfers the totality of his rights in favour of the succeeding shebait or shebait during his lifetime.

(c) A transfer of a shebaiti right is also permissible for the benefit of the idol or the deity or for imperious necessity under special circumstances.

Under a deed of endowment the settlor appointed his wife for her life as the shebait and after her death his son P, and after P's death his heirs as joint shebait. After P's death the shebaiti right devolved on P's son K as the sole shebait, who by his will appointed his adopted son, the defendant as the sole shebait of the idol and the properties attached thereto. The plaintiff who was the widow of the predeceased natural son of K brought a suit for declaration that she is also the joint shebait along with the defendant and also for consequential reliefs.

Held that the sole shebait K had validly transferred the shebaiti right by his will to the defendant thereby exhausting the line of succession prescribed by the founder in the deed of endowment and therefore the plaintiff could not claim any shebaiti right under the deed of endowment along with the defendant. Case law reviewed.

JUDGMENT:— The important point to be decided in this suit is whether a sole shebait can lawfully alienate his right to shebaitship by will under Daya-bhaga School of Hindu Law. The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows:

2. The settler of a deed of endowment, Kashinath Dey, died in 1902 leaving his widow Sm. Jhanobi Moni Dassi and a son Pulin Behari Dey. Pulin Behari Dey died a few years after the death of Kashinath Dey, as stated by Mr. Dipankar Ghosh on behalf of the defendant and not objected to by Mr. Debi De on behalf of the plaintiff, leaving Kalicharan Dey as his sole heir. Kalicharan died on December 20, 1958 leaving Kashinath Dey, the present defendant, being the adopted son of Kalicharan. Kalicharan had a natural son Panchugopal who died in May 1933. Kalicharan left a will dated November 21, 1958 whereby he appointed the defendant as the sole shebait. The material portions of the Deed of Settlement dated September 22, 1884 are stated below:

".....Also witnesseth that In consideration of the premises the said Kassi Nath Dey (Doth) hereby appoint his wife the said Shreemutty Jhanobee Monee Dassi to be the sole sabait of the said Idol Sree Sree Iswar Sreedhar Jew Thakur and to perform in the daily and periodical worship on the said Idol and to perform the several poojahs hereinbefore mentioned and from and after her death the said Kassi Nath Dey hereby appoint his son Poolin Behari Dey to be the sabait of the said Idol Sree Sree Ishwar Sreedhar Jew Thakur and from and after his death the said Kassi Nauth Dey hereby appoints the heirs of the said Poolin Behary Dey to be the joint sabait of the said Idol but in the event of the said Poolin Behary Dey having no heirs surviving then and in that case the said Kassi Nauth Dey hereby appoints his grandson by daughters to be the joint sabait of the said Idol

The immovable properties under the said deed of endowment are the family dwelling house No. 4 Gobinda Chandra Sen Lane, Calcutta and premises No. 19, Gobinda Chandra Sen Lane, Calcutta. It is also provided in the said Deed of Endowment that the idol will remain installed in the upper floor of premises No. 4 Gobinda Chandra Sen Lane and that shebait or shebait will reside in the said floor. The deed also provides for performance of the daily and periodical worship of the Idol, the performance of Rashjatra, Doljatra, Jhulanjatra, Janmashtami ceremonies and also for the support and maintenance of the shebait out of the income of the remaining tenanted portions of the said two buildings. In 1935 the widow of Panchu Gopal was a minor and she through her father and next friend Prosad Das Dey instituted a suit against Kalicharan Dey (suit No. 1096 of 1935). On July 28, 1936 a consent decree was passed relevant portions of which are as follows:

"I. That the plaintiff would be paid Rs. 20/- a month for her maintenance by the defendant Kalicharan Dey and after his death out of his estate.

II. That the specific portion in the first floor of premises No. 4 Gobinda Sen Lane as fully shown and described in the said terms of settlement as well as in the plan annexed thereto was set apart for the exclusive residence of the plaintiff."

In or about 1938 the plaintiff attained majority. The said specific portion of premises No. 4 Gobinda Chandra Sen Lane is still in the control of the plaintiff. On an application by the plaintiff before the Execution Court a consent order was passed on February 23, 1938 to the effect that the plaintiff, inter alia, accepted Rupees 3,600/- and Rs. 460/- in full satisfaction of her claim against Kalicharan or his estate for future maintenance and costs respectively. On or about May 1, 1949 Kalicharan adopted the defendant Kashinath. On December 20, 1958 Kalicharan died leaving himself surviving the defendant Kashinath and the plaintiff, the widow of the said pre-deceased son Panchu Gopal. In July 1959 the plaintiff has instituted this suit claiming for a declaration that she is also a shebait of the said deity and for other consequential benefits of a shebait as provided under the Deed of endowment. She even has asked for removal of the defendant Kashinath. Her counsel, however, abandoned the latter relief, i. e., removal of Kashinath from his office of shebaitship. The counsel, on behalf of the guardian of the deity without mentioning any ground, has submitted that a scheme for the administration of the estate should be framed by this Court. The counsel for all the parties agreed to have the matter disposed of without adducing any oral evidence. The following issues have been framed and settled:

1. Is the plaintiff a Sebait of the Defendant Deity under the Deed of Trust dated September 22, 1884?

2. Is the plaintiff's claim as a Sebait for residence and maintenance barred under the earlier consent decree and Order passed in suit No. 1096 of 1935?

3. Is the suit as framed maintainable?

4. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

Issues Nos. 1 and 2:

3. Mr. De, on behalf of the plaintiff, has argued that the plaintiff is entitled to be a coshebait with Kashinath inasmuch as under the Hindu Law a shebait cannot create a new line of succession in respect of the shebaitship and no alienation of shebait right by will is permissible as it was done by Kalicharan in favour of Kashinath in the present case. Reliance has been placed by him on Manohar Mukherjee v. Bhupendra Nath Mukherjee, AIR 1932 Cal 791 (FB) and also Sankatha Pandey v. Brij Mohan Pandey, AIR 1958 All 371 (SB). It has also been strenuously argued by him that shebaitship being an inseverable combination of an office and a proprietary right is a special kind of property which cannot be transferred by will. Reference has been made by him to Barneswar Bamdev v. Anath Nath, AIR 1951 Cal 490, the observations of Mr. B. K. Mukherjee J. on the Hindu Law of Religious and Charitable Trust (third edition) pages 169, 177, 181 and 183, Gossami Sree Girdharjee v. Romanlaljee Gossami, (1888) 16 Ind App 137 (144) (PC) and Sm. Angurbala Mallik v. Debabrata Mallick, AIR 1951 SC 293 (296, 299). He has, therefore, requested, the court to hold that the plaintiff and the defendant being the heirs of the founder are jointly entitled to be the shebait of the said debattar estate.

4. Mr. Ghosh, however, on behalf of the defendant, has argued that apart from the fact that the plaintiff is not an heir of Pulin and, as such, is not entitled to claim shebaitship there is no absolute bar to the transfer of a right of shebaitship under certain limitations. He has, therefore, submitted that his client is the sole shebait under the said Deed of Settlement and that the plaintiff in spite of being an heir of Kalicharan cannot claim shebaitship along with Kashinath. It appears to me that there has been an evolution of juridical thought on the subject of shebaitship. Originally a shebait was considered to be only a manager of a deity and is entitled to discharge the religious, spiritual or even the mundane duties which are required for the worship of the deity. Although, unlike the law of Trust, the debattar estate is not vested in the shebait various principles relating to the law of Trust are applicable to the case of shebaitship. The duties of shebait are personal and, as such cannot be delegated to any other person. Not only the shebait is enjoined to arrange or perform religious ceremonies or practices but also he is entitled to get the benefit which the settler has provided in the Deed of endowment or the Arpannama as secular benefits to the office of shebaitship. As shebaitship involves religious duties it was thought that ordinarily right of shebaitship could not be alienated. It was subsequently, however, thought that if a shebait duly appointed under the Deed of Endowment, relinquishes or surrenders his right of shebaitship he can do so provided he has transferred all his rights of shebaitship to the transferee and also that he transfers the same in favour of all the persons who are next entitled to shebaitship under the Deed of Endowment. But the courts in India have also held that the transfer of shebait rights is valid provided the transfer is not inconsistent with the consent of a religious office in shebaitship and also the intention of the founder of the trust. A new situation, however, arose when the Supreme Court in AIR 1951 SC 293 (supra) has held that shebaitship is a recognised form of property in Hindu Law and there is nothing in the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act, 1937 which prevents the General Law as Succession to be applicable to shebaitship as well. In certain cases, the validity of a transfer inter-vivos or by will by a shebait in favour of some or all the heirs of the last shebait arose and the learned Judges in the facts of the respective cases came to conflicting conclusions validating or invalidating such transfer. Juristically the "concept of property" or ownership involves a right of alienation but there are special laws relating to transfer of certain categories of property. To illustrate, right of franchise is a property which cannot be transferred under any circumstances. Similarly copyright or patent rights can be transferred only in a qualified manner. A right to sue cannot be transferred but an actionable claim or a chose in action can be assigned under certain limitations. Shebaitship also constitutes a special kind of property, transfer of which is permissible in a qualified sense. Transfer of a shebait right is invalid if the transferee is a person who is incapable or incompetent to discharge the religious duties according to Hindu Law or whose appointment as a shebait is not beneficial to the worship of the deity. Thus, the transfer of shebaitship might be declared valid if it does not conflict with well established principles of Hindu Law. It is well settled now that shebaitship comprises religious office and also some mundane benefits in the form of right of residence in the endowed property or the share of puja offerings or other benefits. If shebaitship would have been a religious office only, it would not be freely alienable. Similarly if the shebaitship comprises only material benefits it should not be absolutely inalienable. But shebaitship being both an office and profits can only be described as a special kind of property the alienability of which should be permissible under special circumstances. In this connection reference may be made to the observations of B. K. Mukherjee J. in his said Treatise at page 178:

"Although shebait right is heritable like any other property, it lacks the other incident of proprietary right, viz. the capacity of being freely transferred by the person in whom it is vested. The reason is that the personal proprietary interest which the Shebait has got is ancillary to and inseparable from his duties as a ministrant of the deity, and a manager of its temporalities. As the personal interest cannot be detached from the duties, the transfer of shebaitship would mean delegation of the duties of the transferor which would not only be contrary to the express intentions of the founder but would contravene the very policy of law. A transfer of shebaitship or for the matter of that of any religious office has nowhere been countenanced by Hindu Lawyers."

Mukherjee J. however, after discussing the general principles of cases some of which were cited before me also in conclusion made the following observation at page 180:

"Though the general proposition laid down in the cases referred to above has never been disputed, yet there are decisions of different High Courts in India, in which the rule against alienation of shebaiti right has been relaxed to some extent by reason of certain special circumstances. These circumstances may be conveniently grouped under three heads: (1) Where the transfer is not for any pecuniary benefit, and the transferee is the next heir of the transferor or stands in the line of succession of Shebait and suffers from no disqualification regarding the performance of the duties. (2) When the transfer is made in the interests of the deity itself and to meet some pressing necessity. (3) When a valid custom is proved sanctioning alienation of shebaiti right within a limited circle of purchasers, who are actual or potential Shebait of the deity or otherwise connected with the family."

Mukherjee J. has elaborately discussed large number of cases at pages 181 to 187 and came to the conclusion that within certain limits alienation of shebaitship is permissible. Reference may be made to the observation of the learned Judge at page 183 in the following manner:

"Strictly speaking, there is no specific authority of the Calcutta High Court, where apart from any custom, a transfer of Shebaitship to one in the line of Shebait has been held to be valid. Of course when the transferee is the sole and immediate heir of the transferor, the transfer can be looked upon as a surrender of the office in favour of the next heir, and such surrender does not offend either against the presumed intentions of the founder or the general policy of Hindu Law. A shebait like a trustee cannot delegate his duties to another person, but he is not bound to accept his office, and if he renounces his duties which he always can, then even if the renunciation be in the form of a transfer in favour of the next heir, it can be held valid in law. This is the view of Madras High Court, and this is exactly the view taken by Mr. Justice Page in Nagendra Nath v. Rabindra (vide Narayana v. Ranga, (1892) ILR 15 Mad 183) Muthu Kumaraswami v. Subbaraya, AIR 1931 Mad 505 and Nagendra Nath v. Rabindra Nath, ILR 53 Cal 132. = (AIR 1926 Cal 490). A transfer by one Shebait to the remaining Shebait may also be justified on the same principle. A transfer by one of the Shebait of his rights in favour of the grantor can scarcely be supported and has been expressly held to be invalid in a Bombay case, (Raghunath v. Purnapand, ILR 47 Bom 529 = (AIR 1923 Bom 358)). It has been pointed out by the learned Judges in that case, that if any one of the Shebait intends to get rid of his duties, the proper thing for him to do would be to surrender his office in favour of the remaining shebait. When the transfer is in favour of the remaining Shebait, or the sole and immediate heir of the transferor, it can safely be said that no policy of Hindu Law is likely to be affected, nor can such transaction be held to be against the presumed intentions of the founder. Within these limits therefore the alienation of a religious office can be legally permitted. It goes without saying that whatever the form of transfer may be, it cannot be by will, for nothing which the Shebait has, can pass by his will which operates only at his death. (Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar, (1908) ILR 35 Cal 226)."

5. But Rajeswari's case relied upon by Mukherjee J. did not contemplate cases where Shebaitship is not vested in the heirs of the founder. The case, however, accepts the proposition that alienation of a Shebaiti right inter vivos may be justified under special circumstances. Mr. Mukherjee has discussed the nature of shebaitship in the wellknown case, AIR 1951 SC 293 (supra). In that case the dispute between the parties was whether the plaintiff appellant the second wife of one Mritunjoy Mullick has a right to act as shebait of an idol founded by Mritunjoy and his mother, either solely or jointly with the defendant, her step son. There Mritunjoy and his adoptive mother Nityasundari jointly dedicated certain Calcutta properties to a deity. The relevant portion in the Deed of Endowment regarding devolution of shebaitship reads as follows:—

"That the said Sm. Nitto Sundari Dassi doth hereby constitute and appoint herself the Shebait of the said Thakur for and during the term of her natural life and doth hereby declare that after her death her son the said Mritunjoy Mullick shall become the Shebait of the said Thakur & after his death his wife Sm. Kiranbala Dassi and after her death the heirs of the said Mritunjoy Mullick shall be and act as the Shebait or Shebait of the said Thakur and she doth hereby declare him or them such shebait or Shebait accordingly & doth hereby direct and declare that the daily worship and other periodical festivals & ceremonies of the said Thakur should be performed by such Shebait or Shebait. Provided, however, that in case the said Mritunjoy Mullick shall happen to die without any issue or without giving any authority to his wife him surviving, to adopt, then in such case it shall be competent for the said Mrityunjoy Mullick to appoint by will or otherwise a Shebait who would act as such after the death of his said wife as aforesaid but in case the Mrityunjoy Mullick shall happen to die without any issue the shebaitship of the said Thakur after the death of his wife shall devolve upon his heirs under the Hindu Law."

Admittedly Nityasundari acted as Shebait till her death and after her death Mrityunjoy became the shebait. The first wife of Mrityunjoy died leaving the defendant Debabrota. After the death of the first wife Mrityunjoy married Angurbala and within five months after their marriage Mrityunjoy died. The suit was filed in the Original Side of Calcutta High Court and she prayed for a declaration that she was the sole shebait of the deity under the terms of the indenture or in the alternative was entitled to the shebaitship jointly with her step son, she being a co-heir of her step son under the provisions of the Hindu Women's Right to Property Act. Mr. Mukherjee, J. has stated at page 296:

"In the conception of shebaiti both the elements of office and property, of duties and personal interest, are mixed up and blended together; and one of the elements cannot be detached from the other. It is the presence of this personal or beneficial interest in the endowed property which invests shebaitship with the character of proprietary rights and attaches to it the legal incidents of property Unless, therefore, the founder has disposed of the shebaitship in any particular manner and this right of disposition is inherent in the founder or except when usage or custom of a different nature is proved to exist shebaitship like any other species of heritable property follows the line of inheritance from the founder."

In the facts of that case and on the construction of the Deed of Endowment Mukherjee, J. came to the conclusion that the stepmother and her step son being the heirs of Mrityunjoy are the joint shebait in respect of the Debottar estate. The important point in that said decision is that shebaitship like other properties is also "a property" in the general sense and that the general law of succession governs also succession to shebaitship as well. The result of the said appeal went in favour of joint shebaitship because there the Deed was construed in favour of the widow of Mrityunjoy inasmuch as Mrityunjoy was one of the founders of the Deed and that the line of succession opened on the death of Mrityunjoy. But different consequences must follow where the line of succession is specifically provided in the deed of endowment by the founder who puts an end to the line of succession at a particular point, where the founder intends to have the line exhausted.

6. The conspectus of various decisions on the character of the shebaiti right and also its alienability may now be discussed. On the question of the nature of shebaiti right, it is well settled now that Shebaiti right is an amalgam of office which enjoins the performance of some religious or spiritual duties and also some material benefits and, as such, is a property. But the concept of "property" in its application to the office of a shebait is to be understood not in its ordinary or unqualified sense. Shebaitship thus is a property of a very special nature. Reference may be made to AIR 1932 Cal 791 (supra); Bhabatarini Debi v. Ashalata Debi, (1943) 70 Ind App 57 = (AIR 1943 PC 89); Pran Krishna Das v. Controller of Estate Duty, West Bengal, AIR 1968 Cal 496; AIR 1951 SC 293; and Commr Hindu Religion Endowments v. Shri Lakshmindra Thirtha Swamilar, AIR 1954 SC 282; AIR 1951 Cal 490 (supra).

7. Further, the intention of the founder, as expressed in the deed of endowment, if any, is the primary consideration for determination of the claim for shebaitship of a particular person. The founder might prescribe a perpetual or a hereditary line of succession of shebaitship so that the religious or spiritual duties might be performed by persons who are included in such line of succession. But at the same time a shebaitship might also confer some personal benefits like the right of residence, right of receiving income or other benefits out of a debattar property, like the right to enjoy the balance sum of the offerings to the idol. Thus in most cases some mundane interests are also involved in the office of shebaitship. It is therefore necessary to determine the scope and extent of the alienability of the shebaitship.

8. On the question of transfer of a shebaiti right the learned judges in the past have expressed different views on the matter which may be enumerated as follows:

(a) A shebaiti right cannot be transferred inasmuch as such transfer would mean delegation of the duties of the delegated authority and as such, contrary to public policy: vide Rajah Vurmah v. Ravi Vurmah, (1876) 4 Ind App 76 (PC).

(b) A shebait is not bound to accept his office and he can transfer his right to the shebaitship in favour of his next heir by way of "renunciation", "surrender", "resignation" or "abdication" of his entire interest: vide ILR 53 Cal 132 = (AIR 1926 Cal 490). Panchanan Banerji v. Surendra Nath, AIR 1930 Cal 180 and AIR 1951 Cal 490 (supra).

(c) A shebaiti right can be transferred if there is a valid and reasonable custom allowing such transfer: vide Mahamaya v. Haridas, ILR 42 Cal 455 = (AIR 1915 Cal 161 (2)); Hemanta Kumar v. Prafulla Kumar, AIR 1957 Cal 685.

(d) A shebaiti right can be transferred to a person in line of succession who is not otherwise disqualified or unfit to perform the religious or spiritual duties: vide The Official Receiver v. Sm. Jogmaya Dassi, (1946) 50 Cal WN 272.

(e) Alienation of the office of shebait inter vivos in favour of a closely connected member of the family who seems to have more interest in the worship of the deity and without any idea of personal gain is valid: Nirod Mohini Dassi v. Shibadas Pal, (1909) ILR 36 Cal 975.

(f) Sale of a shebaiti right for valuable consideration is invalid unless such sale was made in favour of all the immediate successor shebaiti: vide Sitaram Bhat v. Sitaram Ganesh, (1869) 6 Bom H. C. R. 250. The transfer in the case was held to be valid also on the ground of custom.

(g) A shebaiti right can be transferred by gift inter vivos on the basis of the doctrine of necessity or benefit of deity only: vide Rajeshwar v. Gopeshwar, (1908) ILR 35 Cal 226. The decision was also justified on the special circumstances in that case following Khetter Chunder Ghose v. Haridas Bundopadhyaya (1890) ILR 17 Cal 557.

(h) The transfer of a shebaiti right by will has also been held valid in law even in favour of a possible successor shebait: Mancharam v. Pranshankar, (1882) ILR 6 Bom 298.

9. In my view, as stated above, shebaitship comprises a distinctive category of property, the transfer of which is permissible unless such transfer is repugnant to the principles of Hindu Law. Shebaitship, being an amalgam of office and property, it will not be correct to say that it is absolutely alienable like any other property or that it is not alienable under any circumstances. The general limitations under which such transfer is permissible may be set out as follows:

(a) The transfer of a shebaiti right is permissible if such transfer is not contrary to the intentions of the founder as expressed in the Deed of Endowment unless an ancient or reasonable custom or usage has been followed to the contrary.

(b) Where there is a perpetual or hereditary line of succession of shebaitship prescribed by the founder in his Deed of Endowment a particular shebait cannot change the line of succession by any Deed of transfer unless the shebait transfers the totality of his rights in favour of the succeeding shebait or shebaiti during his lifetime.

(c) A transfer of a shebaiti right is also permissible for the benefit of the idol or the deity or for imperious necessity under special circumstances.

10. Applying the said principles to the facts of the present case I hold that Kalicharan Dey has lawfully transferred his shebaiti right by the will dated November 21, 1958 whereby he appointed the defendant as the sole shebait after his death. In my view there are good reasons for the same. The relevant portions of the Deed of Endowment read as follows:

".....the said Kassi Nauth Dey (doth) hereby appoint his wife the said Sreemutty Jhanabee Monee Dassee to be the sole sabait of the said Idol Sree Sree Ishwar Sreedhar Jew Thakoor and to perform in the daily and periodical worship on the said Idol and to perform the several poojahs hereinbefore mentioned and from and after her death the said Kassi Nauth Dey hereby appoint his son Poolin Behari Dey to be the sabait of the said Idol Sree Sree Ishwar Sreedhar Jew Thakoor and from and after his death the said Kassi Nauth Dey hereby appoints the heirs of the said Poolin Behari Dey to be the joint sabaiti of the said Idol....."

Thus, under the said Deed the founder has appointed his wife for her lifetime, after her death Poolin Behari and after his death his heirs. The founder has not stated that after the death of Poolin Behari his own heirs will be the succeeding shebaiti. Nor has he stated that after the death of Poolin the heirs of Poolin and thereafter their heirs from generation to generation. The language of the said Deed shows that the founder has expressed a desire that after the death of his wife and Poolin, the heirs of Poolin will be the shebaiti. Plaintiff's husband died in 1933 and Poolin died long before. Thus after the death of Poolin, Kalicharan Dey being the only son of Poolin became the sole shebait. If during his shebaitship, Kalicharan Dey would not have disposed of his shebaiti right by will the plaintiff, being an heir of the founder, would have a claim in shebaitship, vide, (1888) 16 Ind App 137 (PC). But in the present case Kalicharan has executed a will in favour of his adopted son Kashinath Dey and obtained a probate of the same. Thus, the direction of the founder as to the line of succession exhausted itself as soon as Kalicharan Dey disposed of the totality of his rights as shebait by will. The settlor here did not prescribe a perpetual or hereditary line of shebaitship. On the contrary, the testator has prescribed a line of succession for the devolution of shebaitship only upto a point and not beyond it. In support of such conclusion reliance may be placed on, (1943) 70 Ind App 570 = AIR 1943 PC 89 Chokalinga Sethravayar v. Arumanayakam, AIR 1969 SC 569. In the present case the plaintiff in paragraph 9 of the plaint has claimed shebaitship as Kalicharan Dey's heir. It is not her case that as heir of Kalicharan Dey she has also become the heir of founder or of Poolin Behary Dev. As stated earlier if there is no perpetual or hereditary line of succession to shebaitship, after the death of the last shebait, the heirs of the founder of the settlement should be appointed shebait. But in a case where there is no perpetual or hereditary line of succession and the shebaitship has devolved on a particular person according to the Deed of Endowment his successor should be appointed from among the heirs of the founder unless shebaitship has been disposed of by the last shebait. In my opinion, in the present case there is no perpetual or hereditary line of succession prescribed by the settlor. It is well settled that in construing a will the intention of the testator is the primary consideration. If Kashinath Dey the founder or the settlor wanted that all his heirs would be entitled to be shebait, he would have stated so in the Deed of Settlement. According to him after his death his widow would be the shebait during her lifetime; thereafter his son for his lifetime and after the death of his son the heirs of the son. Kalicharan Dey admittedly became the sole shebait of the Endowment after the death of his grandmother Sm. Jhanoobi Moni Dassi and his father. Pulin Behary and therefore the plaintiff and Kalicharan's adopted son, the defendant, after Kalicharan's death should have been ordinarily appointed as the joint shebaits as heirs of the founder. But as Kalicharan Dey has already disposed of his shebait right by will the plaintiff cannot claim shebait right along with Kashinath.

11. As discussed above, there are conflicting views as to the validity of the transfer of shebait right by will. I am, however, inclined to accept the view that a shebait right can be transferred by will according to the facts and circumstances of a case. The distinctive feature of a shebait right is that it cannot be absolutely alienable like all other properties inasmuch as it is an office enjoining certain religious and spiritual duties to perform. Similarly as there is an element of property also in the concept of shebait right the view that it cannot be transferred at all can no longer be accepted. Thus unless there is an absolute bar under Hindu law or an express prohibition in the Deed of religious endowment, there should not be any limitation of the power of a shebait to transfer his shebait right by gift or by will. Reliance may be placed on (1882) ILR 6 Bom 298 (Supra). The principles laid down in the said Bombay case have also been extended in (1909) ILR 36 Cal 975 (Supra) and also in (1946) 50 Cal WN 272 (Supra) and Banku B. Das v. Kasinath Das, AIR 1963 Cal 85 and AIR 1968 Cal 496. In this connection reference may also be made to Ganesh Chunder Dhur v. Lal Behary Dhur, 63 Ind App 448 = (AIR 1936 PC 318); Nirmal Ch. Banerjee v. Jyoti Prasad Banerjee, 42 Cal WN 1138 = (AIR 1938 Cal 709) and Ramprasanna Ramanuj Das v. Sudarsan Ramanuj Das, AIR 1961 Orissa 137; Bhagaban Ramanuj Das v. Roghunundun Ramanuj Das, (1895) 22 Ind App 94 (PC) where the various courts proceeded on the basis that a shebait right can be transferred by will.

12. Mr. De has relied upon the judgment of S. R. Dasgupta, J. in AIR 1951 Cal 490 (Supra) where the learned Judge after examination of various decisions on the point has expressed his view that a shebait cannot transfer his shebait right unless there is a complete renunciation of his right in favour of all the successor shebaits. In my view the learned judge made the said observation with reference to the facts and circumstances of that case. There the testator died leaving a will in which he had provided for the devolution of the shebaitship. By a decree of the court the descendants of the testator's brothers were declared shebaits. One of the shebaits died transferring his 1/7 share of his shebait right to another shebait who as a result of the transfer got 2/7th share in the shebait right. The question arose whether this shebait who was holding 2/7th share could transfer 1/7th to his son and reserve 1/7th for himself. Thus the shebait right, according to Dasgupta, J., is not severable. Further the learned judge has also held in the facts of that case that the said transfer by the father to his son only for the purpose of eligibility of the son to be the secretary of a board of shebait was not made bona fide. The learned Judge, it may be added here, followed the reasonings of Page, J., in ILR 53 Cal 132 = (AIR 1926 Cal 490) (Supra), and also Rankin, J. in AIR 1930 Cal 180 (Supra). But it appears to me that those earlier decisions were based upon the concept that shebaiti office was more a religious office than a property. In fact it was for the first time expressly laid down in AIR 1932 Cal 791 (FB) (Supra) that shebaiti right is substantially of property and this principle was consistently followed by the Privy Council and Supreme Court in 70 Ind App 57 = (AIR 1943 PC 89) (Supra) and AIR 1951 SC 293 (Supra) respectively. It may be added here that the personal interest of a shebait apart from his religious duties has also been faintly referred to by the Judicial Committee in Pearry Mohan Mukherjee v. Monohar Mukherjee, ILR 48 Cal 1019 = AIR 1922 PC 235.

13. Mr. De also has relied upon a decision in (1908) ILR 35 Cal 226 (Supra) where it was decided that a shebaiti right can be transferred by a Deed inter vivos but not by a will. In the said decision the learned Judges disagreed with the principles laid down in (1882) ILR 6 Bom 298 (Supra). In my view this decision also was based upon the earlier concept that the shebaiti right is a personal right involving certain religious and spiritual duties and a certain personal benefit attached to the office of shebaitship. Emphasis was not made on the property aspect of the concept of shebaitship. But it may be added here that even in this decision the learned Judges also added that the transfer of a shebaiti right by a gift inter vivos is permissible under special circumstances. Although the present case is not a case of transfer inter vivos, in my view, there are many special circumstances in this case which would justify the validity of the will executed by Kalicharan Dey in favour of the defendant:

(a) The mode of devolution of shebaitship in the Deed of Endowment does not show that the settlor intended to have a perpetual or hereditary line of succession. The settlor specifically appointed his widow for her lifetime and after her death to his son Poolin and after the death of Poolin to his heirs. As discussed above the line of succession for the devolution of shebaitship was exhausted when Poolin's heirs. Kalicharan Dey was appointed the sole shebait. If, of course, Kalicharan Dey would not have transferred his shebaitship by will the plaintiff could have legitimately claimed as the heir of the founder. But admittedly Kalicharan Dey was the sole shebait under the Deed of Endowment. During the lifetime of Kalicharan Dey admittedly the plaintiff did not claim shebaitship at all. It was only after the death of Kalicharan the plaintiff claimed her shebaiti right. The adoption of Kashinath Dey has not been challenged. Kashinath Dey also admittedly obtained the probate of the will of Kalicharan Dey. The line of succession having been prescribed upto Poolin's heir, Kalicharan, there was no limitation on his power to transfer by will his shebaiti right.

(b) Further it appears from the fact of this case that the plaintiff instituted a suit (suit No. 1096 of 1935) against Kalicharan Dey for maintenance and on July 28, 1936 by a consent decree the plaintiff agreed to accept Rs. 20/- per month as maintenance from Kalicharan Dey. By the said decree a specific portion of premises No. 4 Gobinda Sen Lane was reserved for her exclusive residence. Again on February 4, 1938 another consent order was passed in an execution application in the said suit whereby the plaintiff accepted a consolidated sum of Rupees 3,600/- in full satisfaction of her claim for maintenance against the said Kalicharan Dey or his estate. In fact by the consent decree dated July 28, 1936 and the consent order dated February 4, 1938 sums of Rs. 1,000/- and Rs. 460/- respectively were directed to be paid to the plaintiff as her settled costs. It is true that the said consent decree has been qualified with the words "without prejudice of the plaintiff's right" but the fact remains that the plaintiff not only got the right of residence but also obtained a decree for maintenance. The consent order dated February 4, 1938 however has not been similarly qualified. It is significant that, although the plaintiff has been given the right of residence in the endowed property, she has not been residing there. The various proceedings between the plaintiff, on the one hand, and the Kalicharan Dey or Kashinath Dey on the other, show that the relationship between them was not normal and on account of the strained relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant the performance of the Poojah of the Thakoor may not be properly done. Thus even for the benefit of the deity the transfer of the Shebaiti right by the will of Kalicharan can also be justified.

(c) Further as stated above the right of maintenance and the right of residence of the widow have been fully covered by the previous orders of the court. In fact in the said consent orders she has agreed to accept the sum of Rs. 3,600/- in full satisfaction of her right of maintenance. It is true that the said right of maintenance has been claimed against Kalicharan and his estate but in the instant case the Deed of Endowment also provides for the maintenance to a shebait. It appears to me that as by consent her right of maintenance and right of residence has been fully provided for, she cannot be allowed to get maintenance again which will be payable to the plaintiff as a consequential benefit, if she is appointed as a co-shebait.

14. In the premises, the issues Nos. 1 and 2 should be answered in the negative.

Issue No. 3

15. Mr. Ghosh on behalf of the defendant, has argued that as by the consent decree dated July 28, 1936 and the consent order dated February 4, 1938 the plaintiff in full satisfaction of her legal rights was allowed the right of residence and the sum of Rs. 3,600/- towards maintenance, the present suit is not maintainable. But this contention cannot be accepted inasmuch as the said consent decree has been specifically qualified by the following statement "without prejudice to the plaintiff's right which she may be entitled to upon the death of the defendant". In the premises, this issue is answered in the affirmative.

Issue No. 4

16. The plaintiff is not entitled to any relief and, as such, the suit is dismissed. The costs of the parties and the costs of guardian-ad-litem will come out of the estate. The costs of the guardian-ad-litem will come at the first instance.

Suit dismissed.

S. K. CHAKRAVARTI, J.

Smt. Luxmi Devi and others, Petitioners v. Akul Mahato, Opposite Party.

C. R. No. 999 of 1971, D/- 1-9-1971.

Tenancy Laws — W. B. Land Reforms Act (10 of 1956), Section 21 — Bar of jurisdiction of Civil Court — Where the Civil Court of certain place had jurisdiction to entertain a suit at the time, the same was instituted and during the pendency of the suit the Act depriving the Civil Court of its jurisdiction was extended to that place, the Court will continue to have that Jurisdiction in respect of the suit. (X-Bef.— Civil P. C. (1908), Section 9).

Miss. N. K. Chaturvedi, for Petitioners; R. B. Mahato, for Opposite Party.

ORDER:— An intriguing point arises for determination in this Rule obtained by the plaintiffs. On the 15th of April, 1965 the petitioners filed a suit against the opposite party for recovery of a sum of Rs. 176/- as the price of the bhag produce in their share from the opposite party who was alleged to be their bargadar in respect of the land in question in the court of the Munsif at Raghunathpur in the district of Purulia. This sum included Rs. 16/- by way of interest. It is an admitted position that at the time the suit was instituted the West Bengal Land Reforms Act was not extended to Purulia. During the pendency of the suit, by Notifications dated the 24th June 1967 the Governor was pleased to appoint the 30th June 1967 as the date with effect from which the West Bengal Land Reforms Act, 1955 was to extend to the transferred territories including Purulia. By another Notification bearing the same date and published on the same date as before, the Governor was pleased to specify the 1st day of July, 1967 as the date on which Section 2, Section 3, Section 16, Section 17 (excepting sub-section (3) thereof), Section 18, Section 18-A, Section 19, Section 19-A, Section 19-B, Section 20, Section 21, Section 57, Section 58, Section 59 (so far as it relates to clause (7), thereof), Section 60 shall come into force in all the areas transferred from Behar to West Bengal under the Behar and West Bengal (Transfer of Territories) Act, 1940. A question, therefore, was raised before the learned Munsif that under Section 21 of the West Bengal Land Reforms Act, 1955, hereinafter referred to as the Act, the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to entertain the suit as it is a matter covered by Section 18 of the Act. This contention prevailed with the learned Munsif who dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs preferred an appeal and the learned Subordinate Judge, sitting in appeal, agreed with the learned Munsif that the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction and directed a return of the plaint. Against this order the plaintiffs have come up in this Rule.

2. Now, if the suit had been instituted after the relevant sections of the Act had been extended to Purulia, the question whether the Civil Court would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit would definitely arise. But herein the Civil Court had admittedly the jurisdiction to entertain the suit at the time the same had been instituted. Section 21 of the Act is the relevant section in this connection. Under sub-clause (1) of Section 21 no Civil Court "shall entertain any suit or proceeding in respect of any matter mentioned in Sections 17 and 18". It has to be considered as to whether this has the effect of divesting the Civil Court of the jurisdiction it had admittedly at the time the suit was instituted. Both the courts have held on an interpretation of Section 21 that Civil Courts would not have any such jurisdiction.

3. Upon hearing the learned Advocates on both sides I am, however, of a different opinion. It is a common maxim of law that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court, if it has to be taken away, must be taken away expressly or impliedly where there can be no question that such jurisdiction has been taken away. But if there is any question as to whether in any pending suit the amended new law would apply, there must be definite provisions to that effect. Every statute which implies that the provisions would apply to pending suits expressly provide for that. If there is no such provision, the inference would be that the Civil Court which was in seisin of the matter at a time when its jurisdiction over it could not be in question, would continue to have that jurisdiction in respect of that suit. In this particular case, sub-section (2) of Section 21 provides for the transfer of proceedings pending before the Bhag Chash Board, under the West Bengal Bargadars Act, 1950 to the Officer or Authority having jurisdiction over the area to which the proceedings relate is situate under the Land Reforms Act. That would show that the legislature was quite aware of the fact that pending proceedings might be affected by Section 21 and expressly restricted the application to proceedings pending before the Bhag Chash Board and not before the Civil Court. Therefore, even by implication, Section 21 would not divest the Civil Court of the jurisdiction it had in entertaining the present suit.

4. Mr. Mahato, learned Advocate appearing for the opposite party, submits that Section 3 of the Act would show that no other law which would be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act would have any effect. But Section 3 can have no application to the facts of this case at this stage. In this view of the matter the orders passed by the courts below must be set aside and the suit decided on merits.

5. At the same time, it is not clear as to whether the Bargadars Act of 1950 was applicable to Raghunathpur at the time the suit was instituted or whether there was any such Act which would bar the jurisdiction of the Civil Court at the time the suit was instituted. This is a point which will have to be investigated by the learned Munsif on getting back the records of the case.

6. The result, therefore, is that subject to the observations made above, the Rule is made absolute and the order of the learned Appellate Court that the Civil Court would have no jurisdiction to dispose of the pending suit is set aside and the suit is remanded back to the trial court to be heard on merits and also on the point referred to above.

7. Each party will bear its own costs in this Court.

8. Let the records go down as quickly as possible.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 105 (V 59 C 21)

P. B. MUKHARJI, C. J. AND B. C. MITRA, J.

Sitaram Jaipuria and others, Appellants v. Banwarilal Jaipuria, Respondent.

A. F. O. O. No. 91 of 1971, D/-17-9-1971, from judgment of S. K. Mukherjee, J., reported in 1971 Tax LR 978 (Cal).

(A) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 39, Rule 1 — Injunction pending suit — Application for — Main factors to be considered are question of balance of convenience and question of prima facie case. (Para 9)

(B) Civil P. C. (1908), Order 39, Rule 1 — Injunction — Balance of convenience — Where, injunction pending suit, if issued, is likely to cause irreparable loss to opposite party, while loss, if any, that may cause to plaintiff is agreed to be reimbursed, the balance of convenience lies in refusing injunction. 1971 Tax LR 978 (Cal), Reversed. (Paras 9, 77)

Where a share-holder brings suit challenging the legality of resolution sanctioning investments by a company in shares of other company undertaking a new industry and several steps to incorporate the new company are already taken and injunction if granted is likely to cause irreparable loss to the company and on the other hand the company undertakes to reimburse loss, if any, that may cause to the plaintiff during pendency of the suit, the balance of convenience lies in refusing injunction pending suit.

(C) Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act (1969), Section 22 — Applicability — Companies which are incorporated prior to commencement of the Act of 1969 do not come within ambit of Section 22. (X-Ref:— Companies Act (1956), Sections 34 (2), 149). (Case Law discussed:). 1971 Tax LR 978 (Cal), Reversed. (Paras 11, 16, 59)

Where a company is incorporated prior to commencement of the 1969 Act it is not a case of "any person or authority establishing any new undertaking after the commencement of the Act." Establishment of a new undertaking and commencement of business are prima facie different. Establishment of a new undertaking commences from the incorporation of the company. Its culmination may be the commencement of the business certificate.

(D) Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act (1969), Section 22 — The section is intended for State intervention. 1971 Tax LR 978 (Cal), Reversed. (Para 17)

Monopolies are a matter of public concern under the Act. The State is primarily bound to see that there is no concentration of economic power so as to come within its mischief. The question under Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969, is primarily a question for the Central Government and thereafter by the Commission followed by report to the Government and it is not the primary duty of a Court to adjudicate on a point whether a company is interconnected or not within the meaning of Section 22. The section does not confer any power on a shareholder to challenge the establishment of a new undertaking on ground of infringement of Section 22. Moreover, the prohibition contained in Section 22 does not make the contract or the undertaking illegal prima facie. (Paras 17, 18)

(E) Companies Act (1956), Section 173 (2) — Applicability — Section 173 (2) does not imply that any and every lapse should be visited with the consequence of ultra vires doctrine. A special business only requires to find a place in the explanatory statement attached to the notice of General Meeting of Shareholders. 1971 Tax LR 978 (Cal), Reversed. (Paras 32, 58)

Any and every legal requirement need not be placed before the General Meeting of the General body of the Shareholders. It is to be presumed that all legal requirements, before a venture is undertaken, is carried out properly. The explanatory statements should not be too strictly construed but should be given a liberal construction and the only requirement should be that its contents are clear to an ordinary person engaged in business.

(Paras 32, 63)

Where a company intends to invest its capital in a new undertaking and resolution to that effect is proposed before the General Body, it is not necessary to state in Explanatory Note attached to the notice of General meeting that legal requirements for opening new undertaking are satisfied.

(Paras 32, 42, 58 & 60)

(F) Companies Act (1956), Section 173 (2) — A company seeking approval of General Body of Shareholders for starting a new undertaking need not mention in the Explanatory Note attached to Notice that licence under Section 11 of the Industrial Development and Regulation Act is obtained. (X-Ref:— Industrial Development and Regulation Act (1969), Section 11).

(Paras 43, 78, 79)

(G) Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act (1969), Section 2 (g) (iii) — Exercise of control by a company over another company — Concept of "control" implies dominant and a dominated undertaking. 1971 Tax LR 978 (Cal), Reversed. (Para 67)

S. 2 (g) (iii) requires that the controlling undertaking must be in a position to dominate the affairs of the controlled undertaking either in respect of the management of its affairs, or in respect of its finance or with regard to the capital structure. In the absence of one or other of those features the element of control cannot come into the picture. The mere fact that there are same common Directors or that the Managing Director of one Company is a relative of the Managing Director of the other company or that a company has invested certain capital in another company do not by themselves lead to the inference that the relation of dominant and dominated undertakings exists. (Para 67)

(H) Companies Act (1956), Section 173 (2) — A company seeking approval of general body of shareholders for investing capital in new undertaking need not disclose to individual shareholders the details of financial arrangement with collaborators. (Para 80)

S. C. Sen with R. C. Nag and Sunil Mukherjee, for Appellants; Prabir Sen with Ahin Choudhury, for Respondent.

P. B. MUKHARJI, C. J. :— This is an appeal from an interlocutory order of S. K. Mukherjee, J., dated the 16th March, 1971.

2. This was an application in a representative action by a shareholder for an injunction restraining the company, Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. and its directors from holding any meeting pursuant to a notice dated September 14, 1970 or from passing any of the resolutions set out in the said notice, or from giving effect to the resolutions, if passed. This notice dated Sep. 14, 1970 was accompanied by an explanatory statement under S. 173 (2) of the Companies Act.

On the 12th Oct., 1970, the said resolution was unanimously passed by a general meeting held in pursuance of the said notice.

3. The notice and the explanatory statement are challenged in the petition on the three following grounds:

(a) Neither document disclosed whether permission has been obtained from the Central Government as required under the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act for establishing the undertaking of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. which, when established, would be an inter-connected undertaking of the respondent company.

(b) The said documents informed the members that the work of the said polyester fibre plant has commenced; no disclosure was made whether a licence has been obtained in respect thereof as required by Section 11 of the Industries Act.

(c) None of the terms and conditions of the collaboration agreement — financial, technical or otherwise — were disclosed.

4. The learned trial Judge held that, in his opinion the undertaking of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. transpires to be an inter-connected undertaking of the respondent company to which Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 will apply. The learned Judge also held that the shareholder plaintiff had a legal right to bring an action against the company of which he is a shareholder, to restrain it from committing an illegal act under the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act or from questioning the sufficiency or validity of the notice of the resolution.

5. The learned Judge also gave a meaning and interpretation of the word "inter-connected undertaking". He held that if a relative of the managing director of the company is the managing director of another company, their undertakings must be deemed to be inter-connected undertakings in the sense of the statute, even though the undertakings may have nothing to do with each other, even though their constitution or organs of control may be totally different. He said, "This may be bad logic or poor law, but it is good Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act." Therefore, he held that because Rajaram Jaipuria and Sitaram Jaipuria were interested and were related, therefore it became an inter-connected undertaking. Rajaram Jaipuria is the managing director of the respondent company and Sitaram Jaipuria is the managing director of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. They are bro-

6. The learned Judge also came to a certain conclusion with regard to clause (b) of the Explanation of inter-connected undertakings in Section 2 (g) of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969, which reads as follows:

"Explanation— For purposes of Cl. (g) two or more undertakings shall be deemed to be inter-connected (b) if one or more individuals together with the relatives or firms in which such individuals or their relatives are partners jointly or severally own, manage or control the other".

On the interpretation of clause (b), the learned Judge said,

"No doubt, Cl. (b) is one of the glaring instances of bad drafting in an ill-drafted statute. The syntax is defective but nevertheless, the sense is clear. It means that two or more undertakings shall be deemed to be inter-connected, if one or more individuals who own, manage or control one undertaking, together with his or their relatives jointly or severally own, manage or control the other undertaking or other undertakings."

In fact, the learned Judge supplied the words "if one or more individuals who own, manage or control one undertaking" to the statute. The learned Judge made it clear,

"I desire to make it clear that I hold that new undertaking to be an inter-connected undertaking on the sole and solitary ground that the respective managing directors are relatives and for no other reason."

7. To complete the statement of facts, one more point has to be noted. The plaintiff in this case filed another suit in the High Court being Suit No. 105 of 1970. That suit was instituted on or about the 26th day of February, 1970 and a prior suit. In that suit, the prayer inter alia was a declaration that the notice dated the 29th January, 1970, with an explanatory note annexed thereto, was bad, inoperative and of no effect and for permanent injunction restraining the respondents from implementing or giving effect to any of the resolutions passed at the meeting. There, in that suit, Ghose, J., ordered on the 8th September, 1970:—

"There shall be an interim injunction restraining the respondent directors (company's directors) from acting on the resolution No. 1 passed at the general meeting held on the 27th February, 1970 until the same is confirmed and approved at a meeting properly notified. All other interim orders stand vacated."

The respondents called a properly notified meeting and the resolution has been unanimously passed, confirmed and approved.

8. S. K. Mukherjee, J., after having come to the aforesaid findings gave an order for injunction restraining the respondents or each of them from giving effect to the resolutions set out in the notice dated September 14, 1970. This is an appeal against that order.

9. As I see it, there are two main considerations in an application for injunction. One is a question of balance of convenience. The other is a question of prima facie case. The petitioner never attended any meeting. The company was incorporated on the 26th March, 1970. Prior to that, on the 29th July, 1969, there was a Letter of Intent issued in favour of Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. Then on the 25th July, 1970, the Letter of Intent was transferred to Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. On the 9th July, 1970 there was the commencement of business certificate. On the 7th October, 1970 industrial licence was issued in favour of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. The petitioner holds only 7 voting rights. Besides, the appellants and their directors have given an undertaking to make good all the losses should they fail in the appeal. Apparently on the basis of these grounds, there is little scope for granting an injunction. From that point of view, the learned Judge's order cannot be sustained. He has in fact virtually decided the suit. The suit is pending. It is a representative action. The advertisements have not yet been issued. From that point of view, if injunction is granted, the whole affair will have come to a standstill. Time for different statutory engagements will have expired and it will mean freezing of the many steps that have been taken for setting up of the Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. and which was already functioning. On the other hand, if there is no injunction, the applicant will hardly lose anything being completely guaranteed by the undertaking given to this Court by the Appellants. Therefore, on the balance of convenience, it does not seem to me to be at all a case for injunction specially in this matter. The balance of convenience is not in favour of granting the injunction asked for. See Mahaliram Santhalia v. Fort Bloster Jute Manufacturing Co., AIR 1955 Cal 132. See also Richard Chow v. James Chow, (1971) 75 Cal WN 173. The celebrated observations in the judgment of James, L. J. in MacDougall v. Gardiner, (1875-1 Ch. D. 13 at page 23) may bear repetition:—

"Has a particular individual the right to have it for the purpose of using his power of eloquence to induce the others to listen to him and to take his view? That is an equity which I have never yet heard of in this Court, and I have never known it insisted upon before; that is to say, that this Court is to entertain a bill for the purpose of enabling one particular member of the company to have an opportunity of expressing his opinions viva voce at a meeting of the share-holders. If so, I do not know why we should not go further, and say, not only must the meeting be held, but the share-holders must stay there to listen to him and to be convinced by him. The truth is, that is only part of the machinery and means by which the internal management is carried on. The whole question comes back to a question of internal management; that is to say, whether the meeting ought or ought not to be held in a particular way, whether the directors ought or ought not to have sanctioned certain proceedings which they are about to sanction, whether one director ought or ought not to be removed, and whether another director ought or ought not to have been appointed. If there is some one managing the affairs of the company who ought not to manage them, and if they are being managed in a way in which they ought not to be managed, the company are the proper persons to complain of that. It seems to me, therefore, that the thing is perfectly plain and obvious, and when the Master of the Rolls had the case before him he immediately pointed it out, and said, "You have the wrong plaintiff here — the plaintiff must be the company." From the first opening of this case before us, I have never had any doubt in my own mind that this was a bill which, if it was to be sustained at all, could only be sustained by the company."

10. The next question in an application for injunction is to find out where the prima facie case lies. It appears to me that the prima facie case is against the plaintiff. I will first examine Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969. It says:—

"No person or authority other than Government, shall after commencement of this Act, establish any new undertaking which when established would become an inter-connected undertaking or an undertaking to which clause (a) of Section 20 applies except under and in accordance with previous sanction of the Central Govt."

11. The learned Judge applied this section and held that the Swadeshi

Cotton Mills Ltd. and the Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. come within the ambit of Section 22. It seems to me that prima facie the crucial words of the section "after the commencement of this Act" have been ignored by the learned Judge. Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. was incorporated on the 26th March, 1970. The Letter of Intent from the Government was given on the 24th July, 1969. The transfer of the Letter of Intent to Swadeshi Polytex was made on the 20th January, 1970. The certificate for commencement of business was granted to Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. on or about the 9th July, 1970.

12. If the incorporation of the company is taken as the establishment of the undertaking, then that took place on the 27th March, 1970 long prior to the Act came into force. Therefore, it was not a case of "any person or authority shall after the commencement of this Act establish any new undertaking." The Act came into force on the 1st June, 1970. Then it is said that incorporation of the company is not the establishment of a new undertaking but the commencement of the business certificate dated the 9th July, 1970. In this case and at that time, the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969, had come into force.

13. Section 34 of the Companies Act is quite explicit on this point. Section 34 (2) of the Companies Act states:

"From the date of the incorporation mentioned in the certificate of incorporation, such of the subscribers of the memorandum and other persons, as may from time to time be members of the company, shall be a body corporate by the name contained in the memorandum, capable forthwith of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company, and having perpetual succession and a common seal but with such liability on the part of the members to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up as is mentioned in this Act."

14. The significant features about Section 34 (2) of the Companies Act may be noted. From the very inception of the incorporation it not only becomes a body corporate but also "capable forthwith of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company" and also with "liability on the part of the members to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up as is mentioned in this Act." I can read these features only as establishing "company capable of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company." If this is not the establishment of an undertaking I do not (know?) what is. With this establishment of business, it can buy lands it can build factories, it can collaborate with other concerns. In fact, all these have been undertaken by Swadeshi Polytex Ltd.

15. Section 149 of the Companies Act provides for the restrictions on commencement of business, namely, where a company having a share capital has issued a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares, it is provided that the company shall not commence its business or exercise any borrowing powers, unless certain things are done. Similarly, for a company having a share capital which has not issued a prospectus, the company shall not commence any business or exercise any borrowing powers, unless certain formalities are performed. Similarly again, Section 149 (2-A) provides for certain other restrictions for a company having a share capital whether or not it has issued a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares. When these requirements are satisfied then the Registrar shall certify that the company is entitled to commence business and the certificate shall be conclusive evidence that the company is so entitled as provided in Section 149 (3).

16. Now it is this certificate and this statutory provision which is contended by the learned Counsel for the respondent as the date of establishment of a new undertaking. Establishment of a new undertaking and commencement of business prima facie appears to me to be different. Establishment of a new undertaking commences from the incorporation of the company. Its culmination may be the commencement of the business certificate. Learned Counsel for the respondents have relied on a decision of the Supreme Court reported in Travancore-Cochin Chemicals (F) Ltd. v. Commr. of Wealth-Tax, Kerala (65 ITR 651) = (AIR 1967 SC 1534). There the Supreme Court had to consider a matter under the Wealth Tax Act under Section 45 (d) of the Wealth Tax Act. It was held in that case by the Supreme Court that the appellant was "established" within the meaning of the proviso to Section 45 (d) i December, 1953, or on January 1, 1955 and that there was a clear distinction between the word "registered" or "incorporated" and the "established". I think that there that interpretation was necessary and as Sikri J. pointed out at page 655 "if the legislature was thinking of incorporation of a company then we fail to understand why the word was not used instead of the word 'established'." Further, if we look at clause (d); it excludes certain industrial undertakings from the benefit of Section 45; what are excluded are companies "formed by the splitting up, or the reconstruction of a business already in existence or by the transfer to a new business of any building, machinery or plant used in a business which was being previously carried on." Ordinarily the date of incorporation of a company has nothing to do with the transfer of a machinery or plant to it." That consideration is absent here. The learned Counsel for the respondents also relied on another Wealth Tax Act case, namely, Standard Mills Co. Ltd. v. Commr. of Wealth Tax Bombay reported in 63 ITR 470 = (AIR 1967 SC 595). Reference was also made to the observations of Buckley J. at page 393 in the case of In re. Otto Electrical Manufacturing Co. reported in (1906) 2 Ch. D. 390. But the learned Judge there had no occasion to contrast it with such statutory provisions as Section 34 (2) of the Companies Act. But those decisions of the Supreme Court are with respect to the Wealth Tax Act where different considerations apply. The point we are concerned with relates to the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969. Prima facie it appears to me that establishment of a new undertaking and commencement of business should be construed in that light. But in any event, without deciding the point itself and without deciding the issue which will ultimately be tried in the suit, I am of the view prima facie that this does not come within the ambit of Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969.

17. There is a further important consideration on prima facie case. I believe prima facie that Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 is intended for State intervention. It is not intended for aggrieved share-holders. The Act states in the preamble — "An Act to provide that the operation of the economic system does not result in concentration of economic power to the common detriment, for the control of monopolies, for the prohibition of monopolistic and restrictive trade practices and for matters connected therewith or incidental thereto." Monopolies, therefore, are a matter of public concern under the Act. The state is primarily bound to see that there is no concentration of economic power so as to come within its mischief. Therefore, this prohibition under Section 22 is intended for the State and not for disgruntled share-holders or a share-holder of .7 voting rights.

18. The reason is obvious. If a solitary share-holder is given this right, then the Court will have to come to a decision on Section 22 of the Act. But that decision is left with the Central Govt. in the first instance by the statute. If the Central Government is of the opinion that no such approval can be made without further enquiry, then under Section 22 (3-B) of the Act it may refer the application to the Commission for an enquiry, and the Commission may, after such hearing as it thinks fit, report to the Central Government thereon. Under Section 22 (3-C) of the Act, upon receipt of the report of the Commission, the Central Government may pass such orders with regard to the proposal for the establishment of a new undertaking as is contemplated under Section 22 of the Act as it may think fit. The whole scheme and procedure is through the Central Government and the Monopolies Commission in the first instance, and not through the Court.

19. Besides, there seems to be another great obstacle for the respondents. The prohibition contained in Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 does not make the contract or the undertaking illegal prima facie. There are many prohibitions in public statutes but they do not raise the question of illegality or ultra vires but whose breach is otherwise provided for in the statute itself. The scheme of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 which has a series of sections on penalties and offences under Chapter 8 and Chapter 9 prima facie indicates that the establishment of a new undertaking which offends Section 22 of the Act and which is without the previous permission of the Central Government will be considered as offences under the said Act and will be visited by the penalties mentioned in the statute. See in this connection Archbold's (Freightage) Ltd. v. S. Spanglett Ltd., 1961-1 QB 374 at pp. 389 to 393 per Lord Justice Devlin and also St. John Shipping Corporation v. Joseph Rank (1957) 1 QB 267. The principles mentioned in those two English cases appear to have been followed in Neminath v. Jumboo Rao, AIR 1966 Mys. 154 and upheld by the Supreme Court in AIR 1968 SC 1358. The decision in Cutler v. Wandsworth Stadium Ltd. in 1949 AC 398 and Lord Simmond's observations at page 407 may be seen.

20. Then again the question of valuation of assets is a very important question in this application. Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 is not attracted to an undertaking unless its own assets or its own assets together with the assets of its inter-connected undertakings is not less than twenty crores of rupees. Therefore, the relevant point of time at which the valuation of its assets and the assets of the inter-connected undertakings has to be computed is a matter of great importance. The time taken by the learned Judge is 31st December 1969, that is to say, the last day of the financial year, but it has been contended that it should be the year 1968. But at that time there was no asset for Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. Besides, the learned Judge has introduced new words to give a meaning to the Explanation to 2 (g) of the Act. He has suggested that the words "who manage or control one undertaking" are to be introduced to the Explanation of 2 (g) of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969. Prima facie in an application for injunction I am against the plaintiff in so crucial a matter of interpretation.

21. Finally, on behalf of the respondents, it is said that under Section 172 of the Companies Act, every notice of a meeting of a company shall specify the place and the day and the hour of the meeting and shall contain a statement of business to be transacted thereat. The explanatory statement that is required to be annexed to the notice under Section 173 of the Companies Act is said by the appellant company not to disclose to the shareholders the fact whether the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 applies or whether any permission has been obtained.

22. Now on that point at the time when the present application was made, the company has not applied for any such permission under the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969. The learned Counsel for the respondents argues that at any rate the explanatory statement should have stated whether the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act applies or not should have been brought to the notice of the general body of the shareholders. It is difficult to understand the point which the learned Counsel for the respondents wanted to make. Is it to be stated in the explanatory statement to the notice that—"we invite an argument on the Monopolies Act and its applicability"? Surely that is not the purpose of an explanatory statement to the notice.

23. But there is a more fundamental obstacle on the part of the respondent in this regard. The notice is given in the following terms:—

"Notice is hereby given that a General Meeting of the members of the Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. will be held at the Registered Office of the company at Swadeshi House, Civil Line, Kanpur, on Monday, 12th day of October, 1970 at 2.30 p.m. to consider and if thought fit to pass with or without modification the following resolutions as an Ordinary Resolution.

"Resolved that resolution No. 1 (set out hereunder) which had been unanimously passed as an Ordinary Resolution at a general meeting of the company held on the 27th February, 1970 at its registered office at Swadeshi House, Civil Line, Kanpur in pursuance of the notice dated the 29th January, 1970 be and is hereby confirmed and approved."

"Resolved that subject to the necessary approval of the Central Government being obtained pursuant to the provisions of Section 372 and all other applicable provisions, if any, of the Companies Act, 1956, the company hereby sanction the investment by it in the shares of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., Kanpur, to the extent of the aggregate face value of rupees one crore by way of subscribing and/or purchasing to the extent of 10,00,000 Equity Shares of the value of Rs. 10/- each at par on such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors think fit notwithstanding the fact that the investment in the shares of the said Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. exceeds 10% of the subscribed capital of the said Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. and shall exceed 30% of the prescribed capital of this company, and the Board of Directors of the company be and are hereby authorised to do and/or cause to be done and/or execute and/or cause to be executed all such acts, deeds and things as they may think expedient for the purpose."

By order of the Board
For Swadeshi Cotton Mills Co. Ltd.
Secretary

24. With the notice the explanatory statement required by Section 173 was enclosed. The Notice itself gives due information that subject to the necessary approval of the Central Government and all other applicable provisions if any of the Companies Act, the company sanctions investment by Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. in the shares of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., Kanpur to the extent of aggregate face value of rupees one crore. The explanatory statement said that the share capital of the new company proposed to be issued was four crores and the proposed investment together with the existing investment in the shares of the incorporated company shall be in excess of 30% of the capital.

tal of the company. Hence under Section 372 of the Companies Act the approval of the company in General Meeting is sought. The explanatory statement made it clear that Sri S. Jaipuria was one of the persons proposed to be appointed as Managing Director of the new company of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. and Shri Rajaram Jaipuria is proposed to be appointed as Managing Director of the company of Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. Then there was a recital of certain civil proceedings, one of them being the present suit by the respondents being Suit No. 105 of 1970. In that suit an interim order was made which was also recited. Then in the correspondence itself it is stated that the general meeting of the members was duly held on the 27th February, 1970 and business of the meeting was taken and there was a resolution unanimously passed. Thereafter, follows a recital in Suit No. 105 of 1970 where the learned Judge by his interim order dated the 8th September, 1970 directed that:

"there shall be an injunction restraining the respondent Directors (Company Directors) from acting on the Resolutions passed at the General Meeting held on the 27th February, 1970 until the same is hereby confirmed or approved at a meeting properly notified. All other interim orders vacated."

25. This was duly passed at the General Meeting. Thereafter the present suit was filed being Suit No. 451 of 1970 by Banwarilal Jaipuria against the appellants. Before Mr. Justice Ghose the issue was whether the Letter of Intent has lapsed and it was on that ground that the order of injunction was made by the learned Judge.

26. In order to appreciate this point better, it will be necessary to refer to certain correspondence. On the 12th February, 1971 Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. wrote to the Secretary to the Government of India, Company Affairs, that that company has been registered for the establishment of polyester fibre unit and that it has been granted an industrial licence dated the 7th October, 1970. It drew the particular attention of the Government to the additional conditions in the licence where it is stated.

"Please note that the licence does not in any way constitute an authorisation under the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969. Wherever applicable such permission or clearance as may be required under the provisions of this Act should be invariably obtained by the undertaking before instituting an effective step for implementing the licence."

In that letter Polytex Ltd. wrote that they understood that the provisions of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act will not apply to an undertaking which has taken steps towards substantial compliance with the terms of the Letter of Intent before the 1st June, 1970, being the date of the coming into operation of the Act. Then they proceeded to give in that letter particulars of the Letter of Intent, collaboration agreement, acquisition of lands, powers, import of machinery, application to the Controller of Capital Issue, project report and loan application and substantial amount of expenditure incurred prior to 1st June, 1970. To this there was a reply on the 6th March, 1971 stating inter alia "you will appreciate that the question of granting a clearance from the applicability of the provisions of Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act will arise only if such provisions applicable to your undertaking." On the 12-4-1971 the Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. again wrote to the Deputy Secretary Government of India, giving the particulars that Rajaram Jaipuria Managing Director of Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. and his brother Sitaram Jaipuria, M. P. are Directors and that having regard to the provisions of S. 2 (g) read with Explanation (b) Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. should be regarded, when established, as inter-connected undertaking with Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. A reference was made also to Suit No. 451 of 1970 in that letter. The letter closes with the request that by way of abundant caution application was enclosed for approval under Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act. Then on the 12th May, 1970 the Government replied to the letter of 12 February, 1970 saying that "I am directed to say that on the facts stated this department is of the view that the provisions of Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 will not apply to the establishment of the new undertaking for the manufacture of polyester fibre." Finally on the 20th May, 1971 they categorically wrote stating that "in view of the department's letter dated the 14th May, 1971 addressed to you the application under Section 22 is filed."

27. Now all that Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act does is to provide that "No person or authority other than the Government shall after the commencement of this Act establish any new undertaking which when established would become an inter-connected undertaking to which clause (a) of Section 20 applies except in accordance with the previous permission of the Central Government". But the Central Government itself does not think that Section 22 of the Act applies. That seems to me to be an end of the matter. There is no prima facie case for an injunction on that basis.

28. The learned Counsel for the respondents has placed a good deal of reliance on Section 173 of the Companies Act. Sub-section (2) of Section 173 reads as follows:—

"Where any item of business to be transacted at a meeting are deemed to be special as aforesaid, there shall be annexed to the notice of the meeting a statement setting out all material facts concerning each such item of business including in particular the nature of the concern or interest, if any, therein of every Director and Manager, if any."

29. At the time when notice of the meeting was given there was no application pending with the Government of India for permission under the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act. Therefore, nothing was required to be stated in the explanatory statement but the explanatory statement did seek the permission of the General Meeting for sanctioning one crore rupees as investment of the money of Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. in the shares of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. under Section 372 of the Companies Act. Now sub-section (2) of Section 173 of the Companies Act requires "a statement setting out all material facts concerning each such item of business." All material facts as then available had been mentioned in the notice and the explanatory statements. Subsequently the Government of India has also stated that Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 does not apply. Therefore, it is not "material fact" to be disclosed. The fact that the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act does not apply cannot be a material fact.

30. Looking at the problem it does not appear to me that prima facie Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 applies at all in this case, that the notice of the meeting is not at all tricky and that sufficient information had been given to the general body of shareholders that they were expected to accord sanction to the investment of one crore rupees of Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. in Swadeshi Polytex Ltd.

31. The question under Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969, is primarily a question for the Central Government and thereafter by the Commission followed by report to the Government and it is not the primary duty of a Court to adjudicate on a point whether a company is inter-connected or not within the meaning of Section 22 of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969. Besides, I have already traced the history from the correspondence where the Government of India considers that Section 22 does not apply at all to the facts of this case.

32. Section 173 (2) of the Companies Act does not imply that any and every lapse should be visited with the consequence of ultra vires doctrine. A special business requires to find a place in the explanatory statement but it does not mean that any and every legal requirement should be placed before the General Meeting of the general body of the shareholders. It is to be presumed that all legal requirements, before a venture is undertaken, is carried out properly. For instance, there are various restrictions which require to be satisfied: for a factory, before it is intended to be put into operation, requires a factory licence, land, before it is purchased, requires registration, conveyance and permission in some cases of municipalities; foreign collaboration and import of materials requires permission under the Foreign Exchange Regulations Act and Import Control Act. It is not, in my view, necessary to state all that before the general body of shareholders. What is necessary, as for instance in this case, is to inform the general body of shareholders as a special business that Swadeshi Cotton Mills Ltd. is investing one crore rupees of its money in Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. and the requirement of Section 372 of the Companies Act has been satisfied.

33. I will now notice some of the decisions which have been cited by the Bar but most of them have no application to the facts of the present case. In the case of Bimal Singh v. Muir Mills Co. Ltd., (AIR 1952 Cal 645) it was said that where there is a large body of shareholders who reside at great distances from the registered office of the company, the Court does not think it fair on the part of the company to leave the proposed articles at the registered office and give the shareholders notice of that fact. In a case like this the Court agreed with Mr. Palmer that printed copies of the proposed new articles should have been sent with the notice. In this case that was not done and the Court took the view that the notice did not disclose fully and frankly the facts upon which the shareholders were asked to vote. The facts here are entirely different.

34. In Lalita Rajya Lakshmi v. Indian Motor Co., (AIR 1962 Cal 127) it was held that although it imposes by Section 173 (2) an obligation that there shall be annexed to the notice of the meeting a statement of the type and nature which is discussed in that judgment, the question is, does failure to comply with the details of Section 173 (2) of the Companies Act make it a case ipso facto of oppression in conducting the affairs of a company within the meaning of Section 397 (1) of the Companies Act which the Court was considering in that case. The Court there held at page 131 of that report:

"that does not mean that this failure to supply the fullest possible details in the explanatory note under Section 173 (2) of the Companies Act will be visited with an application under Section 397 as typifying such failure to be act of oppression within the meaning of Section 397."

It was also stated in that case at page 130.

The first answer on the facts follows from the proposition that if a shareholder is aware of the facts, it is not for him or her to complain of insufficiency of notice of a meeting. This principle was laid down by the Privy Council in the case of Parashuram Detaram v. Tata Industrial Bank Ltd., 55 Ind App 274 = (AIR 1928 PC 180).

35. Then again when a Division Bench of this Court in East India Commercial Co. (P) Ltd. v. Raymon Engineering Works Ltd., (AIR 1966 Cal 232) had to consider the question of "material facts" in Section 173 (2) of the Act, it was said that the solution of the problem as to whether all material facts were disclosed depends upon the facts of each case. It is, however, not the function of an explanatory statement to travel beyond the scope of the proposed resolution. Material facts have to be given but not detailed particulars.

36. There was some discussion in Narendra v. Institute of Engineers, 67 Cal WN 960 = (AIR 1964 Cal 73). It dealt with the question of difference in the character of a chartered company and a company formed by or under an act of Parliament.

37. In Vita Food Products v. Unus Shipping Co. Ltd., (1939 AC 277) it was held that Section 3 of the New Foundland Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1932 which provides that every bill of lading "shall contain an express statement that it is to have effect subject to the provisions of the said rules as expressed in this Act" were directory and not mandatory and that failure to obey the directions did not, therefore, make the contract illegal.

38. But where an Act made the adoption of the agreement in the prescribed manner as a condition of its validity, it was held that the resolution was ineffective owing to the absence of notice of the contents of the agreement and that the agreement and the acts done in pursuance of it were consequently ultra vires the company and incapable of being made valid by acquiescence on the part of the shareholders as in Pacific Coast Coal Mines Ltd. v. Arbuthnot, (1917 AC 607) = (AIR 1917 PC 52).

39. Then again in Samuel Montagu & Co. Ltd. v. Swiss Air Transport Co. Ltd., (1969-2 QB 307) it was stated by Lord Denning M. R. and Samuel L. J. construing Article 8 (q) of the Warsaw Convention that it should not be given so rigid an interpretation as to hamper the conduct of business. It is desirable that Air Transport companies should be able to use on waybill to fit both international and also non-international carriage. I am quoting the observations of Denning M. R. at page 314 of that report:

"I do not think we should give a strict interpretation to Article 8 (q) in the Convention. We should not give it so rigid an interpretation as to hamper the conduct of business. I do not interpret the article as meaning that the waybill must contain the statement verbatim. It is sufficient if it contains a statement to the like effect. It follows that (q) is satisfied if the statement says that the carriage is subject to the rules so far as the same are applicable to the carriage."

40. The important point of this decision is that in construing the provisions like Section 173 (2) too rigid an interpretation should not be made as to "hamper the conduct of business". Section 173 (2) of the Companies Act means a notice and explanatory statement which should give notice of the essence and substance of the transaction intended to be passed at the meeting. It is a business document. It must be used in a commonsense business way. So long as that standard is satisfied this Court should not be astute to find legal and technical points to defeat the notice and the explanatory statement. Even applying the test laid down by Kekewich, J., that "the man I am protecting is not the dissentient but the absent shareholder" as applied in the decision of Biswanath Prasad Khaitan v. New Central Jute Mills Co. Ltd., ((1960) 64 Cal WN 970), the instant case does not come within the meaning of that test.

41. Lastly, the case of Firestone Tyre and Rubber Co. v. Synthetics and Chemicals Ltd., (1970-2 Com LJ 200 (Bom)) was cited. This was a judgment of a single Judge. At pages 244-45 it was observed in that case "Reliance was also placed upon AIR 1962 Cal 127 in which the Privy Council's decision in Shamdasani's case was followed and upon M/s. Kalinga Tubes Ltd. v. Shanti Prasad Jain, (AIR 1963 Orissa 189) which was affirmed by the Supreme Court in Shanti Prasad Jain v. Kalinga Tubes Ltd. (AIR 1965 SC 1535). Relying upon these authorities it was sought to be contended that the plaintiffs having full knowledge of the facts which according to them were not disclosed in the explanatory statements, had no right to challenge the validity of the notices on this ground and were estopped from doing so. There is, however, no such plea in any of the affidavits in reply, and this question really does not arise for my consideration, but as this question was argued at some length and as the contesting defendants insisted that they could spell out such a plea from their affidavit-in-reply which they have not been able to do so — I will shortly deal with the same. In my opinion, none of these authorities support the contesting defendants. Each turns upon its own facts. The Privy Council decision in Shamdasani's case was under the Indian Companies Act, 1913 which did not contain any section corresponding to Section 173 (2) of the 1965 Act. Regulation 49 of Table A of Schedule 1 of the 1913 Act inter alia required that in case of special business, the general nature of that business should be set out in the notice. This regulation corresponds to Section 172 (1) of the 1956 Act, which requires every notice of a meeting to contain a statement of the business to be transacted thereat. The Privy Council did not have to decide the question of a mandatory statutory provision, non-compliance with which would invalidate the notice. The Privy Council held that there was nothing questionable about the notice."

42. On the question of balance of convenience and prima facie case, it does not appear to me to be a case for an injunction. We, therefore, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge and allow the appeal.

43. There is a cross objection on behalf of the respondents. They relate first to the Industrial licence and secondly to the non-disclosure of the financial arrangement. The learned Judge found against the respondents on these two points. We find, however, that the appellants never asked for inspection of the financial and technical agreement and collaboration. The plea for non-disclosure of the terms and conditions of the agreement has been held by the learned Judge to be equally lacking in bona fide. Here inspection was offered but was not taken. There was, therefore, little left of this argument. On the point of industrial licence, it was argued by the learned counsel for the respondents that the notice and the explanatory statement should have disclosed that no licence under the Industrial Development and Regulation Act had been obtained for establishing Polytex undertaking. In fact, the licence was obtained on the 7th October, 1970. Prima facie it appears that the learned Judge was right in saying that all that Section 11 of the Industrial Development and Regulation Act requires is that a licence must be obtained before the undertaking is established. He also noticed that the words "previous permission" are not used in the relevant Section 11 (1) of the Act. It is true that the learned Judge held that until and unless undertaking is established, no question of licence under Section 11 (2) of the Industrial Development and Regulation Act, 1969 can arise. The learned Counsel for the respondents drew our attention to the proviso to that section which he construed to mean that after an undertaking is established there will be no occasion for a licence. But we do not think that the industrial licence need at all be in the explanatory notice in view of what I have said under Section 173 (2) of the Companies Act.

44. Various other points were argued by Mr. Samiran Sen, appearing on behalf of the appellants. One of them is a question of res judicata but it is unnecessary for us here to express an opinion on that point. His point was that the suit before Mr. Justice Ghose should have been amended to include the subject matter of the present suit. The Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act came into operation on the 1st June, 1970 and the hearing of the suit before Mr. Justice Ghose began and concluded in August, 1970. Therefore he says that it barred by constructive res judicata. But, as I say, it is unnecessary to decide this point in the present application in view of what we have already stated before.

45. For these reasons the appellants succeed and the cross objection fails. The appellants' costs certified for two counsel will be costs in the cause. I have seen the judgment of my learned brother and I agree with the order proposed.

B. C. MITRA, J.:— 46. The short point involved in this appeal is whether an order of Injunction restraining the appellants from giving effect to a resolution of a company, was rightly made. The respondent who is a shareholder of the 8th appellant brought a representative action, for self and other shareholders, for an Injunction restraining the 8th appellant and its Directors from holding any Meeting of the company pursuant to a Notice dated September 14, 1970 or from passing any of the resolutions set out in the Notice or from giving effect to the resolutions, if passed. An earlier Notice dated January 29, 1970 was issued on behalf of the 8th appellant for a General Meeting of the company to be held on February 27, 1970 to consider and if thought fit, to pass the following among other resolutions:—

"Resolution No. I — Resolved that subject to the necessary approval of the Central Government being obtained pursuant to the provision of Section 372 and all other applicable provisions, if any, of the Companies Act, 1956, the company hereby sanctions investment by it in the shares of the Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., Kanpur, to the extent of the aggregate face value of Rupees One Crore by way of subscribing and/or purchasing to the extent of 10,00,000 Equity Shares of the value of Rs. 10/- each at par on such terms and conditions, as the Board of Directors think fit notwithstanding the fact that the investment in the shares of the said Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. exceeds 10 per cent. of the subscribed capital of the said Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. shall exceed 30 per cent. of the subscribed capital of this company and the Board of Directors of the company be, and are hereby authorised to do and so far cause to be done all such acts, deeds or things as they may think expedient for the purpose." The explanatory statement annexed to the Notice was as follows:

"The company had received a Letter of Intent from the Government of India for establishment of a new undertaking for the manufacture of Polyester Fibre. As a considerable amount of capital will have to be raised, it was considerably expedient to promote a new company Accordingly, a company under the name and style of Swadeshi Polytex Co. Ltd. is being incorporated. Considering the future prospects and the profitability of the company, Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., it is considered desirable that this company should invest liberally in the shares of the said company. It is proposed to acquire Equity Shares to the extent of the aggregate value of Rupees One Crore in the new company aforesaid."

47. On receipt of this Notice the respondent instituted a Suit in this Court (Suit No. 105 of 1970) (Cal) against the 8th Appellant and its Directors, for an Injunction restraining them from holding any Meeting pursuant to the said Notice and from passing the resolutions mentioned therein on the ground that the Notice did not disclose material facts. In this Suit, on an application by the respondent an ad interim order was made by Ghose, J., on February 26, 1970, restraining the 8th appellant and its Directors from giving effect to any resolution that might be passed pursuant to the said Notice. The resolutions set out in the Notice were passed at the Meeting of the company held on February 27, 1970.

48. On September 7, 1970, Ghosh J. disposed of the application for Injunction by making the following order:—

"There shall be an Injunction restraining the respondent-Directors from acting on the resolution No. 1, passed at the General Meeting held on the 27th of February, 1970, until the same is confirmed or approved at a Meeting properly notified".

Before proceeding any further I should note that this order has become final as between the parties. The Injunction, mentioned above, was issued on the ground that the explanatory statement did not disclose a material fact namely, that the offer contained in the Letter of Intent had lapsed on January 24, 1970, and was no longer in force when the Notice was issued.

49. In compliance with the order of Ghose, J., and with a view to terminate the effect of the Injunction, another Notice was issued on September 14, 1970 for a General Meeting of the 8th appellant to be held on October 12, 1970 to consider and if thought fit, to pass with or without modification the following resolution:—

"Resolved that Resolution No. I which has been unanimously passed as an ordinary resolution at the General Meeting of the company held on February 27, 1970 in pursuance of the Notice dated 29th January, 1970, be and is hereby confirmed and approved." Along with the Notice of the Meeting and the draft resolution, an explanatory statement was circulated to the Members and this statement was as follows:—

"The Letter of Intent which has been revalidated by the Central Government has been transferred by the Central Government to the name of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. and accordingly the plant is being put up by them at Gaziabad in collaboration with Messrs. Vickers Zimmer A. G. Frankfurt. Terms of collaboration have been approved by the Central Government and the work has already commenced. The plant is likely to go into production in early 1973."

On receipt of the said notice the respondent filed another representative suit against the appellants for a declaration that the said Notice dated September 14, 1970 and the explanatory statement annexed thereto, convening a General Meeting of the 8th appellant for the purpose of passing the resolution, were void and inoperative and for a permanent Injunction restraining the appellant from holding any Meeting pursuant to the said Notice or giving any effect to the resolution, if passed. The General Meeting of the company was duly held on October 12, 1970 and the resolution mentioned above, was unanimously passed.

50. In the second suit (that is the suit out of which this appeal arises) filed by the respondent, he made an application for an Injunction and on this application S. K. Mukherjee, J., made an order on March 16, 1971 granting an Injunction restraining the appellants and each of them from giving effect to the resolution set out in the Notice dated September 14, 1970. The order was made without prejudice to the rights of the appellants and the Members of the 8th appellant to pass a fresh resolution according to law in terms similar to the resolution which was the subject-matter of the application. Aggrieved by this order the appellant has preferred to this appeal.

51. The grounds of attack on the resolution passed on October 12, 1970 confirming the earlier resolution of the company passed on February 27, 1970 were entirely different from the grounds which formed the subject-matter of attack on the resolution passed on February 27, 1970. The new ground of attack canvassed by the respondent in the second application for Injunction was that neither the Notice dated September 14, 1970 nor the explanatory statement set out therein disclosed whether permission had been obtained from the Central Government as required under the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969 (hereinafter referred to as the Act) for establishing the undertaking of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., which when established would be an inter-connected company of the 8th appellant. There were certain other grounds namely that no disclosure was made as to whether a Licence had been obtained as required by Section 11 of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, and that the terms and conditions of the collaboration agreement were not disclosed.

52. Mr. S. C. Sen, counsel for the appellant, raised several points in support of this appeal. The first point raised by him was that the bar imposed by Section 22 read with Section 20 (a) (ii) of the act could not be invoked in this case as the total value of the assets of the inter-connected undertakings was less than Rupees 20 crores. The second point urged by him was that even assuming that there was violation or infringement of the provisions of the Act, the respondent as shareholder of the company could not rely on such violation as a ground for Injunction restraining the appellants from giving effect to the impugned resolution. The third point urged by counsel for the appellant was that the trial Court erred in construing the provisions of the Act inasmuch as it was held that if a relative of the Managing Director of a company was a Managing Director of another company, the two undertakings must be deemed to be inter-connected undertakings by reason of explanation (b) to Section 2 (g) of the Act. The last point urged by Mr. Sen was that the trial Court was in error in construing explanation (b) to Section 2 (g) by holding that it meant that two or more undertakings should be deemed to be inter-connected if one or more individuals who own or manage or control one undertaking together with his or their relatives jointly or severally owned, managed or controlled the other undertaking or undertakings. It was contended that in giving this meaning to the explanation the trial Court had read into it the words "who own, manage or control one undertaking" which it should not have done. The next point urged by counsel for the appellant was that the statute specifically provided for penalties for contravention of provisions of the same. These provisions have been made in Chapter VIII of the Act, and even assuming that Statutory provisions had been violated, no Injunction could be issued but the only remedy was imposition of a penalty as provided in Chapter VIII of the Act.

53. In support of these contentions Mr. S. C. Sen relied on several passages in Craies on Statute Law 6th Ed. pp. 231, 232, 234, 235, and 237. Reliance was placed on several English decisions Vallance v. Falle, (1884) 13 QBD 109, (Cutler v. Wandsworth Stadium Ltd.) 1949 AC 398, Newman v. Francis, (1953) 1, WLR 402 and in Re:

Indo-Burma Wood Products (P) Ltd.,

54. In developing the points formulated by him Counsel for the appellants argued that in computing the aggregate value of the shares of the holding company and its subsidiary, the value of the shares of the subsidiary company, held by the holding company, should be excluded. It was argued that if the two undertakings were treated as one for the purpose of valuation, the shares of the subsidiary company in the hands of the holding company, ought not to be taken into consideration in computing the assets of the two companies. In the Balance Sheet of the 8th appellant as at December 31, 1969, the value of the shares of the subsidiary held by the 8th appellant (holding company) has been shown at Rs. 1,69,56,121. If the value of the shares are left out, it was contended, as it ought to be left out, the aggregate value of the assets of the inter-connected undertaking would be less than Rs. 20 Crores and therefore, Section 22 of the Act would not be attracted. The trial Court, however, rejected this contention because in its opinion, the definition of 'value of assets' given in the Act, precluded this method of calculation of the assets of the inter-connected undertakings. For the purpose of this appeal we do not think we should go into the question of valuation of the assets of the holding company and the subsidiary company or the mode of calculating such assets. The suit is still pending and these questions have to be investigated in the suit itself. We, accordingly, refrain from expressing any views on the question of valuation of the assets of the undertakings.

55. The next point argued by Counsel for the appellant was that even assuming that the provisions of the Act had been violated, such violation would not make the contract for the purchase of shares of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. illegal. It was argued that if the Statute prohibited the contract either expressly or impliedly, the contract would become illegal. But in this case there was no such absolute prohibition so as to make the contract for purchase of shares illegal. Reliance was placed by Counsel on Cheshire and Fifoot on the Law of Contract, 7th Ed. page 297. Reliance was also placed on (1961) 1 QB 374 and (1957) 1 QB 267. We do not think we need go into these questions, which should be left to be determined at the trial of the suit itself. The only question before us is whether in the events that have happened, and keeping in view the provisions in the Act the respondent had prima facie, made out a case for an Injunction restraining the appellants from giving effect to the resolution passed at the General Meeting of the Company held on October 12, 1970.

56. The respondent's grievance is that by reason of the omission to supply the information in the explanatory statement about an application to the Central Government for permission under Section 22 of the Act, the shareholders attending the General Meeting was misled. In other words, if the shareholders were informed by a statement in the explanatory statement that no application had been made to the Central Government for permission contemplated by Section 22 of the Act, they would not have voted as they did, at the Meeting held on October 12, 1970. It appears to us that this contention has no merit. What is the effect of the omission on the part of the Directors of the 8th appellant? If an application, was in fact made, the Directors could have stated either that the application was pending or that it was refused by the Central Government, but that has not happened in this case. No application was made by the Directors of the 8th appellant for the permission contemplated by Section 22 of the Act at the time when the Notice and the explanatory statements were issued. In this situation what the Directors could have stated was that no application had been made to the Central Government for permission under Section 22 of the Act as they were advised not to make such application. I do not see how, a statement such as this, would have helped the shareholders either in supporting or opposing the resolution.

57. The next contention of Counsel for the appellant was that it was not necessary under Section 173 of the Companies Act 1956 to give all the details and particulars in matters covered by a proposed resolution. He argued that the approach to the question, whether an explanatory statement was adequate, should be a businessmen's approach and not the approach of an expert lawyer. In support of this contention reliance was placed on a Bench decision of this Court reported in AIR 1952 Cal 645. In that case the question was whether leave granted under a clause 12 of the Letters Patent should be revoked. Two of the Directors of a company retired and there was an agreement by certain parties to enter into a partnership for buying the majority shares of a company with a view to get the controlling interest therein. Pursuant to this agreement a large number of ordinary, and preference shares were acquired by the partners. This was followed by incorporation of two new companies. The shares of these new companies were held by the partners in equal shares. A proposal was made to change the Articles of the parent company so as to give the entire control to the partners to the exclusion of the minority shareholders. For this purpose a Notice and a circular was issued for a Meeting of the company. In the Notice it was said that the changes in the Articles were necessary for the management of the company's affairs by a Managing Agent instead of the Managing Directors. A suit was filed alleging that the real object of the Meeting for the purpose of changing the Articles, namely, control of shares of the company by the partners, was suppressed. It was contended that the Notice was misleading. The real document was not sent to the shareholders along with the Notice and they were unable to form any opinion as to the real purpose of the Meeting. It was held that in such cases it was not right to keep the altered Articles at the Registered Office and merely inform the shareholders that they could have inspection of the proposed alteration and that copies of the new Articles should have been sent with the Notice. Mr. Sen sought to distinguish this case on the ground that fraud was attempted to be perpetrated upon the shareholders and there was suppression of the fact that what was really contemplated, was a change in the control of the company by a new group of shareholders.

58. It seems to us, however, that for the purpose of this appeal it is not necessary for us to go into the various questions raised by parties. The Notice dated September 14, 1970, for a General Meeting of the company to be held on October 12, 1970, was manifestly given pursuant to the order of Ghose, J., by which the Directors of the 8th appellant were restrained from giving effect to the resolutions passed at the General Meeting of Company held on February 27, 1970, until the resolution was confirmed at another General Meeting of the Company properly notified. The order of Ghose, J., was obtained by the respondent, and as noticed earlier that order became final as between the parties. All that the respondent had to do, in order to terminate the effect of the Injunction, was to call a General Meeting of the company after duly giving Notice for the same, and have the resolution passed on February 27, 1970, confirmed at this Meeting. The General Meeting of the Company held on October 12, 1970, was held in accordance with the order of Ghose, J. It is to be noticed that no grievance was made by the respondent in the earlier suit or in the petition for Injunction about the alleged contravention of any of the provisions of the Act or about the failure on the part of the Directors of the 8th appellant to state in the explanatory statement relating to the Notice dated January 29, 1970, about infringement of any of the provisions of the Act, or about the omission to disclose in the explanatory statement if permission of the Central Government was obtained under Section 22 of the Act, nor was there any direction in the order of Ghose, J., to inform the shareholders of the company in the explanatory statement about an application made to the Central Government for permission under Section 22 of the Act or about the fate of any such application. In the light of the order made by Ghose, J., one can understand an attack on the resolution passed at the Meeting held on October 12, 1970, on the ground that the resolution was not duly notified as required by the order, or on the ground that the resolution was not duly confirmed at the Meeting. But these are not the grounds of attack by the respondent on the resolution passed on October 12, 1970. In our view it was not open to the respondent to attack the resolution passed at the General Meeting held on October 12, 1970, on any of the grounds on which he attacked them in the petition for injunction. The respondent had raised various objections to the resolution proposed to be passed at the Meeting to be held on February 27, 1970, and Ghose, J., after taking into consideration all these objections had passed an ad interim order for Injunction as mentioned above and the appellants were entitled under the terms of the order to take steps to terminate the effect of the injunction by having a resolution confirmed at another General Meeting. The respondent, in our view, is not entitled to attack the resolution passed at the Meeting held on October 12, 1970, on the ground of omission to state in the explanatory statement, if an application was made for permission of the Central Government under Section 22 of the Act or if such an application was made what was the fate of the same.

59. There is another point which seems to us to have a great bearing on this appeal. The bar imposed by Section 22 (1) of the Act is a bar on a person or authority from establishing any new undertaking after the commencement of the Act. It is only if a person or authority seeks to establish an undertaking after the commencement of the Act, which undertaking, if established, would infringe the provisions of the Act, that the previous permission of the Central Government is to be obtained. The Act came into force on June 1, 1970. The new undertaking in this case namely, Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. was incorporated on March 21, 1970. The letter of Intent, issued by the Central Government in favour of the 8th appellant, was transferred to the new undertaking on May 20, 1970. It seems to us, therefore, that prima facie Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. was not an undertaking which was established after the commencement of the Act.

60. The next question is whether the information which was omitted in the explanatory statement namely whether an application was made to the Central Government under Section 22 of the Act and if so the fate of this application was a material information, the omission to furnish which would make the resolution, passed at the Meeting invalid or void. Sub-section (2) of Section 22 of the Act requires a person or authority intending to establish a new undertaking to make an application to the Central Government before taking any action for the establishment of such undertaking. Admittedly, in this case, nothing was stated in the explanatory statement about any application having been made to the Central Government as required by Section 22 (2) of the Act. As I have noticed earlier the Notice for the General Meeting of the Company was dated September 14, 1970, and the Meeting was to be held on October 12, 1970. At this Meeting the resolution, which was the subject matter of challenge in the earlier suit and with regard to which the Injunction was issued by Ghose, J., was unanimously passed. The resolution runs as follows:—

"Resolved that Resolution No. 1 which has been unanimously passed as an ordinary resolution at a General Meeting of the company held on February 27, 1970, in pursuance of the Notice dated 29th January, 1970, be and is hereby confirmed and approved." After this resolution was passed on October 12, 1970, the 8th appellant wrote to the Central Government on April 12, 1971, that it was advised that Chapter III, Part A of the Act which included Sections 20 to 26 of the Act, did not apply to the 8th appellant. The letter, however, concluded with a statement that by way of abundant caution an application for approval under Section 22 of the Act was enclosed therewith. This letter is to be found at pages 384-385 of Part II of the Paper Book. Quite plainly no application was made before the Notice dated September 14, 1970, was issued and the General Meeting of October 12, 1970, held. It cannot, therefore, by any means, be said that an application for permission under Section 22 of the Act was suppressed, as no such application was, in fact made, before the Meeting of October 12, 1970, was held. In answer to the letter of the 8th appellant dated April 12, 1971, the Central Government wrote on May 14, 1971, to say that in the opinion of the Department of the Company Affairs, the provisions of Section 22 of the Act did not apply to the establishment of the new undertaking. The authority to grant permission under Section 22 is the Central Government, and that authority was of the view that no permission was necessary and no application for permission was, therefore, called for. In that view of the matter we are of the opinion that information about application for permission under Section 22 of the Act in the explanatory statement, was not a material information, the omission to state which would make the resolution void or illegal. In the view, that the Central Government took on the question of permission, there was no necessity, whatsoever, for an application for permission under Section 22 of the Act; and in omitting to make the application under Section 22 and in omitting to state in the explanatory statement that no application was made, the 8th appellant did not, in our view, act irregularly or in violation of or contrary to the provisions of the Act or the Companies Act, 1956. Information regarding an application for permission under Section 22 of the Act or information that no such application has been made is not in our view, a material information which should have been included in the explanatory statement or in the Notice of the Meeting. The absence of such information in the explanatory statement, does not make it or the resolution passed at the General Meeting confirming the resolution, which was passed at the General Meeting held on February 27, 1970, illegal or void. Nor does such omission, entitled the respondent to an Injunction restraining the appellants from giving effect to the resolutions passed at the General Meeting held on October 12, 1970. I shall revert to this question later in this judgment.

61. It was next contended by Counsel for the appellant that explanatory statements are not to be construed with excessive strictness and substantial compliance with the Articles would be sufficient. In support of this proposition reliance was placed on Palmer's Company Law 21st Ed. p. 475. Reliance was also placed on Section 172 (3) of the Act in which it is provided that accidental omission to give notice to or non-receipt of notice by any member or other person to whom it should be given shall not invalidate the proceedings at a Meeting. Reliance was also placed on (1875) 1 Ch. D. 13 for the proposition that if a thing complained of is a thing which the majority of the company are entitled to do, or if something has been done irregularly which the majority of the company are entitled to do regularly, or if something is done which the majority are entitled to do legally, no useful purpose is served by litigation, the ultimate result of which is a Meeting of the company where the majority gets its wishes. Reliance was next placed on a decision of the Judicial Committee 1939 AC 277 for the proposition that omission to do something does not nullify the contract contained in a Bill of Lading, nor could such omission make the contract illegal. This decision was relied upon in support of the contention that even if it was held that the omission to make a statement that no application was made to the Central Government under Section 22 of the Act was material information, such omission did not make the explanatory statement illegal nor did it make the resolution, passed at the Meeting, invalid. The next case relied on was Samuel Montagu & Co. Ltd. v. Swiss Air Transport Co. Ltd., (1966) 2 QBD 306. In that case damages were claimed for loss of certain consignment of gold in transit. The defence was that Article 8 (ii) of the Convention signed at Warsaw, limited the liability to a certain sum. It was held that the Article in the Convention limiting liability, should not be so strictly construed as to hamper the conduct of business. Counsel for the appellant also referred to Palmer's Company Precedents 17th Edn. Part I pages 483-485 for the proposition that a Notice which is to state general nature of the business, should give Members fair Notice of the matters to be dealt with, and that such Notice should be sufficient Notice to enable a Member to decide whether to attend or not and that an insufficient or misleading Notice invalidates a resolution.

62. Relying on the various authorities mentioned above, Counsel for the appellant contended that even assuming that there was omission to furnish material information, that would not make the resolution invalid or illegal. He further submitted that the omission, assuming there was one, did not, in any manner, mislead the shareholders of the company. He also urged that the explanatory statements should not be too strictly construed, but should be given a liberal construction and the only requirement should be that its contents are clear to an ordinary person engaged in business.

63. It seems to us that there is a good deal of force and substance in the above contention of Counsel for the appellant. It is to be remembered that the General Meeting was called for the purpose of confirmation of a resolution passed by the company on February 27, 1970. The resolution passed on October 12, 1970 in terms of the order of Ghose, J., runs as follows:

"Resolved that a Resolution No. I which had been unanimously passed as an ordinary resolution at a General Meeting of the company held on February 27, 1970 in pursuance of the Notice dated the 29th January, 1970 be and is hereby confirmed and approved."

64. The object of the Meeting held on October 12, 1970, and the purpose of the resolution, passed at that Meeting, was to terminate the effect of the order of Injunction in compliance with the terms of that order. The only business to be transacted at the Meeting held pursuant to the Notice of September 14, 1970, was confirmation of the resolution passed at the earlier Meeting. It is also to be remembered that the challenge to the resolution passed at the Meeting held on February 27, 1970, was on the ground that a Letter of Intent, issued by the Central Government, had expired, and had not been revalidated and therefore, the new company could no longer be established. The Letter of Intent issued by the Central Government expired on January 24, 1970 and was not revalidated at the time when the Meeting was held. The explanatory statement, with regard to the second Meeting of the company held on October 12, 1970 cleared up those points and runs as follows:

"The Letter of Intent which has been revalidated by the Central Government has been transferred by the Central Government to the name of Sawdeshi Polytex Ltd. and accordingly, the plant is being put up by them at Gazlabad in collaboration with M/s. Vickers Zimmer A. G., Frankfurt. Terms of collaboration have been approved by the Central Government and the work has already commenced. The plant is likely to go into production in early 1973."

65. It will be clear from the explanatory statement quoted above that the cause of challenge to the earlier resolution and the explanatory statement was removed before the Meeting of October 12, 1970 was held and information about transfer and revalidation of the Letter of Intent was duly given to the shareholders. As matters stood before the Act came into operation, no exception of any kind could have been taken by the respondent or any other shareholder either to the resolution passed on October 12, 1970, or to the explanatory statement relating thereto. The Act came into operation on June 1, 1970, and the hearing of the respondent's application before Ghose, J., commenced on August 10, 1970.

66. Mr. Prabir Sen, Counsel for the respondent argued, that the new company, namely Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., would undoubtedly be an inter-connected undertaking as contemplated by Section 20 of the Act. In aid of this argument he relied upon the definition of "inter-connected undertakings" in Section 2 (g) of the Act. He argued that this case came within clause (d) of Section 2 (g) (iii) of the Act. It was contended that in this case, the 8th appellant, its Managing Director (by reason of his relationship with the Managing Director of the new company) and also the other Directors of the 8th appellant would undoubtedly exercise control over the new company. Control, it was argued, was not defined in the Act or in the Companies Act. Therefore, it was submitted, any kind of control whether de facto or de jure, would make the undertaking an inter-connected undertaking as contemplated by the Act. On this question the trial Court rejected the respondent's contention and the respondent has filed cross-objection against the judgment on that ground.

67. It is true that clause (d) of Section 2 (g) (iii) of the Act merely provides "if one exercises control over the other in any other manner." It is also true that the control as contemplated by the Act has not been defined in the Act itself but in construing a provision such as this, certain considerations must be borne in mind. In the first place, the concept of control implies a dominant and a dominated undertaking. In other words, the controlling undertaking must be in a position to dominate the affairs of the controlled undertaking either in respect of the management of its affairs, or in respect of its finance or with regard to the capital structure. In the absence of one or other of these features the element of control cannot come into the picture. The mere fact that there are some common Directors or that the Managing Director of the 8th appellant is a relative of the Managing Director of the new company or that the 8th appellant is going to invest Rs. 1 Crore in the share capital of the new company, do not by themselves make the 8th appellant an undertaking controlling the undertaking of the new company.

68. Counsel for the respondent also relied upon Cl. (b) of the Explanation to S. 2 (g) (vii). He submitted that in this case, admittedly, the Managing Director of the 8th appellant was a relative of the Managing Director of the new company, and therefore, the new company Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. was an inter-connected undertaking of the 8th appellant. This contention, on behalf of the respondent, has been upheld by the trial Court. Counsel for the respondent further argued that the provisions in Section 20 and Section 22 of the Act were attracted in this case, inasmuch as, the total value of the assets of the 8th appellant together with the value of the assets of Swadeshi Mining and Manufacturing Co. Ltd., exceeded Rupees 20 Crores. He submitted that on the basis of the valuation of assets, the two companies should be treated as inter-connected undertakings, and therefore previous permission of the Central Govt. was needed.

69. The next contention of Counsel for the respondent was that the provisions in Chapter VIII comprising Sections 45 to 53 which provide for penalty for contravention of Section 22, did not bar a challenge by his client to the proposed resolution. He argued that Section 4 of the Act provided that the remedies provided by the Act should be held to be in addition to those provided in any other law for the time being in force. As a shareholder of the company, it was argued, the respondent had a right to challenge the validity of the explanatory statement and the resolution, under the Company Law, and this right was protected by Section 4 of the Act. Therefore, he argued, the provisions for imposition of penalty in Chapter VIII of the Act should be held to be a remedy provided by the Act in addition to other remedies available under any other law.

70. Dealing with the question whether the private rights of the respondent could be protected by invoking the provisions of the Act, which should be enforced by the Central Government only, to avoid concentration of economic power in the hands of a group of individuals it was argued, that if the individual and private rights of his client were injured or invaded, he was entitled to invoke the provisions of the Act to obtain remedy. In support of this contention, Counsel for the Appellant relied on Halsbury Third Edition Vol. 21, p. 347, Article 727 and Palmer's Company Law 21st Edition pp. 498-499.

71. It seems to us that the real and substantial issue in the application, out of which this appeal arises, has been lost sight of in the din and bustle created by the conflicting claims of the parties regarding the provisions of the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1969. The respondent claims that the provisions of the Act applied in this case, and that the new company, namely, Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., would be an inter-connected undertaking under the Act. The appellant, on the other hand, contend that the provisions in the Act have no application, for the reasons which I have discussed earlier. Viewed in the proper perspective these questions are not relevant for the purpose of this appeal. Nor was it relevant for the purpose of the application out of which this appeal arises. It is not for this Court to decide or determine, if the total value of the assets of the 8th appellant, and those of its subsidiary, amount to Rs. 20 crores or more. Nor is it for this Court to determine if Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., when established, would become an inter-connected undertaking of the 8th Appellant. As we read the provisions in the Act we are left in little doubt that those are questions for determination by the Central Government in the first instance, and by the Monopolies and Restrictive Trade Practices Commission, in cases where a deeper probe is called for. In clear and unambiguous words the Statute has left those matters for the decision of the Central Government and the Commission. So far as the issues, involved in this appeal, are concerned we do not see why this Court should embark upon a discussion of the provisions of the Statute regarding inter-connected companies and also upon an investigation if the 8th appellant is an inter-connected undertaking on the basis of materials in its Balance-sheet. Issues in this appeal, as I have noticed earlier lie in a very narrow compass and those issues have been lost sight of by the parties, the respondents contending that the provisions of the Act had been violated and the appellants trying to repel such contentions. The only issue, as we see it, is whether the explanatory statement in the Notice of September 14, 1970, and the resolution passed on October 12, 1970, are illegal or invalid on the ground that material facts were not disclosed in the explanatory statement. That is the only ground of challenge to the explanatory statement and the resolution.

72. The letter by which the Central Government informed the 8th appellant that Section 22 of the Act did not apply to the establishment of the new undertaking, is dated May 14, 1971. The judgment of the trial Court was delivered on March 16, 1971. Quite plainly, therefore, the trial Court did not have the advantage of having before it the opinion of the Central Government relating to the applicability of Section 22 of the Act. The application by the 8th appellant to the Central Government for permission under Section 22 of the Act is dated April 12, 1971. The application itself was, therefore, made after the judgment was delivered by the trial court. Shortly before the judgment was delivered the 8th appellant wrote to the Central Government on February 12, 1971, to say that according to the reported opinion given by the Attorney-General the provisions of the Act did not apply to the 8th appellant. In this letter a request was also made that a clearance should be issued to the 8th appellant that the provisions of the Act did not apply to it. This letter was answered on behalf of the Central Government by N. K. Sengupta, Deputy Secretary, on March 26, 1971. In this letter a request was made that the basis on which the undertaking would be an inter-connected undertaking, might be intimated to the Central Government. It was added that the question of granting clearance from the applicability of Section 22 of the Act would arise only if such provisions were otherwise applicable to the undertaking. This letter, in its turn, was followed on April 12, 1971, by the 8th appellant's application for approval under Section 22 of the Act. On May 14, 1971, the Central Government wrote to the 8th appellant in answer to its letter of February 12, 1971, communicating to the 8th appellant the views of the Central Govt. that the provisions of the Act would not apply to the establishment of the new undertaking. On May 25, 1971, the Central Government replied to the 8th appellant's letter of April 12, 1971, along with which the application for permission was forwarded and stated that in view of the letter of May 14, 1971, addressed to the 8th appellant the application under Section 22 is filed. Quite clearly the views of the Central Government as expressed in the letters of May 14, 1971, and May, 25, 1971, make it clear that in the opinion of the Central Government, Section 22 of the Act did not apply to the new undertaking proposed to be set up and no permission of the Central Government, as contemplated by Section 22 of the Act, was required. Counsel for the respondent contended that since the Central Government stated in its letter of May, 25, 1971, that the 8th appellant's application under Section 22 was filed, the application was not disposed of and was still pending. This contention on behalf of the respondent, is altogether without any merit. The views of the Central Government were clearly stated in the two letters mentioned above and the use of the word 'filed' in the letter dated May 25, 1971, did not keep the application pending before the Central Government.

73. As I noticed earlier the opinion of the Central Government, that no permission as required by Section 22 of the Act was needed, was given after the judgment was delivered by the trial Court. This Court is entitled to take note of subsequent events which could not be taken into consideration in the trial Court. The application for permission under Section 22 was made on April 12, 1971, long after the notice and the explanatory statement were issued on September 14, 1970. Therefore, all that could be stated in the explanatory statement, issued along with the notice of September 14, 1970, was that an application was not made by the 8th appellant for permission of the Central Government under Section 22 of the Act. This intimation, no doubt, was not given in the explanatory statement as the Directors of the 8th appellant took the view that Section 22 of the Act was not attracted, and therefore no application need be made to the Central Government for permission contemplated by that section. The Central Government, which is the authority for granting permission also came to the same conclusion that the new undertaking would not be an inter-connected undertaking and therefore, no permission was needed, as required by Section 22 of the Act. In these facts we are of the opinion that there is no escape from the conclusion that the information that no application was made to the Central Government under Section 22, was not a material information to be included in the explanatory statement.

74. A notice of a General Meeting of a company and an explanatory statement attached to such Notice can be condemned as tricky, if either of them is likely to mislead the shareholders or if there is omission to state facts which would enable the shareholders to decide if they would attend the Meeting or not. A Notice and an explanatory statement can also be condemned if there is suppression of material facts. These principles are well settled and it is on the basis of such principles that it is to be determined if the impugned Notice and explanatory statement are illegal or invalid. Applying these well-settled tests, we cannot say that the Notice and the explanatory statement, in this case, were either tricky or misleading or that there was deliberate suppression of facts which ought to have been communicated to the shareholders to enable them to decide if they would attend the Meeting or not. The respondent who claims to be aggrieved by the Notices and the explanatory statements issued for the purpose of two General Meetings of the company, did not attend either of them. Keeping in mind, the various points now urged on his behalf, one would expect him to attend the Meeting and record his vote against the resolutions. But that is not what he did. He stayed away from both the meetings and then filed two suits challenging the validity of the resolutions as also of the Notices and the explanatory statement. All in all it seems to us that the grievances, which he is aiming are not the genuine grievances of an aggrieved shareholder but are the manifestation of a determination to block the efforts of the 8th appellant at expansion and diversification.

75. Turning now to the question of balance of convenience or inconvenience it is to be seen if the order for Injunction is justified. As will be presently seen nearly everything has been done for the purpose of carrying on the normal business of the new company, namely, Swadeshi Polytext Ltd. This company was incorporated on March 21, 1970, long afterwards on January 1, 1968, the 8th appellant applied for a licence under the Industries (Development & Regulation) Act, 1951. On July 24, 1969, the Central Government issued a letter of Intent to the 8th appellant in which the conditions of a licence under the Industries (Development & Regulation) Act, 1951, were communicated to the 8th Appellant. The Letter of Intent was valid for a term of six months from the date of issue but was renewed till October 24, 1970, and the renewed Letter of Intent was transferred to the new company. A collaboration agreement with a foreign concern namely, Vickers Zimmer A. G. West Germany, was entered into and the agreement was submitted for approval of the Central Government on January 12, 1970. An application for consent of the Controller of Capital Issue for the issue of shares, was made on November 19, 1969. An application for import of machinery was duly filed on November 19, 1969. A plot of 80 acres of land at Gaziabad has been reserved for the purpose of the new undertaking and a letter of such reservation was issued by the Executive Engineer, U. P. State Industrial Corporation Limited on January 14, 1970, and a sum of Rupees 2,51,800/- was deposited for the said plot of land on February 17, 1970. Sanction for supply of power by the U. P. State Electricity Board was obtained on January 24, 1970. A certificate for commencement of business was issued to Swadeshi Polytex Limited on July, 9, 1970. An industrial licence under the Industries (Development & Regulation) Act, was issued to the new company on October 7, 1970. The foundation stone of the factory premises was laid by the President of India on October 12, 1970. According to the explanatory statement, issued with the Notice of September 14, 1970, the plant is likely to go into production in early 1973.

76. It is clear from the steps taken, that expeditious steps have been taken to enable the new company to commence production. Statutory sanctions and licence has been obtained, collaboration agreement arrived at and approved by the Central Government, land secured and construction of factory premises started. It is in these facts that it is to be seen if the ends of justice demand that the 8th appellant should be restrained from investing Rs. 1 crore in the share capital of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. Is it just and proper that when nearly every possible step has been taken to enable the new company to commence production, the 8th appellant should at the instance of one single share-holder be restrained from making the investment? Even assuming that there is all the merit in the respondent's contention that the explanatory statement did not contain the information which it should have, can it be said in the facts of this case that ends of justice demand that an Injunction should be issued restraining the 8th appellant from making the investment? In our opinion, the answer to both these questions must be in the negative. Wisdom of the investment is a matter with which this Court is in no way concerned. That is a question of policy to be determined by the share-holders and they have in no uncertain terms expressed their opinion in the matter of making the investment.

77. Counsel for the respondent contended that in considering the question of balance of convenience, steps taken for the establishment of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. should not be taken into consideration. He argued that the suit was not filed against Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., and the application was not made against that company for an Injunction and if such a suit was filed and such an application was made, steps taken for the establishment of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. would have been material factors in considering the question of balance of convenience. But in this case, he argued, his client was seeking an Injunction restraining the 8th appellant from investing a large sum of money in the share capital of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. We are unable to accept this contention of Counsel for the respondent. The 8th appellant was keen to invest a large sum of money in the share capital of the new company. Such an investment cannot earn any returns, unless the new company is enabled to carry on its business. From the resolutions passed at the Central Meetings of the 8th appellant, it is clear that it is ready and willing to make the investment. In determining the question whether an Injunction should be granted restraining the 8th appellant from giving effect to the resolutions authorizing the investment, steps taken for the establishment of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., are, in our view, material and relevant in deciding the question of balance of convenience in favour or against the grant of an order of Injunction. In dealing with the question whether the 8th appellant should be allowed to invest Rs. 1 Crore in Swadeshi Polytex Ltd., steps taken for the establishment of the latter can, by no means, be said to be irrelevant or immaterial in deciding the question of balance of convenience for or against an order of Injunction regarding the investment. If the decision of this appeal rested only on the question of balance of convenience or inconvenience, we would have had no hesitation in saying that the balance of convenience is entirely against the issue of an order of Injunction restraining the appellant from making the investment. But the decision of this appeal depends upon the various other questions which I have discussed earlier in the judgment. Quite apart from my views on the other questions raised in this appeal, so far as balance of convenience is concerned, we are of the opinion that balance of convenience is entirely against an order of Injunction at this stage, restraining the 8th appellant from investing Rupees One Crore in the share capital of Swadeshi Polytex Ltd.

78. I will now proceed to deal with the cross-objection filed by the respondent. Two of the grounds of objection pressed before us were, firstly that the Learned Judge was wrong in holding that the question of a licence under Section 11 of the Industries (Development and Regulation) Act, was not a material fact to be stated in the explanatory statement. Dealing with this question, Counsel for the respondent, contended that it should have been disclosed in the explanatory statement that no licence had been obtained under the said Act for establishing the new company. Without going into the question if the new undertaking was established before the licence under Section 11 (1) of the said Act was obtained, and without again going into the question if the new undertaking could be established without such a licence, we are of the opinion that the explanatory statement cannot be condemned as invalid or illegal on the ground that it did not inform the share-holders that a licence under Section 11 (1) of the said Act was not obtained.

79. In dealing with this question of validity of an explanatory statement, the scope, purpose and object of Section 173 of the Companies Act, 1956, should not be lost sight of. The requirement of that section is that the share-holders should be informed truly of the nature of the business to be transacted at the General Meeting. The business before the General Meeting was confirmation of a resolution passed earlier authorizing investment of Rupees One Crore in Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. That being the only business before the General Meeting, the question whether a licence under Section 11 (1) of the said Act had been obtained, can, by no means, be said to be material information, which should have been furnished to the share-holders of the 8th appellant. In the first place, why should it be presumed that promoters and Directors of the new company are bent upon establishing the new undertaking in violation of all laws and regulations, enjoining licence and permission before the establishment of the new undertaking? Why, again, it should be presumed that the Directors of the 8th appellant have deliberately suppressed from the share-holders, material information which may influence their mind in confirming the earlier resolution? Neither in fact, nor in law are such presumptions justified. As appears from the materials, an application for licence under Section 11 (1) of the Act was duly made and a licence has been duly obtained. It is easy to overstate the requirement of Section 173 of the Companies Act, 1956. It is perhaps easier for a single share-holder to demand that every single step required for the establishment of a new undertaking must be communicated to the share-holders of an investing company. For instance, it might be said that the share-holders of the investing company should be told that a licence under the Factories Act had been obtained or that a licence under the local Municipal Law for carrying on business, has been obtained or again that the plans for erection of structure had been duly sanctioned by the local authority. But information about these matters can, by no means, be said to be material information which must be furnished to the share-holders in an explanatory statement and the omission to furnish which must invalidate the resolution passed at the General Meeting. In our opinion, there is no substance in this ground of the cross-objection.

80. The second ground of cross-objection pressed before us was that the learned Judge was wrong in holding that non-disclosure of the financial aspect of the collaboration agreement did not vitiate the impugned notice and the explanatory statement. This again in our view, is not a matter for inclusion in the notice or the explanatory statement. In the first place, intricate details of a financial arrangement with the collaborators are hardly likely to influence the views of the share-holders, in considering the question of investment in the new company. In the second place, there may be very good and cogent reasons for withholding information regarding financial arrangement, not excluding the question of commercial rivalry. It cannot and it should not be expected that a commercial undertaking of large dimensions would lay bare its financial strength or weakness for a review by the share-holders at large and thereafter by the Public. Lastly, the financial arrangement is an arrangement made between the new undertaking and various financing institutions. The company which is seeking to invest money in a new undertaking is neither likely to, nor is it expected to know the details of such financial arrangements made between the investee company and the financing institutions. Prima facie, those arrangements are between Swadeshi Polytex Ltd. and the financing institutions and disclosure of information relating to such arrangements would certainly be a breach of commercial propriety. The demand for a disclosure of financial arrangement is therefore a matter which the Court cannot approve of and cannot for that reason hold that failure to include the particulars of the financial arrangement with the collaborators make the notice and the explanatory statement invalid or illegal.

81. For the reasons mentioned above the cross-objection raised by the respondent must fail.

82. Before concluding I should note several decisions on which Counsel for the parties relied. The grounds, on which my judgment in this appeal rests, make it unnecessary for me to deal with these decisions at length. Besides the decision relied on by Mr. S. C. Sen which have been already dealt with by me in this judgment, he relied upon the decisions reported in. 1949 AC 398, AIR 1959 All 276, AIR 1952 SC 362, AIR 1966 Mys 154, AIR 1968 SC 1358, AIR 1952 Cal 645, AIR 1962 Cal 127, AIR 1966 Cal 232, AIR 1965 SC 1535, AIR 1963 Orissa 189, (1960) 64 Cal WN 970, (1965) 69 Cal WN 369, (1966) 2 Com. LJ 208 (Cal), AIR 1955 Cal 132, (1971) 75 Cal WN 173. Mr. Prabir Sen relied upon, AIR 1965 SC 101, 65 ITR 651 = (AIR 1967 SC 1534), AIR 1967 SC 509, (1906) 2 Ch. D. 390, AIR 1960 Raj 49, (1935) 1 KB 75, (1970) 2 Com. LJ 200 (Bom), 1917 AC 607 = (AIR 1917 PS 52), (1970) 1 S. C. C. 613 = (AIR 1971 SC 2355).

83. I have carefully taken into consideration the grounds advanced on behalf of the respondent in support of the Injunction issued by the trial Court. In my view, the order for Injunction cannot be sustained in the facts of this case. This appeal therefore succeeds and is allowed. The judgment and order of the trial Court are set aside. Costs of this appeal will be costs in the cause. Certified for two Counsel.

84. I now turn to the order that ought to be made in this appeal. On April 7, 1971, an order was made by this Bench on the application of the appellant for admission of the appeal and stay of operation of the order under appeal. That order seems to us to be a model order for the purpose of Ad Interim protection of the rights of the parties until final determination of the suit. If I say it is a model order it is because the order has taken into consideration the contentions advanced by the parties and has given them the protection to which they are legitimately entitled. It seems to us that the order made by this Bench on April 7, 1971 with minor variations to which I will presently refer, ought to remain in force until final determination of the suit out of which this appeal arises.

85. Mr. S. C. Sen, Counsel for the appellant submitted that three of the Directors of the 8th appellant, namely, Shri B. P. Khaitan, Shri R. Chaudhuri and Shri B. Malik, whom Mr. Sen described as outside Directors, should be released from the undertaking given by the Directors of the 8th appellant to this Court on April 7, 1971. Mr. Prabir Sen said that he had no objection to the release of these three Directors from the undertaking. Both Mr. S. C. Sen and Mr. Prabir Sen submitted that their clients would be content if the order made on April 7, 1971, is continued until final determination of the suit. Accordingly, we order that in the event of it being ultimately held that the investment to be made by the 8th appellant on the basis of the impugned resolution is illegal and in the event of the investment not being regularised in accordance with law within three months of the final determination of the suit, the Directors of the 8th appellant other than Shri B. P. Khaitan, Shri R. Chaudhuri and Shri B. Malik undertake to this Court through Counsel for the 8th appellant to have the shares of the 8th appellant sold and/or disposed of within four months from the date of final determination of the suit and further undertake to this Court to reimburse any loss that the 8th appellant may suffer by reason of sale of the shares pursuant to this order.

Appeal allowed.

B. C. MITRA AND S. K.

MUKHERJEA, JJ.

Arun General Industries Ltd., Appellant v. Rishabh Manufacturers Private Ltd. and others, Respondents.

Appeal No. 58 of 1969: Suit No. 2695 of 1967, D/-9-1971.

(A) Civil Procedure Code (1908), Section 10 — Stay of suit — Same parties — The words 'same parties' mean the parties between whom the matter substantially in issue has arisen and has to be decided. Complete identity of either the subject-matter or the parties is not required. AIR 1957 Cal 727, Followed. (Case law discussed).

(Paras 9, 11 & 13)

It is enough if there is a substantial identity of the parties. Hence the existence of an additional party in the suit subsequently filed does not by itself make Section 10 inapplicable.

(Paras 9, 11)

Where the addition in the subsequent suit, of some defendants who are all directors of the plaintiff company in the earlier suit do not raise any sepa-

KO/LO/F670/71/LGC/SSG

rate and substantial issue as between them and the plaintiff in the subsequent suit, the addition of the defendants does not make the subsequent suit, any the less a suit between the same parties as in the earlier suit for the purpose of Section 10. (Paras 9 & 13)

(B) Civil Procedure Code (1908), Section 10.— Stay of suit — Matter directly and substantially in issue in the two suits must be the same. The subject-matter in dispute and matter in issue in the two suits need not, however, be identical in every particular. It is enough if the matters in controversy in the two suits are substantially the same. AIR 1953 Bom 117 and AIR 1957 Cal 727, Rel. on.

The matter for determination in the case of an application for stay under Section 10 is not what the basis of the claim in the two suits is, but what is the matter in issue in the two suits. The two different bases of claim, namely, one based on a contract and the other on a tort would not make the matters in issue in the two suits different merely on that ground. If a claim based on a contract in one suit, is sought to be avoided and repelled on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation and a subsequent suit is filed claiming damages on the basis of a fraudulent misrepresentation with regard to the same contract, the issues nevertheless in the two suits would be substantially the same, even though the bases of the claim in the two suits are altogether different. Sankar Ghose, for Appellant.

B. C. MITRA, J.:— The appellant carried on a business and undertaking at Umaria, Madhya Pradesh, known as Arun Board and Paper Mills. On August 6, 1964, the respondent No. 7 entered into an agreement with the appellant under the terms of which the latter agreed to transfer its right, title and interest in the lease which the appellant had previously obtained from the Government of Madhya Pradesh on April 21, 1961. The consideration for the transfer was Rs. 1,25,000/- out of which the respondent No. 7 was to pay Rs. 25,000/- at the time of the agreement, another Rs. 25,000/- within sixty days after the issue of no objection certificate by the Government of Madhya Pradesh and the balance of Rs. 75,000/- in several stated instalments. In terms of this agreement the respondent No. 7 paid to the appellant Rs. 25,000/- on August 10, 1964, and he also nominated the respondent No. 1 as his nominee in whose name the lease was to be transferred. The respondent No. 2 agreed to guarantee the due payment of the consideration money mentioned above. The appellant made over possession of the undertaking and the establishment to the respondent No. 1. According to the appellant it received from the Madhya Pradesh Government the no objection certificate in 1964 for the transfer of the lease to the respondent No. 1. The respondent No. 1 did not pay the balance of consideration money namely Rs. 1 lac and it is contending that the no objection certificate has not been issued by the Madhya Pradesh Government.

2. On October 9, 1967, the appellant filed a suit in the Court of the District Judge, Jabalpur against the respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 7 claiming a permanent injunction prohibiting these respondents from working the plant known as "Arun Board and Paper Mills" or any part thereof, for a decree for Rs. 1 lac with interest, a decree directing the said respondents to account for the profits received by them from the undertaking from the date of their taking possession, and in the alternative for a decree for payment of the balance consideration money with interest.

3. On December 1, 1967, the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 filed a suit in this Court against the appellant and the respondents Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 7. The claim in the Calcutta suit is that the appellant failed to fulfil its contract for transfer of the undertaking in terms of the agreement mentioned above, that the respondent No. 1 was always ready and willing to pay the balance of the consideration money, but the appellant failed to obtain the no objection certificate. It is alleged that for these reasons the consideration for the agreement for transfer wholly failed and the respondent No. 1 is entitled to refund of the sum of Rs. 25,000/- together with all benefits. There is a further claim of Rs. 3,33,690.44 by the respondent No. 1 in electrification work, purchase of modern machinery, additions and alterations to the same and also to buildings, sheds and structures. A sum of Rs. 1,00,000/- per annum is claimed on account of loss of profit and Rupees 49,500/- is claimed as representing the amount which the respondent No. 1 is liable to pay to the State Electricity Board for supply of electrical energy. There are other prayers for declaration that the guarantee is now void and cancellation of the same and other incidental reliefs. The writ of summons in this suit was served upon the appellant on or about January 17, 1968, and on February 23, 1968, the appellant made an application for stay of the Calcutta suit under Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, on the ground that the subject-matter in the earlier instituted Jabalpur suit is same and/or substantially the same as in the later instituted Calcutta suit, and that the matters in issue in the Jabalpur suit are directly and substantially in issue of the Calcutta suit. On this application an order was made on April 29, 1968, staying the Calcutta suit for two years from the date of the order and also directing that the stay order would not prejudice the right of the respondent as plaintiff in the Calcutta suit to take all necessary steps in the mean time and also to make interlocutory applications if so advised. The order also provided that if the Jabalpur suit was not disposed of within a period of two years, the appellant would be at liberty to apply in the Calcutta suit for renewal or continuation of the stay for a further period on proper materials. This appeal is directed against this order. Before proceeding any further it is to be noted that both the appellant and the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 who have filed cross-objections are aggrieved by the order staying the suit for a term of two years.

4. Mr. Sankar Ghose counsel for the appellant contended that the subject-matter of the Jabalpur suit, which was the earlier instituted suit, was the same as the Calcutta suit. The addition of parties in the Calcutta suit, it was argued, who were not parties in the Jabalpur suit, would make no difference to the claim for stay of a suit under S. 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, as the matters in issue in the Jabalpur suit were the same as in the Calcutta suit. The appellant's claim in the Jabalpur suit is that an agreement was entered into for transfer of the appellant's right, title and interest of the buildings, sheds, structures, machinery, stores etc. for which Rs. 1,25,000/- was to be paid by the respondent No. 1. The consideration was to be paid in several stated instalments. It is alleged that the first instalment of Rs. 25,000/- was paid to the appellant, that the respondent No. 2 guaranteed the due payment of the amount payable to the appellant under the agreement, and that the appellant made over possession of the plant, machinery, building etc. to the respondent No. 1. It is next alleged that in 1964 the appellant obtained a 'No Objection' letter from the Government of Madhya Pradesh and forwarded the same to the respondents. It is claimed that the transferee shall not be entitled to start running the plant unless sanction for the transfer was obtained from the Government of Madhya Pradesh, and since a 'no objection' certificate was obtained the respondent started running and using the plant for the purpose of the business. The next allegation is that apart from the sum of Rs. 25,000/- no other sum had been paid to the appellant in terms of the agreement and that the appellant had always been ready and willing to perform its part of the contract, but the respondents had been trying to avoid fulfilment of their obligation under the same. In these facts the appellant claimed the balance of consideration namely Rs. 1,00,000/-. There is a claim for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant in the Jabbalpur suit from working the plant, and a prayer for accounts of profits received from running the plant from the date of taking possession by the respondent No. 1 up to the date of making over possession to the appellant and a decree for such sum as may be found due. In the alternative it is claimed that a decree may be passed for payment of the balance with interest.

5. The plaint in the Calcutta suit starts with a statement regarding representations made by two of the Directors of the appellant that the appellant was anxious to transfer its interest in the undertaking. It is next alleged that the respondent No. 2 intimated to the appellant that he was interested in acquiring the leasehold interest on behalf of a limited company which would be promoted. It is then stated that the representations were made on behalf of the appellant that the properties were free from encumbrances, that the appellant had full power and authority to enter into an agreement for transfer of the lease and that all provisions of law have been complied with in connection with the said agreement. The next statement in the plaint is about the written offer by the appellant dated August 6, 1964, for transfer of the leasehold interest. The terms of the offer are also set out in the plaint. It is thereafter stated that Rs. 25,000/- was paid to the appellant by cheque, and possession of a portion of the premises was given to the respondent No. 7 on August 14, 1964, on which date the respondent No. 1 was incorporated, and intimation was given by the respondent No. 7 that the respondent No. 1 was the nominee and the appellant was requested to transfer the lease to the respondent No. 1 as such nominee. The next allegation in the plaint is that on August 27, 1964, the respondent No. 2 gave to the appellant a letter of irrevocable guarantee for Rs. 1,00,000/-. It is alleged that the respondent No. 1 electrified the factory and equipped the same with modern machinery, made additions, alterations and repairs to the machinery and buildings in order to be ready to run the factory as soon as the 'No Objection' letter was received by the appellant from the Government of Madhya Pradesh. The next material allegation in the plaint is that the respondent No. 1 came to know that the representations mentioned above were false and frivolous and were made with intent to deceive respondents Nos. 2 and 7. Thereafter particulars of the falsity of the representations have been set out in the plaint. It is next alleged that the respondents Nos. 3, 5 and 6 represented to the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 that securing of a 'No Objection' letter from the Government was a mere formality, that the same would be secured in a short time and that the respondent No. 1 could go ahead with the working of the factory. It is alleged that the respondent No. 1 proceeded to work the plant and invested large sums of money. It is then alleged that the appellants were unable to secure the 'No Objection' letter at all and that the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 would not have entered into the transaction nor paid Rs. 25,000 and would not have incurred various expenditure and the respondent No. 2 would not have furnished the guarantee but for the representations and assurances made to respondent No. 1. It is next alleged that by a letter dated November 30, 1966, the respondent No. 1 requested the appellant to fulfil the latter's part of the contract by December 15, 1966, and gave notice that time was to be treated as the essence of the contract. It is thereafter stated that the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract and in part performance of the same payment was made to the appellant and partial possession of the leasehold properties was obtained by the respondent No. 1. It is next alleged that the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 were ready and willing to pay the balance of the amount and to fulfil the guarantee, and the terms of the contract but the appellant failed to perform its part and comply with the terms of the agreement. It is next alleged that the consideration of the agreement wholly failed and that the respondent No. 1 was entitled to refund of the sum of Rs. 25,000/-. The respondent No. 1 thereafter claims to be entitled to amounts it spent in electrifying, equipping with modern machinery and making additions and alterations to the factory. A claim is also made for Rs. 1,00,000/- per annum from December 16, 1966, till the end of the optional period of the lease. The respondent No. 2 claims return of the letter of guarantee and a declaration that the same is not binding on him.

6. From the averment in the two plaints it is to be seen firstly if it can be said that the matter in issue in the Calcutta suit is directly and substantially in issue in the Jabalpur suit. Secondly it is to be seen if the two suits are between the same parties or between the parties under whom they or any of them claim.

7. There can hardly be any doubt that the dispute between the parties arises out of the agreement for transfer of a leasehold interest. There is no dispute about the contract itself or its terms. The dispute, such as it is, arises out of alleged performance or alleged failure to perform the obligations under the bargain. In the Calcutta suit not only the appellant but its Directors also have been impleaded as defendants. The charge against these Directors, as laid in the plaint, is that they made certain false representations. Can it be said that such a charge against these defendants is a subject-matter in issue in the suit? That is the first question which arises in this appeal. The representation made by respondent Nos. 3, 5 and 6 who are Directors of the appellant is alleged to have been made on behalf of the Directors themselves and on behalf of the appellant. How the Directors could make any representation on their own behalf when they were acting as Directors of a company is by no means clear. No part of the leasehold interest vested in the Directors themselves, and the agreement for transfer was made between the appellant company and the respondent No. 1. No case has been made out in plaint that the Directors of the appellant company had any interest in the leasehold properties other than as Directors of the company. When Directors acting as Directors make a representation on behalf of a company, and the party to whom the representation is made understands it to be such, such a representation cannot but be held to be a representation made by the Company. The rights and liabilities arising out of such representations are the rights and liabilities of the company and not of the Directors who made the representation. This is subject to one reservation that the Directors acted or purported to act within the powers conferred upon them by the Articles of Association of the company. No case has been made out in the plaint in the Calcutta suit that the Directors acted beyond the power conferred upon them by the Articles of the Company so as to make them personally liable for the representations made by them.

8. There is another averment in the plaint in the Calcutta suit that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 gave certain assurances, namely, that the properties were free from encumbrances, that the defendant company had full power and authority to enter into an agreement for transfer, and that all provisions of law had been complied with. These assurances were plainly given by them as Directors of and on behalf of the Company. For the assurances and representations given and made by the Directors of the appellant as its Directors, the respondent No. 1 can have no claim to any relief, even assuming it had suffered injury by reason of such assurances and representations. In my view the cause of action pleaded against the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5, in the Calcutta suit such as it is, cannot be said to be any part of the subject-matter in issue in the suit. I make it clear that I should not be understood to say that these defendants have been impleaded in the suit mala fide or with an ulterior motive. We are not called upon to express any view on that question and we accordingly refrain from doing so. But in order to determine what is the subject-matter in issue in the Calcutta suit, it is necessary to examine the claim of the respondent No. 1 as laid in the Calcutta plaint. Shorn of verbiage and all other trappings and embellishments the matter in issue in the Calcutta suit is that the plaintiffs were ready and willing to perform their part of the contract, and to pay the balance of the amount and also to fulfil the terms of the agreement of transfer, but the defendant company failed and neglected to perform its part and comply with the terms of the agreement. It is by reason of this alleged failure on the part of the defendant No. 1 in the Calcutta suit that various reliefs have been claimed in that suit. I shall examine the matter in issue in the Jabalpur suit later. The plaint in the Calcutta suit appears to me to be somewhat curious. The allegations against the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 who are Directors of the defendant No. 1 (appellant in this appeal) is that they made false and fraudulent representations, and also gave false assurances with intent to deceive and induce the plaintiff No. 1 and the defendant No. 6 into the agreement. This is the charge made against the Directors in Paragraph 15 of the plaint. In paragraph 16 of the plaint it is alleged that three of the Directors namely defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 made certain representations to the plaintiffs in the Calcutta Suit. In paragraph 19 of the plaint it is alleged that the defendants fraudulently and intentionally misled the plaintiffs, and in paragraph 20 it is alleged that but for the false and fraudulent representations the plaintiffs would not have entered in the transaction nor paid Rs. 25,000/- and further that the plaintiffs would not have incurred various expenditures mentioned in paragraphs 14 and 17 of the plaint. Briefly speaking these are the charges against the Directors of the appellant and the basis of the claim as laid in the plaint. But what follows these averments relating to fraud, deceit and untrue representations seems to me to be extremely curious. In spite of the allegations that the respondent No. 1 was induced to enter into the agreement by fraudulent misrepresentation and deceitful intent, the respondent No. 1 did not repudiate the contract. But it is alleged in paragraph 21 of the plaint that on November 30, 1966, the respondent No. 1 requested the appellant to fulfil its part of the contract by December 15, 1966, and in paragraphs 23 and 24 of the plaint it is alleged that the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 (plaintiffs in the Calcutta suit) were at all material times ready and willing to perform their part of the contract and pay the balance of the amount due under the contract and fulfil all other terms in the agreement. While on the one hand the charge is that but for the fraudulent and deceitful misrepresentations of the Directors of the appellant, the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 would not have entered into the contract, the contract itself is being affirmed and readiness and willingness to perform the same is pleaded.

9. A scrutiny of the plaint in the Calcutta suit became necessary because of the contention of Mr. A. C. Bhabra, counsel for the respondents that Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code has no application as the Calcutta suit is not between the same parties, who are parties in the Jabalpur suit. It was argued that the Directors of the appellant who are defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 in the Calcutta suit are not parties in the Jabalpur suit, and therefore Section 10 of the Code had no application. To the extent that defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 in the Calcutta suit are not parties in the Jabalpur suit this contention of counsel for the appellant is right. But the inquiry should not stop there. It has to be seen who are the parties between whom the matters in issue arise. The matter in issue in the Calcutta suit is the alleged failure or omission on the part of the appellant to perform its part of the contract. The matter in issue in the Jabalpur suit is also the failure or omission on the part of the respondent No. 1 (defendant No. 1 in the Jabalpur Suit) to perform its part of the contract. Leaving aside the question of guarantee, the parties on whom obligations have been imposed under the agreement are the appellant and the respondent No. 1. The matter in issue in the Jabalpur suit is also the failure or omission on the part of the respondent No. 1 to perform its obligations under the contract. The questions as to who are to be treated as parties to a suit, or parties under whom they or any of them claim, have been the subject-matter of a number of decisions to which I now turn. The first case to be referred to is a Bench decision of this Court Shorab Merwanji Modi v. Mansata Film Distributors, AIR 1957 Cal 727. In that case an agreement for distribution of film was made in Bombay between a film producer of Bombay and a Calcutta distributor. The producer wrote a letter to the Distributor directing the latter to pay moneys payable to the producer to Kapurchand Ltd. Bombay. Disputes thereafter arose between the parties with regard to the pictures to be produced and distributed in consequence whereof one instalment due by the distributor to the producer was not paid. This was followed by termination of the agreement by the producer and forfeiture of moneys already paid by the distributor. Thereafter the producer filed a suit in the Bombay High Court on July 23, 1954, for recovery of an instalment of Rupees 60,000/- and various other reliefs. On August 12, 1954, the distributor instituted a suit on the Original Side of this Court against the producer adding Kapur Chand Ltd. as a party defendant. In this suit the distributor claimed a decree for Rs. 4,71,250/- of which Rs. 2,91,250/- was claimed as refund of money paid and Rs. 1,80,00/- as damages for loss of profit. In the Bombay suit the producer complained of breach of the terms of the agreement, pleaded termination of the same and prayed for a decree for the amount due or in the alternative damages. There was a denial of the allegation of misrepresentation made by the distributor in its letter. In the Calcutta suit the distributor alleged false and fraudulent representation vitiating the agreement and rendering it void and asked for refund of the moneys paid and also damages. The institution of the two suits was followed by an application by the producer in the Bombay suit for an injunction restraining the distributor from proceeding with the suit in Calcutta so long as the Bombay suit was not disposed of. On this application the injunction prayed for was granted, but on appeal the injunction was dissolved. This again was followed by an application by the distributor who was the plaintiff in the Calcutta suit, for an injunction restraining the producer from proceeding with the Bombay suit, and the producer on his turn filed an application also, in the Calcutta suit for revocation of the leave under Clause 12 of the Letters Patent, and alternatively for a stay of the Calcutta suit under Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. Both these applications in the Calcutta suit, however, were dismissed by the trial Court. Dealing with the question of the additional party in the Calcutta suit namely Kapurchand Ltd., Chakravarti C. J. held that the existence of an additional party by itself did not make Section 10 inapplicable, and that although the section spoke of 'same parties' it had been held that 'same parties' meant the parties between whom the matter substantially in issue had arisen and had to be decided. He further held that complete identity of either the subject-matter or the parties was not required. With regard to the additional party in the Calcutta suit namely Kapur Chand Ltd., it was held that a joinder of this additional party raised no separate and substantial issue as between this additional party and the plaintiff, so as to make Section 10 inapplicable. I respectfully agree with the views of the Division Bench on the question of the additional party in the Calcutta suit. In the instant case now before us the addition of the Director-defendants of the appellant namely the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 does not raise any separate and substantial issue as between them and the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 who are the plaintiffs in the Calcutta suit. All in all it is clear to me that the addition of the Director-defendants in the Calcutta suit does not necessitate an investigation or inquiry into new matters for the purpose of granting relief to the plaintiffs in the Calcutta suit, assuming they are entitled to such.

10. Mr. Sankar Ghose learned counsel for the appellant contended and we think rightly, that the observations of Chakravarti C. J. clinched the matter and that in spite of the allegations of fraud, misrepresentation and false assurances against the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 in the Calcutta suit, the matter in issue in that suit is nothing other than the alleged breach of contract by the appellant. In these facts we are unable to hold that the addition of the Director-defendants in the Calcutta suit takes it out of the ambit of Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Mr. Ghose relied on the observations of Denning L. J. in Ward v. Lewis, (1955) 1 All ER 55, that when a tort has been committed by two or more persons an allegation of a prior conspiracy to commit tort adds nothing and the prior agreement merges in the tort. That was however an application for an amendment of statement of claim giving particulars of special damages. The question before the Court was if the amendment should be allowed to enable the plaintiff to claim special damages. The dictum of Denning L. J. has no application to the question with which we are concerned in this appeal. The question before us is whether the matter in issue in the Calcutta suit as framed, is also directly and substantially in issue in the Jabbalpur suit. As I have said earlier there is no pleading either in the Calcutta plaint or in the written statement in the Jabbalpur suit of repudiation of the contract by the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentations and false assurances given by the Directors of the appellant and intent to deceive the respondents Nos. 1 and 2. Far from any pleading of repudiation of the contract on these grounds, the plaint in the Calcutta suit and the written statement in the Jabbalpur suit make it clear that the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 were affirming and accepting the contract and were charging the appellant and its Directors with breach of the contract. That in my view is the essence of the matter in issue in the Calcutta suit and also in the Jabbalpur suit. On the question of identity of a party reliance was placed by Mr. Ghose on a Bench decision of the Bombay High Court reported in ILR 44 Bom 283 = (AIR 1920 Bom 296) in which it was held that Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code required a substantial identity in the matter of parties. Reference was also made to a Bench decision of the Lower Burma Chief Court reported in AIR 1919 Low Bur 10 in which it was held that the addition of a new party in a suit did not prevent the application of Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code which required that the same party should be litigating in both the suits.

11. The next case relied upon by Mr. Ghose was a Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in AIR 1920 All 70 in which it was held that addition of one party in a later suit was immaterial for the purpose of Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that if the hearing of a suit had to be postponed under Section 10, it should be postponed against all the parties including the added new party. Counsel for the appellant also relied upon a Bench decision of the Nagpur High Court reported in AIR 1948 Nag 297. In that case it was held that for the purpose of application of Section 10 it was enough if there was substantial identity of parties and that complete identity of parties was not necessary.

12. Mr. A. C. Bhabra Counsel for the respondents sought to repel the contentions of the appellant's counsel firstly by referring to the word 'same' used in Section 10. He said that the same word used more than once in the same section must be given the same meaning. He argued that the word 'same' must be given its plain English meaning which it must be held to indicate the identical object. In support of this contention he relied on two decisions reported in AIR 1954 SC 592 and AIR 1943 Bom 81. Relying on the decision reported in AIR 1950 FC 83 counsel for the respondents argued that effect should be given to the language of the section. It was next argued that so far as parties were concerned, for the purpose of application of Section 10, there must be complete identity of parties and also of subject matter. In support of this contention counsel for the respondents relied on the decision reported in AIR 1960 Madh Pra 169. Reliance was also placed by counsel for the respondents on a Bench decision of this Court reported in AIR 1935 Cal 1. In that case the question of who are the same parties was considered. A partnership action was filed in Delhi by one of the partners of a Delhi firm and thereafter, a Receiver appointed in another partnership action in this Court filed a suit for dissolution of a partnership in which he made all the partners, including those of the Delhi firm, party-defendants. Dealing with the question whether the two suits were between the same parties under Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was held that although the Calcutta suit was by a Receiver, to all intents and purposes, the parties in the two suits were the same. To our mind this decision is against the contention of counsel for the respondents, because in so far as one of the suits was by a Receiver appointed by the Court, it could not be said to be a suit between the same parties, in the sense in which the word 'same' should be construed according to counsel for the respondents.

13. In our view the addition of the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 who are all Directors of the appellant (defendant No. 1 in the Calcutta suit) does not make the Calcutta suit any the less a suit between the same parties as in the Jabbalpur suit, for the purpose of Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code. The false and fraudulent representations alleged to have been made, and the assurance alleged to have been given by the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 in the Calcutta suit were all made and given by them as Directors of the appellant. There is nothing in the Calcutta plaint to suggest that there was an independent contractual relationship between these defendants and the plaintiffs in the Calcutta suit (respondents Nos. 1 and 2) in this appeal. The allegation of joint and several liability of the defendants in paragraph 26 of the plaint in the Calcutta suit cannot make us ignore the allegation in paragraph 24 of the plaint that the defendant No. 1 (appellant) is charged with a breach of contract and also of repudiation of the same. On the plaint as framed, and without anything more, there could hardly be any doubt that in order to give relief to the plaintiffs in the Calcutta suit the Court has to come to a conclusion whether there has been a breach and a repudiation of the contract by the defendant No. 1 in the Calcutta suit. In the written statement of the Jabbalpur suit it is alleged that the plaintiff in that suit (the appellant in this appeal) broke the contract and therefore the defendants in that suit were justified in not making payment to the plaintiff. If the Jabbalpur suit is decreed the issue of breach of contract and of repudiation of the same in the Calcutta suit will be barred by res judicata. If on the other hand the Jabbalpur suit is dismissed there will be little left in the appellant's defence in the Calcutta suit. Thus the main question resolves itself to this: Whether the contract has been broken and repudiated by the appellant and whether the appellant is entitled to the balance of the consideration money. The addition of the defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 in the Calcutta suit, in our view, makes no difference to the determination of the principal matter in issue in the Calcutta suit. We must therefore hold that in effect and in substance, if not in form, the Calcutta suit is between the same parties as the Jabbalpur suit. There is therefore sufficient compliance with the requirement of Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code that in order to attract the provisions of that section the two suits should be between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claimed. This disposes of the question of parties in two suits one of which is sought to be stayed under Section 10 of the Code. I now proceed to deal with the question of the matters directly and substantially in issue in the two suits.

14. Earlier in this judgment I have analysed the plaint in the Calcutta suit and I now proceed to look into the scope of the Jabbalpur suit with reference to the allegations in the plaint and the written statement in that suit. That plaint starts with the agreement entered into between the parties on August 6, 1964, and then proceeds to record payment of Rs. 25,000/- by the appellant and nomination of the respondent No. 1 by the respondent No. 2 as the nominee in whose name the lease was to be transferred. Thereafter it is alleged that possession of the establishment was made over by the appellant to the respondent No. 1. The next material allegation is that the appellant received from the Madhya Pradesh Government the 'No Objection' letter for transfer of the lease by the appellant to the respondent No. 1. The appellant then contends that besides the sum of Rs. 25,000/- the respondent No. 1 made no other payment though the time for such payment expired. After pleading readiness and willingness to perform its part of the contract, the appellant claims the balance of Rs. 1,00,000/- with interest. There is a further claim for compensation for the structures. There are averments of false allegation by the respondents about the acceptance of an alleged surrender by the Madhya Pradesh Government of 99.36 acres of land. The reliefs claimed in the plaint are an injunction restraining the defendants in that suit from working the plaint, a decree for Rs. 1,00,000/- with interest, accounts of profits received and in the alternative a decree for payment of the balance money with interest. This in substance is the nature of the claim in the Jabbalpur suit. In the written statement in that suit filed jointly by the respondents Nos. 1, 7 and 2 (defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 in that suit) it is firstly alleged that the agreement was obtained on misrepresentation of facts. It is next alleged that the appellant failed and neglected to procure a "No Objection" letter from the Government of Madhya Pradesh. The next material allegation is that the appellant falsely and fraudulently represented to the defendants that 'No Objection' letter would be procured in terms of the agreement. The next allegation is about the concealment of the surrender of 99.36 acres of land and fraudulent inducement of respondent No. 1 to start running the plant and incur large expenses and that but for the fraudulent and false representation the respondent No. 1 would not have run the factory. These averments are followed by an allegation of breach of the contract by the appellant. In paragraph 11 of the written statement it is again alleged that the respondent No. 1 would not have done construction, additions, alterations and improvements but for the fraudulent representations made by the appellant that it would obtain a 'No Objection' letter from the Madhya Pradesh Government. It is alleged that the defendants believed such fraudulent representations to be true. In paragraph 13 of the written statement it is alleged that the procurement of the 'No Objection' letter was a condition precedent and by reason of the appellant's failure to procure the same, the agreement was void or voidable at the option of the defendants, and that they had duly avoided the same. In paragraph 18 of the written statement the allegation is that the plaintiff has committed a breach of agreement and has failed to obtain the 'No Objection' letter, has broken the contract and the defendants have been discharged from completing the transaction. This in brief is the defence to the appellant's claim in the Jabbalpur suit.

15. It is clear to us that the substantial issue in the Jabbalpur suit is if the respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 7 are liable to the appellant for the balance of the consideration money, and secondly whether the alleged false and fraudulent representations were made by the appellant and thirdly if by virtue of such false and fraudulent representations the respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 7 have been exonerated from their liability for the balance of the consideration. As I noticed earlier these are substantially the issues in the Calcutta suit as well. It is true that the reliefs claimed in the two suits are different, as indeed they must be, but the issues in the two suits in our view are substantially the same. The alleged false and fraudulent representations made by the plaintiff in the Jabbalpur suit and its Directors in the Calcutta suit is the main plank on which the respondent No. 1 rests its claim to avoid liability for payment of the balance of consideration and also of its other obligations under the agreement. The next substantial issue in both the suits is the alleged surrender of a certain portion of land namely 99.36 acres and the third issue relates to the procurement of a 'No Objection' certificate from the Madhya Pradesh Government. To our mind these questions are common in both the suits and a decision on these questions in the Jabbalpur suit would certainly bar a determination of these questions in the Calcutta suit by virtue of res judicata.

16. Counsel for the respondents contended that in order to attract Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code all the issues involved in the two suits must be identical. In support of this proposition he relied on a Bench decision of this Court reported in 24 Cal LJ 514 = (AIR 1917 Cal 248). In that case a suit was filed for recovery of rent. This suit was resisted by the defendants on the ground that the defendants were already evicted from part of the land of which rent was claimed. This suit was decreed but the question whether the disputed plot of land was in the occupation of the plaintiff or the defendant was left open. An appeal was preferred against the decree and while the appeal was pending, another suit was filed for recovery of arrears of rent for a subsequent period. The defendants, in the second suit again raised the plea that they were unlawfully kept out of possession of a certain plot of land. Thus the title to the plot of land was in question in both the suits in the pending appeal and also in the subsequently instituted suit. The defendant applied for stay of the second suit under S. 10. It was held that the subject-matter in the second suit and the issues involved therein was the plaintiff's claim for rent for a different period and it was therefore held that the "matter in issue" did not cover the entire subject-matter in controversy between the parties and clearly the matter in issue in the second suit was the plaintiff's claim of rent for a period subsequent to that which was a subject-matter in the first suit and thereafter in the appeal therefrom. The question of title to the disputed plot of land did indeed arise in both suits but the substantial matter in issue was the plaintiff's right to rent for a different period. It was in these facts that it was held that the second suit could not be stayed under Section 10 of the Code. This decision, to our mind, is not of any assistance in the facts of this appeal. Reliance was next placed on another decision of this Court reported in AIR 1941 Cal 434. In that case a suit was filed in Calcutta for failure of the defendant to take delivery of certain hessian cloth and the claim was for difference between the contract price and market price. The defendant filed a suit at Arrah. The plaintiff in the Calcutta suit applied for an injunction restraining the defendant from proceeding with the Arrah suit, and the defendant in the Calcutta suit applied for stay of the Calcutta suit on the ground that the matters in issue in the two suits were the same. It was found, that the matter in issue in the Calcutta suit was not directly and substantially in issue in the Arrah suit and the parties were also not the same. In the Arrah suit it was claimed that the contract was void and that the plaintiff in that suit was induced to agree to enter into a gaming and wagering contract for the purpose of sale of hessian cloth. It was further alleged that performance of such contract would not be demanded by either party, that no delivery would be given or asked for and the contract would be settled by payment of difference. It was in these facts that it was held that the matter in issue in the Calcutta suit was different from that in the Arrah suit, which was a suit for recovery of difference between the contract price and market price. The facts in this case are entirely different from the facts involved in the appeal now before us. Reliance was also placed on a decision of the Madras High Court reported in AIR 1925 Mad 574 (1) in which it was held that the object of Section 10 of the Code was to prevent a later suit relating to the same subject-matter, being tried before an earlier suit relating to the same subject-matter being tried and disposed of. It was also held that under that section it was necessary that the matter in issue must be directly and substantially in issue in both the suits. This decision, does not advance matters in any way as the learned Judge has merely stated what the section itself provides. The next case relied upon by counsel for the respondents was also a decision of the Madras High Court reported in AIR 1922 Mad 304. In that case the subject-matter of the two suits were entirely different inasmuch as one suit related to property situated at Secundrabad and in the other suit the properties involved were properties in British India. Secondly one of the suits had reference to properties belonging to one person and in another suit the properties belonged to two different persons. Thus not only the properties were different, but the title to those properties belonged to two different persons. It was in these facts that it was held that where some of the issues were common in two suits between the same parties Section 10 did not apply and there could be no stay of the subsequently instituted suit and that Section 10 had reference to the entire subject-matter in controversy between the parties. The judgment in that case must be taken to be confined to the facts involved in that case. Reliance was next placed on a Bench decision of the Lahore High Court reported in AIR 1935 Lah 816. In that case also it was found as a fact that the matter in issue in the two suits as also the parties were not the same. It was in fact found that the matter in issue before the Rawalpindi Court was not directly and substantially in issue in the previously instituted suit in the Betul Court. The next case relied upon by counsel for the respondents was a decision of the Madras High Court reported in AIR 1940 Mad 7. In that case the two suits were for rent for entirely different periods, the later suit being a suit for rent for a subsequent period and it was for that reason that it was held that the matter in issue in the two suits was not the same.

17. The scope and extent of identity or similarity of the subject-matter in issue in two suits has received very careful judicial notice in two Bench decisions of the Bombay High Court and of this Court to which I will now refer. The Bombay decision is reported in AIR 1953 Bom 117. In that case the earlier suit was filed in this Court and the later suit was filed in the Bombay High Court. The plaintiff in the Bombay suit filed an application for injunction restraining the defendants in the Bombay suit from proceeding with the Calcutta suit. The defendants in the Bombay suit in their turn filed an application for stay of the Bombay suit. The Calcutta suit was filed on a contract for sale of 1898 tyres. It was held that the tyres were according to certain specifications and that the defendants in the Calcutta suit (plaintiffs in the Bombay suit) failed to take delivery of the tyres and therefore damages were claimed for non-acceptance. The defendants in the Calcutta suit thereafter filed the Bombay suit and contended that they had a contract to purchase only 1600 tyres and not 1898 tyres. The further contention of the Bombay plaintiffs was that the tyres were not according to specifications and that the tyres that were delivered were not according to contract quality. The Bombay plaintiff therefore claimed refund of the amount paid in respect of the price and also for damages for non-delivery. The question was whether the matter in issue in the Bombay suit was directly and substantially in issue in the Calcutta suit. It was held that Section 10 did not contemplate identity of issues in the two suits nor that the matter in issue in the two suits should be entirely the same or identical and that all that the section required was that the matter in issue in the two suits should be directly and substantially the same. It was also held that there should be identity of the subject-matter, and the field of controversy between the parties in the two suits must be the same, but the identity and the field of controversy contemplated need not be identical and same in every particular, but the identity and the field of controversy must be substantially the same. We respectfully agree with the views of the Division Bench of the Bombay High Court and we think Chagla C. J. has correctly and appropriately laid down the extent of the identity of the subject-matter in the two suits. In the facts of this case we have no doubt that the field of controversy between the parties in the Jabbalpur suit and the suit in this Court is substantially the same and there is substantial identity in the subject-matter in the two suits.

18. I next proceed to deal with the Bench Decision of this Court, AIR 1957 Cal 727 (supra). I have already referred to this case in connection with the question of parties to the suits. I shall now proceed to deal with the question of issues involved in the two suits with which that decision was concerned. In that case an agreement was entered into at Bombay between the Film Producer Modi and a Film Distributor Mansata Film Distributor of Calcutta. By this agreement the producer appointed the Distributor as distributor of films in certain territories with regard to three films. Under the agreement the distributor was to pay to the producer a sum of money in certain instalments and was to receive as its remuneration commission at certain rates. Another agreement was entered into between the parties on the same terms and conditions with regard to a different territory. Two letters were written by the producer to the distributor, by which the former authorised the latter, to pay moneys payable to him to Kapur Chand Ltd., Bombay. Under the two agreements a sum of money was payable by the distributor to the producer and this sum was to be paid in certain instalments. After payment of some of the instalments the distributor raised a question regarding the class of films to be produced by the producer and referred to certain representations made by the latter. The producer denied any representations having been made regarding the quality of the films and stated that the films would be according to the contract quality. The distributor did not pay one instalment of Rs. 60,000/- which had fallen due and thereupon the producer terminated the agreements and notified forfeiture of moneys paid by the distributor. All this was followed by a suit by the producer against the distributor filed at the Bombay High Court on July 23, 1954, for recovery of the instalment of Rs. 60,000/- in the alternative damages and other reliefs.

19. This suit was followed by a suit by the distributor on August 12, 1964, in the Original Side of this Court against the producer and the said

Kapur Chand Ltd., in which the distributor claimed a decree for a certain sum of money including refund of all moneys paid under the agreement and a further sum for damages. Thereafter the producer applied in the Bombay Suit for an injunction restraining the distributor from proceeding with its Calcutta Suit so long as the Bombay Suit was not disposed of. This injunction was granted by the Bombay High Court and the producer preferred an appeal against that order and the appellate Court dissolved the injunction. In the written statement filed in the Bombay Suit the distributor alleged fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the producer with regard to the agreement and the agreements were claimed to have been void and repudiated. It was also claimed that the distributor became entitled to recover from the producer all moneys advanced to him on a failure of consideration. Thereafter the distributor who was the plaintiff in the Calcutta suit applied for an injunction restraining the producer from proceeding with the Bombay suit and the producer on his part applied for a stay of the Calcutta suit under S. 10 of the Code. It was held that although the Bombay suit was a suit on the contract and the Calcutta suit was a suit in which a contract was impugned as void on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation by which the contract was induced, the matter in issue in the two suits were substantially the same though different reliefs were claimed by the plaintiffs in the two suits. Dealing with the question of the nature of the two suits it was held that the fact that one was a suit under the agreement and the other was a suit dehors the agreements did not make a substantial identity of the subject-matter impossible. It was found that the basis of the defence in the Bombay suit and of the claim in the Calcutta suit were both fraudulent misrepresentation and if the defence of the fraudulent misrepresentation in the Bombay suit succeeded nothing would be left in the Calcutta suit and if the case of misrepresentation succeeded in Calcutta, the Bombay suit would be practically decided, the only inquiry remaining being an inquiry as to damages claimed in addition to a refund of the money paid. It was further held that if the defence failed in Bombay the basis of the claim in the Calcutta suit would be destroyed. Finally it was held that the principal matter in issue in the Calcutta suit was directly and substantially in issue in the Bombay suit which was a suit previously instituted and that an unnecessary duplication of proceeding with the possibility of conflicting decisions, would occur if the Calcutta suit was not stayed. We respectfully agree with the views expressed by Chakravarti C. J. and we have no hesitation in holding that the issues in the Jabbalpur suit and also in the Calcutta suit are substantially the same.

20. A good deal of emphasis was laid by counsel for the respondents on the fact that the Jabbalpur suit was a suit on a contract while the Calcutta suit was a suit on tort, in so far as the plaintiffs in the Calcutta suit have sought to avoid the contract on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation and false assurances. In my view the question that one suit is a suit on a contract and the other is a suit on tort is a matter of no relevance at all in considering the applicability of Section 10 of the Code. The matter for determination in the case of an application for stay under Section 10 of the Code is not what the basis of the claim in the two suits is but what is the matter in issue in the two suits. The claim in a suit may very well be a claim based on a contract, but the contract may be sought to be repudiated by the defendants on the ground of a tort namely fraudulent misrepresentation, which in its turn may be the basis of a claim of a second suit. The two different bases of claim namely one based on a contract and the other on a tort would not make the matters in issue in the two suits different merely on that ground. If a claim based on a contract in one suit, is sought to be avoided and repelled on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation and a subsequent suit is filed claiming damages on the basis of a fraudulent misrepresentation with regard to the same contract, the issues nevertheless in the two suits would be substantially the same, even though the bases of the claim in the two suits are altogether different. Counsel for the respondents strenuously contended that the Jabbalpur suit was a suit for recovery of moneys due under a contract and the Calcutta suit was a suit based on the tort of fraudulent misrepresentation and false assurances. Therefore it was argued that the controversy and the matter in issue in the two suits were entirely different. In my view there is a clear fallacy in this contention. It is true that the plaintiff in the Jabbalpur suit has sued on a contract for recovery of the balance of consideration, and it is also true that the defendants in the Jabbalpur suit have raised as their defence in that suit the plea of fraud and false representation. But in the Calcutta suit although the plaintiffs' claim is based on fraudulent misrepresentation, false assurances and suppression of material facts, the plaintiffs have affirmed the contract between the parties and have also pleaded their readiness and willingness to perform their part of the contract including their readiness to pay the balance of the consideration and to fulfil all other terms of the agreement. The field of controversy between the parties in the two suits is in our view substantially the same, if not completely identical. The matter in issue in the two suits is the appellant's right to recover the balance of consideration and the respondents' claim to repudiate the contract and avoid liability under the same on the ground of fraudulent misrepresentation and false assurances. In these facts it cannot but be held that the matter in issue in the Calcutta suit is substantially in issue in the Jabbalpur suit.

21. Reliance was placed by counsel for the appellant on a Bench decision of this Court reported in 70 Cal WN 375 = (AIR 1966 Cal 382). In that case there was an agreement to sell 10,000 tons of iron ore. Payment was to be made through letter of credit. Shipment of a certain consignment was made per SS. Ariadah and part of the letter of credit was utilised for payment. The balance of the goods was to be shipped per S. S. Edison Mariner. The seller informed the buyer that goods had been shipped and requested the latter to raise the amount of the letter of credit to cover the increased quantity shipped. The buyer sent a cable the purport of which was that the Bank had been instructed to raise the credit. There was some delay in shipment as the ship was moored midstream. From the buyer's cable the seller gathered that there was no objection to the delay in shipment of the ore. The seller later came to know that the buyer had instructed its bankers not to make payment if the documents were presented after the specified date. As the seller was not paid 95 per cent of the value of the goods in terms of the contract he filed a suit in the Admiralty Jurisdiction of this Court. This suit was filed against the owners, the master and the parties interested in S. S. Edison Mariner. After the suit was filed the ship was arrested in the port of Madras. The defendant entered appearance and deposited with the Registrar a certain sum of money as security for obtaining release of the vessel. This suit however was dismissed on amongst other grounds that the Admiralty Jurisdiction of this Court could not be invoked in the facts of that case. An appeal was preferred against the decree of dismissal. Shortly after this dismissal the seller filed another suit during the pendency of the appeal claiming the price of goods and various other sums. The main claim of the seller against the buyer in the second suit arose in connection with the shipment per S. S. Edison Mariner and if the claim in the pending appeal was allowed, the claim left for adjudication in the second suit would have been limited only to a sum of Rs. 26,056.65 arising out of the shipment per S. S. Ariadah. The buyer applied for stay of the second suit under Section 10 of the Code. It was held that the main issue in the first suit was a claim for 95 per cent of the price of goods shipped per S. S. Edison Mariner and additional loading charges and that even if the buyer succeeded in his appeal the trial of the claim with regard to the goods shipped per S. S. Ariadah could not be avoided. It was therefore held that there was no substantial identity as regards the matter in issue in the two suits. In these facts it was held that the suit could not be stayed under Section 10 of the Code but an order was made for stay of the suit under Section 151 of the Code. It will be seen that the issues in the two suits were not substantially the same inasmuch as the trial of the second suit could not be avoided by reason of the claim for shipment of the goods per S. S. Ariadah. Counsel for the appellant relied upon this decision in support of his contention that even if Section 10 of the Civil Procedure Code could not be invoked in the facts of this case the suit should be stayed in exercise of the powers under Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. As we are of the opinion that parties in the two suits should be treated to be the same, notwithstanding the addition of the Directors of the appellant in the Calcutta suit, and as we are also of the opinion that the issues between the parties in the two suits are substantially the same, it is not necessary for us and we do not propose to go into the question of exercise of inherent power of the Court to stay a suit under Section 151 of the Code.

22. Counsel for the appellant had submitted that in any event the Court had the power to adjourn a suit to any date and that in the facts of this case an order for adjournment of the suit should be made until after the determination of the Jabbalpur suit. It appears that the Court below made an order in terms of prayer 'B' of the petition, which is a prayer for adjournment, or trial of the suit till the final determination of the Jabbalpur suit though the order of adjournment was limited to a period of two years. It was also argued that even if the order was an order of adjournment it would be an appealable order, as it was closely connected with the plea of res judicata. In support of this contention reliance was placed on a Bench decision of this Court reported in (1966) 70 Cal WN 870. Mr. Bhabra on the other hand contended that if it was an order for adjournment it was not an appealable order.

23. We do not think we need go into this question either. The first prayer in the petition is a prayer for stay of Suit No. 2965 of 1967 and all proceedings thereunder till the disposal of the Jabbalpur suit. Even assuming Mr. Bhabra is right that the order is an order for adjournment of the suit, it must be held to be a refusal of the order for stay of the suit in which case also the order would be an appealable order. In the view we have taken that Section 10 of the Code applies we need not go into the question of appealability of an order for adjournment.

24. It appears that although the learned Judge made an order in terms of prayer 'B' which as I said earlier is a prayer for adjournment or postponement of the suit till the final determination of the Jabbalpur suit, he has added that the stay will be limited for a period of two years from the date. It is not clear to us as to what the learned Judge had in view in making an order in terms of prayer 'B' of the petition and at the same time stating that the stay will be for a period of 2 years. We take it however from the observations made in the earlier portion of the judgment that although the term stay has been used in the operative part of the order, what the learned Judge meant was that the hearing of the suit should be adjourned or postponed. In the view we have taken in this appeal the opinion of the learned Judge that Section 10 of the Code does not apply cannot be sustained. For the reasons mentioned above this appeal must be allowed. The judgment and order of the Court below are set aside. There will be an order for stay of Suit No. 2965 of 1965 of this Court (Rishabh Manufacturers Private Limited v. Arun General Industries Limited) and all proceedings thereunder till the disposal of the suit pending in the Jabbalpur Court. The appellant will be entitled to the costs of this appeal.

25. Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 have preferred a cross-objection against the judgment and order on various grounds. The main ground of attack was that the learned Judge having held that Section 10 of the Code did not strictly apply should not have made the stay order at all, and that in any event an order for stay for two years should not have been made. The order is dated April 29, 1968, and therefore the two years period has already expired. The ground of objection to this part of the order namely a stay for a period of two years has therefore disappeared because at present there is no stay of the Calcutta suit. In the view however we have taken, the cross-objection must be dismissed and we order accordingly.

S. P. Roy Choudhury, for Petitioners; Sukumar Mukherjee, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— This Rule has arisen on an application by the appellants and is for setting aside the abatement of the appeal as against the sole respondent. He died on 31-1-1968. The petitioner No. 1 was one of the defendants in Title Suit No. 366 of 1959 in the Third Court of Munsif at Alipore. That was another suit by the sole respondent of this appeal. The heirs of Rahaman, the sole respondent, applied for substitution in that suit in the Alipore Court with notice to the petitioner No. 1 and his Advocate. He, thus, had knowledge of the death of the sole respondent from 1968. The petitioners, however, have made this application in this Court on 19-5-1970 stating that the petitioner No. 1 was looking after the case for all the petitioners, that the petitioner No. 2 is an illiterate old village woman, that the petitioner No. 3 is a cultivator, that the petitioner No. 4 is an ordinary labourer in a Jute Mill and the petitioner No. 5 is an ignorant house-wife living with her husband, that the petitioner No. 1 was under the impression that the sole respondent's heirs would themselves apply for substitution in this appeal as they did in their own Title Suit No. 366 of 1959 in the Alipore Munsif Court, that the petitioner No. 1 was a bullock-cart driver till four years back and had not been doing anything since then on account of blood pressure and that the petitioner No. 3 came to their Advocate in the High Court on 15-5-1970 to enquire as to what had become of their appeal admitted long before and enquired of him if the sole respondent's heirs have substituted themselves in the appeal, that he was then informed by his Advocate that they would have to apply for substitution and was asked to get the date of death and names of heirs of the respondent No. 1, that those informations were collected and he saw their Advocate again on 17-5-1970 and the petition was made ready on 18-5-1970 and filed on 19-5-1970. The prayer is opposed by the heirs of the sole respondent who stated that the petitioners, with full knowledge of the death of the respondent, did not apply for substitution wilfully within time and that the delay in filing the application should not be excused.

2. The application for substitution had not been filed within time. Nor the application for setting aside the abatement had been filed within time. The question is whether the petitioners are entitled to the condonation of the delay in filing the application under Section 5 of the Limitation Act, 1963. The petitioners will have to satisfy the Court that they were prevented by sufficient cause from making the application for substitution within time. The petitioners, in this case, had knowledge of the death of the respondent. They submit that they did not come to court in time as the petitioner No. 1, who was looking after the case of the petitioners, was under the impression that the heirs of the respondent would themselves apply for substitution as they did in their own suit in the Alipore Court. It is also submitted that the petitioner No. 1, because of his illness, had not been attending to his work from 1966 and that the other petitioners were ignorant and illiterate persons and that the delay was bona fide. It seems that the petitioner No. 1 and his Advocate were informed of the death of the sole respondent in 1968 when his heirs got themselves substituted in the suit in the Alipore Court. It had been stated in the affidavit of the opposite parties that the petitioner No. 3 was present at the burial ground when the sole respondent was buried. The question is whether the petitioners' belief that the respondent's heirs would themselves apply for substitution is a sufficient cause to explain their delay in coming to court. These parties are litigating for some time past. There is more than one litigation between the parties. The petitioner No. 1 came to know of the respondent's death and noticed that substitution of his heirs was being made in another suit. It is only natural that he enquired of his lawyer and came to know that substitution of the heirs of the self-same person in their case would be necessary. It is also likely that he will come to know of the necessity of their application for substitution at that time. Three of the petitioners are male persons. It has been stated in the affidavit of the opposite parties that the petitioner No. 3 was also present at the burial ground and had knowledge of the death of the respondent. The petitioner No. 1, on his affidavit, had not been attending to his work for about four years, that is, from 1966. It is only likely that some one also on behalf of the appellants had taken charge of the matter from him and the matter did not remain unattended between 1966 and 1970. It is also likely that the petitioners, after having notice of the substitution of the respondent's heirs in their suit in Alipore Court, would contact their own lawyer in the High Court to find out if they would have to apply for substitution or not. I am not satisfied that the delay in this case by the petitioners in making the application is bona fide.

3. The learned Advocate appearing for the petitioners referred to the decisions in Krishna Mohan Ghose v. Surapati Banerjee (reported in 29 Cal WN 472) = (AIR 1925 Cal 634 (1)) and the case of Ramachandran v. C. Sabapathy Mudaliar, (reported in 54 Mad LJ 234 at p. 237) = (AIR 1928 Mad 404 at page 406) and submitted that delay, if bona fide, should be excused as sufficient cause within the meaning of Order 22, Rule 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside the abatement. The question is whether on the facts of this case the principle of law laid down in those cases is applicable. I have already discussed the circumstances of the case and have concluded that the delay in this case was not bona fide. In that view of the matter, it cannot be said that the petitioners have made out the case that they were prevented by sufficient cause from applying for substitution of the heirs of the sole respondent within time or from applying for setting aside the abatement within time.

4. In the result, the Rule is discharged. There will be no order as to costs in this Rule.

Order accordingly.

Rabindra Nath Mukherjee, Appellant v. Abinash Chandra Chatterjee, Respondent.

A. F. O. O. No. 34 of 1971, D/- 7-5-1971.

(A) Guardians and Wards Act (1890), Section 10 (3) — Requirement as to attestation by two witnesses — Where an application for being appointed as guardian of the person and property of a minor is attested by one witness only and it is not shown that it was attested even by that witness the application is liable to be rejected in limine. (Point conceded). (Para 21)

(B) Guardians and Wards Act (1890), Section 11 — Procedure on admission of application — An application for being appointed as guardian of the person and property of a minor which is not in conformity with Section 10 (3) is not one that can be proceeded on under Section 11. (X-Ref.— Section 10 (3)). (Para 22)

(C) Guardians and Wards Act (1890), Section 12 — Power to make interlocutory order — Section 12 gives power to make interlocutory orders for the temporary custody and protection of the person and property of the minor. It does not include power to injunct against Search — Warrant issued by Magistrate under Section 100, Criminal Procedure Code (X-Ref.— Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 100). (Para 23)

D. N. Lahiri, for Appellant; Sakti Prosad Mukherjee, for Respondent.

AMRESH ROY, J.— This appeal has been preferred under Section 47 of Guardians and Wards Act by Rabindra Nath Mukherjee against an order made under Section 7 of that Act rejecting his prayer to be appointed guardian of the person and property of minor Gautam Chatterjee who is his daughter's son. The parents of the minor are alive. Father of the boy who was joined as opposite party in the petition and is Respondent in this Court opposed the prayer of the petitioner appellant.

2. The parties are governed by Dayabhag Hindu Law, and under that law undisputably father is the natural guardian of the person and property of minor son. That law still prevails under Section 12 of Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956. Appellant's claim to be appointed guardian in preference to the father of the boy who by their personal law is the natural guardian of the person and property of the minor is based on the history of the boy's life who is now about 12 years old, being born in 1959.

3. It is the admitted case of both parties that soon after the boy was born, he was brought to the house of his maternal grandfather and was brought up there and has been living there. Reason for that transposition of locus of the child at his early age has not been clearly stated by the appellant either in his application or in his deposition. But he has stated that it was at a time when the child was only 1 1/2 months' old, and since then neither the father nor the mother of the boy has taken any interest in the affairs of the child. The boy was brought up as a son in the family of his maternal grandfather who was a teacher in a Primary School. He was educated in that School and having done well he has passed the preliminary stage and is now in a Higher Secondary School where he is a student of Class VIII.

4. On the side of applicant emphasis has been put on the part of the story that since that early age of the boy the father of boy has not taken any interest in his affairs and has not paid any money for upbringing and education of the boy. None of the parents has even come to see the boy, so much so that even at his age of 11 years the boy does not know even his father and mother. In the Court during his deposition, the boy said that he did not recognise his parents.

5. The necessity for making the application for being appointed guardian arose according to the applicant because recently the father of the boy for meeting expenses of marriage of his eldest daughter by a deceased wife had solicited his father-in-law for a loan of Rupees 5,000/- but the applicant did not oblige the son-in-law. That enraged the son-in-law and he filed a complaint in the Magistrate's Court alleging wrongful confinement of the minor child. The Magistrate ordered a Search Warrant to issue for the boy. To prevent the boy from being taken by that Search Warrant, the maternal grandfather made the application under Guardian and Wards Act and had the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court stayed.

6. On the side of the Respondent the reason for leaving the boy at his early age with his maternal grandparents was that at the time when the child was born his parents were in Delhi where his father had been transferred in his service in the department of Military Accounts of Government of India. Soon before the birth of their child, a young son of his maternal grand-mother had died. The mother of this infant son was then living at her father's place with the child and she found her mother disconsolate due to grief of her son's death. To help the elderly lady in her grief, the daughter on compassionate grounds left her newly born son with her mother before she went back to Delhi with her husband. The boy was brought up by his maternal grand-mother and has been living there since he was put in that care. According to their case the parents of the boy did come to see the boy whenever they came to Calcutta and also paid expenses for his upbringing and education. After he was transferred from Delhi and joined office in Calcutta in 1960, the father and also the mother of the boy wanted to take the boy to their household. But either due to sentimental reasons and superstitious psychology of the grand parents and other members of the boy's maternal family or due to other material reasons, they refused to allow the boy to go to his parents and also prevented the parents from getting access to the boy or even to see him. That culminated in the complaint lodged by the father of the boy in Criminal Court to obtain a Search Warrant for rescue of the boy for production before the Magistrate. That proceeding however has remained stayed since present application under the Guardians and Wards Act was filed.

7. While those are the bare outlines of respective cases of the parties. In the application for appointment of guardian which was filed on 14th March 1970 the applicant, as the basis of his claim to be appointed as guardian, stated that "the boy's parents never exercised any parental rights for these long 11 years. The neglect of the minor by the parents is a mental cruelty to the boy" and also that "the father lost the preferential right on account of his not exercising the parental rights for 11 years and not even keeping any information about the boy, not looking to his interest at all for these long years and for his neglect of the minor."

8. As a reason for appointment of guardian in that application mention was made of "a Criminal Case against the petitioner under Section 341 I. P. C. to force the petitioner to give up custody to the father" and it was stated "The petitioner files the application for the welfare of minor and against the forcible removal of the boy....."

9. The proceeding that commenced on that application was numbered as Act VIII Case No. 26 of 1970 in the Court of the District Judge. Objection petition was filed on 24th April 1970. It characterised the first party's petition as "motivated and not maintainable" and after traversing the allegations prayed not only for dismissal of the first party's petition but also prayed for an "order that the boy be returned to the guardianship of the opposite party" and grant such other relief or reliefs as Court may deem fit.

10. The case appears to have been transferred to Second Court of Additional District Judge and trial commenced in July 1970 in that Court by examination of witnesses. On the petitioner's side were examined the petitioner himself and the minor Gautam Chatterjee. On the other side the mother and the father of the minor deposed on oath. Besides that oral testimonies, only other material before the learned trial Judge was that on the very first day of the trial he ascertained from the boy his wish and he wanted to remain with his maternal grandfather. Unfortunately there is no record of what questions were asked and answers elicited thereby at that interview of the boy with the learned Judge. Deposition of the minor as petitioner's witness No. 2 is set out in the whole as it appears in the Record:—

"The deposition of Witness No. 2 for the petitioner aged about 12 years, taken on oath or solemn affirmation before me Shri A. K. Coari A. D. J of Act VIII 26/70/ this 15th day of June 1970.

11. The learned Additional District Judge in his judgment delivered on 23rd July, 1970 held that the petitioner stated falsehoods in his petition and lied in his deposition on oath on almost all material points of fact including the story of a request for loan. He also held that the boy has been tutored to speak against his own parents and his mind is being poisoned against the parents and only person who can do so is the present petitioner. On that ground he was unable to accept the petitioner as a fit person to be appointed as the guardian of a minor of tender years.

12. The learned Judge also held that financially the father of the boy is better off than the petitioner, and in the circumstances of the case the father of the boy had not forfeited his right to be guardian of the boy and he had not neglected to look after the welfare of the boy.

13. The petition was rejected with costs.

14. Against that order of the learned Additional District Judge present appeal has been preferred on behalf of the petitioner Rabindra Nath Mukherjee. Memorandum of Appeal was presented on 23rd July 1970 and the appeal was admitted for hearing under O. 41, Rule 11 Civil Procedure Code on 25-9-1970. On the same day an application for ad interim injunction was made in this Court supported by an affidavit sworn to by the petitioner Rabindra Nath Mukherjee on 3rd August, 1970. In that application it was stated in paragraph 5: "That all on a sudden as your petitioner did not comply with the demand of the boy's father to give him loan of Rs. 5,000/- he has filed an application for search warrant against the boy and to take him into his custody and managed to get an order of search warrant." In paragraph 12 thereof it was stated: "The minor is now lying in the custody of your petitioner and if he is removed from the said custody by the opposite party, his mind and health will be seriously affected. The opposite party is trying to remove the said minor from your petitioners' custody by means of search warrant. Unless the opposite party is restrained by an order of injunction from removing the minor from the custody of your petitioner by means of search warrant or otherwise, the welfare of the minor will be seriously prejudiced." Prayer in that petition was

"to issue a Rule calling upon the opposite party to show cause why he should not be restrained by an order of injunction from removing the minor (Gautam Chatterjee) from the custody of the petitioner by any means whatsoever pending the disposal of the appeal by this Hon'ble Court and upon hearing the cause shown, if any, or otherwise make the Rule."

15. A Rule was directed to issue in these terms:

"Let a Rule issue calling upon the opposite party to show cause why pending the disposal of F. M. A. T. 2347/70 preferred before this Court should not be restrained by an order of injunction in the manner as referred to in the petition or why such other or further order or orders should not be made as to this Court may seem fit and proper.

Ad interim injunction is granted pending the disposal of the Rule.

The Rule is made returnable eight weeks after the reopening of the Court after the long vacation."

16. By effect of ad interim order made in those terms, by the Division Bench (A. K. Sinha and R. B. Banerjee, JJ.) the proceedings in the Magistrate's Court including execution of the Search Warrant remained stayed.

17. In those circumstances when the Rule came up for hearing, the Division Bench (P. N. Mukerjee and A. Mukerjee, JJ.) made the Rule absolute and gave directions to prepare paper book of the appeal on an agreed list of papers to be filed by learned Advocates from the records if available or from copies of relevant papers to be supplied by the learned Advocates. Their Lordships also directed the appeal to be placed for hearing within three weeks from the date of that order made on 5th January, 1971. The records of the Court below were received on 28th January, 1971. Paper books were filed by the learned Advocate for appellant only on 15-2-1971 and those were served on the learned Advocates for the parties on 18-2-1971. Hearing of the appeal commenced before us on 24-2-1971.

18. At the hearing of the appeal, at the very outset we noticed that because of the directions given and the order made in the Rule for expedition, material documents have not been included in the paper book; not even the order-sheet of the Court below, though paper books were prepared in the office of the learned Advocate for the Appellant at a time when records of the Court below had already been received in this Court. It is unfortunate that it was allowed to happen that way and office of this Court accepted the paper books which had not even been compared with original records to give correct rendering of many documents including record of depositions of witnesses. We had therefore to refer to original records on all material points,

19. By doing so we find that the whole carriage of proceedings from the very inception has been not only perfunctory but also in violation of clear provisions of law to the detriment of justice and due process of law.

20. First, the application on which the proceedings commenced is not according to the provisions in Guardians and Wards Act. It is necessary to remember that power to make order appointing guardian is given by Section 7 of the Act. Then Section 8 provides the persons who are entitled to apply for order and enjoins that an order shall not be made except on an application. Section 9 provides the Courts having jurisdiction to entertain application. Section 10 provides:

"Section 10 (1) If the application is not made by the Collector, it shall be by petition signed and verified in manner prescribed by the Code of Civil Procedure for the signing and verification of a plaint, and stating, so far as can be ascertained

(a) the name, sex, religion, date of birth, and ordinary residence of the minor;

(b) where the minor is a female, whether she is married and, if so, the name and age of her husband;

(c) the nature, situation and approximate value of the property, if any, of the minor;

(d) the name and residence of the person having the custody or possession of the person or property of the minor;

(e) what near relations the minor has, and where they reside;

(f) whether a guardian of the person or property or both, of the minor has been appointed by any person entitled or claiming to be entitled by the law to which the minor is subject to make such an appointment;

(g) whether an application has at any time been made to the Court or to any other Court with respect to the guardianship of the person or property, or both, of the minor, and, if so, when, to what Court and with what result;

(h) whether the application is for the appointment or declaration of a guardian of the person of the minor, or of his property, or of both;

(i) where the application is to appoint a guardian, the qualifications of the proposed guardian;

(j) where the application is to declare a person to be a guardian, the grounds on which that person claims;

(k) the causes which have led to the making of the application; and

(l) such other particulars, if any, as may be prescribed or as the nature of the application renders it necessary to state.

(2) If the application is made by the Collector, it shall be by the letter addressed to the Court and forwarded by post or in such other manner as may be found convenient, and shall state as far as possible the particulars mentioned in sub-section (1).

(3) The application must be accompanied by a declaration of the willingness of the proposed guardian to act and the declaration must be signed by him and attested by at least two witnesses."

21. The application that was filed in the Court of the District Judge at Alipore does not bear attestation by two persons. It purports to bear attestation by one person only. No evidence has been given that it is attested by that person even. That being so, the application deserved to be rejected in limine. This appeal must therefore fail for that defect in the application alone. When his attention was drawn to this defect, the learned Advocate for the Appellant could not find any answer to it and had to concede that appeal must be dismissed on that ground.

22. It is not a little astonishing that the defect so fundamental is appearing in an application filed through a lawyer and it was not even noticed either by the District Judge before fixing a day for hearing and directing notice enjoined by Section 11 of the Act which enjoins that such steps can be taken only if the Court is satisfied that there is ground for proceeding on the application. An application which is not in conformity with Section 10 (3) is not one that can be proceeded on under Section 11.

23. Yet the District Judge entertained that application by registering a case and proceeded to issue general and special notice by order dated 24-3-1970 and again on 30-3-1970 to issue notice on an application for an injunction in such a proceeding for granting in effect an injunction against a criminal proceeding and countermanding execution of a Search Warrant issued under Section 100 Criminal Procedure Code. It reveals lack of appreciation of the nature of such a Search Warrant which is a Magisterial power of the nature of a Writ of Habeas Corpus for production of the body of a minor before the Magistrate. To countermand such a process issued by a Criminal Court involves grave consequences that may befall not only on the ultimate justice in the case but also on the safety and welfare of the minor. It is astonishing that such an order was made by the District Judge with so much casualness that is appearing loudly in the order dated 30-3-1970 as it appears in the order sheet. Only redeeming feature in that order is that it does not by express words grant an interim injunction pending the hearing of the application for injunction as was prayed for. Section 12 of the Act gives power to make interlocutory orders for the temporary custody and protection of the person and property of the minor. It does not include power to injunct against Search Warrant issued by Magistrate.

24. Opposite party filed written objection to the prayer for injunction on 13-4-1970 and also filed written objection to the original application on 17-4-1970. But in none of those the defect by non-compliance with Section 10 (3) was specifically pleaded, though in both it was pleaded that "first party's petition is motivated and not maintainable."

25. On 8-5-1970 the District Judge made an order directing that injunction matter be heard along with the original case on the date fixed, and by the same order transferred the case to 2nd Court of Additional District Judge for disposal.

26. Before the learned Additional District Judge on the prayer made on behalf of opposite party an adjournment was granted and the case was fixed for hearing on 24-6-1970. Before that date however on 15-6-1970 the petitioner made another application for injunction mentioning therein that a Search Warrant u/s 100 Criminal Procedure Code had been issued by the S. D. O. Alipore in Misc. Case No. 807. Notice was directed to issue and ad interim injunction was directed to issue at once. To that prayer for injunction also an objection was filed on behalf of opposite party. By an order made on 17-6-1970, hearing of the injunction on matter was fixed for 22-6-1970.

27. Every one concerned, including the Additional District Judge and lawyers of both parties, appear to have forgotten or ignored the fact that injunction matter arising upon notice directed by District Judge had remained pending and was directed to be heard along with the original case. By such profound neglect of matters on record and utter lack of care, the learned Additional Judge heard arguments on injunction matter initiated in his Court on 22-6-1970 and disposed it of by an order of that date in the material part of which he said

"I would make the ex parte order of injunction absolute. The father be restrained till the disposal of the case not to take custody of the boy by a process of the Criminal Court. The hearing of this case be expedited."

28. In that order dated 22-6-1970, in its earlier part the learned Additional District Judge recorded "The boy aged about 10/11 over whom this controversy is present in Court. I requested the learned lawyer of the O. P. to interview the boy in my chamber and after this the learned lawyer frankly submits that the boy does not want to go to his father."

29. That is the only indication in the record how the learned Additional District Judge ascertained the wishes of the boy by granting an interview of the boy with the lawyer for the opposite party in his chamber. The learned Judge does not appear to have talked with the boy directly nor did he obtain the boy's answer directly. If that is what the learned Judge has referred to in his judgment by saying "on the very first day I ascertained from the boy his wish," it is no more than a misnomer.

30. The whole record of deposition of Gautam Chatterjee has been quoted from the Record in this judgment. It shows that the boy was aged about 12 years and he was examined as Witness No. 2 for the petitioner. Oath was administered to him, but the learned Judge has not made any note in his order sheet as to the competence of the child witness to give evidence. He has not recorded any question and answer by which he could be satisfied about competence of this child witness to testify in Court, not even if he knows truth from falsehood or understands value of oath.

31. What is more, in the record of deposition though a question by Court and the answer thereto has been recorded, there is nothing to show that the witness was made available for cross-examination by or on behalf of the opposite party. It is not recorded that cross-examination was declined. That not only takes away the value of his testimony but also compels us to expunge it from record. Only available use that remains is what the learned Judge gathered from the demeanour of the boy when he was in the view of the Judge in Court.

32. The findings of the learned Judge based on testimony of petitioner and the demeanour of the boy is that at his present locus in the custody of the petitioner for 11 years, the boy has been taught to lie to the extent of not only giving false name of father, pretending ignorance of the name of his real father, disown and disclaim having known or even seen his father and mother. That disclaimer and pretension gather blacker hue when it was made at the face of both the parents and in open Court. On these materials the finding of the Judge that petitioner is not a fit person to have custody far less to be appointed guardian, of the person of the boy is inevitable, reasonable and proper finding. On that ground also the order rejecting the petitioner's application is a proper and legal order and this appeal must fail.

33. The learned Judge has held against the allegation of neglect and cruelty on the part of the father of the boy that was pleaded in support of the petitioner's claim that the father had forfeited his preferential right to be guardian of his minor son. We agree that the facts revealed by evidence in the case instead of indicating in any way neglect or cruelty on the part of the father, very strongly indicate and establish as a fact that at the early age of the child his parents had very humanly and generously put the child in the custody of his maternal grandmother to relieve her of the grief due to sad demise of her young son. It is true that for some time the parents of the boy were away from Calcutta and were living in Delhi where the father was then posted in his service. But even during that time, the mother of the boy whenever she came to Calcutta went to see the child at her father's place. Even petitioner said in his testimony that relationship between the daughter and father was good. When however the father of the boy was transferred to Calcutta and he wanted to take the boy in his custody, due to irrational doting and depraved psychology the petitioner and other members of the family put up an obstructive attitude to the extent of refusing the parents to meet their son even. They perverted the young mind of the child by teaching him falsehoods, and by falsehoods also they poisoned the mind of the child to be antagonistic to his own mother and father. In his deposition the petitioner sought to seclude his own sins by inventing false stories of neglect and cruelty of his own daughter and son-in-law and pleading a dastardly lie that his son-in-law asked for a loan. We agree with the finding of the learned Judge on that point also.

34. During the hearing of the appeal before us, the boy Gautam Chatterjee accompanied by his maternal aunt was present in Court on 25-2-1971 in the forenoon. The mother of the boy Smt. Sandhya Chatterjee accompanied by her young daughter and son who are elder sister and brother of the boy Gautam were also sitting on the same long bench in the well of the Court. They were identified by the learned Advocates for the Appellants and Respondents. When we noticed the constricted attitude of the boy under the influence of his maternal aunt to look away from the mother brother and sister who were trying to get close to the boy and to draw his attention, at least to catch his eyes, it was an unnatural and pathetic spectacle. With the active consent of the learned Advocates on both sides we retired to chamber and invited the boy, accompanied by his aunt there. Then we spoke to the boy alone in chamber after the aunt had gone back to Court. It appeared clear to us that the mental oppressions that the boy has suffered in his maternal grandfather's house during these years have resulted in physical effects also by affecting his nerves as his involuntary contusions of facial muscles during conversation and definite but small stuttering in speech revealed, though he has an intelligent alert and bright mental capacity. We noticed emaciation in body and learnt that he had suffered from typhoid fever some time ago. He needed nourishment. To put his mind on the level, we sent him out to see the Courts in this Building in company of Orderly. When he was brought back to the chamber, we offered him wholesome refreshments and Sandesh. He accepted with grace and partook of it avidly. That made clear to us that the boy is missing good food and nourishment that will be available to him in the household of his father who is financially better off than his maternal grandfather.

35. We also invited the boy's mother and sister in our chamber when the boy was there. The mother asked a few questions about his poor health. The boy answered. But he was constricted and hesitant in that conversation. He did not speak to his sister and told us that he did not know her. During that conversation in our Chamber we learned that a few days ago a maternal uncle of the boy was married in Calcutta, and there were celebrations where all relations came. The mother of the boy had gone to join the celebrations also. Everybody from the grandfather's house also came to that celebration. But Gautam was not brought there. Asked why, Gautam said there was no particular reason. It is clear to us that definite reason for that was to prevent the boy from meeting his mother even during those celebrations. We hold that to be in pursuance of inert but dastardly mental cruelty to which he has been subjected by his maternal grandfather, which on materials on record the learned Additional District Judge has found as a fact in his Judgment.

36. On consideration of all the reasons mentioned above we affirm the order of the learned Additional District Judge rejecting the application. The appeal is dismissed with costs, hearing fee being assessed at 5 G. Ms.

Indraloke Studio Ltd. v. Santi Debi

Hemanta Krishna Mitra and Nirendra Krishna Mitra, for Petitioners; Atindra Mohan Das, for Opposite Party.

ORDER:— This Rule was obtained by the tenant and it is directed against an order of eviction of the petitioner passed by the appellate authority in a proceeding under Section 5 of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act.

2. The facts that lie in a short compass may be stated as follows:—

The predecessor-in-interest of the petitioner Lakshminarayan Joardar, took settlement of a portion of Debuttar land situated at No. 17-A, Nimtolla Ghat Street, Calcutta, as a "thika tenant". The petitioners as heirs and legal representatives of the said Lakshminarayan, since deceased, have been continuing to enjoy the said tenancy under the landlord deity Shri Radhakrishna Jew. Sometime in 1965, the O. Party, Ila Mukherjee, started a proceeding under S. 5 of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act before the Thika Controller, Calcutta for eviction of the petitioner on the ground that she required the suit land for her own occupation and for the purpose of building thereon or otherwise developing the said land by its continuing letting to thika tenants. The said opposite party claimed her leasehold interest with respect to the suit land on the basis of a registered deed of lease obtained from the landlord deity. Both the tribunals below concurrently found that the opposite party required the suit land for erection of a building for her own use and occupation and passed an order of ejectment against the petitioner. The petitioner being aggrieved moved this Court on an application under Article 227 of the Constitution and obtained the present Rule.

3. Mr. Mitter, the learned Advocate for the petitioner, contended that as the original landlord deity was not in possession of the property when the lease with respect to the disputed property was executed in favour of the opposite party, the said lease would take effect from the date the lessor gets back the property. In the instant case as the petitioner was in possession of the property, therefore the lessee could not evict the petitioner in terms of the aforesaid lease. In support of his contention Mr. Mitter referred to a Bench decision of this Court Indraloke Studio Ltd. v. Santi Debi, reported in AIR 1960 Cal 609.

4. The argument advanced by Mr. Mitter seems to be interesting, but it has no foundation. Under Section 105 of the Transfer of Property Act, delivery of possession of property demised is not a condition precedent for coming into operation of a lease. Where, therefore, a lessee obtains under the deed of lease an interest in the property leased, he is entitled to sue for the possession of the same on his own right, if there is no other legal impediments.

5. The decision referred to by Mr. Mitter does not lay down any such proposition as urged by Mr. Mitter. In that case, there was an express covenant in the lease itself, that lease would commence on the date on the derequisition of the demised premises by the military authorities. Until derequisition, lessee's interest under the lease was a contingent interest. Contingent interest is property and it is clearly transferable. P. N. Mukherjee J. held such a lease was perfectly valid and operative. It was not transfer of non-existent property in the eye of law. I am unable to follow how that decision would help Mr. Mitter's client.

6. Mr. Mitter next contended that the opposite party being a lessee under the original landlord deity, her possession was of a tenant of the first degree and as such she could not bring any ejectment proceeding against the petitioner a tenant of the second degree.

7. It appears that the opposite party took settlement of the entire Bus-tee premises No. 17-A Nimtolla Ghat Street, Calcutta, for a term of 51 years with an option to renew the lease for a further period of 21 years. Under Section 2 (5) of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, to acquire a right of thika tenancy one must be a tenant of the land under another and on the land, one must have one's own structure either erected or acquired by purchase, succession or gift. The opposite party cannot be a thika tenant under the definition of Section 2 (5) of the Act as stated above, because, she has neither constructed any structure on the land nor acquired any structure standing on the land by purchase, succession or gift. Moreover, under proviso (b) to Section 2 (5) of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, a thika tenant does not include a person who holds such land under another person under a registered lease, in which the duration of the lease is expressly stated to be for the period of not less than 12 years. It is not disputed that the opposite party's lease is for a period of more than 51 years. So, she cannot be called to be thika tenant under the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act. Therefore, the question of starting a proceeding for eviction by a tenant of first degree against the second does not arise in the present case.

8. Lastly, Mr. Mitter contended that under the various ordinances of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, there was a stay of ejectment proceedings from 1967 right upto the passing of the Act 29 of 1969 which came into force on 30th October 1969, so in any view of the case the petitioner ought to be given protection under the amended Act.

9. It appears that the petitioner's appeal before the appellate authority was disposed of on 29th of June, 1967, so the petitioner's appeal was not pending when the amended Act came into force. The petitioner could have taken recourse to Section 7-A corresponding to Section 8 of the Amending Act. Moreover, it is not the petitioner's case that the grounds upon which the order of ejectment had been passed, has since been deleted by the Amending Act. So this point also is of no substance.

10. In the result, this Rule fails and it is discharged. But there will be no order for costs.

Petition dismissed.

Manindranath Ghose and Jamini Kumar Banerjee, for Appellant; Mukul Prokash Banerjee, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— The plaintiff-respondents brought a suit in the City Civil Court at Calcutta for ejectment against their tenant who is appellant before me for ejectment and recovery of khas possession of the premises described in the schedule to the plaint. The learned Judge, 5th Bench, City Civil Court at Calcutta has decreed the said suit in favour of the plaintiff-respondents and the defendant tenant has preferred this appeal.

2. Mr. Banerjee, the learned advocate for the respondents has submitted before me that this appeal is not maintainable in law. According to Mr. Banerjee the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956, is a self-contained code and no appeal has been provided against a decree for recovery of khas possession of a premises passed by a court competent to entertain or try such a suit under Section 20 of the said Act.

3. In this connection Mr. Banerjee has also drawn my attention to the schedule of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act. Section 22 of the City Civil Court Act 1953 lays down that the enactments specified in the Second Schedule shall be amended to the extent and in the manner mentioned in the fourth column of the schedule. Originally in the second schedule the substituted sub-clauses (i) and (ii) and the proviso to Clause (1) of Schedule B of the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act 1950 were set out. After the enactment of City Civil Court and the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act 1957, the reference to the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1950 were deleted, and it was provided that where the premises are situate on land wholly within the ordinary original Civil Jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court suit for recovery of possession of a premises would lie in the City Civil Court when the value of the suit or the value of the premises does not exceed Rs. 10,000/-. Where the value of the premises exceeds Rs. 10,000/- suit would lie to the High Court. Under Cl. 2 of the schedule to the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act where the premises are situate on a land wholly or partly outside the ordinary original Civil Jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court suit for recovery of possession would lie in the court other than the Calcutta High Court which would have had jurisdiction to try the suit if the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act was not passed. It is unnecessary to refer to the provisos to clause (1) of the schedule which deal with the suits pending in the City Civil Court and with suit, appeals and proceedings instituted in the Calcutta High Court or in the court of the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes and pending at the date of commencement of City Civil Court and West Bengal Premises Tenancy (Amendment) Act 1957.

4. In my view there is no scope for any argument that no appeal lies against a decree passed by the City Civil Court in a suit for recovery of possession of a premises governed by West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act. Section 6 of the City Civil Courts Act 1953, lays down that save as otherwise provided, the Code of Civil Procedure 1908, shall apply to all suits and proceedings under this Act, so far as it is consistent with the City Civil Court Act. Sec. 8 (1) (a) of the City Civil Court Act provides that an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed by the City Civil Court. Sub-section (6) of Section 29 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act provides that the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure shall apply to all suits and proceedings referred to in Section 20 except suits and proceedings which lie to the High Court. Section 13 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act also lays down that no order or decree for recovery of possession shall be made except on one or more of the grounds set out in the said Section. Therefore the said expression "decree" in the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act has the same meaning as the "decree" as defined by Section 2 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under Section 96 of the Civil Procedure Code save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any other law for the time being in force an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any court exercising original jurisdiction to the court authorised to hear the appeals from the decision of such courts. There is nothing in the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act limiting or affecting such right of appeal against a decree passed in a suit for recovery of possession. I have already stated that under Section 8 of the City Civil Court Act this court has been authorised to hear appeals from decrees and appealable orders of the City Civil Court.

5. Further the Supreme Court in N. S. Thread and Co. v. James Chadwick and Brothers, AIR 1953 SC 357 while considering the question whether an appeal lay under clause 15 of the Letters Patent of Bombay High Court against a decision given by single Judge of the High Court in an appeal preferred under Section 76 of the Trade Marks Act 1940 considered a number of reported cases on the question and held that when an appeal lies to a court already established then that appeal must be regulated by the practice and procedure of that court. Mahajan, J. who delivered the judgment of the Supreme Court quoted with approval the observations of Viscount Haldane L. C. in National Telephone Co. Ltd. v. Post Master General, 1913 AC 546 that when a question is stated to be referred to a established Court without more imports that the ordinary incidents of the procedure of that court are to attach and also that in general right of appeal from its decision likewise attaches. The Privy Council in Adaikappa Chettiar v. Chandra Sekhara Thevar, 74 Ind App 264 = (AIR 1948 PC 12) similarly observed that where a legal right is in dispute and the ordinary courts of the country are seized of such disputes the courts are governed by the ordinary rules of procedure applicable thereto and an appeal lies if authorised by such rules notwithstanding that the legal right claimed arises under a special statute which does not in terms confer a right of appeal.

6. On the authority of the said decisions I am bound to hold that when the City Civil Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction passes a decree for ejectment, the same is subject to an appeal.

7. In fact numerous appeals have been heard and disposed of by this Court against decrees passed in suits for a recovery of premises passed by the Civil Court. The decision in Jamuna Bala's case, (1960) 64 Cal WN 678 did not deal with the question whether an appeal at all lies. But the said decision dealt with the question of forum of such appeal. Therefore, it is unnecessary for me to deal with the said case.

8. This Court while considering the provisions of West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provision) Act 1950 have held that the decree for ejectment from a premises governed by the said Act was a decree within the meaning of Section 2 (2) of the Code and the provisions of Civil Procedure Code would apply to such suits and appeals. It was held that a suit for recovery of possession under Section 16 of the Act of 1950 was a proceeding in a court of Judicature although the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provision) Act 1950 did not contain any provision similar to Section 29 (6) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act. Reference may be made to the decisions reported in Mirabala Dassi v. Binapani Dassi, AIR 1954 Cal 163, Dalhousie Traders Ltd. v. Mohammad Sadique AIR 1954 Cal 220, Sahadat Khan v. Mohammad Hossain AIR 1954 Cal 347.

9. The fact that under the schedule under West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act as it stood before it was amended by the City Civil Court Act and the West Bengal Premises Tenancy (Amendment Act 1957) it was provided that the Chief Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta shall entertain and try a suit which is cognizable by him as the Court of district Judge under the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act 1887 was not relevant. A special jurisdiction had been conferred upon the Chief Judge and upon the other Judges of the said court to whom a suit may be transferred by the Chief Judge for trial. It was therefore necessary to expressly confer upon them the powers which are exercised by District Judges and Subordinate Judges under Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act.

10. Chakrabarti C. J. and S. R. Dasgupta J. in Newton Hickie v. Official Trustee of West Bengal, 58 Cal WN 819 = (AIR 1954 Cal 506) considered the question whether the decision of the Court of Small Causes in two suits for ejectment from a premises governed by the West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provision) Act 1950 was Res Judicata or not. Their Lordships held that the Court of Small Causes was not ordinarily competent to try ejectment suits against the tenants. But the Chief Judge of the court functioning as a District Judge and a Judge functioning as a Subordinate Judge were special creatures of the Rent Control Act exercising a specified jurisdiction. Therefore they were courts of a peculiar type.

11. But under Section 5 (2) of the City Civil Court Act 1953, subject to the provisions of sub-sections (3) and (4) the said court shall have jurisdiction and the High Court shall not have jurisdiction to try suits and proceedings of a civil nature not exceeding rupees fifty thousand.

12. I may note that even after the amendment of Section 5 of the City Civil Court Act raising its pecuniary jurisdiction, no corresponding amendment has as yet been made in the Second Schedule to the said Act or in the Schedule to the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act.

13. Therefore omission of any reference to the Bengal, Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act in relation to the City Civil Court in the Schedule to the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act 1956 was not material. Sections 20 and 21 deal with the forum of appeal from the courts constituted under the said Act. But right of appeal is also incident of a decree passed by a court established by the ordinary law and which is governed by the Civil Procedure Code. The City Civil Court is thus competent to try suits of civil nature upto Rupees 50,000/- subject to the exceptions mentioned in the Act and under Section 8 (1) of the Act the appeal lies to this court against the decrees and appealable orders of the said Court. Therefore this appeal is maintainable.

14. The plaintiff landlord alleged that the defendant tenant was a defaulter in payment of rent since May 1961. The learned Judge of the court below in his judgment under appeal has also found that the defendant was a defaulter in respect of the said period. Mr. Ghosh, learned advocate for the appellant has not disputed the said finding that the defendant was a defaulter as found by the court below. But he has drawn my attention to the fact that the appellant within one month from the date of the service of the summons of the ejectment suit had filed a petition in the trial court under Section 17 (1) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act and had prayed for permission to deposit rent from May, 1961 to October 1963 along with interest. The learned Registrar City Civil Court by his order No. 3 dated 30th September, 1963 permitted him to deposit the same entirely at his risk. I find that the defendant who is appellant before me had deposited the said arrear rent and he also continued to deposit in the trial court month by month within the 15th day of each succeeding month an amount equivalent to rent. Therefore the defendant tenant having fully complied with Section 17 (1) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act is entitled to relief under sub-section (4) of Section 17 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act. In fact the learned advocate for the respondents has not disputed the said facts. The defendant tenant did not previously obtain relief under sub-section (4) of Section 17 of the Act and the proviso to sub-section (4) does not apply in the instant case. Accordingly I grant defendant relief under sub-section (4) of Section 17 of the Act.

15. In the above view I allow the appeal set aside the judgment and decree of the trial court and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs-respondents will get the cost of the trial court from the defendant appellant. There will be no order as to costs in this appeal.

AMARESH ROY AND A. K. DE, JJ.

Damodar Valley Corporation, Appellant v. Ikrah Nandi Coal Co., Respondent.

A. F. O. O. No. 80 of 1967, D/- 30-7-1971.

(A) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 2 (e) — Reference to arbitration — Validity.

Where a reference to arbitration of disputes arising out of a contract to supply coal has to be gathered from the correspondence between the parties in none of which there is a clear statement as to the matters that were referred to arbitration, the correspondence has to be taken along with the bills and deductions made therein on different heads which clearly show with exact definiteness the field of differences and scope of reference. Hence, the reference was not invalid on ground of indefiniteness.

(Para 17)

(B) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 30 (a) — Misconduct in proceeding or error apparent on face of record — Absence of signature of one of two arbitrators on some of the minutes of proceedings even though both of them were present throughout and signed the award — Award is not invalid on above grounds, as it cannot be said that there was no joint deliberation of arbitrators.

(Para 18)

(C) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 30 (a) — Misconduct or procedural defect — Statement of parties before arbitrators that they would not adduce any evidence on certain issues — Award of arbitrator giving findings on these issues on consideration of oral and documentary evidence on record — Award is not invalid for misconduct.

In the present case the documentary evidence referred to in the award were technical documents on the record of the arbitrators. They were mainly printed matters considered to be scientific treatises and not documents proved as evidence in the proceeding. The oral evidence referred to in the award was the evidence of witnesses examined by the parties on the remaining issues. In the examination of these witnesses the questions asked both in Examination-in-Chief and in cross-examination had bearing on other issues framed by the Arbitrators which overlapped each other, and also were asked to obtain explanations of materials in the printed booklets which were of the nature of scientific treatises.

Held that the arbitrators could not be held to be guilty of misconduct or mishandling the proceedings.

(D) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 39 (vi) — Appeal against order refusing to set aside award — Scope of appeal is limited by Section 30 (a) — An award cannot be set aside or modified even when there is an error of law or fact unless the error is apparent on the face of the record. (X-Ref:— Section 30 (a)). AIR 1971 SC 696, Rel. on, Case law discussed. (Paras 24, 27 & 28)

(E) Arbitration Act (1940), Section 30 (a) — Misconduct — Contract stipulating payment of interest for delayed payments — Arbitrator instead of awarding interest according to stipulation awarding small sum of Rs. 650/- as compensation for long delay in paying Rs. 16058/- — Award is not vitiated by misconduct. Tapodhan Krishna Rai Dastidar and Dhruva Kumar Mukherjee, for Appellant; Nani Coomer Chakrabarti and Mrs. Kanika Banerjee, for Respondent.

AMARESH ROY, J.— This appeal by Damodar Valley Corporation is directed against the judgment and order passed by a Subordinate Judge at Alipore dismissing the application made by the said Corporation under Sections 30 and 33 of Arbitration Act, 1940 praying for setting aside an Award or in the alternative modifying the same and if necessary for superseding the Arbitration Agreement between the said Corporation and the Respondent firm M/s. Ikrah Nandi Coal Co.

2. Material facts are that in April 1962 D. V. C. invited tenders for supply of 375000 Tonnes of Coal by road. Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. submitted tender on 21-5-1962. After the parties obtained clarification on some points, on June 9, 1962 the Coal Co. submitted fresh tender on the basis of supply about 10,000 tonnes of Grade II R. O. M. Coal per month to be supplied by rail and on June 14, 1962 the D. V. C. placed order for supply of a quantity of coal by a letter of that date mentioning therein terms and conditions which included inter alia provisions for Transportation by Railway wagons and unloading of Coal wagons by D. V. C. by their Wagon Tippler and also provided for the method of sampling and analysis. In that letter of indent dated June 14, 1962 it was also provided in clause 10.

"All other terms and conditions and which have not been specified in this letter of indent, for the supply and delivery of coal to the D. V. C.'s Durgapur Thermal Power Station Storage Yard of Waria shall be as per D. V. C.'s Tender Specification PE-Spec-101."

3. The Tender Specification PE-Spec-101 mentioned in that clause is the original tender invited by D. V. C. in April 1962 and Clause 21 thereof contained the arbitration agreement in these terms;

Arbitration

"Except where otherwise provided in the Contract if at any time any question, dispute or difference whatsoever shall arise between the Corporation and the Contractor upon, or in relation to, or in connection with the Contract either party may forthwith give to the other notice in writing to the existence of such question, dispute or difference, and the same shall be referred to the adjudication of two arbitrators, one to be nominated by the Corporation and the other to be nominated by the Contractor, or in the case of the said arbitrators not agreeing, then to the Coal Controller, Govt. of India, and the award of the arbitrators, or in the event of their not agreeing, of the Coal Controller shall be final and binding on the parties and the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940 and of the rules thereunder and any statutory modification thereof shall be deemed to apply to and be incorporated in this Contract.

"Upon every or any such reference, the costs of and incidental to the reference and award respectively shall be in the discretion of the arbitrators or of the Coal Controller, as the case may be, who may determine the amount thereof, or direct the same to be taxed as between Solicitor and Client, or as between party and party and shall direct by whom and to whom and in what manner the same shall be borne and paid.

"Work under the contract shall be continued by the Contractor during the arbitration proceedings, unless otherwise directed in writing by the Corporation or unless the matter is such that the works cannot possibly be continued until the decision of the arbitrators or of the Coal Controller as the case may be is obtained and save as those which are otherwise expressly provided in the contract no payment due or payable by the Purchaser shall be withheld on account of such arbitration proceedings unless it is the subject-matter or one of the subject-matters thereof."

4. The order for supply of coal on those terms was accepted by the Coal Co. by their letter dated 16-6-1962 and several consignments of coal were supplied.

5. Soon thereafter correspondence ensued between the parties over drawing of samples. As early as on July 6, 1962 D. V. C. wrote to Coal Co. intimating inter alia that no representative from the side of the supplier had been posted at D. T. P. S. and on July 12, 1962 the Coal Co. wrote complaining about alleged incorrect practice of drawing samples. Many letters on that subject were exchanged between the parties, the Coal Co. insisting that their complaint be looked into and D. V. C. insisting that the procedure of sampling adopted was correct. By early dates in November 1962 the Coal Co. was requesting early payment of outstanding Bills and they continued to do so till February 1963. Then on March 7, 1963 the Coal Co. was informed that 4 Bills have been passed for payment and on March 11, 1963 a cheque for Rs. 68,140.77 was sent in payment of four Bills. The Coal Co. intimated receipt of the cheque by letter dated 19-3-1963 but raised dispute over deduction of Rs. 17,352.39 on those four Bills and desired to refer the said dispute to arbitration proposing the name of Shri S. N. Mullick as Arbitrator from their side. Towards end of March 1963 differences also arose regarding Coal Co.'s claim for Sales Tax and eligibility to get Declaration Form for the same.

6. On 15-5-1963 the Coal Co. gave notice to D. V. C. under clause 21 and nominated Shri S. N. Mullick as their nominee to be Arbitrator. By letter dated 20-8-1963 D. V. C. nominated Shri J. G. Kumarmangalam as Arbitrator.

7. Arbitrators on 12-10-1963 informed the parties that they have entered on the reference and directed the parties to file their respective written statements. Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. filed their written statement on 11th November 1963 and D. V. C. filed their Counter Statement on 17-1-1964. A rebutting statement was filed by the Coal Co. on 11-2-1964.

8. Hearing commenced before the Arbitrators on 12-12-1964. Proceedings before the Arbitrators appear from the Minutes of those proceedings on the record, and relevant particularities thereof will be discussed when we deal with contentions raised in respect thereof. But we may mention here that on 18-12-1964 upon an application made by Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. the Subordinate Judge, first Court Alipore in Misc. Case No. 88/64 extended the time for making and publishing Award till 18-6-1965 and a certified copy of that order was filed before the Arbitrators on 23-12-1964. Parties filed their documents on 19-12-1964 and 26-12-1964. Thereafter the Arbitrators framed issues on 13-1-1965. The issues framed were in these terms:

1. Whether the method of drawing representative samples adopted by DVC of coal supplied by railway wagons by M/s. Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. was in conformity with the procedure laid down by the Indian Standards Institution or any other accepted conventional method.

2. (a) If the answer to the question No. 1 is in the negative, whether penalties deducted on the ground of alleged inferior quality and lower calorific value of such coal assessed by Damodar Valley Corporation as a result of the aforesaid sampling and analysis of coal is justified;

(b) If any, what interest the Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. is entitled to as a result of deduction of Rs. 17,352.39 paise by DVC from their bills over and above the payment of the said sum of Rupees 17,352.39 p. not paid by DVC.

3. (a) Whether the DVC failed to pay the bills of M/s. Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. against supply of (a) coal and (b) railway freight within time specified in the contract.

(b) If the answer is in the affirmative what amount of interest the Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. is entitled to receive for such failure from DVC.

4. Whether the Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. is entitled to any damages from DVC for the earlier determination of the contract, and if so what amount Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. is entitled to.

5. To what relief the parties are entitled to?

The next date of hearing will be intimated to the parties in due course.

9. In the Minute dated 22-5-1965 the Arbitrators recorded certain procedure to be followed regarding documents filed by respective parties and then said:

"After discussion regarding the first issue as framed by the Arbitrators, namely, whether the method of drawing samples of coal supplied by Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. by rail was in conformity with the procedure laid down by the Indian Standards Institution or in accordance with any other accepted conventional method, it is noted that both parties would not lead any evidence.

The same position arises in the second issue which in any case is ancillary to the first issue.

The Solicitor for Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. stated that he would be leading evidence in regard to issues 3 (a), (b) and 4."

10. The Arbitrators then proceeded to examine witnesses and to hear arguments. They made and published the Award on 6-7-1965 and the Award together with depositions of witnesses and documents were filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on 8-7-1965. It was registered as T. S. No. 83 of 1965 in that Court.

11. Notice of filing of Award in the Court was received by D. V. C. on 12-7-1965, and application under Sections 30 and 33 of Arbitration Act was made on their behalf on 9-8-1965. That application was registered as Misc. Case No. 55 of 1965 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. In that application various defects in conducting the proceedings before the Arbitrators were alleged and averments regarding merits of the contentions for the D. V. C. were made and then in paragraph 25 grounds were set out for contending that;

"Award dated the 12th June, 1965 is erroneous, illegal without jurisdiction, void, inoperative, of no effect whatsoever, not binding on your petitioner and ought to be set aside."

Prayer in the petition was;

"Your petitioner therefore humbly prays your Honour for an order that the said Award dated the 12th June, 1965 be set aside and in the alternative be varied and/or modified, and if necessary the said Arbitration agreement be superseded, costs of and incidental to this application be paid by the respondent to your petitioner and further suitable orders be made and necessary directions be given."

12. After notices were issued and the parties appeared before the learned Subordinate Judge and filed Affidavits the case was taken up for hearing on 4-6-1966. Arguments closed on 1-7-1966 and the learned Subordinate Judge delivered the judgment on 21-7-1966 dismissing the application under Sections 30 and 33 on contest with costs.

13. Before the learned Subordinate Judge the points that were urged on behalf of D. V. C. have been catalogued in the judgment appealed from this,—

1. Is the application not maintainable in view of the fact that it was not supported by affidavit at the outset? Should the petitioner be given the opportunity to remove the defect as prayed for?

2. Have the arbitrators misconducted themselves or the proceedings so as to merit an order setting aside the award?

3. Is there any error apparent on the face of the award? Does it offend the principles of natural justice?

4. Should the award be, even, partially modified or varied?

Should the arbitration agreement be superseded?

14. On all the points the learned Subordinate Judge held against the contentions urged on behalf of D. V. C. Before us in this appeal Mr. Tapadhir Rai Dastidar the learned Advocate for the appellant has limited his contentions only to some of those points and also urged some new points for contending that the Arbitrators have lapsed into legal misconduct. Misconduct of any other kind has not been alleged. His contentions were:—

(1) There was no valid reference to Arbitration and therefore the Award should be set aside.

(2) The minutes of the proceeding before the Arbitrators show that some of the minutes bear signature of only one of the two Arbitrators, so there has not been joint deliberation on some of the material points. That has amounted to misconduct of the proceedings and the Award should be superseded.

(3) Method of sampling whether it was correct or incorrect was not within the scope of arbitration, and therefore that part of the Award should be modified or varied.

(4) For their decision that method of sampling prevailing at the time, the Arbitrators have not taken into consideration other conventional methods but have gone by British Standard only, though they have given reasons for deciding that as the correct method. That is an error apparent on the face of the record and the Award should be set aside.

(5) Deductions made for inferior quality of coal and also for sales tax on those quantities have resulted in double deductions, which is an error on the face of the record and the Award should be modified to that extent.

(6) Rs. 650/- awarded by Arbitrators as compensation for wrongful detention of payment has been illegal and beyond the scope of reference, and that part of the award should be set aside or modified.

15. We will proceed to deal with these contentions one by one. For each of those it is necessary first to ascertain the nature of dispute between the parties that was referred to Arbitration. Primarily it was the dispute over the deductions made in the four bills on the ground of low quality of coal, ascertained by D. V. C. by sample and analysis of a method for drawing samples not from each wagon of coal supplied as they arrived, but by adopting a method of collecting samples from carrier belt after coal was discharged by Wagon Tippler.

16. We have already mentioned that after the contract for supply of coal by transporting in Railway Wagons was concluded between the parties in June 1962 and some consignments of coal were supplied, early in July, 1962 correspondence ensued between them regarding arrangements for drawing samples and by middle of July 1962 the Coal Co. was complaining about incorrect practice of drawing samples and D. V. C. was insisting that the procedure of sampling employed by them was correct. On the basis of analysis of samples so drawn, D. V. C. made deductions in four Bills on account of low quality of coal and intimation of those Bills with such deductions having been passed for payment was given to Coal Co. early in March 1963 and on March 11, 1963 a cheque was sent in payment of those four Bills. Each of the bills showed clearly the amounts deducted under each head. Immediately thereafter on March 19, 1963 Coal Co. raised dispute over deduction of Rs. 17,352.39 on those four Bills and desired to refer the said dispute to arbitration. Towards end of March 1963 differences also arose regarding Coal Co.'s claim for Sales Tax. Notice to D. V. C. for reference to arbitration was given on 15-5-1963 and in that letter Coal Co. nominated their arbitrator. D. V. C. nominated their arbitrator by letter dated 20-8-1963. Arbitrators entered on the reference on 12-10-1963.

17. Mr. Rai Dastidar referring to the correspondence over the disputes contended that there was no clear statement in any of those letters taken singly or collectively as to the matters that were referred to Arbitration. But those correspondence instead of being taken in their isolation, properly need be taken along with the four Bills and deductions made therein on different heads which were being disputed. Those Bills clearly show with exact definiteness the field of differences and scope of reference to arbitration. Mr. Rai Dastidar's first contention that there was not a valid reference has no substance and must fail.

18. The second contention of Mr. Rai Dastidar that it should be held that there has been legal misconduct on the part of the two Arbitrators by their omission of joint deliberations on certain days of the arbitration proceeding appears to us to be equally unsubstantial. The contention is based on the feature that minutes on some days appear to have been signed not by both the arbitrators, but only by one of them. The minutes of the proceeding are no more than memorandum kept by the Arbitrators for their own aid. There is no provision in law that compels the Arbitrators to keep minutes of proceeding, nor to enjoin that minutes must be signed by all the arbitrators or even those be signed at all by any of the arbitrators. Correctness of the minutes were not disputed either before the arbitrators or before the learned Subordinate Judge or before us. What was contended is that because only one signature appears in the minute, therefore it should be inferred that the other arbitrator was not present during the proceedings of that particular day and so there has been omission of joint deliberations of the arbitrators on matters mentioned in the particular minute. Internal materials in those minutes themselves completely negative the contention. In each of those presence of both the Arbitrators has been expressly mentioned in the beginning of the minute and the contents also show that both the Arbitrators were present. The memorandum that the minutes are, may have been drawn up and signed by one of the two arbitrators on the particular day. Yet so long as the other arbitrator accepted the correctness of the memorandum and parties did not even dispute that correctness, it does not spell out any omission of joint deliberation of both the arbitrators. The Award has been signed by both. This contention does not appear to have been raised either before the Arbitrators or in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. It was raised for the first time during arguments before us. We hold that absence of signature of one or the other Arbitrators in some of the minutes does not constitute any misconduct in the proceeding nor any error apparent on the face of the record. The Award of the arbitrators has not suffered any defect on that score. The second contention of Mr. Rai Dastidar therefore fails.

19. The third contention of Mr. Rai Dastidar the learned Advocate for the Appellant before us was that under issues Nos. 1, 2 (a) and 2 (b) framed by the arbitrators they have said in the Award.

"on the basis of the documents produced before us and the evidence laid before us we are satisfied that the method of drawing representative sum adopted by D. V. C. was not the correct method then existed as the Indian Standards specification prevalent at that time was to draw samples from the wagons before they were unloaded which was the practice followed by the D. V. C. also on earlier occasions."

This, according to Mr. Rai Dastidar, was outside the scope of the reference to arbitration because, he said correctness or incorrectness of method of sample was not within scope of arbitration and he also contended that in coming to that conclusion the arbitrators have not answered that part of the issue No. 1 which relates to any other accepted conventional method. In support of this contention Mr. Rai Dastidar not only emphasised the particular language employed in the frame of issue No. 1 by the arbitrators, but also referred to the minutes before the arbitrators dated 22nd May 1965, in which minute it has been recorded "after discussion regarding the first issue as framed by the arbitrators viz., whether the method of drawing samples of coal supplied by Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. by Rail was in conformity with the procedure laid down by the Indian Standards Institutions or in accordance with any other accepted conventional method. It is noted that both parties would not lead any evidence.

20. The same position arose in the second issue which in any case is ancillary to the first issue.

21. The Solicitor for Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. stated that he would be leading evidence in regard to issues 3 (a) (b) and 4.

22. Mr. Rai Dastider drew our attention to the record of deposition of witnesses before the Arbitrators for contending that although parties had agreed not to lead evidence on matters concerning issues Nos. 1 and 2, questions were asked and witnesses were allowed to give answers which were on those matters. For considering Mr. Rai Dastider's contention that this constitutes misconduct of the procedure or error apparent on the face of record we have also to keep in mind that Mr. Rai Dastider also contended that reliance by the arbitrators on the evidence for deciding issues No. 1, 2 (a) and 2 (b) itself constituted misconduct of the procedures because the parties before the arbitrators had agreed not to give evidence on those issues. Mr. Rai Dastider's contention regarding the scope of the arbittration is completely answered by the notice under clause 21 of the specification No. P-Spec-101 given by Ikrah Nandi Coal Co. by their registered letter dated 15th May 1963 which constitutes letter of reference in the present case. Clause (a) of that notice is exactly what Mr. Rai Dastider says was not included in the reference to arbitration. The second branch of Mr. Rai Dastider's contention based on what the minute dated 22nd May contains is untenable because that minute itself shows that parties had filed documents bearing on the issues Nos. 1, 2 (a) and 2 (b). Thereafter what the parties agreed on was that no oral evidence will be adduced on those questions. The previous minutes also show that the arbitrators not only had before them documentary evidence bearing on those issues but they also decided to visit Waria Thermal Power Station and visited Durgapur Thermal Power Station on 22nd December 1964 and also they decided to compile a questionnaire in connection with their visit of the Durgapur Thermal Power Station at Waria to be forwarded to Damodar Valley Corporation, any answer in respect of which was directed to be submitted to the arbitrator within a fortnight from the date of the receipt of the questionnaire. Those were undoubtedly intended to be evidence. The D. V. C. however did not send any answer to the questionnaire. We may mention here that the learned Advocate for the respondent Nani Coommar Chakravarty also pointed out that in the records of the arbitrators, which were filed in the court of the Subordinate Judge and has been sent to this Court, there is a printed copy of Indian Standards Method for Sampling of Coal and Coke (tentative) reprinted 1956 and also a typed copy of proposed draft. Indian Standard Method of Sampling of Coal and Coke (Revisions of I. S. 436-953) which appear to have been sent by the Indian Mining Association to the Secretary Indian Mining Federation and other associations by their covering letter dated 27th September 1961 and also printed copy of Indian Standard Method of Sampling of Coal and Coke (Pt. I Sampling of Coal revised) which appears at No. I. S.: 436 (Part I)-1964. These are undoubtedly documentary evidence which the arbitrators had availed of and in view thereof the parties in their proper and reasonable attitude before the arbitrators agreed not to adduce oral evidence on such matters.

23. Mr. Rai Dastider during his reply tended so much so as to contend that the documents mentioned above do not bear the seal of the court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipore which should raise a doubt if those documents formed part of the record of the arbitrators which were filed in the court of the Subordinate Judge and Mr. Chakravorty may not have been properly instructed for thinking that those treatises of the Indian Standards specification were really materials before the arbitrators. This doubt of Mr. Rai Dastider implies that the treatises we have mentioned above found their way in the file which is part of the record sent from the court of the Subordinate Judge to this Court by some questionable means. That in our view is as much uncharitable as it is unreasonable. We are satisfied that Mr. Rai Dastider has been very wrongly instructed to raise that contention. The documents mentioned above were produced before us from the file in which the other records of the arbitrators including the signed minutes of the arbitration bearing seal of the Court of the Subordinate Judge are included. Mr. Rai Dastider rightly noticed that the printed booklets and the type-written proposed draft do not bear the seal of the Court of the Subordinate Judge. The reason is obvious to us and should have been so to the learned Advocate. Those technical documents mainly printed matters were considered to be scientific treatises and not documents proved as evidence in the proceeding. That is why in the court of the Subordinate Judge the seal of the Court was not affixed on them. We are of the view that contention of Mr. Rai Dastider had no legs to stand upon and the learned Subordinate Judge is right in his finding that the arbitrators cannot be held guilty of misconduct or to outstrip the limit of reference by taking evidence in determining issues Nos. 1 and 2. (a) and 2 (b) contrary to their own direction on the basis of agreement between the parties. In the examination of witnesses the questions asked both in Examination-in-Chief and in cross-examination to which Mr. Rai Dastidar drew our attention have bearing on other issues framed by the Arbitrators, which overlapped each other, and also were asked to obtain explanations of materials in the printed booklets which were of the nature of scientific treatises. Those did not bring about any mishandling of the proceedings and therefore cannot be viewed as misconduct on the part of the Arbitrators.

24. The fourth contention raised before us by Mr. Rai Dastidar that the arbitrators for deciding on the method of sampling prevailing at the relevant time have not taken into consideration other conventional methods appears to us to be without substance because in the evidence adduced by the parties both oral and documentary before the arbitrators, the other unconventional methods of sampling of coal loomed very large indeed and Mr. Rai Dastider has himself referred to those evidence in connection with his contention that those were taken in the record by procedural misconduct which we have dealt with in the previous point urged by Mr. Rai Dastider. This point urged by Mr. Rai Dastider and the remaining two other points, one regarding the deductions made for sales-tax and the other regarding award of Rs. 650/- for wrongful detention of payment are matters which are not within the scope of this Appeal. This being an appeal under Section 39 of the Arbitration Act its scope is limited by Section 30, clause (a) of which is only relevant for our purpose. The Section is quoted below:

"Section 30. An award shall not be set aside except on one or more of the following grounds, namely:—

(a) that an arbitrator or umpire has misconducted himself or the proceedings;

(b) that an award has been made after the issue of an order by the court superseding the arbitration or after arbitration proceeding have become invalid under Section 35;

(c) that an award has been improperly procured or is otherwise invalid."

25. An error of law which can be made a ground for setting aside an Award of the Arbitrators, has been well settled by authoritative decisions since the middle of the last century. In an English decision of 1857 reported in Hodgkinson v. Fernie, (1857) 3 CB (NS) 189, 202 = 140 ER 712 Williams, J. said:

"The law has for many years been settled, and remains so at this day that where a cause or matters in difference are referred to an arbitrator, whether a lawyer or a layman, he is constituted the sole and final judge of all questions of both of law and of fact."

26. He however noted an exception, which he regretted and also doubted its propriety, yet considered it as 'firmly established'. That exception is "when a question of law necessarily arises on the face of the Award." Supreme Court cited that with approval in Union of India v. Bungo Steel Furniture Pvt. Ltd., AIR 1967 SC 1032. Long before that, the observations of Williams, J. were characterised by Lord Dunedin in 50 Ind App 324 = (AIR 1923 PC 66) (Champsey Bhara and Co. v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co. Ltd.) as "the law on the subject (which) has never been more clearly stated" and the learned Lord said "Now the regret expressed by Williams, J. in (1857) 3 CB NS 189 = 140 ER 712 has been repeated by more than one learned Judge and it is certainly not to be desired that the exception should be in any way extended. In that judgment of Privy Council reported in 50 Ind App 324 = (AIR 1923 PC 66) Lord Dunedin said:

"An error of law on the face of the award means, in their Lordships' view, that you can find in the award or in a document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, some legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which you can then say is erroneous."

27. Without burdening this judgment with the plethora of decisions on the point we may at once refer to the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of M/s. Allen Berry & Co. Pvt. Ltd. v. Union of India, reported in AIR 1971 SC 696 (April issue). In that judgment the previous decisions have been fully discussed and their Lordships laid down:

"the Rule thus is that as the parties chose their own arbitrator to be the Judge in the dispute between them, they cannot, when the award is good on the face of it, object to the decision either upon the law or the facts. Therefore even when the arbitrator commits a mistake either in law or in fact in determining the matters referred to him, but such mistake does not appear on the face of the award or in a document appended to or incorporated in it so as to form part of it, the award will neither be remitted nor set aside notwithstanding the mistake."

28. Applying those principles and law laid down by the Supreme Court in the above decision, in the present case we find here in the award that the arbitrators did not state any proposition of law when they based their decision on the view that method of sampling applied by D. V. C. was not the correct method. It may be an error of fact. We do not decide it either way, because it is not for the Court to sit in judgment over decision of the Arbitrators on a question of fact. Award cannot be set aside or modified even if there was an error of fact.

29. On the point of award of Rs. 650/- as compensation for wrongful detention of payment, Mr. Rai Dastidar has relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Thawardas Pherumal v. Union of India, AIR 1955 SC 468 for contending that it has been without jurisdiction. He has also referred to a later decision in the case of Union of India v. A. L. Rallia Ram, reported in AIR 1963 SC 1685 in his support.

30. Mr. Chakravorty for the Respondents has pointed out that the Supreme Court has taken a different view on that question in the case of Smt. Santa Devi v. Dharendra Nath Sen, reported in AIR 1963 SC 1677. He has also relied on the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Bengal Nagpur Rly. Co. Ltd. v. Ruttanji Ramji, reported in 65 Ind App 66 = (AIR 1938 PC 67).

31. In the present case in the contract between the parties there was a stipulation for interest for delayed payments. The Arbitrators in lieu of awarding interest according to that stipulation have awarded a small sum of Rs. 650/- as compensation for long delay in paying Rs. 16,058/- which was deducted in the four Bills in dispute. In our view that has not brought about any transgression of jurisdiction of the Arbitrators; and it does not amount to misconduct that would enable court to set aside or modify the Award even to that extent.

32. The Appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

A. K. DE, J.:— 33. I agree.
Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 160 (V 59 C 28)

A. K. MUKHERJEA AND SABYASACHI
MUKHARJI, JJ.

Indu Bhusan De and others, Appellants v. The State of West Bengal and others, Respondents.

A. F. O. O. No. 125 of 1970, D/- 28-7-1970.

(A) Calcutta City Civil Court Act (W. B. Act 21 of 1953), Sections 3 and 5 — As amended by W. B. Act (35 of 1969) — Notification D/- 14-11-1969 — Establishment of City Civil Court in 1953 and conferment of additional jurisdiction to that Court in 1969 are intra vires the State Legislature under Schedule 7 List II Entry 3 and List III Entry 13 of the Constitution — The main Act and the Amendment Act are intra vires.
(Paras 12, 15)

In pith and substance the amendment is a law relating to administration of justice, constitution and organization of courts, and as such it is within the legislative competence of the State Legislature, and it is not prohibited in view of the absence of the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court in Entry 78 of List I of 7th Schedule of the Constitution. The amendment can also be upheld on the ground that it is a law relating to Civil Procedure and is a valid piece of legislation being within the Entry 13 of List III of the 7th Schedule. No substantive rights of the persons, in respect of the law of carriage or law of navigation or law of shipping or law of promissory notes, have in any way been affected by the amendments made. What has been done is to provide a different method for enforcing some of these rights within the territory of this State. AIR 1957 Cal 534, Rel. on.

(Para 14)

(B) Constitution of India, Schedule 7 List II Entry 3 — Interpretation of — Power to establish additional Courts is included within the entry.

The expression, 'administration of Justice' taken with the expression 'constitution and organisation of all courts,' read in its ordinary significance would include the right or the authority to establish additional courts. AIR 1951 SC 69 Rel. on.

(Para 7)

(C) Constitution of India, Article 247 — Parliament has no authority to establish additional Courts for matters in State List. It has a limited authority under Article 247 for specified purposes viz., for administration of laws made by Parliament or existing laws with respect to matters in Union List — Resort to residuary power under Article 248 read with List I Entry 97 cannot be had for this purpose. (X-Ref:— Article 248, Schedule 7, List 1, Entry 97).

Resort to the residuary powers should be made as a last refuge, and only when all the categories of three lists are absolutely exhausted. Furthermore, where two constructions are possible, one which will avoid resort to the residuary power and the other which will make resort to the residuary power necessary, the former must be preferred. This must, however, be done without straining the language or without making the entries meaningless. Furthermore, if resort is made to the residuary power for the purpose of the authority to set up additional courts for laws in Union and State lists, then Article 247 would really become superfluous. AIR 1941 FC 47 and AIR 1947 FC 1, Rel. on.

(D) Constitution of India, Pre. and Article 247 — Marginal notes in the Constitution unlike these in Acts of British Parliament are parts of the Constitution and Prima facie furnish some proof as to their meaning and purpose.

The use of the word 'certain' in the marginal note to Article 247 shows, that the power given to Parliament to establish additional courts is limited to only "certain" additional courts. AIR 1955 SC 661 Foll.

(Para 7)

(E) Constitution of India, Schedule 7 List III Entry 13 — Expression "Civil Procedure" — Interpretation of the expression "Civil Procedure" would signify the rules of machinery for administering justice in the courts of justice and cannot and do not signify the competence to set up the machinery itself.

1972 Cal./11 IV G—25

(Para 11)

(F) Constitution of India, Article 246 — Constitutionality of Legislation — Test to determine whether statute is intra vires.

In determining whether a legislation is within the field of a competent legislature where its powers are circumscribed by enumerated list in a Constitution, it is necessary to find out the true nature of the legislation or in other words the pith and substance of the legislation and then to find out whether the legislation in its pith and substance is within one of the lists enumerated and given to that particular legislature. Since the entries in the different legislative lists are likely to overlap occasionally, it is usual to examine the pith and substance of the legislation with a view to determine to which entry the legislation can substantially be related to; a slight connection with another entry in another list will not matter. AIR 1947 PC 60 and AIR 1970 SC 999 Rel. on.

(G) Limitation Act (1963), Section 1 — Law of Limitation applies to Calcutta City Civil Court.

The law of limitation is a law by the Union Parliament which is binding on all courts in India and as such naturally the City Civil Court would have to apply and follow the law of limitation in respect of the claims arising before it.

(H) Calcutta City Civil Court Act (W. B. Act 21 of 1953) Schedule I, Entries 1 and 2 — Deletion of Entry 2 by the Amendment Act (35 of 1969) — Effect.

In view of the fact that Entry 2, in express terms stipulates that the suits and proceedings in Entry No. 2 shall be other than those triable in Entry 1, in deleting Entry 2 the State Legislature was not conferring Admiralty jurisdiction on the City Civil Court.

(Para 13)

(I) Constitution of India, Pre. — Constitutionality of Legislation — Lack of clarity in a legislative enactment is no justification for declaring it ultra vires.

SABYASACHI MUKHARJEE, J.:

This is an appeal against the order and judgment of P. K. Banerji, J. dated 25th November, 1969 rejecting the petitioners' application under Article 226 of the Constitution without issuing a rule nisi. The petitioners are the three practising attorneys of this High Court, and in the petition there was a prayer for leave under Order 1, Rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. During the hearing of this appeal, learned Advocate for the petitioners, abandoned the prayer for leave under Order 1, Rule 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The application has therefore been treated as an application by the three named petitioners in their individual capacity and not in their representative capacity. In the application the petitioners challenge the establishment of City Civil Court by the Calcutta City Civil Court Act, 1953 (West Bengal Act No. XXI of 1953) and the amendment of the said Act by the City Civil Court (Amendment) Act, 1969 being West Bengal Act XXXV of 1969 and notification made on the 4th November, 1969 relating thereto, as ultra vires the powers of the State Legislature. The application was moved before P. K. Banerji, J., who as mentioned hereinbefore declined to issue a rule nisi. P. K. Banerji, J., was of the opinion that the matter was covered by the decision of Sinha, J. (as his Lordship then was) in the case of Amrendra Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Bikash Chandra Ghose, 61 Cal WN 630 = (AIR 1957 Cal 534). The learned trial Judge was further of the opinion that the expression, 'constitution' in Item No. 3 of List II of Schedule VII of the Constitution of India was wide enough to empower the State Legislature to establish additional courts. The learned Judge further came to the conclusion that the petitioners being practising attorneys of this Court were guilty of delay in making this application. For these reasons, the learned Judge dismissed the application. Having heard the parties, we were clearly of the opinion, that the case made out in the petition is certainly an arguable prima facie case and petitioners were entitled to ask for the issuance of a rule nisi for the further consideration of the matter. But learned Advocates for both the petitioners and the respondents contended before us that we should not only consider whether there is an arguable prima facie case entitling the petitioners to a rule nisi but further examine the rival contentions of the parties on the points raised and give our decision on the merits of the contentions raised on behalf of the petitioners. As in this case the questions involved are essentially questions of law and there is hardly any scope for any elucidation of facts by giving the respondents opportunity of filing any affidavit in opposition and further in as much as the respondents have been served with the notice of the appeal and have appeared and made submissions before us and also in view of the importance of the points involved in this application, we have decided to examine the contentions urged on merits on behalf of the petitioners.

2. Learned Advocate for the petitioners contended before us that the establishment of the City Civil Court was beyond the competence of the State Legislature. It has been urged that the Parliament alone has the power and the authority under the Constitution to establish additional courts. Reliance was placed on the relevant entries in the different lists of the Schedule VII of the Constitution. It was also contended that in any event by the amendment of 1969 the State Legislature has purported to legislate on matters enumerated in List I and the amendment is ultra vires the powers of the State Legislature. It was contended by, learned Advocate for the petitioners, that the expression "establishment" is different from the expression 'constitution'. Furthermore the difference, it was urged, would be apparent from the fact that our Constitution uses different expressions, "constitution" as well as "establishment" and they must be so construed as signifying different meanings. It was urged that the decision of Sinha, J., on which reliance was placed by P. K. Banerji, J., did not have occasion to consider the relevant provisions of the Constitution, as the very establishment of the City Civil Court was not challenged in the petition before Sinha, J., in the case of 61 Cal WN 630 = (AIR 1957 Cal 534) (supra).

3. The City Civil Court Act, 1953, being Act 21 of 1953, was passed by the West Bengal Legislature and the assent of the President was published in the Calcutta Gazette on the 1st of September, 1953. It is an Act to establish an additional Court for the City of Calcutta. The preamble of the Act states that whereas it is expedient to establish an additional Court for the City of Calcutta, the Act was being passed. Section 3 of the Act states that the State Government may, by notification, in the Official Gazette, establish Civil Court to be called the City Civil Court. The City Civil Court, it has been provided, would be a Court subordinate to and subject to the superintendence of the High Court within the meaning of the Letters Patent for the High Court and of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Section 4 provides for the appointment of Judges. Section 5 of the Act states that the local limits of the jurisdiction of the City Civil Court shall be the City of Calcutta. Section 5 has undergone an amendment in 1969. Sub-section (2) of Section 5 originally provided that City Civil Court would have jurisdiction and the High Court would not have jurisdiction to try suits or proceedings of civil nature, not exceeding rupees ten thousand in value. Sub-sec. (3) gave City Civil Court jurisdiction and took away jurisdiction of the High Court in respect of the proceeding under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 and Part X of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, (XXXIX of 1925), in respect of succession certificates. Sub-section 4 states that the City Civil Court shall not have jurisdiction to try suits and of the description specified in the First Schedule. This Schedule has also undergone considerable amendments in 1969. Under sub-section 2 the value has been increased to rupees fifty thousand. We shall have to deal with the effect of the amendments later in this judgment. It was contended that as a result of these amendments the matters in respect of which jurisdiction has been conferred upon the City Civil Court by the Act of the West Bengal Legislature are matters enumerated in List 1 of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution and as such the West Bengal State Legislature was incompetent to legislate upon these subjects. Sub-section (5) of Section 5 provides that all suits and proceedings which are not triable by the City Civil Court shall continue to be triable by the High Court or the Small Cause Court or any other Court, the tribunal or authority as the case may be as before the Act. Section 6 provides that the procedure to be followed in City Civil Court shall be as provided by the Code of Civil Procedure. Section 7 provides for the law to be administered by the City Civil Court. Section 8 provides for appeal. Originally Section 9 gave the High Court in exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, powers to remove suits or proceedings to itself, upon certain conditions. That section has been repealed by the amendment of 1969. Sections 10 to 16 deal with the set up of the City Civil Court. Section 17 gives the attorneys right to act and plead in City Civil Court. Section 18 deals with the seal. Section 19 provides for the rule making power. Section 20 stipulates that pending suits and proceedings would not be affected.

4. The first question, therefore, is whether the State Legislature was competent to establish additional Court in the City of Calcutta and pass the impugned legislation. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that there is no authority of the State Legislature to establish any additional court. Our attention was drawn to the enumerated entries in List II as well as List III of the Seventh Schedule. We shall refer specifically to certain entries later in this judgment. The main argument however has been on the effect of Article 247 of the Constitution. It was contended that Article 247 of the Constitution overrides all other provisions so far as the question of establishment of any additional court is concerned after coming into operation of the Constitution, Article 247 of the Constitution states as follows:—

"247. Power of Parliament to provide for the establishment of certain additional courts. Notwithstanding anything in this Chapter, Parliament may by law provide for the establishment of any additional courts for the better administration of laws made by Parliament or of any existing laws with respect to a matter enumerated in the Union List."

5. In this connection, learned advocate for the petitioners, also relied on the residuary power of legislation in Article 248 of the Constitution read with Entry 97 of List I. In view of the provisions of Article 246 of the Constitution the authority and the power of the State Legislature to pass the impugned Act must be found within the ambit of List II and List III of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution. In the Indian Constitution the powers of the State Legislatures are enumerated powers. Therefore unless the authority of the State Legislature is found either from List II or List III of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution the impugned Act would be beyond the competence of the State Legislature. In this connection the first entry that we need consider is Entry 3 in List II which is to be followed effect:

"(3) Administration of justice; constitution and organisation of all courts, except the Supreme Court and the High Court; officers and servants of the High Court; procedure in rent and revenue courts; fees taken in all courts, except the Supreme Court."

Entry 65 of the said List deals with jurisdiction and powers of all Courts except Supreme Courts, with respect to matters in that list. Entry 13 of the Concurrent List, namely, List III of the 7th Schedule deals with Civil Procedure, including all matters included in the Code of Civil Procedure at the commencement of the Constitution, limitation and arbitration. Entry 77 of List I deals with the Constitution, organisation, jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court (including contempt of such courts) and the fees taken therein, and persons entitled to practise before the Supreme Court. Entry 78 of List I deals with Constitution and organisation (including vacation of the High Court, except the provisions as to officers and servants of High Courts, and persons entitled to practice before the High Courts. It is significant to note that while Entry 77 includes the jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court, Entry 78 does not include jurisdiction and powers of the High Courts. Entry 79 of List I deals with the extension of jurisdiction to and exclusion of the jurisdiction of the High Courts from any union territory. Entries 1 and 2 of List II of the Government of India Act, 1935 so far relevant for the present purpose ran as follows:

"1. the administration of justice, constitution and organisation of all Courts except the Federal Court....."

2. Jurisdiction and powers of all Courts except the Federal Court, with respect to any of the matters in this List....."

Learned Advocate for the petitioners, contended that Indian Constitution on this aspect has evolved a new scheme and a new pattern and the State Legislatures have lost all powers of establishing any additional courts after coming into operation of the Constitution. Additional courts, it was contended, if they are to be established, must be done by the authority of the Union Parliament. The first argument on this aspect is Article 247 of the Constitution. Article 247 of the Constitution is a new provision. There was no provision similar to this in the Government of India Act, 1935 and there is also no similar provision either in the Constitution of the United States of America or that of Australia. But there is a provision, viz., Section 101 of the British North America Act, 1867, which provides for additional courts. Section 101 of the British North America Act, 1867 provides—

"The Parliament of Canada may, notwithstanding anything in this Act, from time to time provide for the Constitution, Maintenance, and Organisation of a General Court of Appeal for Canada and for the Establishment of any additional courts for the better Administration of the Laws of Canada." In this connection however it has to be observed further that Section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867 deals with the exclusive power of the provincial Legislature and clause 14 of that section deals with the question of "The Administration of Justice in the Province," including "constitution, maintenance and organisation of the Provincial Courts." In interpreting this provision it has been held that the words "Constitution, maintenance and organisation of the Provincial Courts plainly include the powers to define the jurisdiction of such Courts territorially as well as in other respects. (See the decision of Re County Courts of British Columbia 21 Supreme Courts of Canada Reports, 446). This position was also noted in the judgment of B. K. Mukherjee, J. (as his Lordship then was) at pages 87, 88 and 89 of the report in the case of State of Bombay v. Narottamdas, AIR 1951 SC 69, a decision which we will have to examine in detail later. The right of the provincial legislatures to create new courts and, subject to Section 96 of the said Act, to appoint the judges who shall preside over them has been frequently exercised and has been affirmed in a number of cases. (See Clement's Canadian Constitution, Third Edition p. 512) Armour, C. J. in R. v. Leningar, 22 CnT. R. 690 observed:—

"A Court is a place where justice is judicially administered: Coke on Littleton, 58 a; and the Constitution of a Court, therefore necessarily includes its jurisdiction and the granting by the British North America Act to the provincial legislatures of the power to constitute courts of civil and criminal jurisdiction necessarily included the power of giving jurisdiction to those Courts and impliedly included the power of enlarging, altering and diminishing the jurisdiction of those courts."

(See Clement's Canadian Constitutional Law Third Edition pp. 526, 527, 528).

Section 96 of the said Act provides that the Governor General shall appoint the judges of the Superior, District and County Courts in each Province except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. In several cases both in Canada and in the Privy Council, Section 101 of the British North America Act, 1867 in relation to Section 96 has come up for consideration but in view of the provision of Section 96 which are dissimilar to our Constitutional provisions, it may not be quite appropriate to draw any analogy or any support from the said decisions. Some of these decisions on the question relating to Section 101 can be found in the Canadian Constitutional Law, by Laskin, Third Edition p. 772-824 and Clement's Canadian Constitutional Law Third Edition pp. 520-527. Therefore, while it is difficult to draw any analogy from the interpretation of Section 101 of the British North America Act, 1867 in view of the other provisions of that Constitution, it can be stated, as noted by the Supreme Court, that the existence of the power given by Section 101 of the North America Act, does not in any way detract from clause 14 of Section 92 of the said Act. The significantly different provisions in Indian Constitution from Section 96 of the North America Act, 1867, make the Canadian experience on this question more apposite to the Indian Constitutional set up. The question, however, whether the State Legislatures have the right to set up additional Courts in India must be determined with reference to the provisions of the Indian Constitution. We have noted the relevant entries in the List II and List III of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution and the corresponding entries in the Government of India Act, 1935.

6. In the case of the AIR 1951 SC 69, the question that arose for the consideration of the Supreme Court was whether the Bombay City Civil Court Act was ultra vires, the Provisional Legislature by reason of its being encroachment by the Provincial Legislature upon the field of legislation reserved for the centre under List I of Schedule 7 of the Government of India Act, 1935. It was held by the Supreme Court that the Act was intra vires the Bombay Legislature under Entry 1 of List II of the 7th Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1935. It was held that the legislative power conferred on the Provincial Legislature by Item I of List II had been conferred by use of language which was of the widest amplitude, namely administration of justice and constitution and organisation of all Courts. The aforesaid phrase employed included within its ambit legislative power in respect to jurisdiction and power of Courts established for the purpose of administration of justice. It was further held that the words appeared to be sufficient to confer upon the Provincial Legislature the right to regulate and provide for the whole machinery connected with the administration of justice in the Province. Legislation on the subject of administration of justice and constitution of Courts of justice would be ineffective and incomplete unless and until the Courts established under it are clothed with the jurisdiction and power to hear and decide causes. Patanjali Sastri and Das, JJ. (as their Lordships then were) held that Entry 2 read with Entry I in List II clearly authorised the Provincial Legislature to make a law conferring on or taking away from a Court general jurisdiction and powers relating to or touching or concerning or for administration of justice. Fazl Ali, J. at pp. 73-74 of the report observed:—

"In my opinion, the correct view is to hold that it is not necessary to call into aid either Entry 4 of List III or any of the provisions of the Canadian Constitution in this case, and that the words "administration of justice; constitution and organization of Courts" are by themselves sufficient to empower the Provincial Legislature to invest a new Court with all the power which has been conferred upon it by the impugned Act. It is of course open to the Central Legislature to bar the jurisdiction of the new Court by a special enactment with regard to any of the matters in List I, but so long as such jurisdiction is not barred, the Court will have jurisdiction to try all suits and proceedings of civil nature as enacted in the Act in question. I think that if the Provincial Legislature had merely enhanced the pecuniary jurisdiction of any of the existing Civil Courts, there could have been no objection to that course. Why then should there be any objection when, instead of investing one of the existing Courts with power to try suits and proceedings of a civil nature not exceeding a certain amount, the Legislature has created a new Court and invested it with the same power."

At page 78 of the report Patanjali Sastri J. (as his Lordship then was) observed:—

"After giving the matter my careful consideration, I am convinced that both the language of the provisions and the antecedent legislative practice support the conclusion that the Provincial Legislatures, which have the exclusive power of constituting and organising Courts and of providing for the administration of justice in their respective provinces, have also the power of investing the Courts with general jurisdiction". Mahajan J. (as his Lordship then was) at page 85 of the report observed:— (para 51) "I am, therefore, of the opinion that under Item 1 of List II the Provincial Legislature has complete competence not only to establish Courts for the administration of justice but to confer on them jurisdiction to hear all causes of a civil nature, and that this power is not curtailed or limited by power of legislation conferred on the two Legislatures under Items 53, 2 and 15 of the three lists."

At page 88 of the report Mukherjee, J. (as his Lordship then was) observed:

"It is to be noted that the right to set up Courts and to provide for the whole machinery of administration of justice has been given exclusively to the Provincial Legislature. Under Section 101, North America Act, the Parliament of Canada has a reserve of power to create additional Courts for better administration of the laws of Canada but the Indian Constitution Act of 1935 does not give any such power to the Central Legislature. Courts are to be established by the Provincial Legislature alone. The word "Court" certainly means a place where justice is judicially administered."

It has however to be observed that the last observation quoted above has to be examined in view of Article 247 of the Constitution which is more or less in similar terms with Section 101 of the North America Act, 1867. Das J. (as his Lordship then was) also came to the conclusion that the Provincial Legislatures have power to establish Courts under Entries 1 and 2 of the List II of the Seventh Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1935.

7. In the Constitution under Entry 3 of List II of 7th Schedule, all the concepts or expressions used in Entries 1 and 2 of List II of the Government of India Act, 1935 have been combined with certain modifications. It has further to be noted Entry 3 of List II of the Constitution excludes from the authority of the State Legislatures the Constitution and organisation of the High Courts as well as the Supreme Court while Entries 1 and 2 of List II of the 7th Schedule of the Government of India Act, 1935 excluded only the Federal Court. In this connection it should be noted that Entry 77 of List I of 7th Schedule of the Constitution includes jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court while Entry 78 of that list does not include jurisdiction and powers of the High Courts. The expression "Administration of justice; constitution and organisation of all courts except Supreme Court and High Court" would include in its ordinary and natural meaning the authority to set up additional courts of justice in the states for the purposes of administering justice. The expressions were so construed by the Supreme Court in the case of AIR 1951 SC 69 (Supra) as noted above. The argument in this case is that Article 247, read with Article 248 and Entry 97 of List I of the Constitution has altered that position. We have set out before the provisions of Article 247. It gives Parliament authority to establish courts for better administration of either (a) laws made by Parliament or (b) any existing laws with respect to any matter enumerated in the Union List. Therefore, by the authority of this Article, Parliament has no authority to establish additional courts for matters in the State List. The authority given to the Parliament by Article 247 is a limited authority for specified purpose. In India unlike some other Constitutions, we do not have dual system of courts, namely, one hierarchy of courts administering the laws in the state list, one hierarchy of courts administering Union laws. Some Constitutions have that system. Therefore, the logical conclusion from the argument in support of the petitioners, is that the Union Parliament alone can set up additional Court for the better administration of matters in the Union List and if additional courts for the purpose of state laws are necessary they must be set up by the State Legislatures, because by virtue of Article 247 the Union Parliament will have no authority to set up additional courts for state laws. That would be a position repugnant to the whole scheme of the Indian Constitutional set up. In order to meet this obvious anomaly that would arise from the construction that apart from Article 247 there is no power to establish additional courts, learned advocate for the petitioners, contended that resort can be made to Article 248 of the Constitution read with Entry 97 in List I of the Seventh Schedule. Article 248 of the Constitution gives residuary powers of legislation to the Parliament. It states that Parliament has exclusive power to make any law with respect to any matter not enumerated in the Concurrent or the State List. Similarly Entry 97 of List I of the 7th Schedule includes any other matter not enumerated in Lists II or III including any Tax not mentioned in either of those lists. Learned advocate for the petitioners contended that Article 247 read with Article 248 and Entry 97 of List I, would enable the Parliament alone to establish any additional court for administering law both in the State and the Union list and it was suggested that if we make that construction then it would obviate the anomaly, noted before. Article 248 of the Constitution is a new provision. Section 104 of the Government of India Act, 1935 gave residuary powers of legislation in slightly different terms. Section 104 is in the following terms:—

"104 (1) The Governor General may by public notification empower either the Federal Legislature or a Provincial Legislature to enact a law with respect to any matter not enumerated in any of the Lists in the Seventh Schedule to this Act, including a law imposing a tax not mentioned in any such list, and the executive authority of the Federation or of the Province, as the case may be, shall extend to the administration of any law so made, unless the Governor-General otherwise directs.

(2) In the discharge of his functions under this section the Governor-General shall act in his discretion."

It is however necessary to reiterate certain principles about the construction of the residuary powers of legislation. It appears that the aim of the Constitution like that of the Government of India Act, 1935, was to make the different lists as exhaustive as possible. It was observed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Governor-General v. Province of Madras, AIR 1945 PC 98 regarding the Government of India Act of 1935 that the lists were made so exhaustive as to leave little or nothing in the residuary field. Gwyer, C. J., observed in the case of In re, C. P. and Berar Sales of Motor Spirit and Lubricants Taxation Act, 1938, AIR 1939 FC 1,

"The attempt to avoid a final assignment of residuary powers by an exhaustive enumeration of legislative subjects has made the Indian Constitution Act unique among the federal Constitutions in the length and the details of its Legislative Lists".

It has to be remembered that the Constitution has made the lists more exhaustive and elaborate than the Government of India Act, 1935. List I of the Constitution contains 97 entries against 59 entries in List I of the 1935 Act. List II of the Constitution contains 66 entries as against 54 entries in List II of the 1935 Act and List III of the Constitution, namely, the Concurrent List contains 47 entries while the corresponding list in 1935 Act contained 30 entries. Therefore, resort to the residuary powers should be made as a last refuge, and only when all the categories of three lists are absolutely exhausted. Furthermore where two constructions are possible, one which will avoid resort to the residuary power and the other which will make resort to the residuary power necessary, the former must be preferred. This must, however, be done without straining the language or without making the entries meaningless. (See the observations of the Federal Court in the cases of Subramanyan v. Muttuswamy, AIR 1941 FC 47 at page 55. Manikkasundara Bhattar v. R. S. Nayudu, 1946 FCR 67 = (AIR 1947 FC 1).) Furthermore, if resort is made to the residuary power for the purpose of the authority to set up additional courts for laws in Union and State lists, then Article 247 would really become superfluous. Bearing the above principles in mind, we are of the opinion that the expression, 'administration of justice' taken with the expression 'constitution and organisation of all courts', read in its ordinary significance would include the right or the authority to establish additional courts. Such a construction would not amount to straining the language of the Constitution, but would be only giving effect to the natural meaning of the expressions used. Such a construction also will be in consonance with the scheme of the Indian constitutional set up. Entry 3 gives that power to the State Legislatures. It is true, as learned advocate for the petitioners, contended that the Constitution has used the expressions "establishment", "constitution" "organisation", "jurisdiction" and "power". It is also true that where different expressions are used in a particular enactment, it may some time signify different connotations. But it has to be remembered that the enactment that we are construing in this case is the Constitution and not a mere law, but the organic instrument under which laws are made. We have noted before that in the Canadian Constitution, the expressions, "constitution and organisation of courts", have been construed to signify that authority to establish additional courts is with the Provincial Legislatures in spite of the fact that the Union Parliament has the authority to establish Additional courts for certain purposes. We have also noticed that the Supreme Court has held that the expression "administration of justice, constitution and organisation of courts" in the relevant entry of the Government of India Act, 1935 authorised the State Legislature to establish a City Civil Court at Bombay. The power that has been given to the Union Parliament under Article 247 of the Constitution is a limited power for certain specified purposes and that power should not be so construed as to detract from the amplitude of the expressions "administration of justice constitution and organisation of all courts except Supreme Court and High Courts". Contrary construction would result in an anomaly of the Indian Constitution noted above and furthermore that anomaly can only be avoided by having resort to the residuary powers under Article 248 of the Constitution read with Entry 97 of the List I of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution by straining the language, and restricting the natural meaning of Entry 3 of List II, and would in effect make Article 247 a surplus provision. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that Entry 3 of List II gives the State Legislature the power to set up additional court, that is to say, the City Civil Court of Calcutta. Learned Advocate for the petitioners contended that the marginal notes of Article 247 signify that Parliament alone has got the power of establishing additional courts. Learned advocate for the petitioners drew our attention to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Bengal Immunity Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, AIR 1955 SC 661. Delivering the judgment of the Court the Acting Chief Justice observed that the marginal notes in the Indian Constitution unlike the marginal notes in Acts of the British Parliament, are parts of the Constitution and prima facie, furnishes some proof as to the meaning and purpose of the Article of the Constitution. In that context it is significant that the marginal note uses the expression "certain" before additional courts, not additional court simpliciter, or all additional courts. Prima facie, therefore, from the marginal notes it is apparent, that the power that the Parliament has been given with respect to additional courts is limited to only "certain" additional courts. Learned advocate for the petitioners also relied on the non-obstante clause in the Article. In this context it is necessary to remember that the Entry 3 in List II gives to the State Legislatures competence relating to administration of justice and constitution and organisation of courts except the Supreme Court and the High Courts. Entry 77 of the List I gives Union Parliament competence over constitution, organisation, jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court, while Entry 78 of that list gives competence to the Union Parliament over constitution and organisation of the High Courts without giving competence over jurisdiction and powers of the High Courts. Therefore, in order to obviate the difficulty that the Union Parliament may have to face because of its lack of competence in List I and List III of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution in creating additional courts for the Union List that this power in Article 247 has been given to the Parliament and in order to avoid conflict with the three lists of the 7th Schedule the non-obstante clause has been inserted, and not for the purpose suggested by learned advocate for the petitioners. On this aspect as the question we must refer to a decision of the Special Bench of this Court, on which reliance was placed on behalf of the petitioners.

8. In the case of Pramatha Nath Mitter v. Chief Justice of the High Court at Calcutta, AIR 1961 Cal 545, it was observed by a Special Bench that Section 23-A of the High Court Judges (Conditions of Service) Act (1954), is ultra vires the Union Legislature and the presidential Order, viz., the Calcutta High Court (Vacation) Order, 1960, issued thereunder was also invalid. It was held that the Parliament had no power to legislate with respect to vacations which fell properly within the topic Administration of Justice under Entry 3, List II of the Seventh Schedule. It was observed that the expression "constitution and Organisation" as appearing in Entry 78 of List I are two concepts which are included in the concept of "Administration of Justice", but when these two matters are specifically mentioned in the Union List I it is reasonable to hold that the connotation of the expression "Administration of Justice" is restricted to that extent in Entry 3 of List II and the matters of constitution and organisation of the High Courts have been taken out of the legislative power of the State Legislature. The application under Article 226 of the Constitution in that case was dismissed by the Special Bench on the ground that the order was passed in New Delhi and the second respondent being also at New Delhi, the Calcutta High Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition.

Learned advocate for the petitioners relied on the observation that the meaning of the expression "administration of justice" was different from the expression "Constitution and Organisation" in List I of Seventh Schedule of the Constitution in view of their separate uses. The Special Bench however was not concerned with the questions with which we are concerned, namely, whether the expression "administration of justice" read with "constitution and organisation of court" in Entry 3 of List II is wide enough to include the competence to set up additional courts, and whether the existence of a separate and limited power for the Union Parliament in any way detracts from the amplitude of the Entry 3 of List II. In that view of the matter it is not necessary for us to further examine the said decision in detail.

9. In the case of 61 Cal WN 630 = (AIR 1957 Cal 534) (Supra) Sinha, J., (as his Lordship then was), had to consider the validity of certain provisions of the present Act with which we are concerned. Though we find from the judgment that it was contended before the learned Judge that the City Civil Court Act, 1953 was not within the competence of West Bengal Legislature and as such ultra-vires and void, no reference in the argument was made to Art. 247 or Entry 97 of the List I. It was argued before the learned Judge that the provisions of the Act, in so far as they purport to take away or curtail or restrict or alter the jurisdiction of the High Court, were beyond the competence of the State Legislature. It was further argued that in constituting and organising the City Civil Court the State Legislature was in fact re-organising the High Court. The Act was also challenged as being discriminatory on the ground that it took away the beneficial advantages conferred on litigants of obtaining summary reliefs under Order 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Sinha, J., (as his Lordship then was), considered the Supreme Court judgment noted above. The learned Judge came to the conclusion that because of the difference of language in Entries 77 and 78 of List I the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court are within the ambit of the State Legislature. The learned Judge further came to the conclusion that Entry 3 of List II read with Entry 65 empowers the State Legislature to legislate on the jurisdiction and powers of all courts including the High Court in respect of administration of justice. The learned judge also came to the conclusion that in substance the impugned legislation was within the competence of the State Legislature and he upheld the validity of the Act. It has to be observed however that by the amendment of 1969 several items which were excluded from the jurisdiction of the City Civil Court have now been taken away from the High Court and vested with the City Civil Court. The effect of the amendment would however be examined later in this judgment.

10. In the case of Shivarudrappa v. Kapurchand, AIR 1965 Mys 76, it was held that Parliament has no exclusive competence to enact Sections 19 and 29 (2) (c) of the Mysore Civil Courts Act. The provisions are within the legislative competence of State Legislature. It does not appear from the judgment that the question was considered from the aspect of Article 247 of the Constitution as was canvassed before us.

11. Learned Government Pleader submitted that the power of the State Legislature to establish additional court like the City Civil Court is also within the Entry 13 of List III of the Seventh Schedule. The expression "Civil Procedure" would signify the rules of machinery for administering justice in the courts of justice and cannot and do not signify the competence to set up the machinery itself. In any event, in the view we have taken, it is not necessary for us in this case to examine the question in any further detail.

12. We are of the opinion, therefore, that in view of the provisions of Entry 3 of List II of 7th Schedule the State Legislature has the competence to set up additional Court, viz., the City Civil Court of Calcutta. This is, in our opinion, in consonance with the Canadian experience, in conformity with the decision of the Supreme Court noted above, and in accordance with the natural and ordinary meaning of the expression "Administration of justice, Constitution and organisation of all courts". This view is also in harmony with Article 247 of the Constitution as we have read it.

13. The next contention that requires consideration in this case is, whether in providing sub-section (2) of Section 5 of the Act wherein it has been stipulated that the City Civil Court shall have jurisdiction and the High Court shall not have jurisdiction to try suits and proceedings of certain types upto the value of Rs. 50,000/-, and whether by the amendment of 1969 whereby Entries 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 9 and 11 have been deleted from the First Schedule of the Act with the result that the High Court shall not have jurisdiction to try suits in respect of these entries but the City Civil Court shall have jurisdiction to try such suits and proceedings upto a limit of Rs. 50,000/-, the State Legislature has exceeded its power. It has been contended that in providing that suits and proceedings upto Rs. 50,000/- relating to and arising out of shipping or navigation (including in particular carriage by sea, ships, cargo, freight, collisions, salvage, average, maritime lien, bottomry, respondentia, wages or seamen or master, and disbursements) the State legislature was legislating in respect of Entries Nos. 24 and 25 of List I of the Seventh Schedule of the Constitution. It has been contended that in providing for similar suits and proceedings relating to or arising out of carriage by air, the Act infringes Entry 95 read with Entry 29 of List I of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution. It was urged that in providing for suits and proceedings arising out of or in connection with imports or exports of merchandise the Act is ultra vires, Entry No. 95 read with Entries Nos. 41 and 42 of List I of Schedule 7. Similar arguments regarding infringement of Entry 95 read with Entry 43, Entry 95 read with Entry 46, Entry No. 46 read with Entry 7, Entry 6 in List III of Schedule 7 in respects of other items which have deleted from the First Schedule of the Act of 1953, were made. It has to be observed that Entry No. 1 in the First Schedule of the Act is in respect of suits and proceedings triable by the High Court as a Court of Admiralty or Vice Admiralty, or as a Colonial Court of Admiralty. Entry No. 2 in the said Schedule was in respect of suits and proceedings relating to or arising out of shipping or navigation (including in particular carriage by sea, ships, cargo, freight and collisions, salvage, average, maritime lien, bottomry, respondentia, wages of seamen or master, and disbursements), not otherwise triable under Entry 1. These two entries were originally together included in the jurisdiction of the High Court. Now by the amendment the second entry has been taken away from the jurisdiction of the High Court. It is difficult to conceive what are the suits or proceedings that might arise in respect of maritime lien, bottomry or respondentia, wages of seamen or master, which are not triable under the Admiralty jurisdiction. We have not received any satisfactory answer to the question as to what were these suits and proceedings mentioned in Entry 1 of the First Schedule of the Act which are not triable under Entry 1 of that said Schedule. Indeed these are matters essentially connected with the exercise of the Admiralty jurisdiction. These are expressions to be found in Admiralty proceedings. In non-Admiralty proceeding what would be the meaning of these expressions, we have not been told. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. I, pages. 49, 53, 57, 59 63 and 65 these expressions have been indicated as expressions essentially connected with the exercise of jurisdiction by the Admiralty Court. It was contended that in deleting Entry 2 of the First Schedule, the amendment of 1969 was in fact vesting the City Civil Court with the Admiralty jurisdiction. It was contended that such an action was beyond the power and the competence of the State Legislature. But if it can be established that these items are triable by Admiralty jurisdiction then the City Civil Court would not have jurisdiction and as such no question can arise of the amendment vesting the City Civil Court with the Admiralty jurisdiction. It is true that in view of the language of these two entries the bifurcation and vesting of jurisdiction with two separate courts are confusing. This indeed would be unfortunate for the litigants and it would be difficult task for the lawyers and the Judges charged with the administration of this Act, to find out what are the suits and proceedings relating to or arising out of bottomry or respondentia which are not triable by the High Court as a Court of Admiralty or vice-Admiralty or as a colonial Court of Admiralty. Lack of clarity in legislative enactment, which is not a rarity in our modern legislation, is however not a justification for declaring an Act ultra vires. In view of the fact that Entry 2, in express terms stipulates that the suits and proceedings in Entry No. 2 shall be other than those triable in Entry 1, we are unable to accept the contention that in deleting the Entry 2 the State Legislature was conferring Admiralty jurisdiction on the City Civil Court.

14. The question, therefore, which requires consideration, is whether by the deletion of the suits and proceedings of the said several entries there has been any infringement of powers of the Union Parliament as mentioned in List I of the Seventh Schedule. In determining whether a legislation is within the field of a competent legislature where its powers are circumscribed by enumerated list in a Constitution, it is necessary to find out the true nature of the legislation or in other words as have been said in several decisions, the pith and substance of the legislation and then to find out whether the legislation in its pith and substance is within one of the lists enumerated and given to that particular legislature (See the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Prafulla Kumar Mukharjee v. Bank of Commerce Ltd., Khulna, 74 Ind App 23 - (AIR,

1947 PC 60). Since the entries in the different legislative lists are likely to overlap occasionally, it is usual to examine the pith and substance of the legislation with a view to determine to which entry the legislation can substantially be related to, a slight connection with another entry in another list will not matter. (See the observations of the Supreme Court in the case of Second Gift Tax Officer, Mangalore v. D. H. Hazareth, (AIR 1970 SC 999). We have held that the establishment of the City Civil Court by the State Legislature in 1953 was within the competence of the State Legislature in view of the Entry 3 of List II of the 7th Schedule of the Constitution. The question for consideration now is whether by the amendment of 1969, the conferment of certain additional jurisdiction to the City Civil Court in respect of suits and proceedings arising out of items enumerated in list I, was proper. We have noticed that Entry 77 of List I of the 7th Schedule contains jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court while Entry 78 of the said list does not contain jurisdiction and powers of the High Courts. Furthermore it has to be observed that Entry 13, in List III, i.e. the Concurrent List, also provides for Civil Procedure. We have held that said Entry 13 cannot confer jurisdiction to legislature to constitute any Court. It does not give the Legislatures authority to set up a machinery for Civil litigation but gives authority to Legislatures for providing rules for regulating the machinery. In pith and substance the amendment, is a law relating to administration of justice, constitution and organisation of courts, and as such it is within the legislative competence of the State Legislature, and it is not prohibited in view of the absence of the jurisdiction and powers of the High Court in Entry 78 of List I of 7th Schedule of the Constitution. Looking it from another point of view, in our opinion, the amendment can also be upheld on the ground that it is a law relating to Civil Procedure and is a valid piece of legislation being within the Entry 13 of List III of the Seventh Schedule. No substantive rights of the persons, in respect of the law of carriage or law of navigation or law of shipping or law of promissory notes, have in any way been affected by the amendments made. What has been done is to provide a different method for enforcing some of these rights within the territory of this state. That is the pith and substance of the City Civil Court (Amendment) Act, 1969. It was contended that the City Civil Court would be incompetent to apply the law of limitation. We are unable to see the force of this contention. The law of limitation is a law by the Union Parliament which is binding on all courts in India and as such naturally the City Civil Court would have to apply and follow the law of limitation in respect of the claims arising before it.

15. In view we have taken, it must be held that the establishment of City Civil Court in 1953 and the conferment of certain additional jurisdiction to that Court in 1969, are within competence of the State Legislature. We have, therefore to hold that the Calcutta City Civil Court Act, 1953 (West Bengal Act XXI of 1953) and the City Civil Court (Amendment) Act, 1969, are intra vires the powers of the State Legislature.

16. The learned trial Judge has further held that the petitioners are guilty of laches. If we were able to accept the contentions of the petitioners and if the Act was ultra vires, the powers of the State Legislature then in view of the fact that the amendment was introduced in 1969, which to a very large extent curtailed the original jurisdiction of the High Court, we would not have refused to entertain this application on the aforesaid ground of delay. However, in the view we have taken, this point need not be pursued further.

17. Learned Government Pleader raised a point that the petitioners have not shown how they were affected and further he contended that as the attorneys have been given the right to practise in the City Civil Court, the petitioners have received benefits under the Act, as such they were not entitled to challenge the Act. It appears that the petitioners are practising attorneys of this High Court. If the Act was ultra vires, the petitioners would certainly be affected by the enforcement of an ultra vires Act in the pursuit of their profession. Furthermore there is no evidence that the petitioners have received any special benefit under the Act of 1953 or under the Amendment Act of 1969. We are, therefore, of the opinion that had it been possible for us to accept the contentions of the petitioners we would not have refused the application on the aforesaid contention of learned Government Pleader.

18. In the view, however, we have taken on the main questions in this application, this appeal must fail and is accordingly dismissed. The order dated 25th November, 1969 of P. K. Banerjee, J., dismissing the application under Article 226 of the Constitution is hereby confirmed. In the facts and circumstances of this case there will be no order as to costs.

Suit No. 2017 of 1956, D/- 18-2-1971.

Limitation Act (1963), Article 136
— Execution of decree — Time required for obtaining certified copy of decree cannot be excluded for computing limitation. (X-Ref:— Calcutta High Court, Original Side Rules Ch. XVII, Rule 10).

Article 136 of the Limitation Act of 1963 has set a new deadline beyond which no application for execution of the decree can be made. The period of 12 years is long enough to execute a decree when it is enforceable and the intention of the legislature is quite apparent from the language used therein that the time to make the execution application is 12 years from the time when the decree or order becomes enforceable. (Para 15)

Chapter XVII, Rule 10 of the Original Side Rules of the Calcutta High Court come into play actually at the time of executing the decree through an execution application before the Original Side of Calcutta High Court and not before that although the decree might be enforceable on the day it is passed. That is the distinction between the said two expressions viz., "to execute" and "to enforce". Accordingly Chapter XVII Rule 10 cannot stand in the way of the language used in the third column of Article 136 of the Limitation Act of 1963. (Para 11)

Mullick, for Decree-holder.

ORDER:— The short but important point involved in this execution application is about the meaning of the expression "when the decree or order becomes enforceable" as provided in the third column of Article 136 of the Limitation Act of 1963. By the said provision 12 years' time has been given for the execution of a decree. The said Article provides:

"136. For the Twelve When the decree execution of years. or order becomes any decree enforceable or (other than a decree granting a mandatorily injunction) or order of any civil Court.

where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money or the delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods when default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which execution is sought takes place; provided that an application for the enforcement or execution of a decree granting a perpetual injunction shall not be subject to any period of limitation.

2. On behalf of the decree-holder It is argued that the time to obtain the certified copy of the decree should be excluded in computing the period of 12 years mentioned in column two of the aforesaid Article and 12 years should start running from the date when the certified copy thereof is obtained from court. The point arises on the following facts:

3. On 30th November 1956 the decree herein was passed. Requisition to draw up the decree was put in on the very same date. Thereafter the draft decree was issued for approval and the same was settled and passed finally on 19th March, 1957. The decree was filed on 25th June, 1957. On behalf of the decree-holder stamps were put in on 10th August 1959 for obtaining the certified copy of the decree. The present tabular statement was taken out on 25th January 1969 accompanied by the certified copy.

4. The matter came up for hearing before Ghose, J. on 24th February, 1970 when the decree-holder was given liberty to use a further affidavit. It appears that since 9th March 1970 this application became ripe for hearing again.

but the same was adjourned from time to time at the request of the parties.

5. Although the date for obtaining the certified copy has not been furnished yet the point was considered on the basis that the same must have been supplied not earlier than 25th June 1957 when the decree was filed. It would appear that if I hold that the time to obtain the certified copy is to be excluded, in that event by computing the period of 12 years from 25th June 1957 the application would be within time but if I hold that the date of the decree is the relevant date when time has begun to run within the meaning of the expression "when the decree becomes enforceable" then in that event the application must be held to be barred by limitation.

6. If the language used in the third column is read as a whole, a clear meaning is found in respect of the expression "When the decree or order becomes enforceable". The word "enforceable" has been used in the context of such decrees or orders whose operations have been kept in abeyance by the language used in the said decrees or orders themselves. The intention of the Legislature in using the word "enforceable" must have been to clear up any confusion that might have arisen by using the expression "the date of the decree or order" which was used in the earlier Act. My attention has been drawn to the Objects and Reasons for framing the above article, as set out in the 4th Edition of A. I. R. Commentary on the Law of Limitation, Vol. II at p. 1870 as follows:

"Existing Article 182 has been a fruitful source of litigation and therefore the proposed Article 135 (now Article 136) in lieu thereof, provides that the maximum period of limitation for the execution of a decree or order of any civil court shall be 12 years from the date when the decree or order became enforceable (which is usually the date of the decree or order) or where the decree or subsequent order directs any payment of money or delivery of any property to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods from the date of the default in making the payment or delivery in respect of which the applicant seeks to execute the decree or order. There is no reason why a decree should be kept alive for more than 12 years. Section 48 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, provides that a decree ceases to be enforceable after 12 years. In England also the time fixed for enforcing a judgment is 12 years. Where, however, the judgment-debtor has by fraud or force prevented the execution of a decree within the prescribed period, suitable provisions for extending the period are being made in Clause 16 (now Section 17) of the Bill on the lines of Section 48 (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908."

"Existing Article 183, which makes special provision for decrees and orders of Courts established by Royal charter, is no longer necessary."

"It is also provided that the period of 12 years will not apply to decrees granting perpetual injunction."

7. The intention of the legislature has been clearly expressed by the language used therein also, the intention being to give 12 years certain from the date when the decree or order would become enforceable. Normally the date when the decree becomes enforceable is the date of the decree but the third column also envisages cases where by the language of the decree itself the decree would be kept in abeyance for certain period or till the happening a certain event. Under such circumstances the decree would be enforceable when such period expires or when the event occurs.

8. In my opinion, there is no ambiguity in the language used in the third column and the words used therein should be read in their literal sense. The said third column cannot, in my opinion, warrant any other construction except in the way it has been read as above.

9. Mr. Mullick on behalf of the decree-holder contends that the decree does not become enforceable until the certified copy thereof is obtained from this Court because any execution application without such certified copy being annexed thereto would be dismissed in limine by the Calcutta High Court in its Original Side in view of Chapter XVII Rule 10 wherein it is, inter alia, provided:

"In all cases, the application shall be accompanied by a duly certified copy of the decree."

By the said Rule 10 of Chapter XVII of the Original Side Rules, the form of the application for execution of the decree has been prescribed and the application is required to be made in accordance with the said form. It has been decided in various cases that unless the execution application shall be accompanied by a certified copy of the decree then the same would be dismissed in limine. Accordingly, it is argued by Mr. Mullick that this time has got to be excluded in computing the period 12 years as provided under Article 136 of the Limitation Act of 1963 otherwise there will be lack of uniformity in respect of the said period of 12 years in such applications for execution in different High Courts or between different Courts in the same High Court.

10. It is difficult to appreciate Mr. Mullick's argument. It is true, that whatever the reason might be, in this case the certified copy has been issued long after the requisition was given for drawing up the decree. But these rules have been framed relating to the formalities to be observed in the execution applications and are matters relating to the procedure to be followed. Had the intention of the legislature been such that the time to obtain the certified copy should be excluded then that would have found expression in the sections of the Limitation Act.

11. In any event, the time taken for obtaining the certified copy of the decree is not uniformly the same and normally the Court will not take such long time as has been taken in this case. There may be cases where in case of urgency the certified copy can be obtained at the earliest possible time and soon after the decree is passed say within two or three days. To put up such a plea that the department concerned must take considerable time to make the certified copy available has no basis. In any event, when the legislature granted such a long time as 12 years the legislature must have taken into consideration the fact that the decree holder might take some reasonable time to obtain the certified copy of the decree and such time would be deemed to be included within the period of 12 years. In my opinion Chap. XVII R. 10 of the Original Side Rules come into play actually at the time of executing the decree through an execution application before the Original Side of this Court and not before that although the decree might be enforceable on the day it is passed. That, in my opinion, is the distinction between the said two expressions viz., "to execute" and "to enforce". Accordingly Chapter XVII Rule 10 cannot stand in the way of the language used in the third column of Article 136 of the Limitation Act of 1963.

12. Mr. Mullick next argues that the delay caused by the Court in supplying the certified copy of the decree and the default committed thereby should not visit the decree holder and referred to the case of Midnapore Zemindary Co. Ltd. v. Naba Kumar Singh Dudhuria, AIR 1950 Cal 298 and to the case of Bharat Chandra Bera v. Rajendra Nath Ghose, AIR 1961 Cal 155. In my opinion, the principles referred to in the above cases cannot be applied to the facts of the case before me inasmuch as in supplying the certified copy of the decree and in taking some time for it, the Court through its department does not commit any default or laches so as to create prejudice to the decree holder. Experience shows that mostly due to the laches on behalf of the parties that time is taken more than what it should be taken by the department. Otherwise if things proceed normally the Court or its department cannot take much time in supplying the certified copy of the decree.

13. My attention has been drawn to the case of Lala Baijnath Prosad v. Nurisingdas Guzrati, AIR 1958 Cal 1, where the Division Bench of this Court considered the meaning of the expression: "A person's right to enforce the decree" under Art. 183 of the Limitation Act of 1908. There also a point was taken that the time to take that the certified copy of the decree as required by Ch. XVII Rule 10 of the Original Side Rules of the High Court should be excluded. In rejecting the said contention, it was observed by the Bench that where the language of the decree was such that it was immediately executable the starting point of limitation under Article 183 would be the date of passing of the decree and not when the certified copy of the decree as required by Chap. XVII of Rule 10 of the Original Side Rules of the High Court would be obtained.

14. In the case of Jagannath Jugal Kishore v. Chimanlal Chowdhuri, AIR 1949 Cal 113 the expression "to execute" a decree under Article 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908.

15. In my opinion Article 136 of the Limitation Act of 1963 has set a new deadline beyond which no application for execution of the decree can be made. The period of 12 years is long enough to execute a decree when it is enforceable and the intention of the legislature is quite apparent from the language used therein that the time to make the execution application is 12 years from the time when the decree or order becomes enforceable.

16. In that view of the matter, the application for execution must be dismissed with cost and I make an order accordingly.

17. Certified for counsel.

Application dismissed.

Ghosh, for Petitioner.

ORDER :— This application has been made by the petitioner who is a cashier in the office of the respondent No. 2, Director of Industries, Government of West Bengal, inter alia, for the issue of a Writ in the nature of mandamus commanding the respondents Nos. 1 to 3 to withdraw or cancel the orders dt. June 16/20 and July 27, 1970 and refrain from giving any effect thereto and for commanding them to act according to law, inter alia, in fixing or revising the pay-scale and grade of the petitioner; and also for a Writ in the nature of mandamus commanding the respondents 1 to 3 to place and fix the petitioner in the grade or scale of pay of Rs. 300-450 or Rs. 250-400 as set forth in the annexures 'K' and 'M' to the petition. This application also seeks for the issue of a writ in the nature of Certiorari for quashing the appointment of the respondent No. 4 to the post of the cashier in the grade or scale of pay of Rs. 250-400/- under the respondent No. 3 in supersession of the petitioner.

2. On or about November 30, 1948, the petitioner after completing the probationary period of 2 years was confirmed in the post of cashier in the office of the respondent No. 2 in the scale of Rs. 80-5-105. In or about 1958 the petitioner's grade was enhanced to Rs. 105-5-210/-. The said grade was enhanced to Rs. 200-5-250 on March 1, 1959.

3. On December 12, 1960 the petitioner was charged with having misappropriated a cheque for Rs. 3388/- and was suspended on that ground. The petitioner was prosecuted on the aforesaid criminal charge before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta and was acquitted on November 28, 1961. The petitioner was not allowed to join his duties thereafter. Departmental proceedings on the basis of the aforesaid charge was commenced against the petitioner on or about August 18, 1962. As a result of the said departmental proceedings the petitioner was dismissed from his service as such cashier on or about January 26, 1963. On or about September 7, 1964, the petitioner instituted a suit being suit No. 1676 of 1964 in this Court against, inter alia, the State of West Bengal inter alia, for a declaration that he continued to be in the employ of the State of West Bengal.

4. By judgment and decree passed in the said suit on March 21, 1967, the petitioner was directed to be reinstated to the substantive post held by him with backlog of all his claims for salaries and other emoluments. On or about July 22, 1967 the petitioner was reinstated to the former substantive post held by him in the office of the respondent No. 2. In the meantime, with effect from April 1, 1961 or from the date of option to be exercised by an employee as contemplated in the said Rules West Bengal Services (Revision of Pay and Allowance) Rules, 1961 came into force. The said Rules revised the previous scales of pay of employees in the different categories under the State of West Bengal.

5. Prior to April 1, 1961, the petitioner was holding the substantive permanent post of cashier in the office of the respondent No. 2 and was in the grade of Rs. 200-5-250. By a letter dated July 27, 1967 the Deputy Director of Industries (Administration) asked the petitioner as to whether he would exercise his option under the said West Bengal Services (Revision of Pay and Allowance) Rules, 1961. The petitioner exercised his option under protest and was fixed in the revised scale of pay Rs. 200-300. The petitioner times without number, requested the respondent Nos. 1 to 3 to fix him in the grade of either Rs. 300-20-400-25-450 or Rs. 250-15-400, the scales of pay allowed to all other employees of the same grade to which the petitioner belonged in the same department as well as other departments of the respondent No. 1. The petitioner submitted memorandum even to the Governor of the State of West Bengal. But nothing was done by the authorities to redress the grievances of the petitioner. By a letter dated 16/20th June, 1970 the Secretary to the Department of Commerce and Industries informed the petitioner that the pay-scale of a particular post should not be considered at that stage and advised the petitioner to await the recommendations of the Pay Commission which had been holding deliberations at that time. By a letter dated June 24, 1970 the petitioner asked the Director of Industries for refixation of his pay as already prayed for but was again by a letter dated 27th July, 1970 asked to wait until the recommendations of the Pay Commission, was submitted.

6. The petitioner moved this Court in its Constitutional writ jurisdiction on September 28, 1970 when rule Nisi was issued in the matter. The petitioner challenges the Rule fixing his revised scale of pay as violative of the provisions of Article 14 on the ground as follows:

7. All employees in his department like the head clerk as well as in other departments who were in the same scale of pay and therefore in the same grade have been allotted scales of pay Rs. 300-450 or Rs. 250-400 but the pay of the petitioner has only been kept in the scale of Rs. 200-10-300. Thus the said rule fixing the said scale for the petitioner only is discriminatory, without any reasonable basis and is violative of the provisions of Article 14 of the Constitution.

8. Formerly there was no Directorate of Cottage and Small Scale Industries under the Government of West Bengal. The Department of Cottage and Small Scale Industries was a part of the Department of Industries. The cashier in the said new Department of the respondent No. 3 is entitled to the scale of Rs. 250-400. The said new department was made separate and distinct in June, 1966 only.

9. In paragraph 35 the petitioner has alleged as follows:—

"35. That your petitioner further states and contends that the said Rules are also equally bad, illegal, mala fide and void inasmuch as by the said Rules a clear path of hostile discrimination and/or differentiation between the self-same grade and/or scales of pay have been opened up under the self-same common employer by the instrumentation of uncontrolled and unguided discretionary power and/or executive whims and arbitrariness in the matter of application of the said Rules, and in particular, the said Rule XI (1) (b), touching upon the fixation of revised pay scale and/or structure. As for instance, the said items Nos. 1, 9 and 14 can be cited in this context, moreover, the said Rules are clearly bad, illegal and void because of violation of the provisions of Art. 14 of the Constitution of India inasmuch as in the self same grades and/or scales of pay 5 different classes have been set up and created by the selfsame employer e.g., items Nos. 1, 9 and 14, the enclosure to the said annexure 'I' and 2 Classes of Head Clerks, all of which were enjoying and posted in the self-same grades and/or scales of pay, similarly and identically situate and placed with your petitioner, as on the 31st March, 1961."

10. It appears from Annexure I to the petition filed herein that all persons in the employ in different departments or offices of the State of West Bengal who were in the pay scale of Rs. 200-5-250 before revision have been allotted and placed in the revised pay scale of Rs. 250-15-400 without any exception save and except the petitioner in the instant case. The petitioner has stated in his petition that all the said employees were and are placed in similar circumstances. The State has not filed any affidavit in opposition to the petition even within the extended periods of time which were successively granted by this Court. Only on the last day of the hearing viz., on 11th June 1971 Mr. Chakraborty appearing on behalf of the State wanted to file an affidavit in opposition. Before that date this matter was part-heard once before me on 21st April, 1971. Even then the State did not want to file any affidavit. In that view of the matter I refused to grant any further indulgence to the State and refused to admit the affidavit sought to be filed by the State.

11. Thus there is no denial to the facts stated in the petition. In particular there is no denial of the fact as stated in the petition that the petitioner and all other employees belonging to the grade of Rs. 200-5-300 and Rs. 200-10-300 prior to April 1961 were placed in similar circumstances and had no difference in between them. It is true that the State has the power of classifying persons for legitimate purposes and on reasonable basis. But here there does not seem to me that any such differentiation exists in between the employees mentioned above enjoying the scales of pay of Rs. 200-5-300 or Rs. 200-10-300 formerly.

12. Mr. Ghosh appearing on behalf of the petitioner cited the decision of the Delhi High Court in Union of India v. Shanti Swaroop, 1969 Lap IC 1265 (1267) (Delhi). But the said case seems to have decided that Number Takers employed by the Railways in its different Divisions were given a scale which was better than one given to the Number Takers employed in the Delhi Division of the Railways. The Number Takers in the Delhi Division of the Railways became entitled to the revised pay scale from 1st January 1947 or 16th August 1947 as per option exercised by them under Rule 6 of the Railways Services (Revision of Pay) Rules 1947. The said Rules were framed under Section 241 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935 and were of statutory character. The same were preserved by Article 313 of the Constitution as the law of the land and applicable to the employees governed by them. The benefits of the revised pay scale under the said statutory Rules were sought to be denied to the Number Takers of the Delhi Division. The denial of the benefits of the said revised scale of pay was held to be discriminatory in the case of the Number Takers of the Delhi Division of the Railways and struck down. It should be noted that in the said case the rights and benefits conferred upon the said employees by the aforesaid Statutory Rules framed under Section 241 (2) of the Government of India Act, 1935 were enforced. In the instant case, also it appears that the applicant has been treated differently from other employees similarly circumstanced without any reasonable basis.

13. In the case of Kishori Mohanlal Bakshi v. Union of India, AIR 1962 SC 1139, it was contended on behalf of Class II Income-tax Officers that there was discrimination in between them and Class I Income-tax Officers in regard to their respective scales of pay even though both the Class I Income-tax officers and Class II Income-tax Officers had to do and in fact did the same kind of work. The said contention was repelled by the Supreme Court with the following observations:—

"The only other contention raised is that there is discrimination between Class I and Class II Officers inasmuch as though they do the same kind of work their pay scales are different. This it is said, violates Article 14 of the Constitution. If this contention had any validity, there could be no incremental scales of pay fixed dependent on the duration of an Officer's service. The abstract doctrine of equal pay for equal work has nothing to do with Art. 14. The contention that Article 14 of the Constitution has been violated, therefore, also fails."

14. But that observation, it seems, was based really on reference to difference in pay scale on the basis of difference in duration of service and does not, in my opinion, apply to the facts and circumstances of the instant case. In the instant case, the employees who were similarly circumstanced and enjoying similar scales of pay have been allotted and fixed in different scales of pay by the aforesaid order. The same seems to be discriminatory and violative of the principles of Art. 14 of the Constitution.

15. The other part of the application which challenges the appointment of respondent No. 4 as the cashier of respondent No. 3 must fail in my opinion. The said appointment was made in June, 1966. At that time the petitioner was removed (although held later as wrongfully removed) and was not acting as the cashier under respondent No. 3. The appointment of respondent No. 4 who was junior to the petitioner at that time as cashier of respondent No. 3 did not militate against the provision of Article 16. The only right of a Government employee is to be considered for promotion. At the time when the respondent No. 4 was appointed as the cashier of respondent No. 3, the petitioner could not be considered for that appointment and the appointment of the respondent No. 4 was not vitiated for not considering the petitioner for that appointment at that time.

16. In the premises, this application must succeed. A writ in the nature of mandamus shall issue commanding the respondent Nos. 1 to 3 and each of them and their servants and agents to place and fix the petitioner in the grade or scale of pay of Rs. 250-15-400. The petitioner shall receive all arrears of pay and other emoluments on the basis of that scale with effect from 28th September, 1967. The Rule is made absolute to the extent as aforesaid. In the facts and circumstances of the case each party shall pay and bear his costs of and incidental to this application.

Application allowed.

A. F. O. D. No. 953 of 1966, D/- 17-9-1971.

(A) West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act (1 of 1954), Ss. 14 (3), 6 — Intermediary — Joint Hindu family — Mitakshara — Joint family as tenure holder in respect of disputed property before vesting — Joint family (not each coparcener) is an "intermediary" under the Act — Joint Hindu family should, therefore, be treated as a single individual or a single unit for the purpose of retention of land and also for compensation under the Act — (X-Ref:— Hindu Law — Joint family — Partition). F. M. A. Nos. 6 and 7 of 1962, D/- 17-1-1969 (Cal) and F. M. A. No. 604 of 1964, D/- 20-1-69 (Cal), Foll. (Para 34)

The position of an execution purchaser cannot be equated with that of a coparcener after vesting of the coparcenary property. (1879) 6 Ind App 88 (PC) and (1877) 4 Ind App 247 (PC) and AIR 1953 SC 487, Ref. (Para 21)

The property in the hands of the Government remains to be coparcenary property, but in another form, that is, in the form of money. (Para 22)

The vesting of coparcenary property under the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act cannot be regarded as effecting a partition of the coparcenary. (Para 29)

A joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu law is a 'person' under the definition of the term as given in Section 3 (42) of the General Clauses Act and a single coparcener out of the body of coparceners constituting the coparcenary cannot be held to be a person or a co-sharer tenant. (Para 30)

Under Section 6 of the Act, no provision has been made for retention of land by the coparceners governed by the mitakshara School of Hindu law. This points to the intention of the legislature that the legislature did not intend to treat each coparcener as an intermediary under the Act. Sub-section (3) of Section 14 clearly indicates that the intermediary for assessment of compensation must have a share in any estate or interest so that he may be treated separately for assessment of compensation. The share referred to in sub-section (3) means a defined share; as the coparcener cannot be said to have a defined share in the coparcenary property, he cannot be treated separately for the purpose of assessment of compensation under sub-section (3) of S. 14. (Para 31)

(B) Hindu Law — Joint family — Mitakshara — Partition.

Partition is a severance of joint status and all that is necessary to constitute partition is a definite and unequivocal indication of the intention of a member of a joint family to separate himself from the family and enjoy his share in severality. But this intention has to be communicated to the other members of the family. AIR 1964 SC 136, Ref. (Para 15)

P. K. Roy and Nihar Ranjan Mujumdar, for Appellants; Hemendra Chandra Sen and B. C. Dutt, for Respondent No. 1.

M. M. DUTT, J.:— This appeal is at the instance of the plaintiffs and arises out of a suit for declaration of title, recovery of possession, permanent injunction and other consequential reliefs. The principal question involved in this appeal is whether each of the coparceners of a Mitakshara Joint Hindu family is an intermediary within the meaning of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, 1953.

2. The plaintiff No. 1 Fatechand Mahesri is the father of the plaintiffs 2, 3 and 4. The plaintiffs Nos. 5 to 10 are the grandsons of the plaintiff No. 1 Fatechand. Plaintiffs Nos. 5 and 6 are the sons of the plaintiff No. 2 Sitaram, plaintiff Nos. 7 to 9 are the sons of plaintiff No. 3 Gouri Sarkar and the plaintiff No. 10 is the son of the plaintiff No. 4 Lakshmi Narayan.

3. The case of the plaintiffs was that the plaintiffs constituted a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law. Fatechand Mahesri was the Karta of the said joint family. The properties described in Schedule 'A' of the plaint were the joint family properties acquired with the ancestral funds. It was alleged that the joint status of Fatechand and his three sons, namely, the plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 was severed on and from April 10, 1946. In view of the said severance each of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 became entitled to 1/4th share in the schedule 'A' properties. Each of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4, however, constituted separate joint family with his sons and continued to live jointly for some time. It was alleged that on April 1, 1955, the sons of Fatechand declared their intention to sever their joint status with their respective sons. There was, therefore, complete severance in status of the members of the joint family constituted by the plaintiffs.

4. After the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act came into force the names of the plaintiffs were not recorded in the Revisional Record of Rights, according to their respective shares. Instead, the name of Fatechand Mahesri was recorded in respect of all the properties. The plaintiffs submitted returns in Form 'B' retaining the khas lands in their respective shares as mentioned in schedule 'B' to the plaint. The plaintiffs were about to retain the khas lands mentioned in 'B' schedule to the plaint in terms of the order dated October, 1959 of the Revenue Officer passed in a proceeding under Section 44 (2a) of the Act. The Revenue Officer also directed opening of khandakhatians in the names of the plaintiffs in respect of the 'B' schedule lands but the Government did not give effect to the order of the Revenue Officer.

5. The plaintiffs claimed that each of the plaintiffs was an intermediary and each of them was entitled to get compensation in respect of the lands of 'A' schedule and that each of them was entitled to retain khas possession of the lands described in schedule 'B'.

6. The plaintiffs have claimed recovery of khas possession of the 'B' schedule lands as the State Government took possession of the said lands and granted licences to different persons. By an application for amendment the plaintiff's got the plaint amended by adding 227 persons as defendants in the suit. They were alleged to be the licensees of the State Government in respect of 'B' schedule lands.

7. The plaintiffs accordingly prayed for declaration of their title to the extent of their respective shares in respect of the lands in suit, a further declaration that the plaintiffs were intermediaries and were entitled to retain the 'B' schedule lands separately according to their claim and title to those lands as raiyats under the State of West Bengal, recovery of khas possession of the 'B' schedule lands and permanent injunction restraining the State of West Bengal from settling the lands of 'B' schedule to any other persons.

8. The suit was contested by the State of West Bengal. It was alleged that the lands mentioned in schedule 'A' were held and possessed by the plaintiff No. 1 and the plaintiff No. 2 as their personal properties and treated as such by them at all material times, that the other plaintiffs never had any right, title or interest in the land in suit and that they never claimed any interest therein before the lands were acquired by the Government as surplus land of the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2. It was denied that there was severance in the joint status of the plaintiffs on April 10, 1946, between the plaintiffs Nos. 1 to 4 or that there was any severance between the plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4 and their respective sons on April 1, 1955 as alleged in the plaint. It appears from the written statement of the defendant No. 1, the State of West Bengal that according to the defendant No. 1 the properties in suit belonged to the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 and not to the joint Hindu family as claimed in the plaint. The defendant No. 1 denied any right of the plaintiffs Nos. 3 to 10 in the properties in suit and alleged that the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 were allowed to retain land in accordance with the ceiling prescribed by the Act and that the rest of the land having vested in the State, the State took possession of the same. The defendant No. 1 denied the plaintiffs' claim for recovery of possession of the 'B' schedule land.

9. The defendant No. 1 filed an additional written statement. In the additional written statement it has been alleged that so long as the coparcenary exists, the coparcenary should be treated as one single intermediary for the purpose of retention of land irrespective of the number of members who may constitute the coparcenary.

10. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the findings that the suit properties standing in the name of the plaintiff No. 1 Fatechand, though originally might have been acquired as his separate properties yet those did subsequently lose that character and became the properties of the joint Hindu family by virtue of waiver of that separate right of the plaintiff No. 1. Therefore, the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is that the suit properties were the coparcenary properties of the joint Hindu family consisting of the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge disbelieved the case of the plaintiffs that there was severance of the joint status or that the coparcenary came to an end either on April 10, 1946 or on April 1, 1955 as alleged by the plaintiffs. On the question whether each of the coparceners was an intermediary or not, the learned Subordinate Judge was of the view that the joint Hindu family should be treated as one unit for the purpose of retention of lands under Section 6 (1) or for the purpose of compensation in respect of the vested lands, under the Act. In that view of the matter, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. Hence this appeal by the plaintiffs.

11. Although the plaintiffs' case was that there had been severance of joint status between Fatechand Mahesri and his sons on April 10, 1946, and thereafter between the sons of Fatechand and their respective sons on April 1, 1955, Mr. Roy, learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the appellants submitted before us that on the materials on record it would be difficult to support the case of severance that was alleged to have taken place on April 1, 1955 between the sons and grandsons of Fatechand. He, however pressed the alleged partition that took place between Fatechand and his sons, the plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and 4.

12. It is well established rule of law that according to true notion of an undivided Mitakshara family, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate of the joint property that he — that particular member — has a certain definite share, one-third or one-fourth. Partition according to that law, consists in a numerical division of the property; in other words, it consists in defining the shares of the coparceners in the joint property; an actual division of the property by metes and bounds is not necessary. Once the shares are defined, whether by an agreement between the parties or otherwise, the partition is complete. After the shares are so defined, the parties may divide the property by metes and bounds, or they may continue to live together and enjoy the property in common as before. But whether they do the one or the other, it affects only the mode of enjoyment, but not the tenure of the property. The property ceases to be joint immediately the shares are defined, and thenceforth the parties hold the property as tenants-in-common (See Mulla's Hindu Law, 13th Edition, Article 322 page 372).

13. In support of his contention Mr. Roy relied upon certain assessment orders passed by the Agriculture Income Tax Officer. These assessment orders are Exhibits 8 to 8 (c) and they relate to the assessment years 1944-45 to 1947-48. In all these assessment orders Fatechand Mahesri has been mentioned as the assessee. In column No. 6 under the item "share, partners/ members with the names and the shares" the names of Fatechand Mahesri and his three sons are mentioned and each one has been shown as having four annas share. In column No. 9 of the assessment order (Exhibit 8 it appears that the Agricultural Income-tax Officer accepted the contention of the assessee that the status of the assessee was that of a firm. From these entries in the assessment orders Mr. Roy contended that there was severance of the joint status between Fatechand Mahesri and his sons even in the year 1944. In any event, it was submitted that it was a clear intention on their part to separate inasmuch as they specified their shares in the joint property in the Agricultural Income Tax assessment proceedings. Attractive though the contention is, we regret that we are unable to accept the same. The plaintiffs have not filed the returns of their agricultural income for the assessment years in respect of which the assessment orders were passed. The plaintiffs have not also filed the Roker Book for the relevant year in which severance of the joint status or partition was alleged to have taken place and also the Roker Books of the subsequent years showing recording of separate shares in the names of Fatechand Mehesri and his sons. None of the plaintiffs examined himself and no explanation was given why none of them was examined. On behalf of the plaintiffs one Chhaganlal Mahesri, the nephew of Fatechand was only examined. Chhaganlal stated in his evidence that the partition took place on April 10, 1946, between Fatechand and his three sons and he averred that in the Roker of all subsequent years the names of the said four persons were noted separately till 1956. As aforesaid, no such Roker was filed and no explanation has been given by Chhaganlal for the non-filing of any such Roker Books. Further, Chhaganlal stated that there was no separation of shares before April 10, 1946. In the plaint also the plaintiffs' case was that there was separation between Fatechand and his sons on April 10, 1946, but if the assessment orders are accepted to be evidence of separation then it must be held that separation between Fatechand and his sons had taken place at least in 1944.

14. The assessment orders do not contain the description of properties in respect of which the agricultural income was assessed on Fatechand and his three sons. It may be that the joint family had no other property excepting the properties in suit. But from that alone it cannot be inferred that the assessment orders relate to the properties in suit as contended by Mr. Roy. In the absence of any evidence on that point, it is very difficult to rely on the evidence of Chhaganlal about the partition alleged to have taken place on April 10, 1946, for, in the year 1959 Chhaganlal swore an affidavit in the writ petition before this Court on behalf of the plaintiffs wherein it was alleged that the plaintiffs were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara School of the Hindu Law.

Fatechand and his sons, is the assessment orders. There is no evidence on record to show who filed the returns. It may be that Fatechand Mahesri whose name appears in all these assessment orders as the assessee filed the returns without the knowledge of his sons. He was the Karta of the joint family and it can very well be presumed that he filed the returns of agricultural income. There is no evidence that his sons were aware of the filing of these returns wherein the shares of Fatechand and his sons were mentioned as four annas each. As already stated, the Roker Books showing the shares of Fatechand and his sons have not been filed. Merely because in the assessment orders the shares of Fatechand and his sons were shown as four annas each, it cannot be held that there was a severance of joint status of Fatechand and his sons in accordance with law. We would, therefore, overrule the contention of Mr. Roy that there was separation between Fatechand and his sons.

16. The next question is whether each of the plaintiffs is an intermediary within the meaning of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, 1953. The learned Subordinate Judge has not accepted the contention of the plaintiffs that each of the plaintiffs is an intermediary and that each one is entitled to retain lands as per ceiling prescribed by the Act. According to the learned Subordinate Judge, if the undivided family of the plaintiffs continued its status as such on the date of vesting of the estate under the Act, then the coparcenary consisting of all the members should be considered as a single individual and entitled to retain land up to the prescribed ceiling as a single individual or intermediary within the meaning of the Act. This view of the learned Subordinate Judge has been challenged by Mr. Roy.

17. Mr. Roy drew our attention to two unreported Bench decisions of this Court in Biswanath Misra v. Asst. Settlement Officer, F. M. A. Nos. 6 and 7 of 1962 disposed of on 17-1-1969 (Cal) (A. N. Ray and A. N. Sen, JJ.) and in Subhakaran Dugar v. State of West Bengal, F. M. A. No. 604 of 1964 disposed of on 20-1-1969 (Cal) (A. N. Ray and Bagchi, JJ.). The judgments in both the cases were delivered by A. N. Ray, J. (as his Lordship then was). In both these cases it has been held that a coparcener is not an intermediary within the meaning of the Act and that it is the collective body of individuals who constitute the coparcenary is regarded as an intermediary. Mr. Roy has, however, challenged the propriety of these two Bench decisions of this Court.

18. The first point that was urged by Mr. Roy is that partition or no partition each coparcener, that is each of the plaintiffs, is an intermediary within the meaning of the West Bengal Estate Acquisition Act. According to him on the date of vesting under the Act, the interest of a coparcener in the coparcenary property becomes certain in the sense, that his share becomes defined as in the case of severance of joint status between the coparceners. As soon as the coparcenary property goes out of the joint family there is disruption of joint status in respect of that property and the share of each coparcener becomes defined. In support of his contention Mr. Roy relied upon the decision of the Privy Council in Suraj Bunsri Koer v. Sheo Proshad Singh, (1879) 6 Ind App 88 (PC). In that case, a suit was instituted by two minor sons of one Adit Sahai for setting aside a sale of joint ancestral property which had been sold in execution of a decree obtained against their deceased father on the ground that the debt was not one for which such property should be made liable. It was held by the Privy Council that the purchaser of undivided property sold in execution of a decree during the life of the debtor for his separate debt, acquires the debtor's interest in such property with the power of ascertaining and realising it by partition. According to their Lordships the proper decree to be passed was an order declaring that, by virtue of the execution sale to them, the purchasers acquired only the one undivided third share in the property with such power of ascertaining the extent of such third part or share by means of partition as Adit Sahai possessed in his lifetime. Mr. Roy strongly relied on the observation of the Privy Council that the purchasers acquired one undivided third share in the property. It was contended by Mr. Roy that as soon as the share of the purchasers was declared, the shares of the other coparceners in the property became defined and that effected a partition of the property and severance of the joint status of the coparceners in respect of that property.

19. The decision in Suraj Bunsri Koer's case, (1879) 6 Ind App 88 (PC) is based on equitable principle. According to the Mitakshara law as administered in Bombay and Madras, a coparcener can alienate his undivided interest in the coparcenary property, but in Bengal and United Provinces, a coparcener has no such right and the alienation will be invalid unless it is made with the consent of all other coparceners. In Suraj Bunsri Koer's case, Sir James Colville after referring to the Mitakshara law as administered in Bombay and Madras observed as follows:—

"There can be little doubt that all such alienations whether voluntary or compulsory, are inconsistent with the strict theory of a joint and undivided Hindu family; and the law as established in Madras and Bombay has been one of gradual growth, founded upon the equity which a purchaser for value has, to be allowed to stand in his vendor's shoes, and to work out his rights by means of a partition."

20. This equitable principle has been incorporated in the Hindu Law for the purpose of safeguarding the interest of a purchaser for value of an undivided share of a coparcener. So far as Bengal is concerned Sir James Colville, after referring to an earlier decision of the Privy Council in Deendyal Lal v. Jugdeep Narain Singh, (1877) 4 Ind App 247 (PC) observed that by that decision

"the law has so far been assimilated to that prevailing in Madras and Bombay, that it has been ruled that the purchaser of undivided property at an execution sale during the life of the debtor for his separate debt, does acquire his share in such property with the power of ascertaining and realizing it by a partition."

In Sidheshwar v. Bhubneshwar, AIR 1953 SC 487, Mukherjea, J. observed as follows:—

"The High Court has held that this claim of the plaintiff must fail. All that he purchased at the execution sale was the undivided interest of the coparceners in the joint property. He did not acquire title to any defined share in the property and was not entitled to joint possession from the date of his purchase. He could work out his rights only by a suit for partition and his right to possession would date from the period when a specific allotment was made in his favour. In our opinion, this is the right view to take
* * * * *

It is apparent from the above observation of the Supreme Court in Sidheshwar's case that the contention of Mr. Roy that an attachment of the undivided share of a member of a Mitakshara joint family during his lifetime operates as a division of interest and causes a severance of status in respect of the property attached, does not find support.

21. Even, assuming that there is such a severance as contended by Mr. Roy, we are of the view that the position of an execution purchaser cannot be equated with that of a coparcener after vesting of the coparcenary property. As already stated the right of the purchaser is founded on equity, but there is no question of any equity in favour of a coparcener.

22. The next point that was argued by Mr. Roy is, that property in the hands of the Government as a result of vesting, loses the character of coparcenary property and consequently, the shares of the coparceners have to be worked out. We are unable to accept this contention. In our view, the property in the hands of the Government remains to be coparcenary property, but in another form, that is, in the form of money. When Government takes possession of the coparcenary property as a result of vesting of the same under the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, the joint family consisting of the coparceners will be entitled to compensation. Thus the property is transformed into money as belonging to the coparcenary.

23. Next it was argued by Mr. Roy that a Joint Hindu family cannot be regarded as a single individual or a person within the meaning of the word 'person' in Section 3 (42) of the General Clauses Act, 1897. Under Section 3 (42) 'person' includes a company or association or body of individuals whether incorporated or not. In the two unreported Bench decisions of this Court referred to above, it has been held that a joint Hindu family is a person within the meaning of the definition of the term in the General Clauses Act.

24. The question whether joint Hindu family is a person or not arises in this way. In the instant case, the Hindu family was a tenure holder in respect of the disputed property. Section 2 (1) of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, 1953, defines the term 'intermediary' as meaning a proprietor, tenure-holder, under tenure-holder or any other intermediary above a raiyat or a non-agricultural tenant and includes a service tenure-holder and, in relation to mines and minerals, includes a lessee and a sub-lessee. The term 'tenure-holder' has not been defined in the Act, but CL (p) of Section 2 provides that expression used in the Act and not otherwise defined having relation to the areas to which the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1855 applies, the same meaning as in that Act. In view of CL (p) the definition of the term 'tenure-holder' as given in the Bengal Tenancy Act will apply. Under sub-sec. (1) of S. 5 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 'tenure-holder' means primarily a person who has acquired from a proprietor or from another tenure-holder a right to hold land for the purpose of collecting rents or bringing it under cultivation by establishing tenants on it, and includes also the successors-in-interest of persons who have acquired such a right. The question, therefore, is whether the joint Hindu family can be said to be a 'person' within the meaning of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There can be no doubt that joint Hindu family is a body of individuals and prima-facie, the definition of the term 'person' under the General Clauses Act applies to the joint Hindu family. It was, however, contended by Mr. Roy that each of the coparceners should be held to be a person, or in other words, each of the coparceners should be regarded as a tenure-holder in respect of the disputed property.

25. Sir Dinshanji Mullah in his Principles of Hindu Law, 13th Edition, Page 244, Art. 216 says as follows:—

"The essence of a coparcenary under the Mitakshara law is unity of ownership. The ownership of the coparcenary property is in the whole body of the coparceners. According to true notion of an undivided family governed by the Mitakshara law, no individual member of that family, whilst it remains undivided, can predicate, of the joint and undivided property, that he, that particular member, has a definite share, one-third or one-fourth. His interest is a fluctuating interest capable of being enlarged by deaths in the family, and liable to be diminished by births in the family. It is only on a partition that he becomes entitled to a definite share."

26. The title to the coparcenary property is one title and that is in the whole body of the coparceners. No coparcener can claim individual ownership in the coparcenary property. The title to the property belongs to the coparcenary consisting of the coparceners. Excepting that each coparcener has an undivided interest in the property which is also fluctuating, and none of the coparceners has any definite share in the coparcenary property. It is only when a partition takes place that the shares of the coparceners become defined and specific. So long partition does not take place the coparceners jointly own the property.

27. It was, however, submitted by Mr. Roy that a coparcener having an interest in the coparcenary property, the collective body of coparceners constituting the coparcenary cannot be said to be a 'person' within the meaning of the General Clauses Act. According to him in order to hold that a collective body of individuals is a person, none of the individuals forming that body should have any interest whatever in the property. Mr. Roy referred to the case of a school committee owning property and submitted that the unity of title as in the case of a coparcenary is not the same unity of title as in the case of the members of the school committee. He makes a distinction between the two cases, namely, in the case of a coparcenary each coparcener has an undivided interest although title to the property is in the whole body of coparceners, but in the case of the members of the school committee no individual member has any interest whatsoever. We are unable to accept the said contention based on the analogy referred to above. The nature of undivided interest of a coparcener in the coparcenary property has been clearly stated in the above passage quoted from Mulla's Hindu Law. There is no authority for the proposition that the definition of the word 'person' in the General Clauses Act will have no application when each of the individuals forming the body of individuals has an undivided interest in the property. The members of the school committee do not hold the property for themselves or for their own interest. They are entrusted with the management of the institution and its properties. That analogy therefore, has no application to the facts and circumstances of the case. We are also unable to accept the contention of Mr. Roy that true unity of title contemplates that none of the individuals forming the group should have any interest. As no coparcener is owner of any specific share of the coparcenary property, and the title to the property being in the whole body of coparceners, we are of the view that there is true unity of title. When each individual of a body of individuals is owner in respect of a specific share in the property, there is no question of unity of title, and such a body of individuals is not a person within the meaning of the definition of the term in the General Clauses Act.

28. Mr. Roy submitted that the true test for ascertaining whether the joint Hindu family is a person or not would depend upon whether the landlord can sue all the coparceners jointly for the purpose of realising arrears of rent. Ordinarily, the Karta of the joint family looks after the affairs of the joint family. The Karta represents the joint family. It is true that the landlord can sue all the coparceners instead of suing the Karta for the purpose of realisation of arrears of rent, but in our view, the test is not that as contended by Mr. Roy. There is no distinction between the case when a Karta is sued as representing the joint family and all the coparceners are sued jointly by the landlord. The true test is whether each coparcener is liable to the landlord for payment of rent in respect of the coparcenary property in terms of Section 146-A (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act which provides that all co-sharer tenants in a tenure or holding or their successors-in-interest are liable to the landlord jointly and severally for the rent payable to such landlord on account of the tenure or holding. The coparceners are joint tenants and not tenants-in-common. The landlord is not entitled to sue a coparcener for arrears of rent in respect of the coparcenary property. A coparcener is not a co-sharer tenant in respect of the tenure or holding. In the case of tenants each having a definite share in the tenancy, each is liable to the landlord for payment of rent under Section 146-A (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but in the case of a joint Hindu family the landlord has either to sue the whole body of the coparceners or to sue the Karta representing the joint family for arrears of rent, for, a coparcener not having any specific share is not individually liable. We are, therefore, unable to accept the test as proposed by Mr. Roy.

29. Lastly it was contended by Mr. Roy that indefiniteness of share of the coparceners could not be a criterion for vesting. According to him, although a coparcener has no definite share till partition takes place, he has undoubtedly an undefined share. There is uncertainty over a period, but at a particular point of time it is certain. It was submitted that on the date of vesting the share of each coparcener can be calculated and thus there will be no difficulty in ascertaining the shares of the coparceners. The shares of the coparceners become defined only on a partition taking place. The vesting of coparcenary property under the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act cannot be regarded as effecting a partition of the coparcenary. There is, therefore, no scope for calculating or ascertaining the shares of the coparceners on the date of vesting.

30. In view of the aforesaid discussion, we hold that a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law is a person under the definition of the term 'person' as given in Section 3 (42) of the General Clauses Act and that a single coparcener out of the body of coparceners constituting the coparcenary cannot be held to be a person or a co-sharer tenant. A coparcener is not an intermediary but it is the joint Hindu family constituting the coparcenary is the intermediary. The view which we take, namely, that a coparcener is not an intermediary finds support on a reference to some of the provisions of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act.

31. Under Section 6 of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, provisions have been made for retention of land by a corporation or an institution established exclusively for a religious or a charitable purpose, co-operative societies, companies etc., but no provision has been made about the coparceners governed by the Mitakshara School of Hindu Law. This points to the intention of the legislature that the legislature did not intend to treat each coparcener as an intermediary under the Act. Under sub-section (3) of Section 14 of the Act, every intermediary who had a share in any estate or interest which has vested in the State under Section 5, shall be treated separately for assessment of compensation. Sub-section (3) clearly indicates that the intermediary must have a share in any estate or interest so that he may be treated separately for assessment of compensation. In our view, the share referred to in sub-section (3) means a defined share. As the coparcener cannot be said to have a defined share in the coparcenary property he cannot be treated separately for the purpose of assessment of compensation under sub-section (3), or in other words a coparcener cannot be held to be an intermediary.

32. Sub-section (1) of S. 7 provides that arrears of land revenue, cesses, taxes and impositions due from any intermediary in respect of his share in any estate which vests in the State under Section 5 shall, after the date of vesting, continue to be recoverable from the intermediary under an order of the Collector by reduction of the amount of such arrears from the money which the intermediary is entitled to receive as compensation under the Act. If it is held that a coparcener is an intermediary, it will be difficult to give effect to Section 7 (i), for the simple reason that the arrears of land revenue, cesses, taxes etc., upto the date of vesting cannot be said to be due from a coparcener but undoubtedly it would be due from the joint family. For the same reason, the provision of Section 8 which deals with recovery by an intermediary of arrears of rent due to him from any person for a period up to the date of vesting, cannot also be given effect to. Under Section 6 (1) of the Act an intermediary is entitled to retain agricultural land in his khas possession not exceeding 25 acres as may be chosen by him. A coparcener cannot claim that he has in his khas possession any specific property belonging to the joint Hindu family. From the above provisions, it is clear that a coparcener is not an intermediary under the Act.

33. Mr. Roy, however, pointed out that certain difficulties would arise in case, it is held that the joint Hindu family is an intermediary. It has been contended that if the Karta of the Mitakshara family refuses to exercise the choice of retention of coparcenary property within permissible limit by submitting returns in Form 'B' on behalf of the joint family the other coparceners who are not intermediaries shall not be entitled to exercise that choice of retention. Similarly, if the Karta dies and the coparceners fail to appoint one of them as the Karta, in that case also the same difficulty will arise. It may be that in certain cases, the coparceners might be put to certain difficulties in the matter of retention of land by the joint Hindu family or in the matter of compensation, but in our opinion, these difficulties taking place on the happening of certain events cannot be taken into consideration in ascertaining whether a coparcener is an intermediary or not.

34. After giving our best consideration in the matter we are of the view that a coparcener is not an intermediary but the collective body of the coparceners constituting the joint Hindu family is an intermediary within the meaning of the West Bengal Estate Acquisition Act. The joint Hindu family should, therefore, be treated as a single individual or a single unit for the purpose of retention of land and also for compensation under the Act.

35. In the result, the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge are affirmed and the appeal is dismissed. But in the peculiar facts and circumstances of the case involving substantial points of law, we do not make any order as to costs in this appeal.

ARUN K. MUKHERJEA, J.: 36. I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

SALIL KUMAR DATTA, J.:— This Rule is directed against an Order No. 87 dated 11-2-1971 passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court Alipore dismissing the application of the petitioner defendant No. 2 dated 29-11-1969. The facts of the case are as follows:—

The plaintiff, Union of India instituted a suit on 21-7-1964 being title suit No. 68 of 1964, renumbered Title Suit No. 78 of 1968 on the allegation that the defendant No. 1 Sk. Munna Mia, a businessman, was found liable on account of income-tax for over Rs. 3.26 lakhs for the assessment years 1946-1947 to 1949-1950. On account of non-payment, four certificate cases were initiated and during the pendency of the certificate proceedings, the defendant No. 1, to defraud the Government of its said dues, transferred by several documents various immoveable properties to a private company, the defendant No. 2, the petitioner before us. This company was formed with his family members, the consideration of the transfers being shares in the said company gifted by the defendant No. 1 to them. The plaintiff accordingly prayed for declaration that the said documents mentioned in the plaint were sham, fraudulent, benami and ineffective in law and the properties therein were liable to be sold in execution of the certificates.

2-3. The defendant No. 2 on service of summons entered appearance and filed its written statement denying that the transfers were sham, fraudulent, benami and ineffective in law. It was stated that the transfers were legal, valid and for consideration and the properties so transferred were not liable to be sold in execution of the certificates.

4. In spite of several attempts, summons of the suit could not be served on the defendant No. 1 but curiously enough the suit was placed on board for peremptory hearing and was ultimately fixed on 1-11-1968 for hearing. On the preceding day i.e. on 31-10-1968 the defendant No. 2 by a petition informed the court that the defendant No. 1 died on 17-12-1967 and accordingly adjournment of hearing of the suit was prayed for.

5. Copy of this application was served on the plaintiff on 8-11-1968 and the plaintiff on the same day filed an application asking for direction on the defendant No. 2 to disclose the names of the heirs of the defendant No. 1 so that it could submit such names of the heirs for their substitution. By order dated 24-2-1969, the court directed the defendant No. 2 to disclose the names of the heirs. On 7-3-1969 the defendant No. 2 filed the petition for keeping in abeyance the said order and also for recording a formal order of abatement. On the said petition, on 3-4-1969, the court passed the following order:—

"As the defendant No. 1 has died on 17-12-1967, the suit do abate....."

6. On 3-4-1969, the plaintiff filed a petition under Order 22, Rules 4 and 9 and Section 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, in continuation of its earlier petition, for setting aside abatement and for substitution of one Sk. Abbasuddin, a son of Defendant No. 1, the only heir the plaintiff stated it could find out after diligent enquiry, as the defendant No. 2 did not supply any names. On 30-4-1969, a similar application for substitution of Sk. Abbasuddin was filed by the plaintiff. On the said petition, Misc. Case No. 32 of 1969 was registered. This application was opposed by the defendant No. 2 who filed a written objection on 28-8-1969. It was contended therein that the suit could not proceed without the heirs of defendant No. 1, so that in absence of his substitution the suit abated as a whole. The legal effect was, it was contended, the abatement of the suit against the defendant No. 1 and the dismissal of suit against the defendant No. 2. On 29-11-1969, the defendant No. 2 filed another petition stating again that the legal effect of order dated 3-4-1969 was that the suit abated against the defendant No. 1 and was dismissed against the defendant No. 2. It accordingly prayed for an order directing that the suit stood dismissed against the defendant No. 2 with effect from 3-4-1969.

7. The Misc. Case was heard on evidence when the plaintiff produced one witness in support of its case. After hearing the parties the Court by order dated 20-2-1970 held that the plaintiff was prevented by sufficient cause from making a prayer for substitution in time. The Misc. Case was allowed on contest and the abatement as against defendant No. 1 was set aside. The court directed the plaintiff to take step for substitution of the defendant No. 1 overlooking that the plaintiff had earlier prayed for substitution of Sk. Abbasuddin on earlier occasions as stated above. The plaintiff thereafter filed an application on 6-3-1970 for a direction on the defendant No. 2 to disclose the names of the heirs of the deceased defendant No. 1 and also praying for substitution of Sk. Abbasuddin traced so far as his heir. On 18-11-1970 the defendant No. 2 filed an application praying for postponement of direction on it for disclosing the names of the heirs of the deceased defendant No. 1 before its petition of 29-11-1969 was disposed of.

8. By Order No. 87 dated 11-2-1971, the Court rejected the said application and it was observed inter alia:

".....if within time allowed by law no application is made under sub-rule (Rule 4), the suit shall abate against the deceased defendant. In absence of the defendant No. 1, the suit could not proceed at all. Hence the entire suit abated. It cannot be said that the order of abatement should be treated as an order of dismissal as against the defendant No. 2. In this suit the plaintiff challenges the transfers made by the defendant No. 1 in favour of defendant No. 2. There has been an allegation of fraud. I am unable to hold that in absence of legal representative of defendant No. 1 the suit can proceed against the defendant No. 2. It should be presumed that the order of abatement as against the defendant No. 1 was as a matter of fact an order of abatement against the defendant No. 2. The plaintiff's right to proceed with the suit as against the defendant No. 2 was suspended till the abatement was set aside. As soon as the abatement has been set aside the plaintiff has right to proceed with the suit against the legal representatives of the defendant No. 1 and also against the defendant No. 2. In these circumstances the petition of the defendant No. 2 is without any substance. Ordered that the petition of the defendant No. 2 dated 29-11-1969 be dismissed on contest with cost. The defendant No. 2 is directed to disclose the names of the heirs of deceased defendant No. 1 by 6-3-1971. Sk. Abbasuddin as mentioned in the plaintiff's application dated 6-3-1970 be substituted in place of the deceased defendant No. 1. Amend the plaint and register"

The present rule, as we have already stated, is against this order.

9. Mr. Manindra Nath Ghosh, the learned Advocate for the petitioner, contends that the order of 3-4-1969 to the effect that "the suit do abate" meant the dismissal of the suit against the defendant No. 2 by reason of the abatement thereof against the defendant No. 1. Though the words "abatement of the suit" have often been loosely used they have meant consistently in all judicial decisions, as in common parlance, a dismissal of the suit against the surviving defendants. Reliance was placed on the decisions in Lilawati Bai v. Gangadhar, AIR 1953 Nag 12 and Ananga Bhushan v. Uchhab Sahu, AIR 1955 Orissa 179. On the death of a party in either of the cases it was held in the facts of the cases that the appeals abated as a whole. The order of dismissal in the present case not having been set aside the court erred in holding that by setting aside abatement of the suit against the defendant No. 1 and substitution of his heir, there was also a restoration of the suit against the defendant No. 2. The order setting aside abatement did not, as it could not, set aside the order of dismissal of the suit against the defendant No. 2 and accordingly the court's direction on the defendant No. 2 to disclose the names of the heirs of the defendant No. 1 was without jurisdiction.

10. Mr. Balai Lal Pal, the learned Advocate for the plaintiff opposite party, has disputed the above contention and contends that the court on facts found that there was sufficient cause on the part of the plaintiff for not applying for substitution in time. This Order No. 73 dated 20-2-1970 setting aside abatement became final and binding as it was not assailed and could not be challenged in revision as was held in Manindra Land and Building Corporation Ltd. v. Bhutnath Banerjee, AIR 1964 SC 1336, while no appeal lay against such order. After this order was passed, under Rule 9, Order 22, the court was required to proceed with the suit against the substituted heir of defendant No. 1 and also defendant No. 2. Further the order regarding abatement did not either expressly or impliedly mean a dismissal of the suit against the defendant No. 2.

11. It is obvious that the order that could be passed in the event of death of one of the defendants was one under Order 22, Rule 4. The Rule inter alia provides that in cases where there are more than one defendant and the right to sue does not survive against the surviving defendants alone, if no application for making the legal representatives a party to the suit is made in time, the court shall record that the suit shall abate against the deceased defendant. There can be no abatement of a suit under this rule against an existing defendant and order of abatement of the suit can only be passed against a deceased defendant under the said rule. Accordingly the order of abatement of the suit that was passed in the present case was and could be only against the deceased defendant No. 1 but there could be no order of abatement of the suit against the defendant No. 2 which is an existing company. After the abatement of the suit against a deceased defendant is recorded the court will have to consider the position if the reliefs prayed for in the suit could be granted either wholly or partly against the other defendants in absence of the heirs of the deceased defendant who have not been made parties to the suit. If the reliefs claimed in the suit or any of them cannot be granted in their absence for some reason or other, the court will hold that the suit is incompetent and pass an order of dismissal of the suit against the surviving defendants. Such order must be an express or appropriate order of dismissal and cannot be inferred from an order merely recording abatement of the suit which in law necessarily refers to the deceased defendant. In the present case there is nothing in the order recording abatement that the court considered the position of the suit after this abatement against the defendant No. 1 and accordingly it cannot be said that there was an order of dismissal of the suit against the defendant No. 2 by merely recording an abatement of the suit.

12. Mr. Ghosh's contention is also that the word "abatement" is often loosely used by courts and in common parlance it would mean dismissal of the suit as held in the Nagpur and Orissa cases referred to above. In the Nagpur case cited above, the court was considering if in spite of abatement of an appeal against one of the appellants, the other appellants could proceed with the appeal under provisions of Rule 4 of Order 41 as contended. While negating the said contention, the court also laid down the principle that if a decree cannot be passed without interfering with the interest of others or if the decree to be passed is inexecutable by reason of the fact that decree in favour of the deceased respondent has become final as a consequence of partial abatement, the suit or appeal as the case may be, will abate as a whole. It may also be noted that on the facts the Orissa High Court came to the express finding that it could not proceed with the appeal in view of the partial abatement caused by the death of one of the respondents and accordingly recorded that the appeal as a whole abated. In the case of the State of Punjab v. Nathu Ram, AIR 1962 SC 89, the Supreme Court observed:

".....when Order 22, Rule 4 does not provide for the abatement of appeals against the co-respondents of the deceased respondent there can be no question of abatement of appeals against them. To say that the appeals against them abated in certain circumstances is not a correct statement. Of course, the appeals against them cannot proceed in certain circumstances and have therefore to be dismissed. Such a result depends on the nature of relief sought in the appeal."

In Union of India v. Shree Ram Bohra, AIR 1965 SC 1531 it was observed that in case of a joint and indivisible decree in favour of the two plaintiffs respondents, when one plaintiff died and his legal representatives are not impleaded in time the appeal against them abates and the appeal against the other plaintiff cannot be proceeded with and becomes incompetent.

13. On the same principle which also applies to this suit it cannot be said by merely recording abatement of the suit under Order 22, Rule 4 the court also ordered the dismissal of the suit against the other defendant. Even if in some cases the words "abatement of the suit" are used, it cannot be said that the court also intended thereby the dismissal of the suit against the surviving defendant in absence of any discussion showing consideration of the position of the suit consequent on the non-substitution of the legal representatives of the deceased defendant in time. We are, therefore, unable to agree that the court intended to pass or did pass an order of dismissal of the suit against the defendant No. 2 or that such was the legal effect of the order regarding abatement. It may be noted that in appropriate cases after abatement is recorded, when the court is of opinion that the suit or appeal has become incompetent against other parties as a result whereof the suit or appeal fails, the court may pass an order of its dismissal. When in such cases the abatement against the deceased party is set aside the court may have also to pass an order restoring the suit against the surviving defendants or respondents after setting aside the order of dismissal of the suit or appeal, may be under Section 151. That situation, as we have already noticed, did not arise in this case in absence of any order of dismissal of the suit against the defendant No. 2. In absence of any express or implied order of dismissal or any finding about the incompetence of the suit on a consideration of the defect of parties following its abatement against the defendant No. 1, we are unable to hold that the court intended or even meant impliedly or expressly a dismissal of the suit itself against the defendant No. 2 which has thus been pending all through in respect of the said defendant. For the above reasons the order impugned in this rule has to be upheld.

14. In passing we must also observe that we do not subscribe to the observation of the learned Judge that the order of abatement against defendant No. 1 is also to be presumed against the defendant No. 2 or that the right of the plaintiff to proceed with the suit against the defendant No. 2 was suspended till abatement was set aside. The position seems to be that on the death of the party the law allows a time limit of 90 days for making an application for substitution and during this period it would be improper for the court to pass any order decreeing or dismissing the suit as was observed in Md. Ali v. Allaha Ditta, AIR 1931 Lah 73. It was observed in that case that during this period the suit is in a state of suspense when no order except merely formal or procedural order can be passed in the suit and that the state of suspense by lapse of time merges into abatement after the expiry of the time prescribed. That however does not mean that the plaintiff's right to proceed with the suit against the defendant No. 2 is suspended till the abatement of the suit against the defendant No. 1 is set aside and after the abatement is set aside the plaintiff's right to proceed with against the heirs of the defendant No. 1 as also the defendant No. 2 comes into life. This proposition is, as we have seen, untenable in law.

15. Mr. Pal lastly made another contention that the present application in revision is not maintainable as the High Court's power under Section 115 is confined to an erroneous assumption of jurisdiction or erroneous failure to exercise jurisdiction or the exercise of jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity as was observed in Pandurang Dhondi v. Maruti Hari Jadhav, AIR 1966 SC 153. It was contended that none of these tests laid down are present in the instant case and accordingly this court is not entitled to interfere with the order which does not touch the jurisdiction of the trial court to pass such order. This contention appears to us to be untenable in the present case as according to the petitioner if there has been a dismissal of the suit against the defendant No. 2 as contended the trial court thereafter had no further jurisdiction to pass any direction on the defendant No. 2 to disclose the names of the heirs of the defendant No. 1.

16. However, for the reasons given above, this rule has to be and is discharged and in the circumstances of the case there would be no order as to costs.

17. Let the records be returned to the trial court as early as possible.

MITRA, J.:— 18. I agree.

Where a proceeding for probate was instituted before the commencement of the Ordinance but the application for probate was registered after the Ordinance had come into operation, the quantum of Court-fees payable in respect of this proceeding was not governed by the Proviso to Sch. 2, Article 1, Clause (g) of the Ordinance of 1969 but by the Court-fees Act 1870.

He is entitled to the benefit of Section 50 (2) of the Ordinance. To determine the question, Section 295 of the Succession Act has to be relied on, according to which the proceeding for probate is continued as a suit in accordance with the provisions of the Civil P. C. when objection is raised to the grant of a probate. The registration of a contentious cause as a suit is an administrative act by the court concerned. It gives effect to the provisions of Section 295 of the Succession Act. In the instant case, the proceeding for probate was therefore commenced before the Ordinance. SANKAR PRASAD MITRA, J.:—
 This is an application under Section 115

of the Code. By Rule obtained on the 3rd May, 1971, the petitioner assails an order of the District Judge, 24 Parganas being order No. 4 dated 12-1-1971, in O. S. No. 47 of 1970 (Mrs. Salila Chandra v. Rev. Hiran Kumar Gupta). It appears that the petitioner made an application for probate in respect of the estate of one Miss Salila Ghosh alias Miss S. Ghosh in the Court of the District Delegate on the 27th September, 1969. After this application was made the West Bengal Court-fees Ordinance, 1969 (West Bengal Ordinance No. XVII of 1969) was promulgated on the 15th December, 1969. Section 50 (2) of this Ordinance was as follows:

"All suits and proceedings instituted before the commencement of this Ordinance and all proceedings by way of appeal, revision or otherwise arising therefrom whether instituted before or after such commencement shall, notwithstanding the repeal of the Court-fees Act, 1870, be governed by the provisions of the said Act and the rules made thereunder."

2. In January, 1970, the West Bengal Court-fees (Amendment) Act, 1970, came into force incorporating the provisions of said Ordinance. On the 24th March, 1970, the opposite party appeared in the probate proceeding. On August 20, 1970, the opposite party filed objections and on the 11th November, 1970, the probate proceeding was registered as a suit.

3. The question that arises for our consideration is whether the quantum of Court-fees payable in respect of this proceeding shall be governed by the Court-fees Act, 1870 or by the Ordinance of 1969 and the subsequent Act validating the Ordinance. Under the 1870 Act for a petition of this nature an initial court-fee of Rs. -/12/- ans. or 75 paise was payable which the applicant in the instant case had paid. But under the proviso to Schedule II, Article 1, Cl. (g) of the Ordinance of 1969, certain changes were made. The proviso runs thus:—

"Provided that if a caveat is entered and the application is registered as a suit, one-half the scale of fee prescribed in Article 1 of Schedule 1 on the market value of the estate less the fee already paid on the application shall be levied."

4. The District Judge has asked the applicant to pay the balance of the court-fees in accordance with this proviso. The applicant claims exemption under sub-section (2) of Section 50 of the Ordinance.

5. The proceeding for probate in the instant case was instituted before the commencement of the Ordinance. But the application for probate was registered as a suit after the Ordinance had come into operation. The District Judge seems to think that since the suit was registered after the Ordinance came into force, court-fees in accordance with the above proviso should be levied. In our opinion, to determine the questions raised in this matter one has to rely on the provisions of Section 295 of the Indian Succession Act. This section runs thus:—

"In any case before the District Judge in which there is contention, the proceeding shall take, as nearly as may be, the form of a regular suit, according to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, in which the petitioner for probate or letters of administration, as the case may be, shall be the plaintiff, and the person who has appeared to oppose the grant shall be the defendant."

6. This section, therefore, lays down that a proceeding for probate takes the form of a suit when there is a contention. In other words, the proceeding for probate is continued as a suit in accordance with the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code when objection is raised to the grant of a probate. The registration of a contentious cause as a suit is an administrative act by the court concerned. It gives effect to the provisions of Section 295 of the Indian Succession Act. In the instant case, the proceeding for probate was commenced before the Ordinance. And in our view, the petitioner is entitled to the benefit of Section 50 (2) of the Ordinance.

7. Our interpretation, incidentally, of Section 295 of the Indian Succession Act finds support in the decisions in AIR 1914 Cal 523; ILR 50 All 238 = (AIR 1928 All 51); AIR 1956 Raj 119 and (1909) ILR 33 Bom 256. In these premises, the said order of the District Judge of 24 Parganas cannot be sustained.

8. It was argued before us that the proviso referred to above is attracted when (a) caveat has been entered, (b) there is a contention after the probate proceeding has been launched and (c) the proceeding takes the form of a regular suit and is registered as such. It has been argued further that a fiscal enactment must be strictly construed, and in the event of any doubt, construed, in favour of the subject. As we have already given our decision on the basis of the provisions of Section 295 of the Indian Succession Act, we do not propose to deal with this argument in this judgment although they deserve due consideration.

9. In deciding this matter we gave notice to the learned Senior Government Pleader and he has made submissions contrary to those of the petitioner but we are unable to accept them.

10. In the result the Rule is made absolute. Order No. 4 dated 12-1-1971 in O. S. No. 47/70 passed by the District Judge, 24 Parganas, Alipore is set aside. The records would now be sent to the trial Court which would proceed according to law. There will be no order for costs.

S. K. DATTA, J.:— 11. I agree.
Rule made absolute.

M. S. Ram Singh, Defendant-Appellant v. Bijoy Singh Surana and another, Plaintiff-Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 9 of 1971,
D/- 17-12-1971.

(A) Transfer of Property Act (1882), Section 115 — Surrender of lease by lessee — Lessee's interest in lease is extinguished — Under-lessee becomes lessee directly under lessor by operation of statute and not by devolution of lessee's interest on lessor.

Surrender in law is the yielding up by the lessee of his interest in the lease and it thereby brings in extinction to the lease, so that the relationship of the parties to the lease comes to an end. There is no subsisting interest of the lessee after its extinguishment by surrender, which can devolve or come on the lessor. Thereafter the under-lessee becomes a lessee directly under the lessor with all incidents of his sub lease and such relationship comes into existence under the operation of the statute, on surrender of the head lease and not by devolution or assignment by the lessee of his interest. (Para 9)

(B) Civil Procedure Code (1908), O. 22, R. 10 — Continuation of suit by plaintiffs' assignee — Suit for ejectment by lessee against under-lessee. During pendency of suit lessee surrendering lease to lessor — Lease given to new lessee — New Lessee cannot continue suit instituted by original lessee.

Where during pendency of a suit for ejectment by lessee against under lessee, the lessee surrendered the lease to the lessor who gave it to a new lessee who wanted to be substituted as the plaintiff.

Held no interest of the original plaintiff lessee devolved on the lessor on surrender and through him to the substituted plaintiff so as to enable him to continue the ejectment suit as by the surrender the interest of the lessee became extinct and there was no interest in existence which could devolve on the lessor and through him to the substituted plaintiff. The suit therefore was not maintainable by him. (Para 11)

(C) Civil Procedure Code (1908), O. 22, R. 10 — Continuation of suit by substituted plaintiff — Surrender of lease by lessee during pendency of suit for ejectment by him against under lessee — Lease given to new lessee who wanted to continue suit as substituted plaintiff — Substituted plaintiff cannot have carriage of suit in absence of pleading as to surrender — He must affirmatively prove that he is rightful owner entitled to possession. Ranjit Kumar Banerjee, Rama Prasanna Bagchi, Bachittar Singh, Snehansu Sekareswar Roy, for Appellant; Hirendra Chundur Ghosh, Gautam Prasad Chatterjee, Samindra Chandra Ghosh, for Respondents.

SALIL KUMAR DATTA, J.:— This is an appeal by the tenant defendant under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. The suit was dismissed by the learned Judge, Third Bench, City Civil Court, Calcutta. On appeal Chittatosh Mookerjee, J. set aside the judgment and decree under appeal and decreed the suit.

2. The case in the plaint is as follows: The defendant was a monthly tenant under the plaintiff Oswal Jain & Co., in respect of certain rooms and one kitchen in the fifth floor of premises No. 7/1C, Lindsay Street, Calcutta (described in the schedule to the plaint and hereinafter referred to as the suit premises) at a monthly rent of Rs. 223.84p, the tenancy being according to English calendar month. The tenancy was determined by notice to quit, duly served on the defendant, with expiry of September, 1961. It was alleged that the defendant had sub-let his tenancy without the previous consent in writing of the plaintiff and as such was not entitled to any protection under the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956. The suit was accordingly instituted on December 7, 1961 claiming a decree for recovery of possession of the suit premises.

3. The suit was contested by the defendant who filed a written statement contending inter alia that the plaint was vague and misleading in material particulars and did not disclose any cause of action. It was further alleged that there were two sub-tenants since before the 1956 Act with the knowledge and consent of the landlord. The legality, validity and sufficiency of the notice and its service were also challenged. The defendant in the premises submitted that the suit should be dismissed.

4. The suit proceeded in its course and the following issues were framed by the Court on April 2, 1962.

1. Has the tenancy been determined by notice to quit?

2. Has the defendant sub-let, assigned or transferred his tenancy with consent in writing?

3. Is the plaintiff entitled to a decree for recovery of possession?

4. To what reliefs, if any, the plaintiff is entitled?

On June 28, 1963, Smt. Sukhdevi Kumari Surana filed an application stating that the plaintiff was the lessee of the premises No. 7/10, Lindsay Street, Calcutta under the owners, the Trustees to the Estate of Seth Mannalalji Surana Memorial Trust. The plaintiff surrendered his lease with all its existing right on May 15, 1963 and after surrender, the Trustees had leased out the premises to the applicant with right to continue the present suit. In the circumstances the applicant prayed for being substituted in the place of the plaintiff. The application was heard on July 5, 1963 when the defendant contended, as it appears from the order sheet of the suit, that in view of the documents the applicant had not the carriage of the suit although she might be the legal owner of the leasehold property. The trial court on the said date allowed the application without prejudice to the merits of the cases of the parties. The plaint was directed to be amended and was amended recording only that Sm. Sukhdevi Kumari Surana was substituted in place of the original plaintiff, as prayed for by her in her said application. An additional written statement was filed by the defendant after the amendment wherein he contended that the suit was not maintainable by the present plaintiff nor had she the right to proceed with the suit and further there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties. Two additional issues were thereafter framed by the court as follows:

5. Is there any relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties?

6. Has the substituted plaintiff right to continue the suit?

5. The suit was tried on evidence along with another ejectment suit between the parties when inter alia, an unregistered deed of surrender dated May 15, 1963 and a registered lease dated July 2, 1963, were proved by the plaintiff's only witness and marked exhibits 7 and 6 respectively. The trial court held that there had been sub-letting as alleged in the plaint and notices were legal and valid and duly served. It was further held that the substituted plaintiff became landlord of the defendant in view of the documents, but as the deed of surrender was not registered it could not affect any immoveable property nor be received in evidence affecting such property. There was thus no assignment, creation or devolution of right to continue the suit within the meaning of Order 22, Rule 10 of the Code. The substituted plaintiff could not thus ask for decree on the basis of the notice served by the original plaintiff nor had she the right to continue the suit. It was also held that it was doubtful whether the relationship of landlord and tenant could be established between the substituted landlord and the statutory tenant. The suits, heard analogously, for the same reasons were dismissed.

6. Appeals were preferred in this Court against the said decrees by the substituted plaintiff and were heard analogously before Chittatosh Mookerjee, J. It was found by Mookerjee, J., that the original plaintiff was a monthly tenant and had admittedly yielded up the estate held by it in favour of the trustees. The said surrender was accepted and acted upon by the tenant and the landlord and it was not open to the defendant to dispute it. It was further held that by the surrender of the original plaintiff followed by the creation of a new lease in favour of the substituted plaintiff, there was a creation of interest in her favour within the meaning of Order 22, Rule 10. Accordingly she was entitled to be brought on record and to proceed with the suits. The finding of the trial Judge to the contrary, on the face of his finding that the substituted plaintiff became the landlord of the defendant by operation of law, was contradictory and untenable. The contention of the defendant that the transferee of the legal representative who was never brought on record, was not entitled to apply under Order 22, Rule 10 was not accepted. On the authority of Anil Chandra v. Gopinath, AIR 1950 Cal 376, it was held that such transferee as the substituted plaintiff in the present case, could be brought on record under Section 146. Bringing the trustees on record and thereafter the substituted plaintiff would be a pointless formality and there was no illegality in straight-way substituting the present plaintiff who was entitled to proceed with the suit. It was also held in this case that the defendant sublet the suit premises without consent in writing of the landlord and was not entitled to any protection. The suit was accordingly decreed while the other suit was dismissed as the ground for eviction was not established. The present appeal, by the tenant, arises from the judgment and decree passed against him as stated above.

7. Mr. Ranjit Kumar Banerjee, the learned Advocate for the tenant appellant, has raised several contentions assailing the judgment under appeal. His first contention is that the substituted plaintiff is not entitled to continue the suit. The right to continue the suit is claimed on the basis of a surrender by the original plaintiff of his interest to his landlord and subsequent lease of the suit premises to the substituted plaintiff. Even if there was a surrender, it was an extinguishment or effacement of the interest of the original plaintiff as lessee. As such interest is wiped out, the lessor acquired no interest through the lessee as his legal representative nor was there any devolution or transfer of the interest of lessee to the lessor. By the surrender, however, the underlessee is brought under immediate relation with the lessor with the same incidents of tenancy under Section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act. Reliance was placed on the decision in Ram Churn Singh v. Ranigunge Coal Association Ltd., 25 Ind App 210 at p. 217 (PC), wherein surrender by a lessee was held to be a complete extinguishment of the interest of the lessee. Reliance was also placed on the decision in Vytla (Sitanna) v. Marivada Viranna, 61 Ind App 200 at p. 207 = AIR 1934 PC 105 at p. 108 in which the Privy Council observed that the basis of the doctrine of surrender is the effacement of the widow's interest and not the ex facie transfer by which such effacement is brought about. Following this decision in Mummareddi Nagi Reddi v. Pitti Durairaja Naidu, AIR 1952 SC 109 at p. 111, it was observed that the basic principle upon which the doctrine rests is the self effacement by the widow or withdrawal of her life estate which opens the estate of the deceased husband to his next heirs at that date. In the case of lease, by surrender no interest of the lessee came on the lessor as it was effaced or extinguished while the underlessee is thereby brought under immediate relation with the lessor under Section 115 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882.

8. Mr. Hirendra Chunder Ghosh, the learned Advocate for the substituted plaintiff, the respondent before us, referred to Section 111 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 which provides as follows:

Sec. 111. Determination of lease — A lease of immoveable property determines

..... (e) by express surrender; that is to say in case the lessee yields up his interest under the lease to the lessor, by mutual agreement between them....."

Mr. Ghosh contends that surrender is not a complete extinction of the interest of the lessee, as the underlease is kept alive by Section 115 and the lessor steps into the shoes of the lessee as landlord in so far as the underlessee is concerned, who on surrender holds the same tenancy under the lessor. It is thus really a devolution or assignment of interest, as consequence of surrender under the statute, of the lessee's interest to the lessor in respect of the tenancy, attracting Order 22, Rule 10 of the Code. By the new lease to the substituted plaintiff, the lessor creates an intermediary interest between himself and the underlessee, upgraded by the surrender, to the status of a lessee, so that the substituted plaintiff claiming under the lessor could continue the proceedings in the same manner as the lessor could and there could be no dispute that the lessor in whom the interest of the original plaintiff devolved, was entitled to continue the suit in his name in view of the surrender. By the combined operation of Order 22, Rule 10 and Section 146, the suit in any event could be continued by the substituted plaintiff.

9. Surrender, under the statute, is the yielding up by the lessee of his interest to the lessor. In Woodfall's 'Landlord and Tenant' Twenty Seventh Edition Vol. I pages 860-1, while considering surrender by express terms it is observed in Article 1854.

"A surrender is the yielding up of an estate for life or years to him who has the immediate estate in reversion or remainder wherein the estate for life or years may merge by mutual agreement It differs from a release in this respect, that the release operates by the greater estate descending upon the less, whereas a surrender is the falling of a less estate into a greater."

Further in Article 1859, stating the requisites of a good surrender it is observed again.

"That the surrenderee has a higher and greater estate in the thing surrendered than the surrenderor hath, so that the estate of the surrenderor may be drowned therein."

The Privy Council in Ram Churn Singh, 25 Ind App 210 (PC) (supra) observed:

"The right of relinquishment is a privilege given to the tenants, by means of which they may restrict the lease and establish their tenure upon a new basis, or may extinguish the lease altogether."

It will thus appear that the surrender in law is the yielding up by the lessee of his interest in the lease and it thereby brings an extinction to the lease, so that the relationship of the parties to the lease comes to end. There is thus no subsisting interest of the lessee after its extinguishment by surrender, which may devolve or come on the lessor. If it were a question of devolution of interest of the lessee unto the lessor, the legal underlessee will automatically be the lessees immediately under the lessor.

This is however not so, and as otherwise the interest of the underlessee will determine with the determination of the original lease, the underlessee is given statutory protection of his interest under his new landlord, the lessor, on the same terms and conditions of his original tenancy. It is obvious therefore the underlessee becomes a lessee directly under the lessor with all incidents of his sub-lease and such relationship comes into existence under the operation of the statute, or surrender of the head lease and not by devolution or assignment by the lessee of his interest in the lessor.

10. It will be of interest to note that the reversion to which the lessor becomes entitled by surrender in respect of the underlease upgraded to the direct lease under him, is not the reversion on the underlease to which the lessee was entitled before surrender. As was observed in Hill and Redman's "Law of Landlord and Tenant" (15th Edition) Article 386 page 508.

"Surrender of the term does not destroy the right of the underlessees. As regards them, and as regards third parties generally, the surrender operates only as a grant subject to their rights and the term is treated as continuing so far as is required for preservation of such rights. This principle makes it necessary to provide for the substitution of a new reversion for the leasehold reversion has been surrendered and also, in the case of a surrender and renewal for the validity of the renewed lease as against the underlessees. Under the Law of Property Act, 1925 (Section 139), the estate of the head lessor is deemed to be the reversion on the underlease to the extent and for the purpose of preserving such incidents to and obligations on the surrendered leasehold reversion as, but for the surrender thereof, would have subsisted."

Under Section 115 of Transfer of Property Act, a substituted reversion on the underlease in place of its reversion to the lease has been provided in favour of the lessor as the lessor has been made entitled to the rent and benefits of contracts binding on the underlessee, on surrender of the lease by the lessee. It is a reversion created by statute and not the reversion to the lease which became extinct on surrender.

11. There is thus no escape from the conclusion that no interest of the original plaintiff-lessee devolved on the lessor, and it was accordingly not competent for the lessor to continue the pending ejectment suit instituted by the lessee against the underlessee. There can be no dispute that the lessor, on surrender, has become by operation of law the lessor of the underlessee now upgraded as lessee with the same terms and conditions as the original lease and such right carries with it the right to institute suit of eviction by the lessor against such underlessee. The lessor can carve out his interest as lessor of this lease in favour of some one as was done in favour of the substituted plaintiff, who, in turn, will be entitled to sue in ejectment on determination of this lease in a regular manner. Such interest again will be an independent and separate interest altogether created in favour of the intermediate lessee. That however does not mean that the lessee's interest devolved on the lessor and through him to the substituted plaintiff so as to enable her to continue the ejectment suit. As we have seen by the surrender the interest of the lessee became extinct and there was thus no interest in existence which could devolve on the lessor and through him to the substituted plaintiff. The suit accordingly is not maintainable by the substituted plaintiff.

12. Mr. Ghosh contended that the surrender was accepted and acted upon and the defendant as underlessee had no concern or right to challenge such surrender. On such surrender, accepted and acted upon the lessor, the Trustee, became entitled to the interest of the lessee and by the subsequent lease in favour of the substituted plaintiff, there was a creation of intermediary interest in her favour, so that she was entitled to be brought on record and entitled to proceed with the suit. This contention found favour with the first appellate court while decreeing the suit. As already seen, the position in law is that by surrender, the interest of the lessee is completely obliterated, so that no interest of the lessee subsists after surrender. The said lessor on surrender by operation of law becomes the immediate landlord of the defendant and by the new lease, the substituted plaintiff in turn becomes such landlord in respect of the tenancy, which needs be determined before the suit for eviction could be instituted by the intermediary lessee. It has been observed in Foa's "General Law of Landlord and Tenant" (8th Edition) Art. 1001 (page 639) as follows:—

"Art. 1001. Position of underlessee—Underlessees not being parties or privies to the lease, their rights are not disturbed by the surrender of the lessee's interest.

Hence, where the lessee underlets a portion of the demised premises and afterwards surrenders his lease to the lessor, the latter cannot dispossess the underlessee without determining his interest in a regular manner"

There is accordingly nothing contradictory in the finding of the trial court that though the substituted plaintiff had become the landlord of the defendant, she is not entitled to proceed with the suit as the interest of the original plaintiff was destroyed by surrender and no interest devolved on the lessor and through him, to the substituted plaintiff.

13. Mr. Banerjee contended that in view of the position in law there was no scope for the substituted plaintiff to be brought on record in place of the original plaintiff either under O. 22, R. 10 or Section 146 of the Code of Civil Procedure or by the combined operation of the said provisions. Mr. Ghosh on the other hand contended that there was first a devolution of interest of the lessee in favour of the lessor, the Trustees. Accordingly the substituted plaintiff was entitled to have the carriage of the suit claiming through the lessor. Both parties referred to the decision in Sm. Saila Bala v. Sm. Nirmala Sundari, AIR 1958 SC 394, where the Supreme Court in construing Section 146, observed:—

"That section was introduced for the first time in the Civil P. C. 1908 with the object of facilitating the exercise of rights by persons in whom they come to be vested by devolution or assignment and being a beneficent provision should be construed liberally and so as to advance justice and not in a restricted or technical sense."

Mr. Ghosh also relied on the decision in AIR 1950 Cal 376 (supra) which laid down that under Section 146, an application or proceeding of a like nature can be taken by a transferee as could have been taken by the transferor, so that if a transferor could ask for substitution, his transferee could also make an application claiming through him under Section 146. Applying the principle in this case Mr. Ghosh submitted that even though the Trustees were not substituted, there was no bar to the substitution of the present plaintiff as transferee. A point was raised that Section 146 does not apply to pending proceedings for which the procedure would be under O. 22, R. 10. The said provisions, however, do not apply, as no interest of the original lessee devolved or came on the lessor who again was not the applicant. As we have seen, in the findings we have arrived at, it is not necessary to consider this aspect at all as the interest of the original plaintiff extinguished on surrender and there was no occasion for any devolution or assignment of his interest to the lessor or any one else.

14. In the view we have taken, it may not be necessary to consider other contentions raised in the appeal. For disposal of the appeal, however, on all points, we feel called upon to consider the other interesting points raised in the appeal. Mr. Banerjee has contended that there is no pleading nor evidence in support about the alleged surrender by the original plaintiff. The case of surrender was made in the application for substitution, supported by the evidence of the plaintiff's only witness, who stated that the surrender took place on May 15, 1963 and after surrender there was an intermediary lease by the Trustees, the head lessor, in favour of the substituted plaintiff. The surrender as it appears from the deed of surrender Ex. 7 was not on May 15, 1963 but with the expiry of May 1963. It was contended that there could be no legal surrender in future. It was also contended that the deed of surrender being in writing was compulsorily registrable and not being registered is inadmissible in evidence. In absence of proof of title of the substituted plaintiff which it was incumbent on her to establish to obtain a decree for possession, the suit is liable to fail, apart from other considerations.

15. Mr. Ghosh has disputed the above contentions and submitted that there was ample pleading and proof of surrender by the original plaintiff and the subsequent lease to the substituted plaintiff. The factum of surrender was stated in the application for substitution and there was at no point of time any denial or dispute about the factum of surrender, rather than there was an admission by non-traverse. A new question of fact, now raised for the first time is not permissible. Mr. Ghosh further wanted the Court to ignore the date of surrender mentioned in the application as being on May 15, 1963. Basing his case even on oral surrender as no writing for such surrender is necessary, he submitted that in the case of substitution no further amendment of the plaint is necessary after the disposal of the application for substitution when the claim for substitution is decided on contest.

16. It appears to us that when there is a substitution on the death of a party to the proceedings, a note to that effect in the cause title may be sufficient. In cases where the substitution is claimed on the basis of any assignment, creation and devolution of title, it will be proper to insert necessary averments in the plaint by its amendment at proper stage enabling the contesting parties an opportunity to meet the claim as also the court for determination of the matters in controversy. If this course is not taken, it would result in incongruous pleadings, as in the instant case, as the original plaintiff has been substituted, the reference to the word "plaintiff" in the several paragraphs of the plaint stating the tenancy of the defendant and its determination can have no reference to the substituted plaintiff. The contesting party will have no occasion to deal with such claim in his written statement. There will also be no scope of any issues being framed thereon in absence of pleadings, and even the Court will have no occasion to determine the claim of the substituted plaintiff to the reliefs.

17. In the light of above discussion there is force in the contention of Mr. Banerjee that in absence of pleading as to surrender, the substituted plaintiff's claim to have the carriage of the suit and to the reliefs prayed should have been rejected. It is obvious that there was no surrender on May 15, 1963 as stated in the application for substitution and in the evidence of P. W. 1. The deed of surrender recited as follows:—

".....Messrs Oswal Jain and Co. hereby surrender and yield up all its right, title and interest and possession as the Lessee in respect of the premises in favour of the Landlords (i. e. Trustees with effect from expiry of the last day of the month of May, 1963."

Such surrender is not legal or valid, nor being in terms with express surrender mentioned in Cl. (e) in Section 111 which as we have seen, provides for immediate yielding up of the interest and a surrender in futuro is not warranted by law. Faced with this difficulty Mr. Ghosh asked us to read the document as a whole and also suggested that the surrender was oral, and no writing is necessary therefor. There is no dispute that a surrender takes place by yielding up of the interest of the lessee and no writing is necessary. Even so, nowhere in the pleadings or in the application for substitution there is a whisper of oral surrender at all or of surrender on a date other than May 15, 1963. Though in the application for substitution, the surrender is stated to have taken place on that date, which could be oral, the plaintiff's only witness stated in evidence that "that company (the original plaintiff) by this deed of surrender surrendered the monthly tenancy in favour of the Trust." As is well known, the plaintiff, in a suit for recovery of possession, must affirmatively prove that he is the rightful owner entitled to possession as enunciated in Mohima Chunder Mozoomdar v. Mohesh Chunder Neogi, 16 Ind App 23 at p. 26 (PC) and that the plaintiff must recover by the strength of his own title. The same principle was again enunciated in K. Lakshman v. T. Venkateswarlu, AIR 1949 PC 278 at p. 285. There can therefore be no doubt that the plaint suffers from fatal infirmity, firstly because it contains no pleading of surrender and secondly if the pleading in the application be treated as a part of the plaint, such pleading of surrender and the evidence in support do not establish a surrender valid in law.

18. The next point urged by Mr. Banerjee is about the admissibility of the deed of surrender Ex. 7. A surrender need not be in writing, but if in writing, Mr. Banerjee contends, it must be registered as it purports to extinguish right, title and interest of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, to or in immoveable property, as provided in Section 17 (1), under Cl. (b) of the Indian Registration Act, 1908. Accordingly Ex. 7 was compulsorily registrable and in absence of such registration, the consequence will follow.

19. Mr. Banerjee referred to the decision in Bengal Coal Co. Ltd. v. Monoranjan Bagchi, AIR 1919 Cal 694 in which it was observed that a surrender or relinquishment does not require to be in writing but may be inferred from acts of parties. In Abdul Majid v. Hari Charan Halder, AIR 1919 Cal 840, it was held that a surrender is not required to be by an instrument registered. The same view was taken in Sari Debi v. Sailabala Das, AIR 1920 Cal 858, in which it was held that even though the original tenancy was created by a registered lease, its surrender would be valid if it is accepted and acted upon by the landlord. But in the present case, as the surrender was by instrument in writing it was compulsorily registrable as was held in Nadig Neelakanta Rao v. State of Mysore, AIR 1960 Mys 87. It was held that as the instrument of surrender purports to extinguish the right of the tenant, valued at over Rs. 100/—, it is compulsorily registrable.

20. Mr. Ghosh disputed the contention and in his turn contended on the authorities of this Court cited above, that as the surrender was accepted and acted upon, as also evidenced by Exs. 6 and 7, no further instrument was necessary. He further contended that surrender was not an extinguishment of interest in immoveable property as contemplated in Cl. (b) of Section 17 (1) of the said Act, but as it was relinquishment of the lessee's interest, Cl. (b) of Section 17 (1) was not attracted. Further the interest of the original tenant was that of a monthly tenant and such tenancy does not require registration under Cl. (d) and its surrender accordingly did not require registration. Mr. Ghosh also contended that the Ex. 7 did not by itself create, declare or extinguish any right as would appear reading the document as a whole and accordingly it came under the exception in Cl. (b) of sub-section (2) of S. 17. On that ground the decision in Nadig Neelakanta Rao, AIR 1960 Mys 87 (supra) was sought to be distinguished.

21. As we have seen, surrender is an extinguishment of the lessee's interest and there is no dispute that value of the interest would be over Rs. 100/-. The document recites a surrender in praesenti and even if the surrender purports to be effective on a further date, it would make no difference on this aspect for the purposes of registration. Clause (b) of Section 17 (1) includes all instruments which purport or operate to create, assign, limit or extinguish whether in present or in future any right, title or interest of value of Rs. 100/- and upwards, to or in immoveable property. Apart from the surrender as evidenced by the document Ex. 7 and the evidence in support thereof there is no other pleading or evidence in support of oral surrender nor it is dependent on any subsequent document. The document Ex. 7, as we have seen, purports to extinguish the interest of the lessee in his tenancy, and though a surrender on a future date as contended it is an invalid surrender, for the purpose of Section 17 (1) of the Indian Registration Act, the document is compulsorily registrable and is not excepted by any of the provisions of the Act.

22. The next point for consideration is the effect of non-registration of the instrument of Ext. 7. Mr. Banerjee contended that as the document Ex. 7 was compulsorily registrable, in absence of registration, the document is inadmissible in evidence. Under Section 49, a document required to be registered, unless registered will not be received as evidence of any transaction affecting such property except that the document may be received as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be effected by registered instrument. Mr. Ghosh, however, contended that the appellant should not be allowed to raise this issue after the document has been exhibited and marked as an exhibit. Such objection should have been taken at the earliest opportunity so that the party concerned could have taken steps for registration, for which in the present case, the prescribed period of registration was yet to expire. Mr. Ghosh further contended that the provisions of Section 17 (1) strike at the documents and not at transactions and reliance was placed on the decision in K. Panchapagesa Ayyar v. K. Kalyanasundaram Ayyar, AIR 1957 Mad 472. The provisions of the Registration Act cannot render invalid an oral surrender which does not require any written instrument at all. Mr. Ghosh also referred to Section 48 which provides for the cases where registered documents take effect against oral agreements. Mr. Ghosh however based his real objection on the proviso to Section 49, contending that the document could be treated as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be effected by registered instrument.

23. There is no doubt that the objection as to the admissibility of the document has to be taken at the earliest stage of hearing. As Mr. Banerjee has pointed out, such objection relates to the mode of proof of documents, where if such objection was taken, the party concerned could adduce stricter formal proof. If however, the objection relates to the admissibility of the document itself under the law, such objection is available to the party even at the appellate stage. This seems to be the effect of the observations made by the Privy Council in Gopal Das v. Sri Thakurji, (1943) 47 Cal WN 607 at p. 613. As to the contention regarding Sections 48 and 49, it appears that while Section 48 has no application, the proviso to Section 49 also does not support the contention of Mr. Ghosh, as in this case there is no collateral transaction other than surrender.

24. Mr. Ghosh has lastly contended that if the application for substitution is found as not maintainable, the original plaintiff should be allowed to proceed with the suit. It is obvious that the order of the trial court in allowing substitution without prejudice to the merits of the cases of the parties and keeping the question open is wrong and contrary to the principles of provisions of R. 5 or Rule 10, Order 22 of the Code. The trial court, on hearing, found that the substituted plaintiff was not entitled to proceed with the suit and accordingly the suit was dismissed. No appeal was preferred by the original plaintiff against the decree and at this stage, it is no longer possible to put the clock back as submitted by Mr. Ghosh, as the decree of the trial court which has been final and binding on the original plaintiff cannot now be reopened and it was open to the original plaintiff either to prefer an appeal or to be added as appellant in the appeal under provisions of O. 41, R. 20 of the Code in proper time.

25. In the result, this appeal succeeds and is allowed, the judgment and decree under appeal are set aside and those of the trial court are restored. There will be no order for the costs of this appeal.

Subrata Roy Choudhury, for Appellant; Biswarup Gupta, for Respondent.

B. C. MITRA, J.:— The respondent instituted Suit No. 2556 of 1967. (The Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta v. The Chartered Bank) for recovery of Rs. 7,35,000/- and for other reliefs. The basis of the respondent's claim is that on or about May 5, 1965, it was agreed between the respondent and a British Company known as Blyth Dry Docks Shipping Building Co. Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as the Company) that the Company would build and deliver to the respondent 2 Hopper Barges at a price of £ 3,50,000/- each aggregating £ 7,00,000/-. In consideration of the contract the appellant by two several Deeds of Guarantee dated 7-6-1966 guaranteed the due performance and observance by the company of all the covenants and conditions of the said contract for supply of Barges and promised to pay on demand £ 17,500/- in respect of each of the said two Barges in the event of a breach or non-performance of the contract or in the event of any neglect or omission by the company. Pursuant to the said contract for the supply of the 2 Barges the respondent from time to time paid divers sums to the company aggregating £ 1,75,000/-.

2. On or about September 13, 1966, the company went into voluntary liquidation without completing, constructing or delivering the said 2 Barges or any of them. The respondent contends that the appellant failed to pay £ 35,000/- under the said 2 guarantees or any portion thereof.

3. On or about November 29, 1967, the appellant was served with the writ of Summons in the said Suit No. 2556 of 1967. The appellant entered appearance in the Suit and on January 5, 1968, took out a notice of motion for stay of the Suit and all proceedings thereunder. This application was disposed of by the trial Court by a judgment and order of May 12, 1969, by which the application for stay of the suit was dismissed. This appeal is directed against the judgment and order dated May 12, 1969.

4. Before proceeding to deal with the contentions of the parties I should refer to the correspondence that passed between the parties in the matter of their rival contentions under the contract. On December 20, 1966, the respondent wrote to the appellant to say that the company had failed to carry out the contract, and that the Guarantee furnished by the appellant had become enforceable. The appellant was therefore called upon to pay Rs. 3,50,000/- under the two Deeds of Guarantee within 15 days. On January 28, 1967, the appellant wrote to the respondent that no formal contract was signed by the respondent and the company, and as no such contract had in fact been signed, the terms of the Guarantees were not operative, and therefore there could be no effective claim under the Guarantees. On March 2, 1967, the appellant wrote to the respondent that a contract existed between the respondent and the company when the tender was accepted, on the understanding that when a formal contract was signed, it would govern what was being done meanwhile, and that the final contract which was to be signed by the parties was concluded at the latest on July 27, 1966. In paragraph 3 of this letter the appellant alleged that as the Guarantee was given in respect of a contract which arose out of the tender and acceptance and not the concluded contract between the parties the contract of guarantee had been superseded and no longer applied. There were several other contentions raised in this letter to which it is not necessary to refer. On April 26, 1967, the appellant forwarded to the respondent a memorandum raising various contentions namely:—

(a) A tender was accepted by the company which was to be embodied in a formal contract a pro forma of which was included in the tender documents.

(b) The contract came into existence when the tender was accepted and such acceptance was on the understanding that if a formal contract was signed it would govern what was being done meanwhile.

(c) The tender and acceptance constituted a tentative contract.

(d) The concluded contract was the result of correspondence which was finally concluded by the company's letter of July 27, 1966. The contract then had retrospective effect and brought into effect Cl. 38 of the Pro-forma Contract so that all previous contracts between the parties were thereby cancelled.

(e) The Guarantee does not purport to and does not guarantee the concluded contract.

(f) The arbitration clause was altered in material respect by the concluded contract unknown to the appellant.

5. It is clear from the contents of the letters written on behalf of the appellant, that it was contending that the terms of the Guarantee Agreement did not become operative and that the contract of Guarantee had been superseded. It is in the face of these contentions that it has to be decided if the appellant is entitled to an order for stay of the suit under Section 34 of the Arbitration Act, 1940. The trial Court, upon analysis of the correspondence, came to the conclusion that the appellant was contending that the contract containing the Arbitration clause never came into being, and there was no binding contract between the parties. It was therefore held that this was a controversy on which the Arbitrator could not adjudicate. It was further held that the appellant was denying the existence as well as the validity of the agreement which contained the arbitration clause, and that the existence and validity of the arbitration agreement could not be the subject-matter of arbitration. On these findings the trial Court came to the conclusion that the appellant was not entitled to an order for stay of the suit.

6. Mr. Subrata Roy Chowdhury appearing for the appellant contended that the existence and validity of the contract of Guarantee was never challenged by his client. He argued that what was contended was that the arbitration agreement was superseded and that the terms of the Guarantee did not become operative so as to sustain a claim by the respondent against the appellant. It was further argued that the appellant never disputed or denied that it had signed the 2 Deeds of Guarantee. He submitted that it was not his case that the contract was void ab initio, nor was it a case where a party denied having entered into a contract, nor a case where the existence of the contract itself was questioned.

7. Counsel for the appellant further argued that his client was ready and willing to go to arbitration. He argued that the material time for the purpose of ascertaining readiness and willingness to go to arbitration, in an application under Section 34 of the Arbitration Act, was the time when the proceedings were commenced. It was contended that whatever might have been the contentions of the appellant before the writ of Summons was served, there could be no doubt, that at the relevant time the appellant was ready and willing to refer to dispute to Arbitration. In support of these contentions he relied on Russell on Arbitration, 18th Ed. p. 153 for the proposition that where there was an arbitration agreement, and one of the parties to the agreement commenced an action for determination of the dispute in a suit, the prima facie leaning of the Court was to stay the action, and leave the plaintiff to the Tribunal to which he had agreed. Reliance was also placed on a decision of this Court in (1951) 88 Cal LJ 34, Pannalal Sagoremull v. Fateh Chand Muralidhar for the proposition that by mere denial of a contract a party could not defeat the arbitration agreement nor could he take away the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to decide the dispute on the merits. That was, however, an application for setting aside an award. The arbitrators took evidence on the question whether the contract had been entered into. In that case the contract contained the usual arbitration clause for reference of the dispute to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. We do not think that this decision is of any assistance to the appellant in this case. Reliance was also placed on another decision of this Court in ILR (1949) 1 Cal 199, Hanutmal Boyd v. Khusiram Benarsilal. In that case it was held that in an application for stay under Section 34 of the Act, it was for the defendant in the suit, who applied for stay, to satisfy the Court that conditions for an order for stay were satisfied, and once that was done, the onus shifted to the plaintiff to show that although the conditions were fulfilled, there was sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred to arbitration. This decision again is not of much assistance to the appellant in this case because the basic question in this case is whether, having regard to the disputes agreed to be referred, it is open to the arbitrator to go into the question if he had jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute. Reliance was next placed on an English decision in (1954) 1 QB 8, Christopher Brown Ltd. v. G. W. H. S. Halfone for the proposition that where the jurisdiction of the arbitrator was challenged, he was not bound immediately to refuse to act, until the question of jurisdiction had been determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction. The arbitrator, it was held, was entitled to inquire into the question of jurisdiction, not for the purpose of a decision, which would be binding upon the parties, but for the purpose of satisfying himself whether he ought to go on with the arbitration or not, and that if it became clear to him that he had no jurisdiction, then he might decide not to go on with the arbitration. I do not think that this decision again is of much assistance in this case, because as I shall notice later on, not only the appellant contended firstly that the contract of Guarantee which embodied the arbitration agreement, did not become operative and secondly that the arbitration agreement was superseded, the scope of adjudication by arbitration of the dispute in this case was very limited in nature.

8. Counsel for the appellant next relied upon a decision of the Supreme Court Anderson Wright Ltd. v. Moran & Co., AIR 1955 SC 53. Reliance was placed on the 4 conditions for grant of stay laid down in paragraph 7 of the Report. It was argued that as soon as proceedings were commenced by a party to an arbitration agreement, and the legal proceeding sought to be stayed was in respect of a matter agreed to be referred, and no steps had been taken in the proceedings and there was readiness and willingness and finally there was no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred to arbitration, an order for stay of the suit ought to be made. He argued that in this case all the conditions to the making of an order for stay were satisfied and therefore the trial Court should have stayed the suit as prayed for. It is to be noticed, however, that the arbitration clause in the case before the Supreme Court was in the widest possible terms namely: "All matters, questions, disputes, differences and/or claims arising out of and/or concerning and/or in connection with and/or in consequence of and/or relating to this contract whether or not the obligations of either or both parties under this Contract be subsisting at the time of such dispute and whether or not this Contract has been terminated or purported to be terminated or completed, shall be referred to the arbitration of the Bengal Chambers of Commerce under the Rules of its Tribunal of Arbitration for the Rules, the arbitration shall be conducted."

9. Reliance was next placed by Mr. Roy Chowdhury on Heyman v. Darwins Ltd., (1942) 1 All ER 337. Reliance was placed on a passage at p. 343 of the Report where Viscount Simon, L. C., and that if one party to the alleged contract was contending that it was void ab initio, the arbitration clause could not operate, for, on this view the clause itself was also void, but if the parties were at one in asserting that they entered into a binding contract, but a difference had arisen between them, as to whether there had been a breach by one side or the other or as to whether circumstances had arisen discharging one or both parties from further performance, such differences should be regarded as differences which had arisen "in respect" or "with regard to" or "under" the contract, and an arbitration clause which used these or similar expressions should be construed accordingly. Reliance was also placed on the observations of Lord Macmillan at p. 346 of the Report, where it is stated that repudiation in the sense of a refusal by one of the parties to a contract to perform his obligation thereunder, did not itself abrogate the contract, and the contract in such a case was not rescinded, as it could not be rescinded by the action of one of the parties alone. It seems to us however, that the decision in Heyman v. Darwins Ltd. is against the contentions of Counsel for the appellant. The observations of Viscount Simon L. C., on which Mr. Roy Choudhury relied, have to be read in the context of certain other observations at p. 341 of the Report, to which our attention was drawn by Mr. Biswarup Gupta, counsel for the respondent. These observations are: "If the respondents were denying that the contract had ever bound them at all, such an attitude would disentitle them from relying on the arbitration clause which it contains." Mr. Gupta contended, and I think rightly that in this case the appellant contended that in the events that have happened, the Contract of Guarantee, which included the arbitration clause, did not become operative at all. I shall turn to this question later in this Judgment.

10. Reliance was next placed by Counsel for the appellant on a Bench decision of the Madras High Court in AIR 1924 Mad 336, Anglo Persian Oil Co. Ltd. v. P. S. P. Aiyer. In that case it was held that where there was a submission to arbitration, and a party chose to bring a suit, the other party could decide whether or not he should accept the verdict of the Court, which he could indicate by taking some step in aid of the action or whether he would avail himself of his contractual right to go to arbitration, and if the other party misled the plaintiff into bringing a suit, that might provide ground for punishing him in costs. This decision to my mind is of no assistance to the appellant in this case as it is nobody's case that the respondent was misled into filing the suit. The next case to which Mr. Roy Chowdhury referred was a decision of the Supreme Court, Gaya Electric Supply Co. Ltd. v. State of Bihar, AIR 1953 SC 182. Reliance was placed on this decision for the proposition that the legal proceedings which were sought to be stayed must be in respect of a matter which the parties had agreed to refer, and which came within the ambit of the arbitration agreement, and that where a suit was commenced as to a matter which lay outside the submissions, the Court was bound to refuse a stay. It was also held that where the arbitration agreement was broad and comprehensive, and one of the parties sought to avoid the contract, the dispute was referable to arbitration, if the avoidance of the contract arose out of the terms of the contract itself. The observation of the Supreme Court at p. 184 of the Report are very relevant: "A party cannot rely on a term of the contract to repudiate it and still say that, the arbitration clause should not apply. If he relies upon a contract, he must, rely on it for all purposes. Where, however, an arbitration clause is not so comprehensive and is not drafted in the broad language which was used in the House of Lord's case, namely, "in respect of" any agreement, or "in respect of something arising out of it", that proposition does not hold good". It seems to us that the decision of the Supreme Court is entirely against the contentions of Counsel for the appellant. The arbitration agreement in this case, as I shall notice later on, is by no means, comprehensive. It is a limited reference on 2 particular points, and on none other, and in this case the Guarantee agreement is sought to be avoided for reasons dehors the contract and is not sought to be avoided by reason of something done under the agreement itself or by reason of breach of the term of the agreement. Furthermore, the appellant's contention that the agreement did not become operative, or that it stood superseded was not a contention which was made only before the dispute arose, but these are contentions which have been adhered to by the appellant even after commencement of the suit in the very application, out of which this appeal arises. I shall refer to this question later in this judgment. The next case relied on by the Counsel for the appellant was also a decision of the Supreme Court, Union of India v. Kishorilal Gupta & Bros., AIR 1959 SC 1362. In that case it was held by a majority that if an arbitration agreement was couched in the widest terms, the dispute whether there was frustration or repudiation of the contract would be covered by it. This decision again is of no assistance to the appellant in this case, but it supports the contentions of the respondent as I shall notice later on. The only other decision on which counsel for the appellant relied was a Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in AIR 1958 All 522, Ram Bahadur Thakur v. Thakur Das in which it was held that it was in the direction of the Court as to whether an order staying a suit should be made, and that the discretion is to be exercised judicially, sparingly and cautiously. It was also held that in commercial cases there should be very strong grounds for refusing a stay. We do not see how this decision at all helps the appellant in this case. It certainly is within the discretion of the Court to grant or to refuse a stay, but once the trial court has exercised such discretion, it should not be lightly or readily interfered with, even though the Appellate Court might feel that if the decision rested with it, its own conclusion might have been different. (See Russell 18th Ed. p. 150, 1942 AC 130 and AIR 1960 SC 1156).

11. The existence, the binding effect and the enforceability of the Guarantee agreement has been challenged by the appellant in the correspondence that passed between the parties. In the letter dated January 28, 1967, the appellant contended that the terms of Guarantee agreement were not operative, as no contract had been signed between the appellant and the Contractor. In the letter dated March 2, 1967, the appellant contended that the final contract between the respondent and the Contractor was concluded on July 27, 1966 and as the Guarantee was given by the appellant in respect of the contract which arose out of tender and acceptance, and not the concluded contract between the parties, by virtue of Cl. 32 of the concluded contract, the Contract of Guarantee was superseded and no longer applied. In the last paragraph of this letter it was reaffirmed that the contract between the respondent and the Contractor was a contract which was concluded on July 27, 1966, and this contract superseded all other contracts including the Contract of Guarantee. The letter concluded by saying that the guarantee given must be considered cancelled and no claim can be retained on the basis of the same. In the Memorandum annexed to the respondent's letter of April 26, 1967, it was contended that the contract between the respondent and the Contractor, arrived at on the basis of tender and acceptance, was a tentative contract. It was also contended that the Guarantee did not, in fact, guarantee the concluded contract and that the arbitration clause was altered in material respect by the concluded contract unknown to the appellant. It is clear from the correspondence that the appellant was contending that the Contract of Guarantee was not operative, that it was superseded, and it did not guarantee the contract between principles namely, the respondent and the company. Counsel for the appellant contended that although this might have been the attitude of his client before the institution of the suit, his client's views in the matter had changed since the service of the writ of Summons on November 29, 1967, and that as will appear from the petition, the appellant was, at any rate, since the service of the Writ of Summons, ready and willing to do all things necessary for the proper conduct of the arbitration proceedings.

12. This contention on behalf of the appellant, however, cannot be accepted, having regard to what is stated in the Affidavit-in-reply affirmed by Victor Ralph Winton on March 13, 1968. In paragraph 7(b) of this affidavit the deponent referred to the letter of January 28, 1967, and there is nothing to show that the appellant had changed its views with regard to the contention in that letter that the Guarantee agreement was not operative. On the other hand the deponent expressly craved leave to refer to that letter. In paragraph 7(d) of this affidavit the deponent refers to the letter of March 2, 1967, and again there is nothing to show or suggest that the appellant has changed its views with regard to the contention raised in that letter, that the contract of Guarantee had been superseded and no longer applied. Finally, in paragraph 7(f) of the affidavit the deponent refers to the letter of April 26, 1967 and there is no suggestion in the affidavit that the appellant had changed its views with regard to the contentions contained in the Memorandum which was annexed to the letter of April 26, 1967.

13. Before passing I should deal with a contention of Counsel for the appellant, that in an application for stay, the Court should look into only the plaint and the pleadings in the application for stay, and to nothing else. This submission is altogether untenable. The Court should look into not only the plaint and the pleadings in the application but also to the correspondence that passed between the parties before the institution of the suit in Order to determine their rival contentions regarding the contract containing the arbitration clause (See 1942-1 All ER 337 (supra) at p. 340).

14. The letters written on behalf of the appellant to which I have referred earlier raised 3 contentions, namely, that the terms of the Guarantee agreement were not operative, that the contract of Guarantee had been superseded, that the Guarantee did not purport to and did not, in fact, guarantee the concluded contract between the principals, and that the arbitration clause was altered in a material respect unknown to the appellant. The question is, is there any difference between these contentions and a repudiation of the contract by one of the parties? I see none. The contention, that the terms of the guarantee agreement never became operative so as to bind the parties and the contention that the contract had been superseded, are in my view outright repudiation of the contract. Counsel for the respondent contended, and I think rightly, that there was a repudiation of the contract which went to the very substance of the whole contract, and therefore the appellant could not rely upon the arbitration clause, even assuming there was a valid agreement to refer the same to arbitration. In support of this contention reliance was placed by counsel for the respondent on a decision of the House of Lords Jureindini v. National British and Irish Millers Insurance Co. Ltd., 1915 AC 499. Dealing with this question Viscount Haldane L. C., said at p. 505 of the Report: "Now, my Lords, speaking myself, when there is a repudiation which goes to the substance of the whole contract I do not see how the person setting up the repudiation can be entitled to insist on a subordinate term of the contract still being enforced." Reliance was also placed by Counsel for the respondent on a decision of the Supreme Court AIR 1959 SC 1362 (supra). Reliance was also placed on another decision of the Supreme Court AIR 1953 SC 182 (supra). In this case it was held that where a party sought to avoid a contract for reasons de hors the contract, the arbitration clause could not be invoked as it went along with the other terms of the contract, and that a party could not rely on a term of the contract to repudiate it, and still say that the arbitration clause should not apply. Counsel for the respondent contended that the appellant's contention was and still is, that the contract containing the arbitration clause did not become operative, and that it had been superseded, and therefore the appellant could not be allowed, at the same time to urge that the arbitration agreement survived and should be enforced. It seems to us that there is a good deal of force in this contention. We do not see how the appellant can contend that although the contract of guarantee was superseded and although it never became operative as between the parties, yet it is in existence and should be treated to have become operative for the purpose of arbitration.

15. On this question Counsel for the respondent also relied on several other decisions to which I will now refer. He relied on Toller v. Law Accident Insurance Society Ltd., (1936) 2 All ER 952. In that case it was held that if an issue was referred to arbitration and a finding was given by the Arbitrator that there was no contract in existence, that would be a finding that the arbitration clause never existed and the arbitrator had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter and that such an issue would be a proper issue to be tried in Court. In that case, however, a Proposal Form for a car insurance was signed but no premium was paid nor a policy issued, but Cover Notes were issued from time to time. It was in these facts that it was contended that the contract of Insurance containing the arbitration clause never came into existence. The facts in this case seem to us to be different from the facts in the instant appeal, inasmuch as there is no dispute in this case that the Deed of Guarantee was signed by the parties. I therefore do not think that this decision is of any assistance to the respondent except for the principle it lays down. Counsel for the respondent also relied on the observations of Viscount Simon L. C., in 1942-1 All ER 337 (supra) at p. 341 of the Report to the effect that if a party was denying that the contract ever bound him at all, such an attitude would disentitle him from relying on the arbitration clause which it contained. Reliance was next placed by Counsel for the respondent on a decision of this Court reported in (1953) 91 Cal LJ 1. I do not think that decision is of any assistance as it was not dealing with the case of an order for stay of the suit under Section 34 of the Arbitration Act, 1940. Mr. Gupta also relied on a decision of the Punjab High Court in AIR 1952 Punj 63, Chiranjiv Lal v. Tropical Insurance Co. Ltd. In that case again it was held that where a party had repudiated the contract and such repudiation in effect raised the contention that there was no contract at all between the parties, it was not open to that party to take advantage of that portion of the contract which enjoined arbitration. Reliance was also placed by Mr. Gupta on a decision of this Court reported in (1949) 53 CWN 505 for the proposition that where the question of jurisdiction of the Arbitrator was raised in an application for stay, the Court was competent to decide the question whether the Arbitrator had jurisdiction or not. I do not think that this decision is of any assistance to the respondent in this case. Reliance was also placed on a decision of this Court in AIR 1970 Cal 221. I do not think this decision throws any light on the question with which we are concerned in this appeal.

16. In the facts in this case and on the law as it is settled now, I have no hesitation in holding, that even if the arbitration agreement was wide enough to embrace within its ambit, the dispute raised in the plaint, the suit ought not to be stayed, having regard to the contentions of the appellant to which I have earlier referred.

17. The appellant ought not to be allowed to say that though there is no operative and binding arbitration agreement and though the contract between the parties had been superseded, the contract containing the arbitration clause ought to be treated as alive and binding between the parties so as to compel them to go to arbitration.

18. Let us now proceed to have a closer look at the arbitration agreement in this case. The arbitration clause is part of the Contract of Guarantee and it is necessary that the arbitration clause should be set out in order to appreciate its scope and effect. It is as follows:

"Now this Indenture Witnesseth that in consideration of the premises, the Bank hereby guarantees to the Commissioners the punctual, true and faithful performance and observance by the Contractor of the covenants and conditions on the part of the Contractor contained in the said Contract and the Bank undertakes and agrees with the Commissioners and unequivocally promises to pay to the Commissioners upon demand in writing whenever required by them from time to time to do and within a fortnight from the date of such demand sum or sums not exceeding in the whole £ 17,500 (Seventeen thousand five hundred pounds only) as may become payable to the Commissioners by the Contractor by virtue or arising in any way whatsoever out of or in connection with the said Contract or by reason of any breach or non-performance of the same or by the neglect, omission or breach of the said contract by the Contractor PROVIDED ALWAYS and it is hereby expressly stipulated and agreed that if any question arises as to whether any sum has become so payable by the Contractor to the Commissioners or whether the Contractor is guilty of any breach or non-performance of the said Contract or of negligence or omission to perform the same, the decision of an Arbitrator in England to be appointed by the Ministry of Transport Government of India shall be final and conclusive and this Indenture Further Witnesseth that the Guarantee herein contained shall not be revocable by notice of dissolution, bankruptcy, liquidation, closure or winding up of the business of the Contractor or any change in the constitution or composition of the Contractor's business and the liability of the Bank under these presents shall not be impaired in any way by any extension of time or variation or alteration made, given, conceded or agreed to by the Commissioners in any of the terms or conditions of the said Contract or any other indulgence given by the Commissioners or by reasons of any failure on the part of the Commissioners to enforce any of their remedies against the Contractor and or by reason of failure on the part of the Commissioners to observe or perform any of the stipulations contained in the said Contract and to be observed or performed by the Commissioners or by any other dealing between the Commissioners and the Contractor whether any of the above takes place with or without the knowledge of the Bank and that the Guarantee herein contained shall remain in full force and virtue until all claims and demands of the Commissioners by virtue or arising out of or in connection with the said Contract have been fully paid and satisfied Provided Always and it is hereby agreed by and between the parties that the Bank's liability under the Guarantee is restricted to a maximum sum of £ 17,500 (Seventeen thousand five hundred pounds only) and this guarantee shall remain in force up to and including a period of six months after acceptance of the vessel in Calcutta unless a suit or an action to enforce a claim under the guarantee is filed against the Bank within six months after acceptance of the vessel in Calcutta as aforesaid all rights of the Commissioners under the guarantee shall stand forfeited and the Bank shall be released and discharged from all liabilities thereunder."

19. There can hardly be any doubt that what the Bank was guaranteeing was the punctual, true and faithful performance and observance by the company of the covenants and conditions on the part of the Company. The Bank promised to pay to the respondent, upon demand, in writing and within a fortnight of such demand, the sums specified, as may become payable to the respondent by the company by virtue or arising in any way whatsoever out of or in connection with the contract or by reason of breach or non-performance of the same. Then comes the arbitration clause which says that if any question arises as to whether any sum has become so payable by the company to the respondent or whether the company is guilty of any breach or non-performance of the contract or of negligence or omission to perform the same, the decision of an Arbitrator in England to be appointed by the Ministry of Transport, Government of India, shall be final and conclusive. The reference to arbitration is therefore on two clearly defined and limited disputes, namely: (1) If any sum has become payable by the company to the respondent and (2) if the company is guilty of breach or non-performance of the said contract or of negligence or omission etc. The Arbitrator therefore has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon any dispute other than those two. It is not a reference to arbitration couched in the wide terms to which I have referred earlier in this judgment. What is, however, of the utmost importance so far as this appeal is concerned, is that the arbitrator has no jurisdiction at all under the terms of the agreement to go into the question of liability of the Bank to the appellant. That question has been left severely alone, and entirely outside the jurisdiction of the Arbitrator. The suit which is sought to be stayed is a suit by the respondent against the Bank to enforce its claim. Looking at the plaint, there can be no doubt that the dispute in the suit is altogether outside the ambit of the terms of reference. In other words, the scope of the suit, as it appears from the plaint, is entirely outside the disputes agreed to be referred to the Arbitrator.

20. In paragraph 1 of the plaint the respondent pleads the agreement between the parties to the suit, namely, the Commissioners for the Port of Calcutta and Blyth Dry Docks Ship-building Co. Ltd. for the supply of 2 barges. In paragraph 2 the Contract of Guarantee between the plaintiffs and the defendant is pleaded, the terms of Guarantee being that the defendant guaranteed punctual, true and faithful performance by the Contractor of all the conditions of the contract and promised to pay on demand to the plaintiff a sum of £ 17,500 in each of the 2 guarantees in the event of any breach or non-performance of the contract. In paragraph 3 of the plaint the respondent pleads payment of diverse sums aggregating £ 1,75,000. In paragraph 4 of the plaint the respondent pleads the voluntary liquidation of the Contractor and failure to construct and supply the 2 Barges. In paragraph 5 of the plaint the respondent pleads that he suffered loss and damages. In paragraph 6 of the plaint it is alleged that the appellant failed and neglected to pay £ 35,000 being the amount of 2 guarantees. In paragraph 7 of the plaint it is alleged that the respondent is entitled to Rupees 7,35,000/- with interest of 6 per cent. These are all the averments in the plaint in the suit which is sought to be stayed by the appellant.

21. The correspondence between the respondent and the company which culminated in a contract for the construction and supply of the 2 barges, as also the two Deeds of Guarantee were annexed to the plaint. It is manifestly clear from the plaint that no dispute has been raised therein on the two questions which the parties agreed to refer to arbitration namely: (1) Whether any sum has become payable by the Company to the respondent and (2) Whether the company is guilty of any breach or non-performance of the Contract or of negligence or omission to perform the same. These are the only two disputes which the parties agreed to refer to arbitration. But the only dispute set out in the plaint is the failure on the part of the appellant to pay to the respondent the sum of Rs. 7,35,000/- which the appellant promised to pay to the respondent, upon failure or neglect on the part of the Contractor to construct and supply the 2 Barges. In these facts, the conclusion is inescapable that the dispute raised and pleaded in the plaint is not a dispute which the parties had agreed to refer to arbitration. The law in this country as it stands today does not entitle the appellant to a discretionary order for stay of suit, in a case such as this.

22. Looking a little deeper into the matter it will be at once seen that arbitration will not, and cannot by any means give to the respondent, the relief which he has claimed in the suit. If the matter was referred to arbitration the only questions that the Arbitrator could adjudicate upon, were whether any sum became payable by the company to the respondent and whether the company was guilty of breach or non-performance of the Contract or of negligence or omission to perform the same. A decision of the Arbitrator on either of these two questions, or on both, would not give to the respondent the amount it has claimed in the suit. Faced with this position, Counsel for the appellant submitted that after getting the award as contemplated by the agreement between the parties, the respondent would have to file a suit for recovery of its dues. If such is the position, as no doubt it is, we see no reasons for staying the suit, which is the only means by which the respondent can try to obtain satisfaction of its claim against the appellant. Even if an award is obtained on either or both of the questions agreed to be referred, dispute in the suit would still remain outstanding and would have to be adjudicated upon in Court on the basis of the claim laid in the plaint.

22-A. There remains only 2 other contentions raised by Mr. Gupta to be dealt with. These were firstly that complicated questions of law were involved, and therefore the dispute should not be referred to arbitration and secondly that discretion should not be exercised in making an order of stay of the suit as the appellant had suppressed the fact that the petitioner was denying the acceptance and validity of the arbitration agreement. The questions of law, which according to the respondent, are too complicated to be dealt with in arbitration, have been set out in paragraph 15 of the petition. We are of opinion that those questions are by no means so complicated as to enable us to hold that they would be beyond the competence or ability of the Arbitrator to adjudicate upon them.

23. On the second question namely suppression, Mr. Gupta submitted that as the appellant had failed to mention in the petition its views on the validity and enforceability of the arbitration agreement, as expressed in the correspondence mentioned earlier, it was guilty of suppression, and for that reason the Court's discretion should not be exercised in its favour in granting a stay of the suit. In support of this contention Counsel for the respondent relied on The King v. The General Commrs. for the purposes of the Income-tax Act, (1917) 1 KB 486. That was a case of a Rule Nisi in a high prerogative writ and it was held that suppression of material facts in the writ petition was enough to discharge the Rule Nisi. I do not think that the analogy of suppression in a writ petition can be applied to an application for stay of a suit under the Arbitration Act. In any event, we do not think that the alleged suppression was such as to hold that by itself it is enough to refuse to stay the suit. We are not impressed by either of these 2 contentions urged by Mr. Gupta and in our view the trial Court was right in rejecting these contentions.

24. There is however, one another matter to which I should refer before I conclude. Counsel for the respondent relied on the last few lines of the Contract of Guarantee which are as follows:

"And this Guarantee shall remain in force up to and including a period of six months after acceptance of the vessel in Calcutta unless a suit or an action to enforce a claim under the Guarantee is filed against the Bank within six months after acceptance of the vessel in Calcutta as aforesaid. All rights of the Commissioners under the Guarantee shall stand forfeited and the Bank shall be released and discharged from all liabilities thereunder."

25. Relying on this part of the Contract between the parties Counsel for the respondent submitted that the respondent was bound to file a suit against the Bank if it wanted to keep the Guarantee alive beyond the period of six months from the acceptance of the vessel. He also submitted that the parties contemplated by the Contract itself, that a suit should be filed by the respondent for enforcement of its claim under the Contract of Guarantee. It seems to us that this contention on behalf of the respondent is well-founded. It was within the contemplation of the parties that a suit had to be filed within a period of six months after acceptance of the vessel in Calcutta, and unless such a suit was filed the appellant would stand released and discharged from its obligations under the Contract of Guarantee. Under the compulsion of the terms of contract the respondent is obliged to file a suit if it wanted to keep its claim against the appellant alive six months after the acceptance of vessel in Calcutta. It is true that the question of acceptance of vessel in Calcutta did not arise as the barges were neither manufactured nor delivered. But the intention of the parties is quite clear from the terms of the Contract namely, that a suit was contemplated by both the parties to the contract in certain events and that the respondent's claim against the appellant can only be enforced by a suit and not by a reference of the dispute to arbitration. That position seems to us to be amply clear from the terms of the contract itself.

26. For the reasons mentioned above this appeal fails and is accordingly dismissed with costs.

AJAY K. BASU J.:— 27. I concur with my Lord but would like to add that on construction of the document (Bank Guarantee), Ext. G, at page 30 of the Paper-book, it is clear that the contracting parties to the said guarantee agreement were the Chartered Bank of 4 Netaji Subhas Road, Calcutta, and the Commissioner for the Port of Calcutta and in the recital to the said contract it is inter alia mentioned that Blyth Dry Docks Ship Building Co. Ltd. of London, supplier of 2 steel barges shall furnish a Bank Guarantee by a scheduled bank in Calcutta for a sum of £ 15,500 and pursuant to that the guarantee was furnished by the Bank as mentioned in the said document Ext. G.

28. The alleged arbitration clause incorporated in the said guarantee is certainly outside the ambit and scope of the agreement between the contracting parties. That arbitration only speaks of an Arbitrator in London who will decide the quantum of the sum payable by the Contractor i.e. Messrs. Blyth Dry Docks Ship Building Co. Ltd. of London to the Commissioner for the Port of Calcutta. This arbitration clause does not mention anything about any dispute or claim against the bank. Therefore, the alleged case of action or claim against the bank in terms of the guarantee is not contemplated and is wholly outside the scope of the arbitration agreement. The bank has nothing to do with the arbitration clause in the agreement. This is clear from the fact that at the end of the said paragraph 3 in the said document, Ext. G, it is mentioned that on certain eventualities a suit will have to be filed against the bank to enforce the claim under this guarantee. Therefore, on the construction of the document itself following the principles laid down in 1942-1 All ER 337 and AIR 1955 SC 53, it is clear that the stipulating parties to the guarantee did not bind themselves to the arbitration agreement as such.

29. Therefore, the bank is not entitled to get a stay of the suit under Section 34 of the Indian Arbitration Act, 30. Even assuming that the arbitration clause is binding on the parties to the guarantee (though there is no cogent reason for that) even then one of the essential ingredients for stay under Section 34 of I. A. Act would be whether the petitioner was ready and willing to proceed with the arbitration at the commencement of the proceedings.

31. Mr. Subrata Roy Choudhury, appearing for the appellant, urged that though it might appear from the correspondence disclosed in the affidavits that sometime prior to the commencement of the proceedings his client was contending that the guarantee agreement was invalid or was altered or was superseded and not binding or there was only a tentative agreement and no finally concluded contracts and from which it might appear that prior to the commencement of the proceedings the petitioner was not ready and willing to proceed with the arbitration but nonetheless at the time of the commencement of the proceeding which is the material time, his client might have taken a complete somersault and was ready and willing to abide by the arbitration clause in the contract of guarantee on which the plaintiff has filed the suit and so the petition should succeed. Because what is relevant is the attitude of the party at the commencement of the proceedings and not before. The suit was filed on or about the 9th November, 1967 and the writ of summons was served on the 29th November, 1967 and the application for stay was moved on the 5th January, 1968 and the correspondence relied on were earlier to the filing of the suit.

32. On proper consideration of the affidavits particularly affidavit-in-reply affirmed by Victor Ralf Winton, Deputy Manager and constituted Attorney of the Chartered Bank on 13th March, 1968 in paragraph 7 of his affidavit particularly in sub-paragraphs (b), (d) and (f) he has relied on his client's contention in the correspondence that passed earlier. That is to say there was in fact no resiling from the earlier attitude which was shown from the beginning of the dispute in the correspondence i.e. challenging the contract and the validity of the agreement. From which it is clear that the petitioner was not ready and willing even at the time and after the commencement of the proceeding.

33. I have no hesitation to say that the application for stay was not bona fide or made in the interest of justice and this appeal should be dismissed.

34. I may also mention here that the said Blyth Dry Docks Ship Building Co. of London which went into voluntary liquidation made it clear that they are not in a position to fulfil the said contract

(Vide letter dated 28th January, 1967) when they said that the barges will not be completed and even in their letter dated 20th September, 1967 they said:

"No Indian contracts have been or are being carried out by the Joint Liquidators."

Appeal dismissed.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 207 (V 59 C 36)

AMARESH ROY AND A. K. DE, JJ.

Sukumar Bysack, Plaintiff-Appellant
v. Sushil Kanta Banerjee, Defendant-Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 520 of 1967, D/- 7-5-1971.

(A) Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 91, 92—
Oral evidence to show real nature of the transaction was admissible and is not barred by Ss. 91 and 92.

Sections 91 and 92 do not preclude the defendant from showing by evidence that though the document was executed in the form of an agreement for sale of land, the real nature of transaction was a loan for which the document was a security. AIR 1936 PC 70 & ILR (1956) 1 Cal 59 & AIR 1954 Cal 48 and AIR 1954 Cal 379 & AIR 1967 Cal 351 & (1966) 70 Cal WN 982, Followed. (Para 11)

(B) Specific Relief Act (1877), Ss. 20, 22 — Contract for sale — Hard and unconscionable bargain — Discretion to enforce specific performance must not be exercised arbitrarily but judicially — Decree for refund of earnest money to plaintiff with interest modified in second appeal to one of specific performance owing to lapse of time since contract was entered into.

The discretion of Court to enforce specific performance in cases where the bargain in question has been established by evidence to be hard and unconscionable, cannot be exercised arbitrarily and must be exercised judicially in the circumstances of each case. (Para 12)

Where in a suit for specific performance of an agreement for sale, the bargain was found to be not merely improvident or for inadequate consideration but definitely unconscionable, it would be inequitable to enforce performance of contract, and at best the plaintiff could be entitled to a refund of earnest money with stipulated interest. It was held by the High Court in second appeal that such a decree passed by the courts below in favour of the plaintiff would be in proper and judicial exercise of discretion of court for balancing equities between the parties. (Para 12) years had elapsed since the contract was entered into and also from the date when the suit was instituted), it was held by the High Court that the decree made in favour of the plaintiff would be unjust and inequitable to him. Taking all the matters into consideration the High Court held that it would be just and equitable to both the parties to modify the decree to the extent that if within the stipulated date the plaintiff appellant deposited in the trial court Rs. 15,000/- in cash to be paid to the defendant respondent, there should be a decree for specific performance of the agreement for sale against the defendant and in favour of the plaintiff. If the said amount was not deposited within the prescribed date, the decree passed in the suit by the lower courts would stand affirmed.

AMARESH ROY, J.:— This appeal is by the Plaintiff in a suit for specific performance of a contract alleged to be a contract for sale of immovable properties. Plaintiff had also prayed in the suit for possession of the disputed properties by evicting the defendant therefrom and other ancillary reliefs. Plaintiffs lost in the original court of Subordinate Judge and also in the appeal. Hence this Second Appeal has been preferred in this Court.

2. Plaintiff's case was that defendant was the owner of the disputed properties and he had agreed to sell those to the plaintiff for a consideration of Rs. 8000/-. On 23-12-1958 an agreement for sale was executed and registered between the parties, the plaintiff having paid Rs. 3,500/- as earnest money. It was agreed that defendant shall make out a good and marketable title, deliver the title deeds and connected papers within two days from the date of registration of the agreement, clear the mortgage of the property created by him in favour of Government of West Bengal within 21 days from the date of agreement by paying up the dues of the mortgagee out of the earnest money and complete the transaction of sale within 30 days from the date of delivery of title deeds. Plaintiff alleged that he was ready and willing to pay the balance consideration and made repeated demands on the defendant to comply with the terms of the agreement but the defendant failed to do so. At the same time plaintiff also alleged that the defendant not having disclosed or paid up the dues of Government under the mortgage and also monies due to the Municipality and Calcutta Electric Supply Corporation, the plaintiff is entitled to withhold a portion of the consideration money for clearing those liabilities.

3. Defendant contested the suit. His case is that plaintiff really advanced a sum of Rs. 2232/- as loan at a time the defendant was in urgent need of money for maintaining his big family. The document in the form of agreement for sale was executed as security for the said loan and plaintiff gave assurances that the transaction shall be treated as a loan and security for that loan. Defendant contended that the plaintiff at best can claim refund of the earnest money with 6 per cent. interest thereon.

4. At the trial evidence was given on both sides. While on the plaintiff's side reliance was placed mainly on the registered document proved in evidence and marked Ext. 1 and a bunch of letters marked Ex. 2 series; on the side of the defendant also reliance was placed on some of the clauses in Ex. 1 and contents of letters Ex. 2 series by examining several witnesses to show the real nature of the transaction and the surrounding circumstances in which the transaction was entered into in support of the defendant's case that the transaction was really a loan and the document Ex. 1 was executed as a security for that loan. Some of those witnesses are persons who were present at the transaction and attested the document Ex. 1.

5. Facts brought out in evidence and accepted by both the Courts below are that defendant came to India as a refugee from East Bengal leaving all his property in that country. He has a large family to maintain and look after. He purchased the land in suit measuring about 2 cottas 9 chittaks at a consideration of Rs. 6250/-. Then he took a loan from Government of an amount of Rupees 3250/- for building a house on that land. The property at the time of the transaction evidenced by Ex. 1 consisted of an one storied building having three bed rooms, one Verandah, one C. I. roofed room and sanitary privy and a ringwell. Defendant testified that he spent about Rs. 15,000/- for those structures. Value of the property at the relevant time according to the estimate of D. W. 1 who is an Engineer and expert would not be less than Rs. 21,000/-. Correspondence by letters Ex. 2 series shows that plaintiff's definite case was that the defendant had failed to make out good marketable title and had neither cleared the liability to Government under mortgage nor paid the dues of the Municipality and Calcutta Electric Supply Corporation.

6. A question however was raised whether evidence to show that nature of the transaction was loan and not an agreement for sale of immovable property could be adduced in view of the registered document Ex. 1. Both the courts below held by referring to decisions cited that oral evidence to show real nature of the transaction was admissible and is not barred by the provisions in Ss. 91 and 92 of Evidence Act.

7. Taking into consideration evidence on record, the surrounding circumstances and probabilities of events particularly the several terms in Ex. 1 and definite stand taken by plaintiff as evidenced by letters Ex. 2 series the trial court held that real transaction was one of a loan of Rs. 2232/- at an interest of 6 per cent. per annum and Ex. 1 was executed as security for that loan. It is not an agreement of sale at all, though the document Ex. 1 was executed in that form. The parties never intended that the Bainapatra (Ex. 1) would be given effect to except as a security for the loan. In the terms of the deed particularly in Cls. 3, 4 and 5, the defendant not having made out a good marketable title, as in the plaintiff's definite case, Cl. 8 of the deed Ex. 1 can be enforced that the defendant shall refund the earnest money with interest at the rate of 6 per cent p. a.

8. The learned Subordinate Judge also held that even if the agreement for sale is effective, the plaintiff cannot obtain a decree for specific performance either as of right or as a matter of course. Court has a discretion in the matter of granting an equitable remedy and that discretion should be exercised by taking into consideration all the surrounding circumstances and equity of the bargain. Plaintiff's claim for a decree for specific performance of contract of sale was disallowed but a decree in his favour directing defendant to refund the earnest money with interest was passed in the trial court.

9. Plaintiff appealed against that decree. The appellate Court agreed with the findings of facts arrived at by the trial court and also held that on the authority of Privy Council decision in AIR 1936 PC 70, (Tyagaraja Mudaliyar v. Vedathanni) Sections 91 and 92 of Evidence Act do not preclude the defendant from showing by evidence that though the document was executed in the form of an agreement for sale, the real nature of transaction was a loan for which the document was a security. The appellate Court also held on the authority of the decision of this Court in the case of Haradhan Deb Nath v. Bhagabati Dasi, ILR 41 Cal 852 (853) = (AIR 1914 Cal 137) that Section 20 read with Sec. 22 of Specific Relief Act gives discretion to Court not to enforce specific performance in cases where bargain appears to be so hard as to be unconscionable, so that its actual performance would in the circumstances be inequitable. Being of the view that the discretion has been rightly exercised by the Subordinate Judge, the appellate Court affirmed the decree passed in the trial court and dismissed the appeal with costs.

10. Plaintiff has preferred this Second Appeal from that judgment and decree of the appellate Court. Appearing in support of the appeal the learned Advocate Mr. Lala acknowledged that on questions of fact, the concurrent findings of the Courts below are conclusive and cannot be reopened. But Mr. Lala sought to argue two points as question of law. First, he contended that the Courts below are not correct in overruling the objection of admissibility of evidence to show that facts are contrary to what appears unambiguously in the written contract. To answer this contention on behalf of the Respondents the learned Advocate Mr. Banerjee has relied on the Privy Council decision cited by the Courts below and also on later decisions of this Court explaining the scope of Secs. 91 and 92 of Evidence Act (See ILR (1956) 1 Cal 59, Manindra Nath Bose v. Narendra Kishore Mitra; (AIR 1954 Cal 48, Sukumar Banerjee v. Hiralal Chatterjee); (AIR 1954 Cal 379 (381), Satish Chandra Saha v. The State); (70 Cal WN 139 = (AIR 1967 Cal 351), Banku Behari Chadra v. Sm. Kalyani Devi); ((1966) 70 Cal WN 982, Budhu Sau v. Mangal Sau)).

11. We agree with the contention of Mr. Banerjee that the Courts below have correctly applied the law and have not committed any error in following the decision of the Privy Council and later decisions of this Court above referred to.

12. Only other point raised by Mr. Lala for Appellant before us is the use of discretion of Court for granting equitable relief by enforcing specific performanance. Mr. Lala is right in asserting that the discretion cannot be exercised arbitrarily and must be exercised judicially in the circumstances in each case. He did not contend that Court has no discretion at all and is compelled to grant the relief of specific performance of a contract that has been established by evidence. His contention was that discretion has not been judicially and properly exercised for rejecting the claim of specific performance of the contract proved in this case. That contention does not appear to us to be sound. In the circumstances of the present case and on evidence on record both the Courts below have found that the transaction was in fact not a contract for sale of land, but only a transaction of loan. Then only the Courts below considered the aspect that even if it is an agreement for sale of land on the terms of that contract plaintiff is entitled to a decree for enforcing Cl. 8 thereof because plaintiff's own case is that Cls. 3, 4 and 5 have not been complied with by defendant and he having failed to make out a good marketable title plaintiff is entitled at best to a decree for refund of the earnest money mentioned in Ex. 1 with interest as stipulated in Cl. 8 of that document. That is a decision must in favour of the plaintiff and has been made in proper and judicial exercise of discretion for balancing equities between the parties. On the findings of the Courts below, to enforce performance of contract of sale, would be inequitable because the bargain was not merely improvident or for inadequate consideration but was definitely unconscionable. We agree with that finding.

13. Mr. Lala then argued that more than 12 years have elapsed since the contract was entered into and also from the date when the suit was instituted. In the changed circumstances by lapse of time, the decree made in favour of the plaintiff will be unjust and inequitable to him. Mr. Lala therefore prayed for modification of the decree suitably on equitable grounds. Mr. Banerjee for the Respondent indicated that his client will not object to stand in the way of suitable modification of the decree for doing justice and equity between the parties that this Court may think proper.

14. Taking all matters into consideration we hold that it will be just and equitable to both parties to modify the decree to the extent that if within 30th of June 1971 the plaintiff deposits in the trial court Rs. 15,000/- in cash to be paid to the defendant, there shall be a decree for specific performance of the agreement for sale against the defendant and in favour of the plaintiff. If the said amount of Rs. 15,000 is not deposited by plaintiff within 30th June next, the decree passed in the suit shall stand affirmed. With that modification of the decree the appeal is dismissed without costs.

DE, J.:— 15. I agree.

Order accordingly.

Rajlakshmi Dassi Bechulal Das, Plaintiff v. Krishna Chaitanya Das Mohanta, Defendant.

Testamentary Suit No. 3 of 1969, D/- 13-1-1971.

(A) Succession Act (1925), S. 222 — Application for probate — Delay—Effect.

If there is positive proof of execution of the will by oral and documentary evidence delay, by itself cannot be a ground for refusing grant of probate. Further if suspicious circumstances can be given a possible explanation court should not refuse grant of probate when the attesting witnesses have otherwise proved voluntary execution of the will and the testamentary capacity of the testator. (Para 8)

(B) Succession Act (1925), S. 63 — Proof of execution.

The evidence should be examined collectively and in doing so oral, documentary and surrounding circumstances should be taken into consideration. Before an evidence is rejected on grounds of discrepancies the court must satisfy itself that those discrepancies cannot be explained on account of defective memory, failing power of observation. JUDGMENT:— In this matter the Will of one Sm. Rajlakshmi Dassi of No. 7, Fariapukur Street, now known as

AP/BP/A4/72/RSK

Sibdas Bhaduri Street. Calcutta has been challenged by the defendant, hereinafter described as "Mohanta." According to the plaintiff, Bechulal Das, the sole executor, Rajlakshmi executed her will on November 28, 1929 and thereafter on December 18, 1929 she died. Under the said will the testatrix has provided for a life interest in the said premises No. 7 Fariapukur Street in favour of her younger sister Sm. Saraswati Dassi. It is also provided that on the death of Sm. Saraswati Dassi the brother of the testatrix Shri Gopal Chandra Das and his daughter Sm. Jagatmohini Dassi shall enjoy the said property in equal shares during the period of lifetime of each of them. The Will further states that on the death of the said Gopal Chandra Das and Sm. Jagatmohini Dassi 5 persons, i.e. Surendra Nath Das, Ganendra Nath Das, Ananda Nath Das, Dwijendra Nath Ghosh and the plaintiff Bechulal Das will get the said property in equal shares absolutely. The testatrix under the Will also devised to the plaintiff Bechulal Das her 1/3rd share absolutely in a brick built house at Nabadwip immediately on her death. On December 17, 1933 Saraswati and Jagatmohini separately executed two wills in respect of their respective 1/3rd share in the Nabadwip property in favour of the said Mohanta. On December 2, 1944 Mohanta made an application in Nadia for probate of the will of Saraswati (probate Case No. 101/1944). Some time in 1947 Gopal Chandra Das died. The plaintiff and Jagatmohini contested the probate proceeding in respect of Saraswati's will and also filed written statement on October 6, 1947 probate was granted to Mohanta in respect of the will of Saraswati and simultaneously a compromise took place. In the said proceedings it was agreed that Mohanta will sell 1/3rd share of Saraswati in premises No. 111, Bowbazar Road, Nabadwip to Bechulal and in fact the sale took place on Oct. 7, 1947 and the probate was granted to Mohanta on October 10, 1947. On March 15, 1958 Jagatmohini died. Mohanta who was also the executor of Jagatmohini's will applied for probate. in the Court at Nadia. Bechulal contested the said probate proceedings and filed a written statement where he mentioned the existence of Rajlakshmi's will. Bechulal contested the said probate proceedings, but towards the later part of the hearing he did not appear and consequently probate was granted to Mohanta on April 9, 1962. On September 20, 1963 Mohanta filed a suit in this court against Bechulal claiming the Calcutta property under the will of Jagatmohini. In the said suit on February 11, 1964 Bechulal filed a written statement. On June 6, 1967 Bechulal made an application before this court for grant of probate to him as the executor to Rajlakshmi's will. On July 29, 1967 probate was granted to Bechulal in common from without special citation in favour of Mohanta. On March 5, 1968 Mohanta's suit appeared in the list of Deb. J. for hearing. Next day Bechulal's solicitor sent a copy of the probate to Mohanta's solicitor stating that under Rajlakshmi's will Mohanta had no right, title and interest in the Calcutta property. On July 30, 1968 on the application of Mohanta the said order for grant of probate of Rajlakshmi's will to Bechulal was revoked by consent. On September 3, 1968 Mohanta entered caveat and the present proceeding before me arises out of Bechulal's original application for grant of probate. Mohanta is seriously challenging the existence and the validity of Rajlakshmi's will. The following issues have been raised and settled:—

Issues.

1. Is the alleged will genuine?
2. Was it validly executed?
3. Did the testatrix have testamentary capacity at the time of execution of the said will?
4. To what relief, if any, is the petitioner entitled?

In my view the evidence relating to issues Nos. 1, 2 and 3 may conveniently be discussed together.

2. The first witness called by Bechulal is Durgagati Chakraborty, a retired Government servant of 69 years age. His evidence may be stated as follows.

He knew Rajlakshmi personally who died on December 18, 1929. He frankly has admitted that Bechulal was his friend and occasionally he went to visit him at his house and in that connection he came to know Rajlakshmi. Bechulal used to call Rajlakshmi 'pisima' i.e. paternal aunt and was residing with her at No. 7 Fariapukur Street. On November 28, 1929 at about 3 p.m. he went to Rajlakshmi's house. He went there and found some witnesses there; Rajlakshmi was present and her younger sister Saraswati was also present. He went there at the request of Bechulal who asked him to be present there for being a witness to the execution of the said will. One Ashutosh Ghosh read over the will to Rajlakshmi and after hearing the contents of the said will she approved the same. Thereafter she put her signature in his presence and after her signature, Sunit Chandra Mitra, a pleader and Dr. M. L. Sarkar and thereafter Ashutosh Ghosh and Nidharam put their signatures one after another. He signed the document after all of them. He has identified the will and also encircled the signature of Rajlakshmi, himself and other witnesses i.e. Sunit Chandra Mitra, Dr. M. L. Sarkar and Nidhuram. According to him all the signatures were made at the same sitting. He in fact identified the signature of Rajlakshmi in all the pages of the will (Q. 19 to 47). Various questions were put in the cross-examination by Mr. Banerjee on behalf of the said Mohanta. In answer to Q. 178 he said that Rajlakshmi was not very much conversant with reading and writing and the substance of the will was read over to her. Rajlakshmi could not read and write but could just put her signature somehow (Q. 179).

3. Mr. Ghosh on behalf of the plaintiff next called Sunit Chandra Mitra a lawyer of 74 years age. The substance of his evidence may thus be stated. He has identified his own signature and also the signatures of Rajlakshmi and Ashutosh Ghosh in the will. Apart from Ashutosh Ghosh he has also mentioned Durgagati Chakraborty. According to him about 8 or 10 persons were present at the time of the execution of the will. Ashutosh, who happens to be a distant relation one day came to him and took him to the house of Rajlakshmi. He introduced him to Rajlakshmi and told him that she had decided to get her will executed and also wanted him to be the witness in that will. Sunit however, told Ashutosh that as he received his licence recently he suggested the help of his senior lawyer Nalini Nath Ghosh an advocate in Alipore Court. Thereafter Sunit took Ashutosh to Nalini Babu. The will was written out by Haridas Ghosh, the clerk of Nalini Babu. On the date of execution Ashutosh took him to Rajlakshmi's house at Fariapukur Street where he saw two or three persons present. Few other persons came thereafter. Ashutosh called Rajlakshmi and she came there and Ashutosh read over the document to Rajlakshmi. Rajlakshmi approved the same and put her signature (Q. 40). He has identified his own signature and also that of Rajlakshmi in the will. He has been shown an endorsement below the signature of Rajlakshmi which reads as follows:—

"The testatrix of this will Sm. Rajlakshmi Dassi signs in our presence having perused it and she is known well to us."

He had admitted that the said endorsement was done by him after Rajlakshmi and the attesting witnesses put their respective signatures. He did the same as he thought that with such endorsement the will would not be complete (Q. 42-47). According to him Rajlakshmi was well at the time of the execution of the will and he has denied that Rajlakshmi was completely bed ridden or in a comatose condition on that date. In cross-examination the questions have been asked whether Rajlakshmi read out the will herself. His definite answer is that she did not read the will herself and the endorsement which he added was incorrect. He reiterated that such an endorsement was made by him as he thought wrongly that such endorsement was necessary (Q. 140 to 157). He has frankly admitted that many persons signed the will but among them he remembers Ashutosh and Durgagati Chakraborty (Q. 186). The evidence of this witness has impressed me inasmuch as he has given the evidence frankly. He has admitted his mistakes and his ignorance in the matter of the preparation of a will. He appears to me to be a truthful witness.

4. The next witness is Bechulal Das, the propounder of the will. Although he was not one of the attesting witnesses he was present at the time of the execution of the will (Q. 7). This witness happens to be a distant relation of Rajlakshmi and was earning his livelihood by private tuition since the age of 13 or 14. He is now 68 years old. He also served M/s. Martin Burn & Co. from 1936 to 1956. But as he fell seriously ill he had to retire prematurely. He has explained the circumstances under which the will was executed (Q. 30 to 94). Rajlakshmi expressed her desire to make a will whereby she wanted to settle her properties in a particular manner. Her sisters Saraswati and Jagatmohini were childless widows and were living with her in the said premises at No. 7 Fariapukur Street. It is Bechulal's evidence that since 1929 he used to stay with his own family members and also his elder brother and his family members in the said house with Rajlakshmi, Saraswati and Jagatmohini. Rajlakshmi wanted that after her death Saraswati Dassi should get a life-estate in the said Calcutta property and after her death Gopal Ch. Das, and Jagatmohini will have a life-estate and thereafter the Calcutta property was to be divided among 5 persons including Bechulal. It was her definite desire that 1/3rd of the property at Nabawdip would be given to Bechulal absolutely after her death. Accordingly this will was later executed in accordance with her desire with the help of Bechulal's friend Ashutosh, Sunit Mitra one of the distant relatives of Ashutosh and also Nalini Nath Ghosh the senior lawyer of Sunit Mitra. Ashutosh brought Nalini Babu to Rajlakshmi's house. He introduced him to Rajlakshmi and thereafter Rajlakshmi gave him instruction to draft a will. Nalini Babu drafted the said will but he expressed his unwillingness to sign as an attesting witness as he was busy. The will as drafted by Nalini Babu was handed over to Rajlakshmi and the said will was executed on the 28th

November 1929 in presence of the attesting witnesses who were earlier informed about the date of the execution of the will (Q. 38 to 63). Bechulal has corroborated other witness on material points. Although his evidence has got to be examined with caution inasmuch as he being the propounder and also a legatee is naturally very much interested in getting the probate. Durgagati, Sunit and Bechulal have given evidence that Rajlakshmi understood the contents of the will and put her signature in the will at the same sitting and in the presence of Dr. M. L. Sarkar and Nidhiram Das. Rajlakshmi has put her signature not only at the bottom of the last page of the will but also put her signatures on 4 other pages of the same.

5. Mr. Banerjee on behalf of the Mohanta has strenuously argued that the probate should not be granted to Bechulal inasmuch as there are extraordinary circumstances which show that the alleged will of Rajlakshmi is not genuine. It is now necessary to discuss Mr. Banerjee's objections. Firstly, the inordinate delay on the part of Bechulal in making an application for the grant of probate 38 years after the execution of the will has not been satisfactorily explained, and, as such, the court should consider this fact as a suspicious circumstance which cannot justify grant of probate to Bechulal. I agree with Mr. Banerjee that this unusual delay on the part of Bechulal in making an application to this court for grant of probate raises doubt as to the genuineness of the will. The will was executed on November 28, 1929. Rajlakshmi died on December 18, 1929. Bechulal, the executor of the will, did not apply to this court for grant of probate until June 6, 1967. Admittedly, Mohanta was known to Bechulal. Mohanta was the executor to the wills of Rajlakshmi's sister Saraswati and also her brother's daughter Jagatmohini which were executed on the same day i.e. on December 17, 1933. On December 2, 1944 Mohanta made an application in the Nadia court for probate of the will of Saraswati. In the said probate proceedings written statements were filed by Bechulal along with Jagatmohini. The most natural thing on the part of Bechulal would be to mention the existence of the will in the said written statement but he did not do so. Mr. Banerjee continues to argue that obviously Bechulal was not relying on Rajlakshmi's will for the simple reason that the same was never executed by Rajlakshmi. At first this argument of Mr. Banerjee impressed me and I was satisfied that Rajlakshmi's will never existed. It must have been manufactured subsequently by Bechulal to grab the Calcutta property. But on examination of other evidence and the surrounding circumstances I am satisfied that the delay cannot be fatal to Bechulal's application as the delay has been explained satisfactorily.

6. Saraswati had 1/3rd share in the Nabadwip property which she gave to Mohanta by her will. In Nabadwip property Gopal Das and Rajlakshmi also had 1/3rd share each. After Gopal's death Jagatmohini became entitled to his 1/3rd share. Rajlakshmi's 1/3rd share was the subject-matter of her alleged will. In the probate proceedings of Saraswati's will the properties belonging to Rajlakshmi were not directly affected. If the property of Rajlakshmi was also the subject-matter of Saraswati's will it would have been considered relevant. Saraswati did not dispose of any property belonging to Rajlakshmi, Bechulal and Jagatmohini, however, challenged the genuineness of the will on other grounds and naturally Bechulal's evidence on this point to the effect that it was not necessary for him to mention about Rajlakshmi's will in the said proceedings should be accepted. On the contrary, it is surprising that Mohanta has compromised the said probate proceedings of Saraswati's will and agreed to sell 1/3rd share of Saraswati in Nabadwip property to Bechulal. This is quite consistent with the evidence of Bechulal that Mohanta had knowledge of Rajlakshmi's will and Bechulal's claim as the owner to Rajlakshmi's 1/3rd share in Nabadwip property under Rajlakshmi's will. As the Calcutta property was not the subject-matter of the probate proceeding of Saraswati's will Bechulal thought that it was not necessary to mention Rajlakshmi's will. There is logic in the case of Bechulal when he has stated that it was not necessary for him to mention about Rajlakshmi's will in the probate proceedings of Saraswati's will. In the affidavit of assets filed by Mohanta the Calcutta property was not included. Saraswati's probate proceedings took place in 1944. In fact Mohanta himself came to know from the Corporation records in 1959 that Saraswati was recorded as the owner of the Fariapukur Street property. Thus Rajlakshmi's will was not a relevant factor in the probate proceedings of Saraswati's will in 1944 vide Mohanta Q. 275-285, 505-616 and Ext. "E". In this connection reference may be made to the recital in the deed of conveyance which was executed by Mohanta in favour of Bechulal in 1947 in respect of Saraswati's 1/3rd share in Nabadwip property as stated above where it is stated that Mohanta was selling Saraswati's 1/3rd share in Nabadwip property to Bechulal who had also a share therein. (vide page 7 of Ext. E.). This recital substantiates the fact that Mohanta had knowledge of the existence of Rajlakshmi's will and Bechulal's claim under the same. In fact no satisfactory explanation has been given by Mohanta as to the reason why he agreed to sell 1/3rd share of Saraswati in Nabadwip property to Bechulal. It was suggested to Bechulal in cross-examination that Mohanta never examined the deed of conveyance but Mohanta stated in his evidence that he only examined the portion relating to the consideration money and the description of the property sold and did not take care to read the rest of the document. But it is difficult to accept this evidence of Mohanta inasmuch as the very sentence which refers to the consideration money contains also the fact that Bechulal had a share in the property: vide Mohanta Q. 294-350. Further Saraswati died in 1940 whereas Gopal died in 1947. If Rajlakshmi died intestate her Calcutta property was to be inherited by her brother Gopal and in the Corporation record Gopal's name should have been mentioned but as Mohanta himself has admitted that the Corporation record showed the name of Saraswati. This fact also supports existence of Rajlakshmi's will inasmuch as under Rajlakshmi's will Saraswati during her lifetime was entitled to enjoy the Calcutta property vide Ext. (w). It should also be remembered that both the wills of Saraswati and Jagatmohini were executed in 1933, i.e. about 4 years after the death of Rajlakshmi. But the said wills did not mention the Calcutta property at all. The omission of Calcutta property in the said wills is consistent with provisions of Rajlakshmi's will that the property ultimately could vest in 5 legatees including Bechulal. Further the appointment of Mohanta as the executor of Saraswati's and Jagatmohini's will shows that Saraswati and Jagatmohini had confidence in Mohanta. It is extraordinary that Saraswati and Jagatmohini never told Mohanta during their lifetime that either of them was the owner of the Calcutta property left by Rajlakshmi. According to Mohanta he came to know about the Saraswati's ownership in the Calcutta property after a search of Corporation records in 1959. Jagatmohini died after the Act of 1956 came into force. If Jagatmohini knew that she was really the owner of Calcutta property being the heir of Rajlakshmi she could have mentioned the Calcutta property by executing a Codicil. She did not do so nor did Mohanta remind her to do the same. On the contrary, the non-inclusion of Calcutta property in any document in 1957 and 1958 shows that Jagatmohini had knowledge of the fact that Rajlakshmi under her will bequeathed the Calcutta property to Bechulal and four others absolutely subject to the life estate of Saraswati and Jagatmohini.

7. In the probate proceedings of Jagatmohini's will (probate case No. 69 of 1970) before the District Judge, Nadia, Bechulal contested the grant of probate to Mohanta and the probate case was marked as a contentious cause and numbered as P. C. No. 10 of 1960. Bechulal in his written statement challenged the will on the ground of undue influence and coercion and also mentioned the existence of Rajlakshmi's will executed about 30 years ago. It was necessary for Bechulal to mention the existence of Rajlakshmi's will on this occasion inasmuch as under the will of Jagatmohini Mohanta was to get all her properties. As stated earlier she did not mention specifically the Calcutta property. But Mohanta on the assumption that Jagatmohini has inherited the Calcutta property as her legal heir under the Hindu Succession Act 1956 claimed the Calcutta property also, which was one of the properties mentioned in Rajlakshmi's will and naturally Bechulal mentioned Rajlakshmi's will in his written statement. According to Bechulal he could not be present at the final hearing of the said testamentary matter on April 9, 1962 when the probate of the will of Jagatmohini was issued in his absence. As Bechulal was in continuous possession of the Calcutta property for more than 30 years Mohanta filed a suit in this court for declaration of his title and recovery of possession. When the said suit was pending on June 6, 1967 Bechulal made an application in this court for the grant of probate of the will of Rajlakshmi (Matter No. 120 of 1967). On July 11, 1967 Bechulal obtained an order for issue of general citation and publication of the same in Dainik Basumati. No citation to Mohanta was prayed for. On July 29, 1967 the probate was granted to Bechulal by this Court. On March 7, 1968 when Mohanta's suit appeared in the list for hearing before Deb. J. the solicitor for Bechulal wrote to Mohanta's solicitor the Bechulal was granted the probate of Rajlakshmi's will. On May 10, 1968 Mohanta made an application to this court for revocation of the grant of probate to Bechulal. On July 30, 1968 the grant of probate was revoked without any contest by Bechulal. Mr. Banerjee has made strong comments of Bechulal's conduct in getting the probate without citation to Mohanta and also in selling 1/3rd share of Rajlakshmi in Nabadwip property for Rs. 1500/- soon after getting the said probate. There is no doubt that this conduct on the part of Bechulal does create a suspicion. But it appears that in Bechulal's application for grant of probate of Rajlakshmi's will he mentioned the claim of Mohanta in the Calcutta property in the pending suit against him. The general citation was published in Dainik Basumati on July 14, 1967 under the orders of the court and the court did not issue any special citation to Mohanta presumably because Bechulal's counsel did not ask for the same. But in any event Mohanta cannot have any grievance now as the said grant of probate was subsequently revoked. Similarly the sale of $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of Rajlakshmi in Nabadwip property by Bechulal cannot be construed as fatal to this application. Mohanta has not claimed any share in Nabadwip property under Rajlakshmi's will. Mohanta's omission to claim Nabadwip property in the pending suit in the Calcutta or elsewhere also corroborates the fact that Mohanta perhaps had knowledge of Rajlakshmi's will whereby Bechulal was given the said property absolutely. Secondly Bechulal got the probate on July 29, 1967 and Bechulal sold his $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of Rajlakshmi in Nabadwip property on April 8, 1968. It is quite possible that Bechulal was in need of money, as he has stated in his evidence, for his family expenses and also for meeting the litigation expenses in the High Court. Thus it cannot be said that the suspicious conduct of Bechulal cannot be explained.

8. The strongest point of Mr. Banerjee is that the court should not exercise its discretion in granting probate to an executor who has applied for the same 37 years after the death of the testator. In support of his contention that delay is not always a ground for refusal of probate, Mr. Ghose has referred me to the following decisions:— Manindra Chandra Lala v. Mahaluxmi Bank Ltd., AIR 1945 PC 105; Durgapada Bera v. Atul Chandra Bera, 41 Cal WN 1204 at pp. 1208-1209 — (AIR 1937 Cal 595); Kristo Gopal Nath v. Baidya Nath Khan, AIR 1939 Cal 87 and Tyrrell v. Painton, (1894) PD 151. In my view if there is positive proof of execution of the will by oral and documentary evidence delay, by itself cannot be a ground for refusing grant of probate. Further if suspicious circumstances can be given a possible explanation court should not refuse grant of probate when the attesting witnesses have otherwise proved voluntary execution of the will and the testamentary capacity of the testator. Reliance may be placed on AIR 1939 Cal 87 (supra); AIR 1945 PC 105 (supra). Bechulal was in possession of the Calcutta property all along and nobody has threatened to dispossess him. The Nabadwip property was tenanted and there is no evidence to show that there was a dispute in respect of the rent of $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of Rajlakshmi. Mohanta could have led evidence to the effect that the rent in respect of the said $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of Rajlakshmi property was being collected by persons other than Bechulal. On the contrary Bechulal's definite evidence is that as he could not have any interest in the Calcutta property until the death of Saraswati and Jagatmohini, he did not think it necessary to apply for a probate. Of course, Bechulal has raised the plea that he did not make the necessary application for want of fund as he has a large family to maintain and also to get several daughters married. Mr. Banerjee has pointed out that Bechulal was earning money as a tutor and also as an employee in Martin Burn Co. and also collected sale proceeds of $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of Saraswati's will and $\frac{1}{3}$ rd share of Rajlakshmi's will in the Nabadwip property. This explanation also does not seem to be very improbable in view of the fact that the sale proceeds would not exceed a sum of about Rs. 2500/-. But Mr. Banerjee laid stress on the fact that even assuming Bechulal had no interest in the Calcutta property until Jagatmohini's death in 1958, there is no justification for his delay in making an application in 1967. On this point also explanation given by Bechulal is not improbable. Jagatmohini died in 1958. Mohanta applied for probate of Jagatmohini's will in June 1960 which may be said to be the first threat to Bechulal's title in the Calcutta property. The said proceeding came to an end on April 9, 1962. On February 2, 1962 I find an affidavit by Ashutosh Ghosh who as an attesting witness has stated that the will was duly attested. On September 20, 1962 Mohanta filed a suit in this court for declaration of title in respect of the Calcutta property. Bechulal had to get money to contest the said suit and also to make an application for grant of probate of Rajlakshmi's will in this court. As the said suit was not ready for hearing he was not keen to make the application earlier. In June 1967 when Mohanta's suit appeared in the list for hearing he must have been advised to make the necessary application for grant of probate which he did on June 6, 1967. It may be remembered that Bechulal filed a written statement on February 11, 1964 and also affidavit of documents on March 20, 1964. Even assuming that his plea of financial difficulties is rejected in my view the delay of about 7 or 8 years cannot by itself warrant the dismissal of this application.

9. There are other reasons why Bechulal's explanation should be accepted. It appears from the oral and documentary evidence that Mohanta had always been stating that Rajlakshmi died in 1920. The obvious reason for making out such a false plea was to prove that the will could not have been executed in 1929. Secondly, Mohanta's evidence that Rajlakshmi was in a state of coma in November, 1929 cannot be accepted inasmuch as according to Mohanta himself he did not visit Rajlakshmi for more than two occasions. In fact different versions were given by Mohanta as to the number of his visits to Rajlakshmi. Thirdly, there is also evidence to show that in connection with the present proceedings Mohanta was going to several attesting witnesses with the obvious object to dissuading the witnesses from giving evidence in the present proceeding. Fourthly, as stated earlier, the deed of conveyance by which he sold Saraswati's 1/3rd share in Nabadwip property to Bechulal shows that Bechulal had shares in Nabadwip property. This fact supports Bechulal's case that Mohanta had knowledge of his right under Rajlakshmi's will. Fifthly, as stated earlier Saraswati's will and Jagatmohini's will did not contain any reference to the Calcutta property. Sixthly, in the Corporation assessment record Saraswati was shown as the owner of the Fariapukur property. The inclusion of only Saraswati's name can only be explained by the fact that Saraswati had a life estate under Rajlakshmi's will and, as such, her name was recorded as the owner of the said house during her lifetime. At the time of Saraswati's death the assessment record dated December 29, 1959 shows that Sm. Saraswati Dassi has been described as the owner of the Fariapukur street property. But her name is written above the words, "estate Rajlakshmi Dassi." If Rajlakshmi died intestate there was no reason for mentioning the said words, "estate Rajlakshmi Dassi." It may be remembered that Rajlakshmi died on December 18, 1929 and Saraswati died on October 14, 1940. After Rajlakshmi's death the name of her brother Gopal Chandra Das should have been substituted instead of Saraswati. But the fact that Saraswati's name was mentioned substantiates the petitioner's case. Bechulal was residing with Rajlakshmi in Fariapukur Street since long prior to Rajlakshmi's death. He was living not only with his family but also with his brothers family in the said house. After Rajlakshmi's death Saraswati, Gopal Chandra Das or Jagatmohini never protested against their occupation in the said property. After all Bechulal is a very distant relation and he had no legal right to stay in the said Calcutta house with his family under the law of Intestate Succession. Even Mohanta at any stage never complained to anybody against Bechulal's occupation. These facts show that Bechulal's legal right as executor under Rajlakshmi's will was recognised by Saraswati, Gopal, Jagatmohini and Mohanta.

10. Mr. Banerjee has next contended that Rajlakshmi had no testamentary capacity at the time of the execution of the will inasmuch as she was seriously ill and was living in a semi-conscious condition. This contention of Mr. Banerjee cannot be accepted. Durgagati in his evidence (Q. 23, 197-205, 210-212, 211-215) Sunit in his answers to Q. 40-49, 117, 123, 128, 129, 132, 134, 141, 146 and Bechulal also in his answers to Q. 66 to 79, 166-172, 716-722 have without any contradiction stated the will was read over to Rajlakshmi and she approved the contents of the will and then put her signature on the document. According to Mohanta himself, he was not a regular visitor to the said Calcutta property. There is no evidence to corroborate Mohanta's story that Rajlakshmi could not have executed the will as she was in a comatose condition in the last few months of 1929.

11. Mr. Banerjee has also raised the point that the signatures of Rajlakshmi in the will show that they were not written voluntarily or with ease. No issue of undue influence has been specifically raised. A lawyer, a doctor and Government servant have given evidence to the effect that Rajlakshmi put her signatures in the document in their presence. No admitted signature has been produced so that the court might be in a position to compare her genuine signature with her signatures in the will. Mohanta has not categorically stated that the signatures in the will were not signatures of Rajlakshmi. If it would have been a forged document it was not necessary for the forger to put Rajlakshmi's signature on every page of the will. A forger would not ordinarily make a mistake with respect to the spellings of Rajlakshmi's name. On the contrary, the existence of discrepancies give indication that the will was signed by a person who is not sufficiently literate. In fact, the witnesses in support of the petitioner's case have stated that Rajlakshmi was not literate; vide Durgagati Q. 178, 202, Bechulal Q. 542-544 and for the said reason it is natural for Rajlakshmi to put her signatures with difficulties.

12. Mr. Banerjee has also argued that the will is not a natural document. In my view there is no sufficient force in the said contention. Both Saraswati and Jagatmohini were childless widows and Rajlakshmi had provided a life estate for them. Rajlakshmi allowed Bechulal to stay in the house and naturally Rajlakshmi has made provision for Bechulal along with others after the death of Saraswati and Jagatmohini. No evidence has been adduced to the effect that Rajlakshmi had a great affection for Gopal Das. Nor did I find any evidence showing that Gopal Das was protesting against Bechulal's stay in the family or claiming an interest as an heir in the Calcutta property on intestacy.

13. Lastly Mr. Banerjee has drawn my attention to several contradictions in the evidence of Durgagati Sunit and Bechulal. The first contradiction according to Mr. Banerjee was that their evidence as to the number of persons present at the time of the execution of the will was different. I have carefully examined the evidence of Durgagati (Q. 431-444) Sunit (Q. 40-41, 106-112, 118-121, 181-186 and also Bechulal (Q. 30, 31, 536, 541, 557-581). Most of the witnesses have stated that several persons were present. Sunit has stated that when he came into the house about 2 or 3 persons were there but some other persons came later. Similarly a comment has also been made that Durgagati has stated that the date on which the will was executed was a holiday or a Sunday. But Mr. Banerjee has drawn my attention to the 100 years calendar showing that 28th November 1929 was not a Sunday. There is nothing to show that November 28, 1929 was not a public or a local holiday. Durgagati himself in Q. 19 has stated that most probably it was a holiday. Similarly contradictions have also been pointed out in respect of the subsequent endorsements below the signature of Rajlakshmi in the will as mentioned earlier. Durgagati has also stated with respect to the said endorsement that he cannot remember definitely (Q. 181-183, 193). He was specifically asked whether the endorsement was there when he put his signature on the alleged will. His answer was "Yes". In Q. 193 he was asked whether the endorsement was made after Rajlakshmi has put her signature or before she put her signature. His definite answer is that he cannot exactly remember. In my view the contradictions are not substantial enough to enable me to reject other positive evidence. It should be remembered that the witnesses are giving evidence in 1970 about an incident that happened in 1928-29. Apart from that fact that the witnesses have given their evidence after about 40 years, in my view the evidence should be examined collectively and in doing so oral, documentary and surrounding circumstances should be taken into consideration. Before an evidence is rejected on grounds of discrepancies the court must satisfy itself that those discrepancies cannot be explained on account of defective memory, failing power of observation. Reliance may be placed on Kedar Nath Tushnial v. Raj Kumar Das, 69 Cal LJ 394 at pp. 399, 415 = (AIR 1939 Cal 674) and Kishorilal v. Chunilal, (1908) 13 Cal WN 370 (PC).

14. For all the reasons stated above the issues should be answered in the following manner:—

(1) Yes.

(2) Yes.

(3) Yes.

(4) The probate of the will of Rajlakshmi Dassi dated November 28, 1929 should be granted to the petitioner as the sole executor to have effect throughout the State of West Bengal.

15. In the premises there will be order in terms of prayer "B". The plaintiff will realise the costs out of the estate and the defendant will bear his own costs.

Order accordingly.

ORDER:— This is an application made by Heavy Engineering Corp. Ltd. inter alia for stay of the Suit No. 2388 of 1968 (Crompton Greaves Ltd. v. Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd.) and all proceedings thereunder. On or about 4th October, 1963, the applicant issued a notice bearing No. 4/FF/63 inviting tender for the supply of a Transformer, Switchgear, Circuit Breaker, Isolator, Selenium Rectifier Panel etc. It is alleged that pursuant to the said invitation to tender the respondent's predecessor, one Greaves Cotton Crompton Parkinson Ltd. submitted a tender bearing No. AQ/P7210/SED for the supply of a Transformer. The said tender was accepted. It is alleged by the respondent that the said invitation to tender contained a pamphlet which contained certain special conditions. The respondent alleges that the respondent's predecessor submitted the said tender subject to the said special conditions. The said tender, however, was accepted by the petitioner by a letter dated 24th September, 1964, bearing No. PUR/FFP/35426/EL/64/217. The relevant parts of the invitation to tender are set out below:

IO/JO/E371/71/JRM/AKJ

"Sealed item rate tenders are invited from reputed and experienced suppliers for the supply of machinery and equipment including all accessories for the Foundry Forge Hatia, Ranchi, in respect of the following categories:

The suppliers will be required to give a performance guarantee of the rated capacity of the equipment offered by them and also guarantee for functional output tests on the completion of the erection of the equipment. Tender forms, conditions and specifications of the tender are obtainable from the office of the General Manager, Foundry Forge, Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd, P. O. Hatia, Ranchi, on any working day during the usual working hours from 12th August, 1963 to 31st August, 1963 (both days inclusive) on payment of the following tender fee in cash (non-refundable):

2. The relevant portion of the Acceptance of tender submitted by the letter dated 24th September, 1964, are set out below:

"Your offer for the following items has been accepted as per details given below:

This contract will be governed by our general terms and conditions specified by HEC Ltd. which can be had on payment of Rs. 0.50 np."

3. The said letter contains terms as to price, sales tax, delivery, despatch instructions, insurance, inspection, payment tests and guarantee.

4. The respondent supplied the said Transformer without one Drain Valve and 6850 Litres of Transformer oil of the value of Rs. 10,375/-. On account of the aforesaid the petitioner deducted the said sum of Rs. 10,375.50 P. from the bill for the Transformer as submitted by the respondent. On 22nd September, 1968, the respondent filed a suit in this court being Suit No. 2388 of 1968 (Crompton Greaves Ltd. v. Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd.) for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 14,951.70 P. from the petitioner. The general conditions of contract mentioned in the said letter of acceptance contains an arbitration clause to the following effect:

"15. In the event of any dispute or difference of opinion between the Heavy Engineering Corporation and the contractors as to the respective rights and obligations of the parties hereafter or as to the true intent and meaning of these presents and the many articles or conditions thereto, such dispute or difference of opinion shall be referred to the sole arbitration of the Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation and his decision shall be final, conclusive and binding on the parties."

5. According to the petitioner because of the aforesaid arbitration agreement between the parties which is valid and subsisting this suit must be stayed inasmuch as the subject-matter of the suit concerns matters agreed to be referred under the said arbitration agreement.

6. Mr. Bhaskar Gupta appearing on behalf of the respondent submits that in the instant case, general conditions as per the letter of acceptance formed part of the contract. According to the definition of the word "Chairman" in Cl. 1 (v) of the said general conditions the word "Chairman" means the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Heavy Engineering Corporation Limited and includes the Executive Director, the Controller of Stores and Purchase, the Deputy Controller of Purchase and every other officer authorised to execute contracts relating to purchase and supply of stores on behalf of the Corporation. Thus Mr. Gupta contends that the Arbitrator named in Cl. 15 of the General Conditions of the Contract may mean any of the officers meant by and included in the term "Chairman", in Cl. 1 (v) of the said general conditions of contract. Thus it is not certain as to who is the named arbitrator and so the said arbitration agreement is uncertain and void. It may be lawfully contended by one party that Chairman of the Heavy Engineering Corporation is the Arbitrator while the other party may contend that not the Chairman of the Company but the Executive Director is the named arbitrator. It may also be contended that any of the officers mentioned in Cl. 1 (v) is the named arbitrator. Thus the said clause is void for uncertainty. In support of his contention Mr. Gupta relied on the case of Karanjil and Co. v. Indo-China Trading Co. Ltd., (1952) 56 Cal WN 763 where agreement was to refer the disputes to a Chamber of Commerce in Calcutta. There being many Chambers of Commerce in Calcutta it was not certain as to which Chamber of Commerce was the named arbitrator and thus the agreement was held to be void for uncertainty. Mr. Gupta also relied on the case of Laxmi Chand Baijnath v. Kishanlal Sohanlal, AIR 1955 Cal 588, where the arbitrators were X or Y and thus the arbitration agreement was also held to be void. Shree Bhawani Cotton Mill's case, AIR 1966 Cal 588 and M/s. Teamco Private Ltd. v. T. M. S. Mani, AIR 1967 Cal 168 relied on by Mr. Gupta also lay down the same principle.

7. From a perusal of the different clauses of the general conditions of contract it appears that only in Cl. 5 the words "The Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd." have been used. In Cl. 15 the words "The Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation" have been used. Clause 5 deals with deposit of security by endorsing G. P. Note in favour of the Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd. Clause 15 of course deals with arbitration. In Cl. 6 the word "Chairman" has been used twice; in Clause 7 it has been used thrice while in Clause 9 it has been used 5 times. In clause 11 as well the said word 'Chairman' has been used twice. Thus it appears that the parties used the word "Chairman" in cases where the parties intended that the "Chairman" shall mean and include the Chairman of the Company as well as other officers mentioned in the definition Cl. 1 (v) of the said general conditions. But in cases where the parties intended to refer and mean the Chairman of the Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd., they have used the expression "The Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd." or "the Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation." In any event the definition clause defines the word "Chairman". It does not define or seek to explain the meaning of the words "Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd." or the expression "Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation". The distinctive choice of meaning of the words "Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd." or "The Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation" with meticulous care has been done only to give meaning to the different clauses. The expression "Chairman, Heavy Engineering Corporation" in Cl. 15 only means the Chairman himself and not any other officer of the said Corporation. The parties by agreeing to Cl. 15, agreed that the disputes should be adjudicated upon by an officer of the highest category only to ensure justice and impartiality to stranger contractors. Thus disputes with the Corporation itself have to be decided by the Chairman of the Corporation. Mr. Gupta contends that since a contractor may be a company the words Heavy Engineering Corporation has been added after the word Chairman in Clause 15 to mean only the Chairman of the Heavy Engineering Corporation and not of the contractor where contractor is a company and it does not in any other way distinguish the words from the word "Chairman" as defined in Clause 1 (v).

8. For the reasons stated above I am unable to accept the said contentions of Mr. Gupta.

9. Mr. Gupta then contends that the respondent was invited to submit tender subject to the special conditions of contract which were sent to the respondent together with the notice to tender. The respondent submitted the tender subject to the said special conditions. The said conditions are also applicable to this contract inasmuch as the word 'contract' under general conditions means according to the definition clause "The notice to tender, instruction to tender, the tender, acceptance of tender, — 'Particulars' defined in the said conditions of contract and those general and special conditions that may be added." Thus according to Mr. Gupta the definition clause in the general conditions of contract which certainly is applicable to the contract also attracts and makes applicable the said special conditions of the contract in the instant case. The said special conditions of contract also contains an arbitration clause to the following effect:

"(i) All questions, disputes or differences of any kind whatsoever arising out of or in connection with the contract at any time whether during the currency of the contract or thereafter its completion and during the guarantee period, other than the satisfactory period of completion of the functional or output test of the machinery and equipment and/or their performance during the guarantee period in respect of which the decision of the employer shall be final and binding (hereinafter referred to as "accepted matters") shall be submitted in writing by the supplier to the employer and the employer shall within a reasonable time after the submission of the same make and notify his decision thereon in writing;

(ii) If the supplier is dissatisfied with the decision of the employer or if the employer fails to make a decision within a reasonable time then and in any such case but not including any of the accepted matters, the supplier may demand in writing that such matter in question, dispute or difference be referred to arbitration;

(iii) All such matters to be submitted to arbitration as aforesaid shall be referred for decision to two Arbitrators, one to be nominated by the employer and the other by the supplier. In the event of the two arbitrators being divided in opinion, the matter under dispute shall be referred for decision to an umpire to be appointed by the two arbitrators.

(iv) Unless otherwise agreed upon by the parties the venue of the arbitration proceedings shall be at Ranchi in the State of Bihar, India;

(v) Subject as aforesaid provisions of the Arbitration Act 1940, or any statutory modifications or re-enactment thereof and of the Rules made thereunder for the time being in force shall apply to all arbitration proceedings under this clause."

10. The arbitration clause in general conditions being contrary to the terms of arbitration clause contained in the special conditions it is not certain as to which clause shall prevail and thus both the arbitration clauses are void for uncertainty.

11. Mr. Gupta then contends that the special conditions of contract must prevail over the general conditions and therefore, arbitration clause contained in the special conditions must prevail. The said arbitration clause only confers right upon the respondent to refer the matters to arbitration in certain circumstances mentioned in the said clause. The respondent having instituted the said suit has given a go-by to his right to exercise the option to refer to arbitration and thus this suit must be continued.

12. The arbitration clause in the special conditions although confers the option upon the respondent only, is according to Mr. Gupta, a valid arbitration clause and is binding upon both the parties. Mr. Gupta, in support of his contention, relies on the case of Kedarnath Atma Ram v. Kesoram Cotton Mills Ltd., ILR (1950) 1 Cal 550 (553). Mr. Gupta also relies on Jyoti Brothers v. Shree Durga Mining Co., AIR 1956 Cal 280.

13. Mr. Pal, appearing on the other side, contends that the arbitration clause contained in special conditions is void for want of mutuality.

14. The aforesaid contentions of the parties seems to me to be not necessary to be decided for decision in the instant application for the reasons stated hereinafter. From the relevant portion of the tender notice, a copy whereof has been annexed to the affidavit in opposition filed on behalf of the respondent, it appears that the conditions governing the tender have to be obtained from the office of the General Manager, Foundry Forge, Heavy Engineering Corporation Ltd, at Ranchi. The contract in the instant case was a contract of category 'C' as will appear from the tender notice itself. Thus it is evident that only those conditions which shall be obtained from the office of the said General Manager applicable to this kind of contract will be the conditions applicable to this contract. No such conditions has been stated to have been obtained by or relied upon by the respondent in the instant application.

15. The definition clause of the contract will apply to the contract between the parties — "unless the context otherwise requires the word 'defined' shall mean" as has been laid down in the definition clause. The definition of the word 'contract' lays down that only those general and special conditions that may be added to the contract shall apply to the contract between the parties. No special condition was added to or incorporated in the contract between the parties. But by express words, the general conditions were added to and incorporated in the letter of acceptance of tender. The respondent acted upon the said acceptance of tender and or the said letter and on the terms and conditions mentioned therein. In any event the acceptance of the tender submitted by the respondent having been made only on the terms and conditions contained in the letter of acceptance, the said letter was a counter offer and the respondent having acted upon the said letter of acceptance on the terms contained therein, accepted the said counter offer. Thus even if the tender was submitted subject to the special conditions the said special conditions never became part of the contract between the parties. The said special conditions never applied to the contract between the parties.

16. Thus in any view of the matter the special conditions of the contract are not applicable to the contract in the instant case and there cannot be any contradiction between the arbitration clause contained in the general conditions of contract and the arbitration clause contained in the special conditions of the contract. There is only one arbitration clause applicable to the said contract i.e. Clause 15 of the general conditions of contract.

17. Thus in my opinion there is a valid and subsisting arbitration agreement in the shape of Clause 15 of the said general conditions between the parties.

18. There cannot be any doubt that the subject-matter of the suit involves matters agreed to be referred by the said arbitration agreement. The petitioner was ready and willing to do everything for the proper conduct of the arbitration and has not taken any step in the proceedings. There is no reason whatsoever as to why the stay would not be granted in the instant case.

19. For the reasons stated above this application must succeed. The suit being Suit No. 2388 of 1968 is stayed.

20. Costs of and incidental to this application shall abide by the result of the arbitration proceedings.

Petition allowed.

S. D. Banerjee with B. C. Dutt and Partha Dutt, for Petitioner; R. Choudhury with B. C. Sen, for Opposite Party.

SANKAR PRASAD MITRA, J.:

This Rule has been obtained against order No. 42 dated the 23rd October, 1971 in Miscellaneous Case No. 28 of 1971 (arising out of Title Suit No. 58 of 1970) passed by the Second Subordinate Judge, Alipore. It appears that on the 17th August, 1970, the plaintiff instituted a suit for specific performance of contract for transfer of Aleya Cinema to the plaintiff and, alternatively, for a decree for Rs. 1,12,314.83 and for other reliefs. On November 25, 1970 an ex parte decree was passed in the Suit. The defendant, by this decree, was directed to execute and register a Deed of Transfer in respect of the said Cinema. The decree was sealed and signed on the 5th December, 1970. On January 27, 1971 notice of the Title Execution Case No. 3 of 1971 was stated to have been served on the defendant. Since the defendant did not appear, on the 27th February, 1971, the Court executed an Indenture of Conveyance. On the 1st March, 1971 the conveyance was registered.

2. On April 13, 1971 the defendant made an application under O. 9, R. 13 of the Code on the ground of fraudulent suppression of summons. A Miscellaneous Case was started, being Miscellaneous Case No. 28 of 1971. The learned Trial Judge recorded the evidence of witnesses of both the parties and ultimately came to the conclusion that neither the summons nor the notice of the execution case was served on the defendant. The learned Subordinate Judge set aside, in the premises, the ex parte decree by his order under challenge.

3. Mr. Sankardas Banerjee, learned counsel for the petitioner before us, opened his case by inviting us to consider the depositions of the various witnesses who were examined by the learned Subordinate Judge. Mr. Banerjee wanted us to hold that the evidence adduced by these witnesses had not been properly appreciated. We pointed out to him that in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction we could not go into these questions. It may be that the Subordinate Judge is in error in his appraisal of the evidence adduced before him. But unless the error is a jurisdictional error, either of law or of fact, while exercising our powers under Section 115 of the Code, we cannot interfere with the order passed by him. In this connection it would be enough to refer to one of the earlier decisions of the Supreme Court as also to its latest decision. In the case of Keshardeo Chamria v. Radha Kishan Chamria, 1953 SCR 136 = (AIR 1953 SC 23), it has been pointed out that as the order of the Subordinate Judge was one that he had jurisdiction to make and as he had, in making that order, neither acted in excess of his jurisdiction nor with material irregularities nor committed any breach of procedure, the High Court acted in excess of its revisional jurisdiction under Section 115 of the Code and the order of remand and all proceedings taken subsequent to that order were illegal. The Supreme Court categorically reiterated that Section 115 applied to matters of jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it, and if a subordinate Court had jurisdiction to make the order it had made and had not acted in breach of any provision of law or committed any error of procedure which was material and might have affected the ultimate decision, the High Court had no power to interfere however profoundly it might differ from the conclusions of that court on questions of fact or law.

4. The latest decision of the Supreme Court to which our attention has been drawn, is the decision in M/s. D. L. F. Housing & Construction Co. (P.) Ltd. v. Sarup Singh reported in AIR 1971 SC 2324. In paragraph 8 at page 2327 it has been observed that while exercising the jurisdiction under Section 115, it is not competent to the High Court to correct errors of fact however gross or even errors of law unless the said errors have relation to the jurisdiction of the Court to try the dispute itself. The Supreme Court says further that the words "illegally" and "with material irregularity" as used in Cl. (c) of Section 115 do not cover either errors of fact or of law, they do not refer to the decision arrived at but merely to the manner in which it is reached. The errors contemplated by this clause may, according to the Supreme Court, relate either to breach of some provision of law or to material defects of procedure affecting the ultimate decision, and not to errors either of fact or of law, after the prescribed formalities have been complied with. The Supreme Court, on the facts before it, has warned that merely because the High Court would have felt inclined had it dealt with the matter initially, to come to a different conclusion on the question of continuing stay of the reference proceedings pending decision of the appeal, could hardly justify interference in revision under Section 115 of the Code when there was no illegality or material irregularity committed by the Additional District Judge concerned in his manner of dealing with the question.

5. In view of all these well-settled principles it is unnecessary for us to discuss in this judgment the various points which Mr. Banerjee has urged in support of his contention that the Trial Judge has committed errors in his appreciation of the evidence led before him on behalf of the parties. Learned Counsel realised that our jurisdiction in this matter was limited and proceeded to make two substantial contentions. These contentions were: (1) if the defendant Company's case was that service of the summons and service of notice of the execution case were tainted with fraud the remedy lay not in an application under Order 9, Rule 13 but in a properly constituted Suit and (2) an application under Order 9, Rule 13 was not maintainable when an ex parte decree had already been satisfied through execution proceedings duly launched.

6. Mr. Banerjee did not cite any specific authorities in aid of any of his contentions aforesaid. But he cited the case in AIR 1960 Cal 309, (Atul Chandra Sarkar v. East Bengal Commercial Bank Ltd.) which, according to him, gave some support to his first contention. In this case the first defendant East Bengal Commercial Bank Limited obtained a decree in the High Court against the plaintiff and the second defendant, Oriental Trading syndicate, on an overdraft amount on the 20th July, 1949. It was an ex parte decree. The plaintiff Atul Chandra Sarkar did not make any application for setting aside the ex parte decree or prefer any appeal therefrom. He filed a suit on January 21, 1949 claiming a declaration that the ex parte decree of the 20th July, 1948 was void and of no effect and asked that the decree be set aside. The allegations in the plaint were:

(i) On March 16, 1946 an agreement was made by and between the Bank on the one hand and the plaintiff and the second defendant on the other whereby the Bank was to lend to the second defendant the sum of Rs. 5,000/- against securities of bills drawn or to be drawn by the firm, such loan to be guaranteed by the plaintiff.

(ii) In pursuance of this agreement various sums of money were advanced by the Bank to the firm and bills deposited by the firm were collected by the Bank and appropriated towards its dues.

(iii) On May 31, 1946 the plaintiff revoked the said guarantee by notice in writing.

(iv) On May 31, 1946 a sum not exceeding Rs. 3581/6/9 was due by the second defendant to the bank and a number of bills drawn by the second defendant and exceeding the abovementioned sum remained with the bank for collection and appropriation.

(v) Thereafter the firm deposited various bills with the Bank which were duly collected by the Bank thus wiping out the liability of the firm.

(vi) In November, 1948 the Bank purported to execute the decree made on 20-7-1948 and caused to be attached various properties belonging to the plaintiff.

(vii) The writ of Summons was never served upon the plaintiff who had no opportunity to defend the suit filed by the bank."

7. It was also stated in the plaint that "..... the said decree was obtained ex parte fraudulently by suppression of the summons and by perpetrating a fraud upon the Court by suppression of material facts, in particular by suppression of the fact as to the revocation of the guarantee by the plaintiff as aforesaid."

8. This Court came to the conclusion that the suit was not maintainable. According to this Court mere non-service of summons is not enough to found a cause of action for setting aside a decree; where mere non-service in the complaint the remedies available are (i) application under Order 9, Rule 13 (ii) an appeal from the ex parte decree and (iii) an application for review under O. 47, Rule 1. General allegations of fraud, however, strong the words in which they are stated, are insufficient even to amount to an averment of fraud of which any court ought to take notice. The expression "suppression of summons" by itself does not amount to a sufficient averment of fraud. By itself it means little more than not serving it. Something more would be necessary; there would have to be an averment that there was collusion between the process server and the identifier or that there was a deliberate misleading of the process server or other similar allegations.

9. This case in our opinion is no authority for the proposition that when there are allegations of fraud in the service of summons or the notice of execution the party affected can only take recourse to a suit. Order 9, Rule 13 has its limitations but subject to these limitations there appears to be no bar to an application under this Rule even when the allegation is that there has been a fraudulent suppression of summons. To make the position clear let us try to examine the language of Rule 13 of Order 9. It says: "In any case in which a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant, he may apply to the court by which the decree was passed for an order to set it aside; and if he satisfies the court that the summons was not duly served, or that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court shall make an order setting aside the decree as against him upon such terms as to costs, payment into court or otherwise as it thinks fit, and shall appoint a day for proceeding with the suit:"

10. The opening words of the Rule are indeed comprehensive. In every case where the defendant's allegation is either that the summons was not duly served or that the defendant was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the defendant may make an application under this Rule. In other words when any of the two conditions aforesaid is satisfied there is no legal bar to an aggrieved defendant making an application under Rule 13 of Order 9. In the instant case we have gone through the petition for setting aside the ex parte decree. No doubt various allegations relating to fraudulent suppression of summons and of notice of the execution case have been made but the sum and substance of these allegations seem to be that the defendant complains that neither the summons nor the notice was duly served. In these circumstances, we are unable to hold that the application under Order 9 Rule 13 was not maintainable or that the petitioner's only remedy lay in a suit.

11. Let us now discuss Mr. Sankardas Benerjee's second contention namely no application under Order 9, Rule 13 lies when an ex parte decree has been satisfied by execution. Here again Mr. Banerjee did not cite any authorities to support him. He, however, drew our attention to the Bombay High Court's Judgment in Zendooolal Nandlal v. Kishorilal Mehtabhai reported in (1899) ILR 23 Bom 716. The Bombay High Court has held that the fact that an ex parte decree has been satisfied, does not disentitle a defendant from applying to the Court to set it aside under Section 108 of the Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) which corresponds to Order 9 Rule 13 of the present Code. Mr. Banerjee submitted to us that it was not a sound judgment. But he did not tell us why he thought that the decision should not be followed.

12. In our view, satisfaction of an ex parte decree creates no bar to an application under Order 9 Rule 13. We derive support for this view not only in the Bombay High Court's Judgment but also in several judgments of our Court which have ultimately been approved by the Supreme Court. In Set Umed Mal v. Raja Srinath Ray (1900) 4 Cal WN 692, this Court has held that a sale in execution of a mortgage decree, where the decree-holder is the auction-purchaser must be set aside, when the decree itself is set aside under Section 108 of the Civil P. C., 1882, even though the sale had been duly confirmed.

13. In Raghu Nandan Singh v. Jugdish Singh (1910) 14 Cal WN 182 an ex parte decree and sale under it were set aside and after a rehearing a decree was again passed against the judgment-debtors. This Court has held that the principle of Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure cannot be availed of to set aside the order setting aside the sale. When a decree has once been set aside under Section 108, Civil P. C. (Act 14 of 1882), it cannot by any subsequent proceeding be taken to be revived. If a decree is passed against the judgment-debtors on rehearing it is a new decree and does not revive the former decree. At page 182 it is observed: "It is argued that we are to apply by analogy the principle of restitution provided in Section 144 of the new Code corresponding with Section 583 of the old Code. This appears to us not to be applicable. After the decree has once been set aside under Section 108 it cannot by any subsequent proceeding be taken to be revived and proceedings under it are consequently invalid. We do not see how we can extend the principle laid down on appeal by Section 144, nor can we see any reason why it should be necessary to do, for the decree passed in the rehearing is a new decree so far as the defendants Nos. 4, 7 and 8 are concerned on account of some defect in the trial."

14. The next case is a stronger one. It is the case of Abdul Rahaman v. Sarafat Ali reported in 20 Cal WN 667 - (AIR 1916 Cal 710). It has been held in this case that the assignee from the decree-holder who has purchased property in execution of his own decree is in no better position than his assignor, and the sale is set aside when the decree is set aside even when the decree-holder has sold the property to a stranger. As soon as an ex parte decree is set aside, the sale, where the decree-holder is the purchaser, falls through and is not validated by a fresh decree subsequently made.

15. All the authorities cited above point to the conclusion that even when an ex parte decree has been fully executed it is open to the Court to set aside the decree on proper grounds and when the Court does set it aside the principles of restitution would be attracted.

16. The Supreme Court has considered inter alia, the cases reported in 4 Cal WN 692; (1910) 14 Cal WN 182 and 20 Cal WN 667 - (AIR 1916 Cal 710) in its judgment in Binayak Swain v. Ramesh Chandra reported in AIR 1966 SC 948 and has explained the doctrine of restitution in relation to an ex parte decree. The Supreme Court has said that the principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of a decree, the law imposes an obligation on the party to the suit who received the benefit of the erroneous decree to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost. This obligation arises automatically on the reversal or modification of the decree and necessarily carries with it the right to restitution of all that has been done under the erroneous decree; and the court in making restitution is bound to restore the parties so far as they can be restored to the same position they were in at the time when the Court by its erroneous action had displaced them from. In the case before the Supreme Court in execution of an ex parte decree passed in an appeal by the District Judge, the property of the judgment-debtor was sold and purchased by the decree-holder himself. The High Court subsequently set aside the ex parte decree and the suit was remanded for rehearing and fresh disposal. The SC is of the view that on these facts the judgment-debtor under Section 144 of the Code is entitled to restitution of his properties which the decree-holder had purchased subject to equities to be adjusted in favour of the decree-holder. The Supreme Court has stated further upholding this Court's view expressed in the judgments cited above, that by the passing of a subsequent decree upon a fresh disposal of the suit the execution sale held in the ex parte decree which the High court has set aside was not validated. At the time of the application for restitution, the SC has said, the judgment-debtor was entitled to restitution because on that date the decree in execution of which the properties were sold had been set aside. The Supreme Court says further that the judgment-debtor is entitled to restitution notwithstanding anything that happened subsequently as the right to claim restitution is based upon the existence or otherwise of a decree in favour of the plaintiff at the time when the application for restitution was made.

17. We may also refer to the judgment of Mr. Justice Chatterjee in Kushi Mohan Saha v. Subhas Chandra Saha, reported in (1966) 70 Cal WN 1027. Mr. Justice Chatterjee has held that Section 144 of the Code refers to all cases of variation or reversal of the decree including one by an Order under O. 9, R. 13 of the Code and is not limited to variation or reversal of a decree by a Court of Appeal. If a decree, therefore is set aside by an order under Rule 13 of Order 9 it is varied and as such Section 144 applies. We are in agreement with this view.

18. Lastly, we would refer to the Assam High Court's judgment in Hurmat Ali v. Matlib Ali AIR 1952 Assam 111. The Assam High Court has held that where in execution of a decree for specific performance, the plaintiff got the possession of the properties and then transferred them to another person and the decree was reversed on appeal, the defendants were entitled to get restitution under Section 144 from the transferees from the original decree-holder.

19. These authorities are clearly contrary to the submission of counsel for the petitioner that an application under Order 9, Rule 13 could not be made in this case inasmuch as the conveyance had already been executed in favour of the plaintiff pursuant to the ex parte decree. It seems that if the ex parte decree is set aside on an application under Order 9, Rule 13 the principles of restitution laid down in Section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure would be attracted and the fact that a conveyance has been executed by the Court in the circumstances stated above does not disentitle the defendant from seeking its remedies under Order 9, Rule 13.

20. In these premises this Rule is discharged and the interim order is vacated. The petitioner will pay to the opposite party the costs of this application hearing fee being assessed at 10 gold mohurs. Let the records be sent back expeditiously.

State of West Bengal, Appellant v. Secretary, Union Club, Purulia, Respondent.

A. F. O. D. No. 798 of 1965, D/- 9-12-1971.

(A) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Section 23 (1) — Determination of market value — Post notification sales — When can be considered.

Post notification sales of similar lands in the locality cannot be taken into consideration while determining the market value of the acquired land if the court finds that after publication of the notification the price of the lands in the locality had been affected. Whether the notification affected the price of lands has to be determined on the facts proved in the case and the onus to prove such facts is on the party who objects to the consideration of such sale transaction. Where there is no such proof they can be taken into consideration. (1909) ILR 33 Bom 325 & AIR 1966 Mys 66, Rel. on.

(B) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Section 23 (1) — Sale transactions not relied on by Collector — Whether Government can rely on them in reference.

When the Collector who acts as the agent of the Government in assessing the market value of the acquired land has not relied on particular sale transactions it will not be open to Government to rely upon them in reference proceedings under Section 18. (X-Ref.— Section 18). AIR 1967 Cal 631 & AIR 1967 Andh Pra 230, Rel. on.

S. C. Das Gupta, for Appellant; B. C.
Dutt and Shib Kumar Majumdar, for Respondent.

M. M. DUTT, J.:— This appeal has been preferred by the State of West Bengal against the award dated August 24, 1964, of the learned District Judge, Purulia, under Section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act (hereinafter referred to as the Act).

2. The appellant State of West Bengal acquired 1.35 acres of land appertaining to certain plots belonging to the respondent, the Union Club of Purulia. The relevant notification under Section 4 of the Act was published on September 4, 1952 and the declaration under Section 6 of the Act was published long thereafter on February 2, 1961.

3. The Land Acquisition Collector classified the land as Bastu I land and Bastu II land. He valued the Bastu I land at Rs. 9,800/- per acre and the Bastu II land at Rs. 7,800/- per acre. On the basis of the said rates the Land Acquisition Collector made an award of Rupees 15,313.40 as compensation for the land acquired. Being aggrieved by the said award of the Collector, the respondent made an application for a reference to the District Judge under Section 18 of the Act.

4. Before the learned District Judge the respondent claimed compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,000/- per cotta. In support of their claim for compensation at the said rate, the respondent relied on certain sale deeds marked as Exhibits 4 to 4d. The learned District Judge could not place reliance on these sale transactions excepting the transaction evidenced by Exhibit 4C which is a sale deed dated February 23, 1953. The appellant also filed certain sale deeds marked as Exhibits A to A(7). The learned District Judge, however, rejected all these documents relied on by the appellant. The learned District Judge came to the finding that there was no distinction between Bastu I land and Bastu II land as made by the Land Acquisition Collector. According to the learned District Judge the acquired land was Bastu I land and no portion of it was Bastu II land. After considering the evidence of the witnesses of the parties and relying on the sale deed Exhibit 4C, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that the acquired land should be valued at the rate of Rs. 24,000/- per acre. Upon these findings, the learned District Judge awarded compensation to the respondent in respect of the acquired land at the rate of Rs. 24,000/- per acre plus the usual statutory allowance under Section 23 (2) of the Act. Hence this appeal by the State of West Bengal.

5. The finding of the learned District Judge that the acquired land is Bastu I land, has not been challenged by Mr. Das Gupta, learned Advocate for the appellant. He, however, strenuously urged that the sale deed Exhibit 4C being a post notification transaction should not be relied on in determining the market value of the acquired land. It was submitted by Mr. Das Gupta that under no circumstance a post notification transaction could be a proper indicia for ascertaining the market value of the land. We are, however, unable to accept the said contention of Mr. Das Gupta. Under Section 23(1), the Court has to determine the market value of the land. One of the methods of valuation is the price paid, within a reasonable time, in bona fide transactions of purchase of land acquired, or of the land adjacent to the land acquired having similar advantages. Such transactions of sale indicate the price of the land acquired on the date of the notification. The Court has to consider whether or not any particular transaction of sale affords a fair criterion of the market value of the land acquired. There is no rule that a post notification transaction of sale of land similar to the acquired land cannot be looked into. If in considering a post notification sale, the Court finds that after the publication of the notification the price of the lands in the locality has been affected, in that case, it will not be proper for the Court to rely on such a transaction of sale, for it will not be of any guide for the determination of the market value of the acquired land.

6. Whether the notification has affected the price of the land in the neighbourhood of the acquired land or not cannot be assumed by the Court, but has to be determined on facts proved in the case. The onus to prove such facts is on the party who objects to any such transaction of sale being relied on by the Court for ascertaining the market value of the acquired land. The view, which we take finds support from the decision in Govt. of Bombay v. Karim Tar Mahomed, (1909) ILR 33 Bom 325. It has been held in that decision that sales after the date of notification must be discarded when it has been proved that the values have been affected one way or the other by circumstances which have arisen after that date. A Division Bench of the Mysore High Court in M. S. Nanjappa v. Special Land Acquisition Officer, AIR 1966 Mys 66, has taken the same view. It has been held in that case that bona fide sale transaction cannot be excluded from consideration merely on the ground that it was entered into subsequent to the date of the notification. Further, it has been held that in taking into consideration a subsequent transaction, enhanced values attributable to the very acquisition or to a general increase in the market price should not be overlooked by the Court.

7. There is no evidence in the present case before us that after the publication of the notification under Section 4, the land value was affected one way or the other. In the absence of any evidence showing that the value of land in the locality of the acquired land was affected after the publication of the notification under Section 4, the post notification transaction of sale by the sale deed Exhibit 4C cannot be excluded from consideration in the matter of determining the market value of the acquired land.

8. It appears from Exhibit 4C that a parcel of Bastu 1 land was sold at the rate of Rs. 24,000/- per acre. The land sold is situate very near to the land acquired and it is similar to the acquired land. The learned District Judge was justified in relying upon this transaction of sale.

9. The respondent relied on an estimate of valuation made by a Government valuer at the instance of the appellant, for the purpose of showing that the market-price of the acquired land was much more than what the Collector had awarded. It appears from the estimate (Exhibit 5) that the acquired land was valued at the rate of Rs. 12,000/- per acre. The estimate on the face of it shows that the Collector's valuation is wrong.

10. It has been already stated that the learned District Judge refused to rely on the sale deeds filed by the appellant. Out of these sale deeds Mr. Das Gupta relied on three of them. Exhibit A is dated February 8, 1952, and it shows 3 cottas of home-stead land was sold at Rs. 199/- only, that is, at the rate of Rs. 3,978/- per acre. Bibhuti Bhusan Dhole, who is the Secretary of the Purulia Union Club, says in his evidence that the land sold by the document (Exhibit A) is low land and there is paddy-land adjacent to the same. It appears from the schedule of Exhibit A that the northern and southern boundary of the land sold has been described therein as "Landlord's Khas land." This description supports the evidence of this witness. Moreover, the witness was not cross-examined on the point on behalf of the appellant. In our view, this particular sale cannot be said to be a comparable sale and the learned District Judge was right in rejecting the same.

11. Exhibit A (2) is dated June 27, 1952, and Exhibit A (4) is dated March 16, 1951. By Exhibit A (2), a dwelling house appertaining to 2 cottas of land was sold at Rs. 49/- only and by Exhibit A (4) also another dwelling house standing on 1 cotta of land was sold at Rs. 100/- only. It is inconceivable that even in 1952, dwelling house standing on 1 cotta or 2 cottas of land in the town of Purulia could be sold either at Rs. 100/- or at Rs. 49/-. It is not known under what circumstances the same were sold at such a low price. Moreover, in neither of the documents the house and the land have been valued separately. The learned District Judge was perfectly justified in not placing any reliance on these two documents.

12. For another reason, the sale deeds Exhibits A, A (2) and A (4) cannot be relied on. It does not appear that the Collector in determining the compensation of the acquired land made any enquiry in ascertaining the market value of land on the date of the notification, nor does it appear that the Collector relied on any of the sale deeds filed by the appellant. Even, assuming that the Collector made some enquiry as to the market value of the land at or near about the date of notification under Section 4, it is apparent from the price of the acquired land assessed by the Collector, that the Collector did not rely on the sale deeds Exhibits A, A (2) and A (4). Mr. Dutt, learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the respondent relied on a Bench decision of this Court in Charu Prokash Ghosh v. State of West Bengal 72 Cal. WN 235 = (AIR 1967 Cal. 631) which to some extent lends support to the contention that the transactions of sale which were not relied upon by the Collector could not be relied on by the State in a reference under Section 18 for the enhancement of the valuation. The Andhra Pradesh High Court in Sub-Collector, Ongole v. Yerra Anumanchamma, AIR 1967 Andh Pra 230, also refused to rely on a sale transaction on the ground that the officer who passed the award had not considered that as relevant in awarding the market value. In our opinion, when the Collector who acts as the agent of the Government in assessing the market value of the acquired land, has not relied on particular sale transactions it will not be open for the Government to rely on such transactions. In the instant case, the Collector did not place reliance on the sale deeds Exhibits A to A (7). The same cannot, therefore, be considered in determining the market value of the acquired land. In any event, the sale deeds relied on by Mr. Das Gupta, namely, Exhibits A, A (2) & A (4) cannot be said to be comparable sales.

13. Lastly, it was argued by Mr. Das Gupta that the onus lay on the respondent to prove that the Collector's valuation was erroneous and inadequate. There cannot be any doubt that the valuation made by the Collector is insufficient or inadequate must prove the same (sic). It has, however, been held by a Bench of this Court in Fink v. Secy. of State for India, (1907) ILR 34 Cal 599 that when the Collector makes no enquiry or gives no ground for his valuation, the burden of proof on the claimant is nominal. In this connection, we may refer to Clause (d) of Section 19 (1) of the Act which provides that in making the reference, the Collector shall state for the information of the Court, in writing under his hand the grounds on which the amount of compensation was determined when the objection is to the amount of the compensation. In his statement, the Collector has only stated the rates of Bastu I land and Bastu II land. He has not disclosed the basis for the said rates of valuation. In our view, the Collector has not complied with the provision of Clause (d) of Section 19 (1). Where the Collector discloses the basis for his valuation, the Court is in a position to consider the same with reference to the evidence adduced by the referring claimant in discharging the onus that lies on him. Omission by the Collector to state the grounds on which the amount of compensation was determined prevents the Court from such consideration and consequently, the onus of the referring claimant becomes negligible. In such a case, only slight evidence adduced by the referring claimant will discharge the onus. Most respectfully we agree with the principle laid down by this Court in Fink's case referred to above. We have already stated that the Collector has not, in his statement under Section 19, disclosed the ground of his valuation. There is no evidence from which the basis for the Collector's valuation can be ascertained. For the reasons aforesaid, the onus of the respondent is negligible and only slight evidence would discharge the said onus. In our opinion, the respondent has been able to discharge their onus that the Collector's valuation was inadequate.

14. The learned District Judge was right in not accepting the claim of the respondent that the acquired land should be valued at the rate of Rs. 1,000/- per cotta or Rs. 60,000/- per acre. At the same time, the learned District Judge could not accept the valuation made by the Collector and after considering the evidence adduced on behalf of the parties, the learned District Judge fixed the market value of the acquired land at the rate of Rs. 24,000/- per acre. We have ourselves considered the materials on record and we also come to the same conclusion as that of the learned District Judge, that the market value of the land should be at the rate of Rs. 24,000/- per acre.

15. In the result, the judgment and award of the learned District Judge are affirmed and the appeal is dismissed. In view of the facts and circumstances of the case we do not make any order for costs in this appeal.

Suit No. 279-A of 1967. D/-16-7-1971.

(A) Marine Insurance Act (1963), Section 55 (1) — Liability of insurer — Nature of.

Where a ship insured against the perils of capture, seizure, detention in consequence of hostilities is captured by an enemy nation and condemned by the Prize Court of that nation, the insurers cannot avoid the responsibility to pay the agreed sum on the ground that there was no formal declaration of war by the capturing State or on the ground that the war and, hence, the condemnation were illegal when the insurers have not protected themselves from the consequence of an unlawful or an undeclared or an informal war and have not taken any of the pleas relating to the character of the war. (Case law discussed). (Para 25)

A capture is an act of State and its legality cannot be questioned in an action for recovery of insured sum. The insurers are bound by the terms and conditions of the policy. The law of Marine Insurance is not concerned with "the existence of war in the formal sense" nor with a formal declaration of war. A total loss whether actual or constructive under this law does not depend on the legality of the capture nor on the legality of the sentence of condemnation. No question of bellum justum nor of bellum unjustum can ever arise between the assured and the underwriter. Where an insured ship is totally destroyed by an enemy action in a lawful war she is an actual total loss and the underwriter must pay her agreed value. (Para 24)

AP/CP/A398/72/SNV.

(B) Marine Insurance Act (1963), Section 57 — 'Proximate cause' of loss
— What is

The loss which is produced by the direct, efficient and predominating cause is the proximate cause of the loss in the law of Marine Insurance. Mere intrusion of a new cause is of no moment so long it does not wither away the efficiency of the direct, efficient and predominating cause. Merely because a cause has intervened, does not make it a nova causa superveniens. The intervening cause must of its own force destroy the efficacy of the existing cause and it must become an independent and a direct, efficient and predominating cause of the loss before it can be said that the loss is proximately caused by nova causa superveniens. (Case law discussed). (Para 37)

(C) Marine Insurance Act (1963), Section 60 — 'Actual loss' — What it includes.

As capture of a ship followed by condemnation by the sentence of a Prize Court of competent jurisdiction extinguishes the title of the owner in the res, it amounts to actual loss to the owner. It is a judgment in rem. Seizure and capture followed by condemnation stand on the same footing and in both the cases the title in the res is vested in the capturing-State. Where the res is restored to its former owner after condemnation it is a gift to him and a new title flows from the date of the grant. AIR 1965 SC 316, Followed. (Case law discussed). (Para 50)

Asoke Sen, Ajit Roy Mukherji and Dipak Sen, for Plaintiff; S. K. Roy Chowdhury, Tapas Banerjee, Ashim Ghose and A. Mitter, for Defendants.

ORDER:— Pakistan waged war on India in 1965 and captured "M. V. Shakeela" near Chalna in East Pakistan. She belonged to the plaintiffs and was mortgaged to the last defendant. She was covered by a valued policy of Rs. 10 lacs by the Insurer-defendants against the perils of "Capture, seizure, arrest, restraint or detainment and the consequences thereof or any attempt thereat; and from the consequences of hostilities of warlike operations, whether there be a declaration of war or not". She was condemned as a lawful prize by the Prize Court at Dacca and was made over to the Government of Pakistan in lieu of her sale. Thereafter, a suit was filed in the Court of the subordinate Judge at Khulna in East Pakistan against the plaintiffs by their Pakistani agents claiming over Rs. 2 lacs from the plaintiffs and she was attached in the hands of the Government of Pakistan pursuant to an order of that court. Then an agreement was entered into by and between the two Governments for her exchange with the "Elahi Bux", a Pakistani merchant ship arrested by our Navy during the hostilities, but these two vessels were not ultimately exchanged.

2. In these circumstances the plaintiffs have brought this action on February 7, 1967 against the Insurer-defendants claiming her agreed value on the plea that she was an actual total loss and her loss was proximately caused by the perils insured against. This claim is supported by the mortgage-defendant but it is contested by the Insurer-defendants on the plea that she was available for release and the proximate cause of her loss was not the perils insured against but the attachment made by the Civil Court. In this state of pleadings, the following issues raised by the learned counsel Mr. Subrata K. Roy Chowdhury for the Insurers, were accepted by the learned counsel Mr. A. K. Sen for the plaintiffs and by the learned Counsel Mr. Mitter for the mortgagee-defendant and were settled by me:

ISSUES

1. Has the plaintiff any right to maintain the suit or to sue the defendants Nos. 1 to 4?

2. Is the plaintiff entitled to claim any sum, and if so, what sum, as trustee for the defendant No. 5 as alleged in paragraph 10 of the plaint?

3. (a) Was the vessel "Sakeela" seized or captured or impounded by Pakistan Authority on or about September 5, 1965 during hostilities between India and Pakistan and in consequence thereof as alleged in paragraph 4 of the plaint? (b) Was the plaintiff irretrievably deprived of the said vessel? (c) Was the said vessel condemned in favour of the Government of Pakistan by the High Court at Dacca in exercise of its jurisdiction as a Prize Court as alleged in paragraph 4 of the plaint?

4. Was the said vessel totally lost as alleged in paragraph 5 of the plaint or at all?

5. Was the said vessel "Sakeela" available for release as stated in paragraph 6 of the Written Statement of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4?

6. Was the said vessel not released to the custody of the plaintiff as a consequence of the facts stated in paragraph 6 of the written statement of the defendants Nos. 1 to 4?

7. On and from June 16, 1966 was the said vessel "Sakeela" under Civil Court attachment?

8. Was the alleged loss or claim for which the suit has been filed covered by the Policy of Insurance?

9. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

3. Mr. Q. M. Jadwat, the Managing Director of the plaintiffs, and Mr. S. K. Bose, the unfortunate Chief Engineer of the ill-fated vessel gave evidence for the plaintiffs. Dr. Nagendra Singh, the reputed Jurist on the Shipping Laws and at present acting as the Secretary of our President, was examined on Commission at Rastrapati Bhavan in New Delhi on the requests of the Insurers, Mr. G. V. Jannah, who was the Deputy General Manager of the first defendant at the material time, gave evidence on Commission in Bombay for the Insurers. The case of the plaintiffs was partly represented by Mr. Sen and partly by Mr. Roy Mukherjee but Mr. Roy Chowdhury alone carried the burden of the Insurers and has raised many a complex and interesting questions of law. They have admirably and with great decorum argued the case and have rendered valuable assistance to me.

4. I will now state the material facts of the case. The "Shakeela" was captured on September 5, 1965 and her men were detained in jail. Two other Indian merchant ships were also captured by Pakistan. Our Government detained three Pakistani merchant ships. On September 23, 1965 the Indo-Pakistan hostilities came to an end. On October 12, 1965 the plaintiffs claimed her value and the Insurers recorded the claim "without prejudice" on October 16, 1965 and from this day the first defendant acted for all the Insurers in relation to the subject-matter of the suit. On October 18, 1965 she was condemned by the Prize Court at Dacca and the Pakistani Marshal was directed to sell her and to pay the proceeds to the Government of Pakistan. On November 17, 1965 this Order for sale was rescinded by the Prize Court and her possession was made over to Pakistan. The Insurers did not pay the money and requested the plaintiffs and the defendant No. 5 to wait for the final decision of the Representative Committee of the Insurers.

5. On January 4, 1966 the plaintiff sent copies of the proceedings of the Prize Court to the first defendant with a request to settle the claim. On January 5, 1966 our Deputy Custodian of Enemy Properties requested the plaintiffs to deposit with him Rs. 1,70,000/- payable by the plaintiffs to their Pakistani agents but the plaintiffs did not deposit the money. On January 10, 1966 the Historical Declaration was announced from Taskent and by its clause 8 our Prime Minister and their President agreed to discuss the return of all the properties and assets taken by each Government during the conflict. (See Keesing's Contemporary Archives, 1965-66 p. 21187 relied on by Mr. Roy Chowdhury) The Insurers took their stand on this clause and they did not pay her value on the plea that there was a possibility of exchange of the impounded vessels with the Pakistani ships detained by our Government. On May 9, 1966 the plaintiffs, through their Advocate, asked the Insurers to pay her agreed value alleging that there was no hope of recovery of the vessel from the Government of Pakistan but the Insurers did not pay it. The foreign Re-Insurers were vitally interested in the matter and they approached both the Governments and negotiations for exchange of the vessel started through them on foreign diplomatic channels.

6. While these negotiations were going on in which Dr. Singh participated the Pakistani agent of the plaintiffs filed the suit on June 15, 1966 against the plaintiffs and on July 27, 1966 the Subordinate Judge of Khulna attached the vessel by directing the Government of Pakistan not to deliver her to the plaintiffs. Then the two Governments entered into an agreement for exchanging the vessels through the Insurers after they were surveyed by the Insurers and a Press Note to this effect was issued on August 6, 1966 by our Government. Thereafter, Mr. Jadwat suggested to the Bombay representatives of the foreign Re-Insurers to arrange for her survey and the first defendant wrote to the Solicitors of the foreign Re-Insurers to have the vessel surveyed by the salvors of Lloyds on behalf of the Insurers before the exchange was finalised. The Lloyds insisted that the plaintiffs should authorise them to arrange for the survey which the plaintiffs did.

6. Thereafter the plaintiffs sent the copies of the proceedings of the Civil Suit to the first defendant who returned them by saying that the Insurers were not interested in that suit and in reply the plaintiffs told the first defendant that the exchange of the vessel in suit might be frustrated if the Pakistani agents were not paid off and in view of the prevailing conditions it was not possible for the plaintiffs to remit any money to Pakistan. The Reserve Bank of India did not allow the plaintiffs to send any money to the Pakistani agents and therefore the first defendant took up the matter with the Reserve Bank so that the plaintiffs could send the money to Pakistan and then on October 20, 1966 two other Indian vessels were exchanged with two other Pakistani vessels (See K. C. Archives p. 21716 of November 1966).

7. On October 25, 1966 our Directorate of Shipping informed Mr. Jadwat that the question of releasing the "Shakeela" was taken up by our Government and the result would be communicated to him in due course. On November 7, 1966, the Reserve Bank informed the first defendant that the plaintiffs should take up the matter of sending money to Pakistan with the Union Ministry and before the first defendant could communicate this advice to the plaintiffs, on November 8, 1966 the plaintiffs, through the Director-General of shipping who was an officer under the Union Ministry, wrote to the Reserve Bank to permit the London Correspondent of the first defendant to guarantee the payment of the dues of Pakistani Agents of the plaintiff so that the vessel might be released and on the same day the Civil Court passed the decree against the plaintiffs and directed the attachment of the vessel to be continued.

8. On November 21, 1966 the first defendant communicated to the plaintiffs the advice given by the Reserve Bank and in the meantime the survey of Shakeela was completed. Dr. Singh advised a representative of the plaintiffs to pay off the dues of the Pakistani agents but the plaintiffs were not in a position to send any money to Pakistan for the reasons stated earlier. The "Shakeela" was to be exchanged with the "Elahi Bux" but the Pakistani owner of this ship did not pay our governmental dues and therefore this ship was not released by our Government. These two ships were not exchanged at all and all correspondence between the parties stopped and this action was brought in this Court.

9. Mr. Roy Chowdhury has challenged the legality of the sentence of condemnation though it was not questioned in the written statement of the Insurers. His contentions have no bearing on the rights and obligations of the parties but in deference to him, I will dispose them off before going into the main questions involved in this action. He drew my attention to the events recorded in Keesing's Contemporary Archives relating to Indo-Pakistan conflict of 1965. He took me through the well-known Paris Pact, the Covenants of the League of Nations and the Charter of the United Nations Organisations. He read out the opinions from Prof. Oppenheim's International Law edited by Dr. Lauterpacht, and from Prof. Brierly's Principles of Public International Law and then from Prof. Brierly's the Law of Nations edited by Sir Waldock. He adopted their opinions and said that an aggressive war was outlawed by the Paris Pact, the Covenants of the League of Nations and by the Charter of the United Nations.

10. He contended that Pakistan has made an aggressive and illegal war on us and, therefore, the sentence of condemnation of the Prize Court at Dacca has no legal sanctity and it should not be recognized by this Court for the reason that illegality of this war has made this sentence illegal under the law of nations. He cited "The Flad Oyen", reported in 165 ER 124 and R. Viswanathan v. R. S. Abdul Wajid, AIR 1963 SC 1 in support of his contention that where a judgment of a foreign court is not in conformity with the well-established practice of mankind or it infringes the rules of the Public International Law it ceases to be a lawful judgment and the courts of other countries do not recognize such a judgment. But the principles laid down in these two decisions cannot be invoked by him in the manner he has endeavoured to do it for the reasons stated later on.

11. In the 17th Century It was Grotius who propounded the theory of lawful and unlawful war, but the Rulers of the nations went against his theory and maintained that the war was a matter of Sovereign Right of every Sovereign State and there was no such thing as bellum justum and bellum unjustum. And for these reasons Mr. Hall said: 'International law has no alternative but to accept War, independently of the justice of its origin. * * * Hence both parties to every War are regarded as being in an identical legal position, and consequently as being possessed of equal rights' (See his International Law 8th Edn. p. 82).

12. The right to make a war is a Sovereign Right of every State. The Sword that created this Right has legalised it too. But I also find that the contention of Mr. Roy Chowdhury is partially true and the law stated by Mr. Hall requires some qualifications. Pakistan was not born when the Paris Pact and the League of Nations came into existence and, therefore, I will leave their provisions out of my consideration.

13. The Sovereign Right to make an aggressive war was relinquished by the Members of the United Nations Organisations but not by the Non-Members. Therefore, it is not wholly true to say that an aggressive war is legally gone for ever. The non-members have not surrendered their sovereign rights and they are not bound by the charter. An aggressive war by or against a non-member is still lawful, but it is wholly unlawful by and between the members. All disputes in relation to border between the Member-Nations must be settled not by the barrels of the gun but by peaceful negotiation through diplomatic Channels or through the mediation of U. N. O. is the mandate of the Charter. The sovereign right of a Member-Nation to wage an aggressive war on another member-nation is legally gone for ever and resort to arms by a member-nation for an aggressive war against another member is totally outlawed by the law of nations. No member nation is allowed to disturb the peace and tranquillity of the World by waging an aggressive war on another member and if it is done, it must be held to be a bellum unjustum. India and Pakistan became members of the U. N. O. and therefore they were and are bound by the Mandate of this Charter. Pakistan has nakedly violated this Mandate but the significant imbecility made the U. N. O. too impotent to condemn it as an unlawful war waged by Pakistan.

14. Before the ink on the agreement in relation to Runn of Kutch was dried up Pakistan started this naked war and we were entitled to throw them out from every inch of our land. But a war, whether aggressive or defensive, is an act of state. No municipal court of any country has any jurisdiction to go into the question of legality of an act of state committed by a foreign State, whether within or outside its own territories, is the law of all civilised nations. This is the pith and substance of the judgment of our Supreme Court in State of Saurashtra v. Memon Haji Ismail Haji Volimohammed, AIR 1959 SC 1383 and furthermore, in 'The Zamora' reported in 1916-2 AC 77, at p. 96 of the report, Lord Parker said:

"An act, though illegal by international law, will not on that account be justiciable in the tribunals of another Power—at any rate, if expressly authorised by order of the Sovereign on whose behalf it is done."

15. I am wholly debarred from going into the question of legality of the war waged on us by Pakistan and therefore, the principles laid down in "the Flad Oyen" and in Viswanathan's case, AIR 1963 SC 1 cannot help the Insurers. I must take this war as a fact and as an act of State of Pakistan with all its legal consequences. Question of legality of the decision of the prize court at Dacca is interwoven with the question of legality of this war. There is no mid-way between them. They must either stand or fall together. Jurisdiction of every Prize Court flows from the existence of a state of war and the war is an act of State. This Court is wholly incompetent to go into the question of legality of this war and, therefore, the legality of the sentence of the Prize Court cannot be attacked in this ingenious way. And, hence I am unable to hold that the sentence of the Prize Court was illegal due to the illegality of this war.

16. His next contention was that the Government of Pakistan did not issue any Commission, Warrant or Instructions for commissioning the Prize Court at Dacca, and, therefore, that court was not legally competent to act at all and its sentence of condemnation was a nullity. But, whether that Court was commissioned or not is a pure question of fact. The Insurers did not take this plea in their Written Statement and "a decision of a case cannot be based on grounds outside the pleadings and it is the case pleaded that has to be found" is the law laid down by the Supreme Court in Trojan & Co. v. Nagappa Chettiar, AIR 1953 SC 235 at p. 240 of the report. No indication of this defence was given at the time the issues were suggested on their behalf. No evidence was adduced by them to show that the Prize Court at Dacca was not at all commissioned. The plaintiffs have closed their case. They were taken by surprise. They had no opportunity to adduce any evidence to meet this point raised at the Bar and therefore the Insurers are debarred from taking this plea.

17. In Siddik Mohomed Shah v. Mt. Saran, AIR 1930 PC 57 (1) Lord Dunedin said: "no amount of evidence can be looked into upon a plea which was never put forward" and in Nagubai Ammal v. B. Shama Rao, AIR 1956 SC 593 at p. 598 of the report the Supreme Court said: "The true scope of this rule is that evidence let in on issues on which the parties actually went to trial should not be made the foundation for decision of another and different issue, which was not present to the minds of the parties and on which they had no opportunity of adducing evidence." And this law is also against the Insurers and therefore I cannot permit them to take this plea.

18. Moreover, there is no dispute that Pakistan was "at war with India" and it was said to the whole world by the President of Pakistan in his broadcast of September 5, 1965. This declaration was followed by a proclamation of emergency and the capture of "Shakeela". And about 45 days thereafter she was condemned. The sole object of this condemnation was to take away the property of the plaintiff by lawful means, that is to say by obtaining her sentence of condemnation from the High Court at Dacca in exercise of its jurisdiction over the Prize causes. Therefore, this is a case where the maxim "Omina Praesumuntur rite et solemniter acta" comes into play and I do not for a moment hesitate to presume that the Prize Court at Dacca was regularly commissioned by the required official act of the Government of Pakistan "in the absence of evidence to the contrary" as was done by the Judicial Committee in Jitendra Nath Shaw v. Monmohan Ghose, 57 Ind App 214 at p. 219 = (AIR 1930 PC 193) in relation to the procedure laid down by Sections 12 and 13 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

19. And furthermore, in the "Countess of Lauderdale" reported in (1802) 165 ER 613, Lord Stowell at p. 614 of the report, laid down the law that where a captured ship is taken to a port of the Capturing State for condemnation there is a strong presumption that she has been regularly condemned by the Prize-Court of that State and the burden of disproving this presumption lies heavily on the party alleging it to be contrary. The Insurers did not make any attempt to discharge this heavy burden and, therefore, I overrule the contention made on their behalf.

20. An aggressive war being outlawed by the Charter, no member can lawfully declare a war on another member. Hence it was contended that these prohibitions have impliedly taken away the right of commissioning the Prize courts of a member waging an unlawful war. It was also urged that no prize court can lawfully function without a formal declaration of war and in support of this contention an analogy was drawn from a decision of the American Court of Military Appeals in the case of United States of America v. Avertte. A gist of this decision is given in October 1970 issue of American Journal of International Law and in the opinion of the learned Judges forming the majority of that court the expression "in time of war" used in Art. 2(10) of the Uniform Code of Military Justice conferring jurisdiction on the Court below "means a war formally declared by Congress". I do not wish to go into the correctness of this decision nor do I intend to enter into the arena of this highly controversial topic of the day for the reasons sufficiently indicated while dealing with the next contention of Mr. Roy Chowdhury.

21. It was then contended that the vessel in suit was illegally captured by Pakistan for the reason that there was no war between India and Pakistan in the formal sense of that term and therefore her condemnation was also illegal. My attention was drawn to Vol. XXIV of the British Year Book of International Law (1947) at page 172 where it is stated:

"the right of prize derives from the existence of war in the formal sense and cannot be deduced from a state of armed conflict with a foreign power falling short of war. A decision of a prize court affecting the nationals of third states rendered in respect of a capture effected during such a period of armed conflict may be of no international effect; and either would not pass a good title or would give rise to a valid claim for damages before an international tribunal or through diplomatic channels".

22. Here I am not concerned with the right of a neutral and moreover there are many answers to this submission but I will choose only a few out of them. A capture is an act of State and its legality cannot be questioned in this action. The Insurers are bound by the terms and conditions of the policy and they have not protected themselves from an illegal capture nor from an illegal condemnation. The law of Marine Insurance is not concerned with "the existence of war in the formal sense" nor with a formal declaration of war. A total loss whether actual or constructive under this law does not depend on the legality of the capture nor on the legality of the sentence of condemnation. No question of bellum justum nor of bellum unjustum can ever arise between the assured and the underwriter. Where an insured ship is totally destroyed by an enemy action in a lawful war she is an actual total loss and the underwriter must pay her agreed value. There is no principle on which it can be said that she ceases to be an actual total loss if she is destroyed by an enemy action in an unlawful war. She is an actual total loss under the law of Marine Insurance and this law has not yet learnt to speak in two different languages. Prof. Hardy Evamy in his Marine Insurance (1969 Edn) at pp. 166-67 in relation to the words "taking at sea" said:

"These words include all cases of capture and seizure by an enemy, and the underwriter will be liable for all losses so caused. * * * * Questions as to whether there has been a change of property in the thing captured are wholly irrelevant in an action on the policy, though they may be of importance to the underwriter anxious to secure the salvage and minimise his loss.

A declaration of war is not required in order to bring the capture within the words. Therefore, a ship sunk before any declaration of war, is a loss within a meaning of the term. Powell v. Hyde, (1855) 5 E & B 607.

Moreover, it is quite irrelevant to enquire whether the taking be lawful or unlawful for if the assured has suffered a loss by a "taking at sea", he is protected. Goss v. Withers, (1758) 2 Burr 683".

23. And in Dr. Arnould's Marine Insurance (latest Edn) in Art. 820 at page 776 it is stated:

"Capture is deemed lawful when made by a declared enemy lawfully commissioned, and according to the laws of war; unlawful when it is made otherwise. But its legality or illegality does not affect the liability of the underwriter; whether lawful or unlawful, he is equally liable".

24. Capture of enemy merchant ships during a state of war whether at high seas or within the territorial waters of the capturing State is always a lawful Prize and they are liable to be condemned by the Prize Court. Where the prize is brought within the territory of a capturing state, the Prize Court of that State is immediately vested with the jurisdiction over the prize. Pakistan created a state of war and then captured her during this state of war and she was captured within the territorial waters of Pakistan. She was taken to East Pakistan and the Prize Court at Dacca had ample jurisdiction to condemn her and it is wholly immaterial to decide whether Pakistan waged a formal or an informal war.

25. The Insurers have received premium from the plaintiffs and they have covered "Sakeela" against the perils of capture, seizure, detention in consequence of hostilities and war-like operations irrespective of any question whether there was a declaration of war or not. They did not protect themselves from the consequences of an unlawful or an undeclared or an informal war. On the other hand they are bound by their contract and they cannot take shelter under the Charter of the U. N. O. nor under the law of nations. Furthermore, they did not take any of these pleas in their written statement and they cannot be heard to say anything which is not stated therein. These questions do not require any further consideration and I overrule the contentions made on behalf of the Insurers.

26. It was also argued that her condemnation was unlawful for the reason that she was condemned after the end of hostilities. The fittest answer is that the jurisdiction of the Prize Court does not come to an end with the end of hostilities and a prize court "is, of course, entitled to continue its functions after the conclusion of the war until all matters which arose during hostilities are finally disposed of" (see International Law of the Sea, 6th Edn p. 625 of Dr. Colombus).

27. In paragraph 4 of the plaint it was pleaded that the "Shakeela" was condemned in favour of the Government of Pakistan as a lawful prize and Mr. Roy Choudhury contended that the plaintiffs have failed to prove this fact for the reason that they have not proved that the Prize Court at Dacca was a court of competent jurisdiction. Now, according to Dr. Arnould's Marine Insurance Art. 821 at page 778: "the condemnation, in order to be legal, must be pronounced by a Prize Court of the Government of the captor, sitting either in the country of the captor or in that of his ally. * * * The Prize Court of a captor sitting in the country of his own sovereign, or of an ally, has lawful jurisdiction over prizes carried into neutral ports, and remaining there at the time of passing sentence".

28. The "Shakeela" was captured within the territorial waters of Pakistan and therefore she became "a prize subject to the jurisdiction of the Prize Court" is the law laid down by Viscount Simon in Schiffahrt Treuhand v. Her Majesty's Procurator General, reported in 1953 AC 232 at p. 258 of the report. She was taken to the territorial jurisdiction of the Prize Court at Dacca and hence that Court became a Court of competent jurisdiction to condemn her is a complete answer to this submission. Furthermore, the Prize Court at Dacca being a court of competent jurisdiction her "ground of the condemnation as well as the condemnation itself" must be "regarded as conclusive" (see Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 30, 3rd Edn, Art. 1268 at page 653).

29. Wherever there is a capture by right of war and the prize is brought to the jurisdiction of the Prize Court of the capturing State that Court is immediately invested with the jurisdiction to decide whether the capture is lawful or not and once this jurisdiction is attached the onus lies on those who contend its want of jurisdiction. And this law is laid down by the Judicial Committee in the "St. Helena" report in (1916) 2 AC 625. The Insurers have not discharged this burden and moreover the sentence of condemnation was exhibited as an admitted document and it conclusively proves the statements made in paragraph 4 of the plaint.

30. Judgment of every prize court of competent jurisdiction is a judgment in rem. It is internationally recognised and it is valid from one end to other end of the world. In Prof. Cheschier's Private International Law (6th Edn) at page 653 it is stated that "where a foreign court of Admiralty condemns a vessel in Prize proceedings it is a judgment in rem and this opinion was quoted with approval in the majority decision of the Supreme Court in Viswanathan's case, AIR 1963 SC 1 (supra) at p. 15 of the Report. "The Zamora" and the "St Helena" are against Mr. Roy Choudhury and Viscount Simon has taken away the foundation of his contentions. His ability has, therefore, failed to bring home his points in favour of the Insurers and I hold that the Prize Court at Dacca was a court of competent jurisdiction and this vessel was lawfully condemned by that court and this sentence of condemnation is a judgment in rem.

31. Before going to the real controversy between the parties it should be recorded here that in view of my finding that the vessel in suit became an actual total loss on October 18, 1965 it is wholly irrelevant to consider the events subsequent to her loss but as the matter was fully argued for a considerable number of days I will deal with all the points in the order they were urged before me. Mr. Roy Chowdhury contended that the vessel was available for release even after her condemnation in view of the agreement between the two Governments and this release was frustrated by her attachment made by the Civil Court and therefore this attachment was the last and the proximate cause of her loss and in any event it was a new cause and had broken "the links in the chain" of events following her condemnation and therefore the plaintiffs must fail in this action. He cited Fenwick (William France) and Co. v. North of England P. I. Association reported in 14 Asp. M. C. 92 where a British merchant ship was sunk by a German submarine and thereafter the insured ship ran over the submerged ship and was thereby partly damaged and in these circumstances it was held that the hostile act of the German submarine in sinking the other ship was not the proximate cause of damage of the insured ship and Bailhache, J. at p. 93 of the report said:

"It must always be remembered that the act of hostility to be looked for must be the proximate cause. It is not sufficient that some act of hostility is one of the links in a chain of causes without which link the accident would not have happened. It must be the effective proximate link in the chain".

He also cited Fooks v. Smith, (1924) 2 KBD 508 where the same learned Judge at p. 514 of the report said as follows:

"Where by a peril insured against there is a constructive total loss and no notice of abandonment is given, then if in the ordinary course of an unbroken sequence of events following upon the peril insured against the constructive total loss becomes an actual total loss—as, for instance, if there is a capture followed by confiscation the underwriter is liable in respect of the total loss. If, however, the ultimate total loss is not the result of a sequence of events following in ordinary course upon the peril insured against, but is the result of some supervening cause, the underwriter is not liable". (underlined portion was relied on by Mr. Roy Mukherjee in connection with the main question discussed later on).

Lastly, Mr. Roy Chowdhury drew my attention to Becker, Gray and Co. v. London Assurance Corpn., 1918 AC 101 where Lord Sumner said:

"Proximate cause is not a device to avoid the trouble of discovering the real cause or the 'common-sense cause', and, though it has been and always should be rigorously applied in insurance cases, it helps the one side no oftener than it helps the other (at p. 112) * * * It must be admitted that the terminology of causation in English law is by no means ideal. It would be the better for a little plain English. I think 'direct cause' would be a better expression than causa proxima". (at p. 114).

32. Mr. Roy Mukherjee, objected to the expression "links in the chain" of events and drew my attention to Leyland Shipping Co. Ltd. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society Ltd., 1918 AC 350 where Lord Shaw of Dunfermline at p. 369 of the report said as follows:

"To treat proxima causa as the cause which is nearest in time is out of questions. Causes are spoken of as if they were as distinct from one another as heads in a row or links in a chain, but—if this metaphysical topic has to be referred to, it is not wholly so. The chain of causation is a handy expression, but the figure is inadequate. Causation is not a chain, but a net.

To treat proximate cause as if it was the cause which is proximate in time is, as I have said, out of the question. The cause which is truly proximate is that which is proximate in efficiency. That efficiency may have been preserved although other causes may meantime have sprung up which have yet not destroyed it, or truly impaired it, and it may culminate in a result of which it still remains the real efficient cause to which the event can be ascribed."

33. In Canada Rice Mills Ltd. v. Union Marine and General Insurance Co. Ltd., (1940) 4 All ER 169, speaking for the House of Lords at page 178 of the report, Lord Wright said

"It is now established by such authorities as Leyland Shipping Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society and many others that causa proxima in insurance law does not necessarily mean the cause last in time, but what is 'in substance' the cause (per Lord Finlay at p. 355), or the cause to be determined by commonsense principles (per Lord Dunedin at p. 362)".

34. In Yorkshire Dale Steamship Co. Ltd. v. Minister of War Transport (The Coxwold), (1942) 2 All ER 6 at pp. 9-10 of the report Viscount Simon said:

"Most results are brought about by a combination of causes, and a search for 'the cause' involves a selection of the governing explanation in each case. The cause of the death of a human being may, I suppose, be scientifically stated to be the failure of the supply of sufficient oxygen to the brain, but when a medical man certifies "the cause of death" he looks for the thing which has predominantly operated to bring death about. * * * It is this sort of practical test which has to be applied, always bearing in mind that the proximity of the cause is insisted upon by the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, Section 55, but bearing in mind also that the proximate cause is not necessarily the one which operates last. * * * It seems to me that there is no abstract proposition, the application of which will provide the answer in every case, except this: one has to ask oneself what was the effective and predominant cause of the accident which happened, whatever the nature of that accident may be".

And Lord MacMillan, at pp. 11-12 of the report, said as follows:

"The adverb 'proximately' does not greatly assist the solution of the problem, but it at least serves to emphasise that it is the predominant and determining cause that is to be sought. No formula can be devised which will provide universal touchstone for the infinite variety of circumstances which may arise. Each case must be judged in the light of its own facts and by resorting, not to the refinements of the philosophical doctrine of causation, but to the common place tests which the ordinary business man conversant with such matters would adopt." And, lastly, Lord Wright, at pp. 14-15 of the report, said:

"Once it is clear (as this House finally held in Leyland Shipping Co. v. Norwich Union Fire Insurance Co.) that 'proximate' here means, not latest in time, but predominant in efficiency, there is necessarily involved a process of selection from among the co-operating causes in order to find what is the proximate cause in the particular case. * * * "This choice of the real or efficient cause from out of the whole complex of the facts must be made by applying commonsense standards. Causation is to be understood as the man in the street, and not as either the scientist or the metaphysician, would understand it. Cause here means what a business or seafaring man would take to be the cause without too microscopic-analysis but on a broad view."

35. In Athel Line Ltd. v. The Liverpool and London War Risks Insurance Association Ltd., (1945) 2 All ER 694, Lord Greene M. R. at p. 696 of the report said:

"The legal theory of causation has, in the course of years, had remarkable history, but the point at the moment at which it appears to have come to rest is that which lays it down that this type of question of causation is really a matter for the ordinary common sense and intelligence of the ordinary man."

Section 55(1) of our Marine Insurance Act 1963 was taken word for word from the Marine Insurance Act 1906 of England. It says "subject to the provisions of this Act, and unless the policy otherwise provides, the insurer is liable for any loss proximately caused by a peril insured against, but subject as aforesaid, he is not liable for any loss which is not proximately caused by a peril insured against".

36. The Act gives a double emphasis on causa proxima both from its positive and negative side but their effect is the same. And an insurer is only liable for the loss proximately caused by the perils insured against, is the pith and substance of this section. It rules out all remote causes and the losses not covered by the policy. The concept of causation is a difficult concept and it is one of the most problematic branch in Jurisprudence. And for this reason a simple and practical method is adopted by the Courts and the matter is viewed by the ordinary intelligence of a common man. The matter is simple where the loss is produced by a single cause, but where it is produced by combination of more than one factors, the investigation is no doubt problematic, but the wisdom of the past has ruled out the factor which is the nearest in point of time to the loss to be the sole criterion for determining the proximate cause.

37. The loss which is produced by the direct, efficient and predominating cause is the proximate cause of the loss in the law of Marine Insurance. Mere intrusion of a new cause is of no moment so long it does not wither away the efficiency of the direct, efficient and predominating cause. Merely because a cause has intervened, does not make it a nova causa superveniens. The intervening cause must of its own force destroy the efficacy of the existing cause and it must become an independent and a direct, efficient and predominating cause of the loss before it can be said that the loss is proximately caused by nova causa superveniens.

38. Between the two causes, urged before me, which one was the proximate cause of her loss must be determined on the true facts and those facts must be viewed in the light of the surrounding circumstances with the intelligence of a common man. And, therefore, to clear up the position I will straightway dispose of a few unmeritorious contentions and for this purpose I will restate a few important facts here. She was captured and condemned. Her possession was made over to the Government of Pakistan in lieu of her sale under the order of the Prize Court. The hostilities put an end to the normal trade relations between the two countries. No suit was filed by the Pakistani Agent against the plaintiffs immediately with the out-break of the War. She was attached before the High Contract was entered into for her exchange with the 'Elahi Bux' and our Reserve Bank did not allow the plaintiffs to send any money to Pakistan.

39. Mr. Roy Chowdhury contended that her loss was induced by the plaintiffs by reason of the non-payment of the dues of Pakistani agents and, therefore, they must fail in this action, in view of my judgment in Khalil Adal Khan v. Great American Insurance Co. Ltd., (1969) 73 Cal WN 279. There I non-suited the assured for one of the reasons that he having refused to take delivery of the insured cargo had no cause of action against the underwriter but here the plaintiffs were legally incompetent to pay any money to the Pakistani agents and therefore what I have said there has no application here. It is true that plaintiffs did not pay the money to the Indian representatives of the Pakistani agents but they were fully justified in not paying the money in view of the provisions of our Foreign Exchange Regulations Act and the Defence of India Rules and if any payment was made to them the Directors of the plaintiffs would have committed an offence punishable with imprisonment. The plaintiffs also did not deposit the money with the Custodian of Enemy Properties, but no arrangement nor any agreement between the two Governments was placed before me to show either that the Custodian could have deposited this money in the Civil Court or could have given it to the Government of Pakistan for being deposited in the Civil Court. And I do not know under what law, if any, her attachment would have been automatically removed had the plaintiff deposited this money with our Custodian of Enemy properties.

40. Furthermore, a mere negligence on the part of the assured is no answer to his claim on the policy of Marine Insurance. There must be a wilful misconduct on his part and this misconduct must be the proximate cause of the loss so as to defeat his claim. The Written Statement of the Insurer does not speak of any wilful misconduct of the plaintiffs. No indication was even given at the time the issues were suggested on their behalf. Non-compliance with the mandatory provisions of O. VI, R. 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure stands in the way of Insurers and they cannot be heard to say that the plaintiffs were guilty of any wilful misconduct. Moreover, the matter requires investigation of many facts in view of the provisions of the Defence of India Rules, the Foreign Exchange Regulation Act, and the agreement, if any, between the two Governments for sending money to Pakistan. The burden lies on the Insurers to prove all those facts and they have utterly failed to discharge it and I overrule the contention made on their behalf that the proximate cause of her loss was the negligence or the wilful misconduct of the plaintiffs.

41. The laws of India became the laws of Pakistan under the Indian Independence Act, 1947. The Insurers have not shown to me that Section 60 of the Code of Civil Procedure was altered in Pakistan so as to empower the Civil Courts of Pakistan to attach the properties of the Government of Pakistan for the debts payable by the plaintiffs to their Pakistani agents. The Subordinate Judge was fully aware of the fact that the Shakeela became the property of the Government of Pakistan by the sentence of condemnation of the Prize Court at Dacca and he was fully aware that he had no power to attach her for the reason that she had ceased to be the property of the plaintiffs and he also recognised this legal position in his own order. He has passed this illegal Order knowing it to be illegal. His order of attachment is not a judgment in rem and it is wholly illegal by the law of these two countries and this Court cannot take any notice of his illegal order.

42. But the fact that she was illegally attached cannot be ignored. The High Contract for her exchange with the "Elahi Bux" was entered into after she was attached by the Civil Court. The Subordinate Judge was bound to remove this attachment if an application was made to him by the Government of Pakistan but no such application was ever made by that Government for the obvious reason that the Elahi Bux was not at all released by our Government for non-payment of the dues by her Pakistani owner. I have said Pakistani owner because this ship was not at all condemned. Furthermore, there is nothing on the record even to suggest that the Government of Pakistan was unwilling to make any application to the Civil Court for vacating her attachment due to the non-payment of the dues of the Pakistani agents by the plaintiffs.

43. The Government of Pakistan was not a creditor of the plaintiffs. There was no term in the High Contract making it incumbent on the plaintiffs to deposit the dues of their Pakistani agents in the Civil Court for removing her attachment before she could be exchanged with Elahi Bux. The Government of Pakistan did not take any steps to remove her attachment and excepting to allow her survey nothing was done by Pakistan to implement this part of the High Contract. Removal of her attachment was a very simple matter for the Government of Pakistan and it could have been done even without depositing any money in the Civil Court because the Government of Pakistan became the owner of this ship and her attachment was wholly illegal even by the law of Pakistan. In other words, removal of her attachment was not an insuperable obstacle so far as the Government of Pakistan was concerned and therefore her attachment was not a cause at all not to speak of a nova causa supervenience. Furthermore, she became an actual total loss, as stated later on, long before her attachment and with no stretch of imagination it can be said that the efficacy of her actual total loss was destroyed by her attachment. No doubt, she was attached but undoubtedly her attachment was of no consequence whatsoever and I overrule the plea that the proximate cause of her loss was her attachment as contended on behalf of the Insurers.

44. Capture did not vest any title in the privateer nor in the Capturing-state. The previous state of law was that the capture made by a privateer must be brought to the prize court of his country for an adjudication "in order to prevent the right of seizure from degenerating into piratical rapine" and it was said by Lord Stowell in the Elsebe (Mass) reported in (1804) 165 ER 738 Capture by privateers was abolished by the Paris Pact but this judgment of Lord Stowell placed above all controversy the paramount right of every Government to release the vessels captured during war before they were finally condemned by the Prize Court in the following terms at page 741 of the report:

"The right of making war and peace is exclusively in the Crown: The acquisitions of war belong to the Crown: and the disposal of these acquisitions may be of the utmost importance for the purpose both of War and Peace. This is no peculiar doctrine of our Constitution; it is universally received as a necessary principle of public jurisprudence by all writers on the subject, Bello partacedunt reipublicoe. It is not to suppose that this wise attribute of sovereignty is conferred without reason; it is given for the purpose assigned, that the power to whom it belongs to decide on peace or war, may use it in the most beneficial manner for the purpose of both."

45. The Elsebe (Mass), (1804) 165 ER 738 was followed in Alexander v. The Duke of Wellington, (1831) 39 ER 308 and there Brougham L. C. at pp. 314-15 of the report said:

"That prize is clearly and distinctly the property of the Crown, that the sovereign in this country, the executive Government in all countries, in whom is vested the power of levying the forces of the state, and of making war and peace, is alone possessed of all property in prize, is a principle not to be disputed. It is equally incontestable that the Crown possesses this property plenary, absolutely and wholly without control; that it may deal with it entirely at its pleasure; may keep it for its own use, may abandon or restore it to the enemy, or finally, may distribute it in whole or in part among the persons instrumental in its capture, making the distribution according to whatever scheme, and under whatever regulations and conditions it sees fit."

46. One of the main defences of Mr. Roy Chowdhury was built up on the above statements of the law from the attack of Mr. Sen that the Sakeela was an actual total loss by reason of her condemnation. Mr. Roy Chowdhury contended that it was within the power of the Government of Pakistan to restore her possession to the plaintiffs after the end of the War because she was not sold by the Prize Court and remained in actual control and possession of the Government of Pakistan. He said that it has become the practice of all nations to restore possession of the war-captures after the end of the war. He drew my attention to pages 541-4 of the 'Legal Controls of International Conflict' (1959, Edn.) of Dr. Julius Stone where the history of this international practice is well-discussed. He submitted that in these circumstances, I should lay down that the concept of total loss, be it actual or total, under the law of Marine Insurance is now completely changed and a mere condemnation of the "Sakeela" was not an ipso facto loss to plaintiffs.

46. This international practice, this Sovereign Right of the capturing-State to restore the prizes, and the Rules of War and Peace are sought to be introduced by him in the law of Marine Insurance for the first time in the legal history. The history, however, shows that the commercial intercourse between the overseas countries was established by the sea-faring traders. They used to sail in their primitive vessels. Port to port they sold and bought merchandise. They sacrificed their lives in the high waves and hurricanes. They were looted by the pirates and the freebooters. Sudden outbreak of war resulted in capture, seizure, and confiscation of their vessels and merchandise. Protection of their interests and encouragement of overseas trade gave birth to the law of Marine Insurance in Italy in the 13th Century. It was imported by the Lombards in England and the merchants and brokers of the under-writers used to assemble at the Lloyd's Coffee House in London and they used to share the risks of these hazards upon payment of premium by the traders to the under-writers. And, to complete the picture, in the 17th Century this historical place became the 'Lloyds' of today.

47. The Law of Marine Insurance is the law of the sea-faring people. Their maritime adventures and commerce brought into existence and shaped this branch of the law. This law essentially belongs to the Maritime Law and to the law Merchant and no part of this ever belonged to the Public International Law or to the Martial law of any country. The naval warfare is primitive. The prize courts are ancient tribunals. The practice of restoration of the prizes after the end of the war is not a modern innovation. The Sovereign Right of releasing the prize is not a new phenomenon too.

48. The Prize Law and the law of Marine Insurance developed side by side in the 17th Century in England. The maker of the prize law in England was Lord Stowell and the maker of the law of Marine Insurance was Lord Mansfield. The Prize Law is a part of the law relating to War at sea and the prize court administers the law of nation. The law of Marine Insurance partly belongs to the law of Contract and partly to the Marine Law and it wholly belongs to the Municipal Law of each and every civilized countries. The law relating to prizes though belongs to the Municipal Law of each country but in truth it forms part of the International Law. The legal history of these two laws are different. Their sources are different. They belong to two different systems of law one to the law of nations and the other to the domestic law of the respective countries. This domestic law varies from country to country and an attempt to make it an International Law of Marine Insurance in 1885 in Brussel's conference by the Institute of International Law was a complete failure (See Annurre de L' Institute do droit International Vol. 8, pp. 125-26). These two laws were never allowed to be telescoped with each other and then on what principle it can be said that these rules of War and Peace, this Sovereign Power of restoration of the war-captures after the end of the hostilities and this International practice of the nations relied on by Mr. Roy Chowdhury have signed the death-warrant to the concept of total loss under the Law of Marine Insurance is beyond my conception of the law and I overrule his contention.

49. Furthermore, the loss is total and actual to him who has no control over the situation nor has any means of procuring the arrival of his insured-cargo or the insured-ship to the destination within a reasonable time. I repeat the words "no control" and the word "means". I do not say "the suspension of means", nor I use the words "by the grace of grant" of the capturing-state. War is an act of State. Peace is an act of State. Release of prize is a Sovereign Right and it is an extra-judicial act. Restoration of prize solely depends on the volition and the grace of the capturing-State. Peace, no doubt, puts an end to the hostilities and to the enmity between the former belligerents but no former enemy has any right to have his property restored to him unless his former enemy is totally crushed in the war.

50. Capture followed by condemnation by the sentence of a Prize Court of competent jurisdiction extinguishes the title of the owner in the res. It is a judgment in rem. Seizure and capture followed by condemnation stand on the same footing and in both the cases the title in the res is vested in the capturing-State.

Where the res is restored to its former owner after condemnation it is a gift to him and a new title flows from the date of the grant. The title in the res is also gone by a seizure followed by a hostile confiscation by an enemy State is the law laid down by our Supreme Court in T. R. Bhavani Shankar Joshi v. Somasundara Mooppanar, AIR 1965 SC 316 at p. 319 of the report. Therefore, I am unable to accept as correct the ingenious submissions of Mr. Roy Chowdhury.

51. No doubt, I have rejected what he has said but I do say that the law should change with the changing pattern of the Society. Our law is a living law. Those age-old concepts and the precedents which are wholly unfitted to our modern society or are hampering the well-being of our people must give way to the new thoughts and ideas of the day. The social values of the Victorian age are no longer the social values of this Space age. We have the history of the Second World War before us and we know the laws of jungle destroyed the laws of nations. The submarines, U-boats and bombers played a havoc on the sea trade. The merchant ships were sunk at sight. Even the hospital ships were not spared. Human lives were left to the mercy of the high waves and the sea-animals. But these are the matters of the past. The day now belongs to the nuclear weapons, rockets and guided missiles. If the concept of total loss under the law of Marine Insurance has to be changed it must be changed not in the direction suggested by him but in the light of the modern warfare. And here I will not say a word to fetter my hands but will not deter to lay down the law if and when a fit occasion would arise.

52. Coming back to the point, "The Purissima Conception" reported at page 844 and the "Victoria" reported at page 1045 of 165 of the English Reports were condemned by Lord Stowell in favour of the privateers for the reasons that the title of the British owners were extinguished by condemnation and sale to the neutrals before they were re-captured. Mr. Roy Chowdhury cited these two cases and contended that as the "Shakeela" was not at all sold in execution of the sentence of condemnation she remained the property of the plaintiffs irrespective of the sentence of condemnation because the plaintiffs were not bound by the decision of the Prize Court at Dacca which was then our enemy court in view of the judgment of Lord Stowell in "The Cornelia" reported in 165 ER 1097 where it was said:

"if at the time when this vessel was taken it was clearly in the possession of the enemy, they would have a right to receive their property again, whether there had been a sentence of condemnation or not; because such sentence operates nothing against the rights of the British owner. But if, under the authority of a sentence in the enemy's Court of Prize there had been a sale of the vessel to a neutral, that sale, which transfers the property to the neutral purchaser, will bar the claim of the original British owners against the neutral holder."

53. "The Cornelia". (1810-165 ER 1097) was followed by Lord Merriman in "The Salerno" reported in 1946 p. 189 cited by Mr. Roy Chowdhury. She belonged to a British owner and was insured against the perils of war. She was captured by Germany and the assured gave notice of abandonment to the underwriter. She was thereafter condemned by a German Prize Court and was afterwards captured by a British privateer. The contest was between the British captor on the one hand and the insurer and the assured combined together on the other hand on the question to whom she should be delivered. Lord Merriman, at page 192 of the report, said: "The right of the owner to restitution is not, in the circumstances of this case affected by the mere fact of condemnation by the German Prize Court (See The Cornelia)" and at page 193 of the report further said: The claimant owners were undoubtedly her owners at the time of her capture by the Germans and her subsequent condemnation."

54. Lord Merriman also dealt with the extra-judicial power of the British Crown in the matter of releasing the vessels before they were actually condemned. Mr. Roy Chowdhury also cited "The Leda" reported in 1919 P 264 from p. 271 of the report. He contended that the law is that the assured remains the owner of the vessel so long she is not actually sold to a neutral and condemnation without sale is not an actual total loss for the reason that there remains every possibility of her recapture so long the war continues and on her recapture she would belong not to the Capturing State but to the assured. He further contended that for this reason Professor Cheshire in his Private International Law (6th Edition) at p. 110 has said: "If a sale is ordered, judgment operates in rem in the sense that it divests the property in the ship from the owners and confers an absolute title upon the purchaser, good against all persons." But my own Professor did not lay down the entire law on the subject in the quoted statements which is clear from the earlier and the subsequent pages of this treaty.

55. In "The Odessa" reported in (1916) 1 AC 145 Lord Mersey, while delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee at pp. 153-4 of the report, said:

"It is worth while to recall generally the principles which have hitherto guided British Courts of Prize in dealing with a claim by a captor for condemnation. All civilized nations upto the present time have recognized the right of a belligerent to seize, with a view to condemnation by a competent Court of Prize, enemy ships found on the high seas or in the belligerent's territorial waters and enemy cargoes. But such seizure does not, according to British Prize Law, affect the ownership of the thing seized. Before that can happen the thing seized, be it ship or goods, must be brought into the possession of a lawfully constituted Court of Prize, and the captor must then ask for and obtain its condemnation as prize. The suit may be initiated by the representative of the capturing State, in this country by the Procurator-General. It is a suit in rem, and the function of the Court is to inquire into the national character of the thing seized. If it is found to be of enemy character, the duty of the Court is to condemn it; if not, then to restore it to those entitled to its possession. The question of national character is made to depend upon the ownership at the date of seizure, and is to be determined by evidence. The effect of a condemnation is to divest the enemy subject of his ownership as from the date of the seizure and to transfer it as from that date to the sovereign or to his grantees. The thing — the res — is then his for him to deal with as he thinks fit, and the proceeding is at an end. (underline supplied).

As the right to seize is universally recognized so also is the title which the judgment of the Court creates. The judgment is of international force, and it is because of this circumstance that Courts of Prize have always been guided by general principles of law capable of universal acceptance rather than by considerations of special rules of Municipal Law."

56. Why the British Prize Courts move in two diametrically opposite directions in relation to the sentence of condemnation of their enemy counterparts must be properly understood. Why Lord Stowell took two different views and why Lord Merriman followed Lord Stowell in spite of "The Odessa" must be properly appreciated otherwise they are apt to create confusion. Those observations of Lord Stowell and Lord Merriman were made in relation to the domestic law of England and not in relation to the law of nations. This domestic law of England does not recognise the extinguishment of the title of the British owner where a vessel is re-captured after the sentence of condemnation by an enemy Prize Court provided however she is not sold to a neutral before her recapture. The undelying principle of this domestic law is that nothing can be said to be taken by an enemy so long the war continues and all enemy properties must be taken and retaken by force. No doubt a condemnation confers an absolute title in the enemy State but this title or the enemy state is not recognised by the British Court so far as the unsold recaptured ships are concerned for the obvious reasons that the British Prize Courts are bound by their domestic law and when they apply this domestic law they depart from the law of nations and do not function as proper Prize Courts as said by Lord Parker in "The Zamora" 1916-2 AC 77 at pp. 91-2 of the report in the following terms:

"The law which the Prize Court is to administer is not the national or, as it is sometimes called, the Municipal Law but the law of nations — in other words, International Law. It is worth while dwelling for a moment on this distinction. Of course, the Prize Court is a Municipal Court, and its decrees and orders owe their validity to Municipal Law. The law it enforces may, therefore, in one sense, be considered a branch of Municipal Law. Nevertheless, the distinction between Municipal and International Law is well defined. A Court which administers Municipal Law is bound by and gives effect to the law as laid down by the sovereign State which calls it into being. It need inquire only what that law is, but a Court which administers International Law must ascertain and give effect to a law which is not laid down by any particular State, but originates in the practice and usage long observed by civilised nations in their relations towards each other or in express international agreement. It is obvious that, if and so far as a Court of Prize in this country is bound by and gives effect to Orders of the King in Council purporting to prescribe or alter the International Law, it is administering not international but Municipal Law."

"It cannot, of course, be disputed that a Prize Court, like any other Court, is bound by the legislative enactments of its own sovereign State. A British Prize Court would certainly be bound by Acts of the Imperial Legislature. But it is nonetheless true that if the Imperial Legislature passed an Act the provisions of which were inconsistent with the law of nations, the Prize Court in giving effect to such provisions would no longer be administering International Law. It would in the field covered by such provisions be deprived of its proper function as a Prize Court."

57. The Prize Court administers the law of nations. The decision of the Prize Court of a competent jurisdiction is a judgment in rem. It is recognised throughout the world as a valid judgment. The prize must be brought to the Prize Court for adjudication except where the destruction of the Prize is lawful. So long the prize is not declared as a lawful prize by the Prize Court it remains the property of the owner. It is well established by the "Henrich B-Jorn" reported in (1886) 11 AC 270 at pp. 276-7 by "The Odessa" 1916-1 AC 145 and by Anderson v. Marten, (1908 AC 334) (Infra) that the condemnation by the Prize Court of competent jurisdiction extinguishes the proprietary interests of the ship-owner and the cargo-owner and the title vests in the capturing state from the date of the capture irrespective of any sale.

58. In no uncertain terms it was laid down by Lord Stowell that this domestic law of England is an exception even to the general law of that country. In "The L' ACTIFF" (Infra). This domestic Law of England cannot even be taken into consideration where the contest is between the assured and the insurer on the question of total loss of the subject-matter of the insurance under the law of Marine Insurance. And this law was laid down by Lord Mansfield in Goss v. Withers, (1758-97 ER 511) (Infra). Furthermore, this domestic law of England was given a statutory recognition by Section 40 of the Naval Prize Act 1864 which expressly provided for the restoration of the recaptured ship to the former British owner provided however she was not sold to a neutral before her recapture nor was used by their enemies as a ship of war. This special domestic law of England relating to prize causes have no bearing whatsoever on the questions involved before me and I am unable to hold that the sentence of condemnation of the Prize Court at Dacca is of no consequence merely because it was passed by an enemy court.

59. Stringer v. The English and Scottish Marine Insurance Co. Ltd., (1869) 4 QB 676 is one of the leading authorities on total loss under the law of Marine Insurance. During the pendency of an appeal filed by the captor from an order of the American Prize Court for restoration of the captured cargoes, covered by the under-writers against the perils of taking at sea, arrest and seizure etc., to the assured they were abandoned to the under-writers by the assured but the under-writers did not accept this abandonment and thereafter the insured cargoes were sold under an order of the court as neither the assured nor the under-writers deposited a sum which was more than 150 per cent of the value of the insured cargoes nor they furnished any security for that amount as ordered by that Court. In these circumstances the question was whether the assured could succeed on the plea of constructive total loss of the insured cargoes. This case is not an authority on the actual question involved before me because "the sale was not under a condemnation" (see p. 690 of the report) and there, Blackburn, J., as he then was, made the following observations:

"the sale by the Prize Court stands on a very different footing. If, notwithstanding the intervention and opposition of the plaintiff, the Prize Court in America had wrongfully condemned the goods and they had been under that sentence sold, the case would have been identical with that of Mullett v. Shedden, reported in 13 East 304, where the very point decided was, that by the sale the property was wholly lost to the owner, and therefore the necessity of any abandonment was altogether done away."

60. According to Mr. Roy Choudhury these observations conclusively show that in order to be an actual total loss the condemned vessel must be sold by the sentence of the Prize Court and without a sale there cannot be an actual total loss. On the other hand, Mr. Roy Mukharjee drew my attention to where Lord Blackburn at pp. 688-90 referred to Mr. Phillips' Law of Insurance and said;

"He (Mr. Phillips) expresses an opinion that if an embargo or other detention were, in the result, to turn out much longer than was reasonably anticipated the assured, though he might in the first instance have elected to treat the loss as partial, might, on discovering this, treat it as total, unless something had occurred in the interval to prejudice the underwriters in consequence of the delay, although the detention had never changed its nature, and by condemnation or sale been turned into a total destruction of the thing. We are unwilling to say that this could never be the case."

61. Mr. Phillips said that insured-thing is totally destroyed "by condemnation or sale" and it was not disapproved by the Court and therefore Mr. Roy Mukherjee contended that the law is not what is stated by Mr. Roy Chowdhury. This judgment of Lord Blackburn was upheld by the Court of Appeal in (1870) 5 QB 599 and Kelly, C. B. at pp. 603-4 of the report said as follows:

"This loss of the goods arose, though not directly, out of the original capture (which was of itself, if it had been so treated, a total loss), through a series of consequences, viz., the institution, the different steps, and the continuance of the suit until the decree was pronounced; and the sale under the decree was, if I may use the expression, completion of the total loss. It is unnecessary to determine whether an abandonment was necessary at this time, when the goods had been actually sold and never could have been brought into the possession or under the control of the owner again, or, whether that sale did not in itself amount to a completion or perfecting of the total loss of the goods."

Martin, B. at page 606 of the report said:

"In my opinion, when that sale took place, the property in those goods was taken out of the owner, so that it became impossible for him to take those goods, under his original ownership, to the port of discharge; and, upon that taking place, the goods — I will not say were totally lost, because I have complained of that being an ambiguous expression—but were taken entirely from the owner's dominion and control, and were absolutely taken away from him; and in my judgment, after that event took place, the word "abandonment" in the sense in which I have used the word with regard to what took place anterior to this, does not apply at all.   In my judgment, by the sale of these goods under the lawful order of the court of prize, the assured was deprived of all dominion and property in them. They were taken out of his possession. He was deprived of all property in and dominion over his goods; and, therefore, under these circumstances, he is entitled to recover the full amount of his insurance, the under-writers, as I have said being entitled to the proceeds of the sale."

62. Hence, Mr. Roy Chowdhury contended that condemnation is not complete so long the prize is not actually sold and it is by the actual sale that the assured is deprived of the property and therefore there cannot be an actual total loss of the insured res without a sale. He drew my attention to Halsbury's Laws of England, Third Edition, Vol. 22, Art. 282 at page 145 where it is stated "if the subject-matter insured is captured, condemned and sold, there is an actual total loss." And for this statement of law Stringer's case is noted in foot-note (P) where it is also stated "Capture", without condemnation, is not an actual total loss, although it may constitute a constructive total loss. (See Marstrand Fishing Co. Ltd. v. Beer, (1937) 1 All ER 158 at p. 163 per porter. J.)" where the ship "Girl-Pat" was insured against the risk of barratry and barratry is an actual total loss under the law of Marine Insurance.

63. The "Girl-Pat" was wrongfully taken away by her master who completely effaced her identity. She was taken from port to port. She was damaged and was arrested in a port of refit but the master managed to escape her but she was ultimately recovered. No doubt, it was an extreme case but Porter, J., as he then was, after considering the balance of probabilities came to the conclusion that it was more likely that she could be recovered at the time the notice of abandonment was given to the insurers and his Lordship at p. 116 of the report said that it was a "case exactly on all four corners with that of the "Pollurian" her recovery being uncertain but not unlikely. If I had been asked to say: 'Is she more likely to be lost than to be recovered?' I should have felt obliged to reply: 'I do not know  For my part, I am left in complete darkness as to whether the "Girl-Pat" was likely or unlikely to be recovered, and I must hold that she was never a constructive total loss and that her owners cannot recover.' And dealing with the question of barratry Lord Porter, at pp. 163-64 of the report, said as follows:

"First of all, with regard to an actual total loss, it is said that barratry is analogous to capture, and that capture is an actual total loss, though that loss may be redeemed by a recapture. I doubt if this ever was the true question. I think it was always a question of fact whether capture was an actual total loss or merely a possible constructive total loss. Capture followed by condemnation no doubt was actual total loss, but that was because the vessel had in fact been condemned; the war was supposed to last indefinitely, and, therefore, there was no chance within any reasonable time of the ship being restored.  The case is now governed by the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, Sections 56 to 60. That Act provides in Section 57, amongst its definitions of "actual total loss," "if the vessel be irretrievably lost." In my view, no one could say here that the vessel was irretrievably lost to her owners. Under the Marine Insurance Act, loss by barratry is necessarily an actual total loss, and in this case I find there was no actual total loss."

Lord Porter did not say that an actual sale is necessary to make it an actual total loss nor did he say that condemnation without sale is not an actual total loss. Therefore, the Stringer's case nor the "Girl-Pat" has finally decided the question involved before me. The quoted passage from Halsbury's Laws of England also do not say that condemnation without sale is not an actual total loss.

64. The "Polurrian" reported in (1915) 1 KB 922 is the first direct authority on constructive total loss as defined by Section 60 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906. She was captured on October 25, 1912 by a Greek destroyer and the notice of abandonment was given by the assured on October 26 to the underwriter and thereafter she was released by the Greek Government on realisation of the mistake committed by the Greek interpreter in undertaking the English of the master of the ship. This mistake occurred in this circumstance. The master did not know that Greece had entered the war between Italy and Turkey, and he told this fact when asked by the Greek interpreter who however thought that the master had told him that he was aware of that fact and accordingly he said so to the Naval Officer who arrested the ship. There the assured failed in his action on constructive total loss by capture and Kennedy, L. J., after reviewing the previous state of law, said that the assured could have recovered under the Pre-Act law relating to constructive total loss because her release was uncertain when the notice of abandonment was given by him but the Act having altered this law to the disadvantage of the assured by using the expression 'unlikely' she was not a constructive total loss because her release was more likely than unlikely on that day. She was captured but was not condemned and I am not concerned here with a capture simpliciter but with a capture followed by condemnation on which the "Polurrian" is wholly silent.

65. In Mullet v. Shedden also reported in (1811) 104 ER 387 the insured cargo was condemned, unshipped and sold under an order of the Court of Admiralty which was reversed on appeal and the cargo was ordered to be restored to the assured or its value paid to him upon payment of the Captor's costs. The assured did not receive the cargo nor its value and he brought the action for a total loss without giving any notice of abandonment. While Mr. Marryat, for the insurers, was contending that notice of abandonment was necessary Lord Ellenborough, C. J. at page 389 of the report said:

"The assured stands upon the actual destruction as to him of the thing insured, which precludes the necessity of any notice to abandon it."

And in delivering the judgment for the Court his Lordship at page 390 of the Report said:

"Then, as to the point of abandonment; if instead of the Saltpetre having been taken out of the ship and sold, and the property devastated and the subject-matter lost to the owner, it had remained on board the ship, and been restored at last to the owner, I should have thought that there was much in the argument, that in order to make it a total loss there should have been notice of abandonment and that such notice should have been given sooner; but there the property itself was wholly lost to the owner, and therefore the necessity of any abandonment was altogether done away."

66. Mr. Roy Choudhury contended that in this case there was an actual total loss because the title of the assured was extinguished by sale and the cargo was lost by sale. Though the effect on condemnation without an actual sale of the cargo was not an issue in this case, but in Dr. Arnould's Marine Insurance at p. 1103, Art. 1130 this case is cited as an authority for the proposition "capture followed by confiscation or by unpreventible sale and unredeemed by any restoration of the goods or their proceeds before action is brought, is, as we have already seen a case of actual total loss on goods, in which no notice of abandonment is necessary. It will be recalled that if the goods subsist in specie, and there is a chance of restitution, notice of abandonment is necessary to establish total loss."

67. Bainbridge v. Neilson, (1808) 10 East 329 is a case of recapture of a ship and it was held that the assured was not entitled to convert his partial loss arising out of a capture into a constructive total loss by abandonment. The ship in question was however not condemned and therefore it is unnecessary to discuss this case. The principles laid down in the 'Polurrian' and in the 'Girl Pat' relating to constructive total loss was followed in C. Czarnikow Co. v. Java Sea & Fire Insurance Co. Ltd., (1941) 2 All ER 256 where the condition of the cargo deteriorated between the capture and the recapture of the ship. There the assured succeeded in the action and Viscount Caldecote at p. 263 of the report, said "it was unlikely, — i.e. more unlikely than likely — that cargo-owner would recover his goods" and "there was a constructive total loss of goods proximately caused by the perils insured against."

68. A common judgment was delivered by the House of Lords in Rickards v. Forestal Land and Timber & Rly. Co. Ltd., LR 1942 AC 50 where two different German Merchant ships with English cargoes were scuttled by their Captains for evading their capture in the Allied blockade during the Second World War and another German Merchant ship escaped the blockade the assured cargo-owners succeeded in their actions both in constructive and actual total loss against the under-writers and the principles relating to constructive total loss laid down in the 'Polurrian' and the 'Girl Pat' approved by the House.

69. Though the principles of constructive total loss were discussed in all these cases and the House of Lords also discussed the principles relating to actual total loss but the true effect of condemnation was neither an issue nor was discussed in these cases and, therefore, no useful purpose will be served in dealing with these cases cited by Mr. Roy Chowdhury. He then cited my own judgment in Khalil Adal Khan's case (supra) where the assured was non-suited by me on the facts and circumstances of that case which need not be repeated here. There, the laws relating to total loss, both actual and constructive, and abandonment as they stood prior to the Marine Insurance Act 1963 and its English counter-part were reviewed by me including the classical judgment of Lord Abinger in Roux v. Shavador (Infra) and the opinions of Dr. Arnould that were relevant for the purpose of deciding that case. It was not a case on condemnation at all and, therefore, what was said there need not be considered here.

70. In Art. 1054 at pages 1030-31 of Dr. Arnould's Marine Insurance under the heading "Effect of partial restoration after confiscation of goods" it is said as follows:

"There are dicta in two old cases which afford some authority for the view that if goods are seized and confiscated by a hostile Government, the restoration of a part of the goods, or their proceeds, before action brought prevents the assured from recovering from a total loss, even though prior to such restoration he might have claimed for an actual total loss. This view was adopted by Arnould. The learned editors of the 12th Edition took the view, however, that if at the time of the confiscation the goods could properly be regarded as irretrievably lost to the assured, so that there was then an actual total loss, the subsequent restoration of a part of the goods by the voluntary act of the Government of the captors could not deprive the assured of his right to claim for such actual total loss (25). In this view the only effect of the restoration of the property under such circumstances would be, that the under-writers would be entitled to the property as salvage. A fortiori, it is submitted that the restitution of a portion of the proceeds of the goods after the goods themselves have been sold, will not alter the nature of the loss.

Apart from these two cases, there does not seem to be any authority for the proposition that an actual total loss, when once constituted, can ever be defeated by subsequent event".

In foot-note 25 it is inter alia stated:

"The present editors considered that this view is, in theory, correct, and the text is therefore left unaltered. The crux of the matter is the premise that 'at the time of the confiscation the goods could properly be regarded as irretrievably lost'; it may be doubted whether any Court would so find, where the goods had been released before action brought. The problem can hardly arise in any case except that of capture".

71. Mr. Roy Chowdhury placed strong reliance on the statements made in this foot-note and he contended that the term "confiscation" has been used here in a wider sense and it includes condemnation and therefore if "Shakeela" was released and restored to the plaintiffs before this action was brought no Court would have held that she was an actual total loss by her condemnation. Mr. Roy Mukherjee on the other hand contended that "confiscation" stands on a different footing from condemnation. He said that confiscation is an act of State whereas condemnation is a judicial act of the Prize Court. Similarly, capture is an act of state but not the condemnation. This article, according to him, therefore deals with confiscation and not with condemnation. But it is not necessary to resolve these two rival contentions for the simple reason that this ship was not restored to the plaintiffs at all. Furthermore, she was an actual total loss on October 18, 1965 and therefore no further question can at all arise.

72. In Halsbury's Laws of England, 3rd Edn. Vol. 30, Art. 1268 at p. 653 it is said: "A sentence of condemnation is necessary in order to vest the property in the captors or in their transferees and is conclusive as regards the property in the condemned ship or goods. The sentence of a prize court of competent jurisdiction condemning captured property is a judgment in rem, giving a good title as against all the World, the grounds of condemnation as well as the condemnation itself regarded as conclusive."

73. The condemned property, at the option of the capturing State, must either be sold or made over to the capturing State by the Prize Court. Even where an order for sale is made but the sale is not yet held the capturing State has a further right to have this order for sale rescinded and is entitled to get back the possession of the Prize. This right of the capturing-State to retain possession of the Prize by the sentence of condemnation of the Prize Court conclusively demolishes the contention of Mr. Roy Chowdhury that the condemnation is not complete until the Prize is actually sold and I am unable to accept that the dictum of Kelly C. B. has held down the entire law on the subject. No doubt, a ship is lost by sale under the Prize-law but no sale is even necessary to make her an actual total loss under the law of Marine Insurance.

74. It was contended by Mr. Roy Mukherjee that her possession was taken away from the plaintiffs by capture and this dispossession was confirmed and continued by the sentence of the Prize Court. He said that this sentence has further extinguished the title of the plaintiffs in the condemned ship and the World no longer recognized the title of the plaintiffs and once the title was gone "It is gone for ever" is the famous saying of Lord Stowell in "The L'ACTIF" reported in 2 Roscoe Pr. C at p. 32 of the report and therefore she was an actual total loss by her condemnation.

75. In the Corpus Juris Vol. 38, paragraph 416 at page 1138 it is stated that a capture followed by condemnation is an actual total loss for the reason that the assured is effectively deprived of the possession and the use of his property. The same law is restated in Vol. 45, paragraph 955 at p. 1149-50 of the Corpus Juris Secundum. In Dr. Arnould's Marine Insurance under the heading "effect of re-purchase of ship by the Master" in Art. 1102 at page 1075 in footnote 2 it is inter alia stated: "where there is a lawful condemnation it appears that there would be an actual total loss, which would not be effected by any repurchase by the Master. Notice of abandonment would therefore be unnecessary. See ante, Section 1054. MacLachlan however (6th Ed. p. 1043) took a different view."

76. The Sixth Edition of Dr. Arnould's Marine Insurance edited by Mr. MacLachlan is, however, not available in Calcutta but I have looked into his "Merchant Shipping" (7th Edition) and in footnote 8 at page 17 it is stated:

"Even after the sentence of condemnation, a statutory British rule prescribes the restoration of a ship recaptured from the enemy, on payment of salvage, unless she has been used as a ship of war; Naval Prize Act 1864, S. 40. This provision only applies to British ships. As to salvage for the recapture of a neutral ship, see The Salerno (1946) P 189. In the United States the right to have restoration on recapture is lost when the property has been adopted condemned, and varying rules have been adopted in other countries: See Hall, Int. Law, S. 166, p. 522, 7th ed".

The above statements may be the reason why Mr. MacLachlan took a different view and why the law is thus stated in the Corpus Juris, I will now pass on to Andersen v. Marten, (1908 AC 334) where the perils of the sea and not risks of capture, seizure etc. covered the ship "Romulous". Her voyage was to a Russian Port. During the Russo-Japanese War she had to deviate her course for avoiding a capture by a Japanese cruiser and was severely damaged by reason of her coming in contact with the ice. She had to proceed towards a Japanese Port of refuge for repairs and before she could reach there she was captured by the Japanese cruiser. While she was being taken by an opposite route to a Japanese Port for being condemned by a Japanese Prize Court she became a total wreck by the perils of the sea and two days thereafter she was condemned by the Japanese Prize Court. In these circumstances the assured, without giving any notice of abandonment, brought the action against the insurers which was tried by Channell, J., as he then was, and his judgment is reported in LR (1907) 2 KBD 248. The question was whether she was lost by the perils of the sea or by her capture followed by condemnation and it was answered in the following terms at pp. 253-5 of the report:

"I think that most people, looking at the matter from a common sense point of view and apart from technicalities, would say that under the circumstances the owner lost his ship by capture, and that the Japanese captors afterwards lost their price by shipwreck. If that is the correct view, then under this policy the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. If the effect of what took place when the Japanese officers came on board and directed the captain to take her down the coast in the opposite direction to that in which she was going, that is to say, towards the Prize Court, was to divest the owner's property in the ship, then he had lost it and could not afterwards lose it again. From that moment he had no insurable interest in the ship. The ship itself was undoubtedly lost by the perils of the sea but the question is whose property was it at that time? If the property had passed from the original owner by the capture, he did not lose it; it was the loss of the Japanese who had taken it. I have examined the authorities on the subject, and I find that it is clear that capture without condemnation does not divest the owner of his property. I say without condemnation, not 'until condemnation, for I think that is the proper way of stating the rule. * * * * * the true law is that, although mere capture in itself when there is no condemnation does not divest the property when there is an adjudication of a prize court, which is an adjudication in rem binding on all the world, it is a decision not merely that the property has passed at the date of the decision, but that it did pass at the time of the capture, and its effect therefore may be described as relating back. On that ground, therefore I must hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to judgment."

77. This judgment was upheld by the Court of Appeal reported in (1908) 1 KBD 601, and by the House of Lords in 1908 AC 334 and on behalf of the plaintiffs the following relevant portion from the speeches of Lord Halsbury at p. 340 of the report was relied on before me:

"This very question arose just 150 years ago in Goss v. Withers, and was argued before Lord Mansfield and he observed that a large field of argument had been entered into, and it would be necessary to consider the laws of nations, our own laws and Acts of Parliament, and also the laws and customs of merchants which make a part of our laws. After taking time to consider, the learned judge, delivering the judgment of the whole Court on November 23, 1758, then decided what would be enough to decide this case. After going through the whole law and discussing the question of how far and to what extent the seizure of the vessel affected the change in property, he says: "But whatever rule ought to be followed in favour of the owner against a recaptor or vendee it can in no way affect the case of an insurance between the insurer and insured The ship is lost by the capture though she be never condemned at all nor carried into any port or fleet of the enemy, and the insurer must pay the value. If after condemnation the owner recovers or retakes her the insurer can be in no other condition than if she had been recovered or retaken before condemnation. The reason is plain from the nature of the contract; the insurer runs the risk of the insured and undertakes to indemnify. He must therefore bear the loss actually sustained." * * * Applying Lord Mansfield's words here, it seems to me that it would be a bold thing to argue against a judgment of the full Court of King's Bench presided over by Lord Mansfield and 150 years after it has been accepted as the law during that period by every English tribunal."

77-A. The doctrine of relation back laid down by Sir Arthor Channell was primarily based on Stevens v. Bagwell, (1808) 15 Ves 139 (152) where Sir William Grant said: "Though the property was not completely vested in the captors until condemnation, yet after condemnation it is by relation considered as theirs from the time of the capture".

78. It is true that this decision was not concerned with the effect of condemnation on the question of total loss under the law of Marine Insurance but the doctrine of relation back is firmly established by "The Odessa" 1916-1 AC

[145 (supra). Sir Arthur Channel and the Court of Appeal were of opinion that the ship was lost by her capture which was followed by her condemnation and Lord Halsbury proceeded on the law laid down by Lord Mansfield in Goss v. Withers which is the main source of the doctrine of the constructive total loss. There, the insured voyages were terminated by the capture of the insured ships and after they were recaptured the action was brought by giving notice of abandonment. The ships were not condemned and the contention that their title remained with the assured debarred him from getting the insurance money because of their ultimate arrival after recapture was overruled by Lord Mansfield at pp. 517-8 of (1758) 97 ER in the following terms:

"There is one point which, we are all of opinion is immaterial as between the insurers and insured; viz. 'whether by this capture, the property was or was not transferred to the enemy by the law of nation.' That question can happen but in two cases; namely, (1st) between the owner and a neutral person who has bought the capture from the enemy; (2nd) between the owner and re-captor. If the ship taken by an enemy escapes from the enemy, or is retaken; or if the owner redeems (ransoms) the capture; his property is thereby re-vested; which property in the ship taken was, by the law of nations, obtained by the captor.

The general proposition of writers upon this subject is, that 'quae ab hostibus capiuntur, statim capientium fiunt'; which is to be understood, 'when the battle is over'. Indeed, nothing can be said to be taken, till the battle is over and the battle is not over, till all immediate pursuit has ceased, and all hope of recovery is gone. * * * But whatever rule ought to be followed, in favour of the owner, against a recaptor or vendee, it can no way affect the case of an insurance, between the insurer and insured."

79. Then the law quoted by Lord Halsbury was stated by Lord Mansfield and thereafter at page 519 Lord Mansfield again said:

"No capture by the enemy, though condemned, can be so total a loss as to leave no possibility of recovery if the owner himself should retake at any time, he will be entitled; and, by the Act of Parliament, if an English ship retakes at any time, (before condemnation or after) the owner is entitled to restitution, upon stated salvage. This chance does not suspend the demand, for a total loss, upon the insurer; but justice is done by putting him in the place of the insured in case of recapture".

80. I dare not lift this embargo laid by Lord Mansfield for allowing the Prize Law to intermingle with the law of the Marine Insurance. And a greater Mansfield is required to do so. Goss v. Withers, (1758) 97 ER 511 overrules all the rival contentions made before me discussed upto this stage and it lays down: (1) The law of Marine Insurance is not concerned with the destruction of the title of the assured in the insured ship by a sentence of condemnation of the prize court of an enemy State; (2) Merely because an insured ship is condemned during the continuance of the hostilities is no ground for holding that she is a total loss within the meaning of the law of Marine Insurance; and (3) All hope of recovery is gone for ever with the cessation of hostilities if she remains in the possession of the capturing State and the insurer must pay her agreed value in terms of the policy.

81. A loss, under the law of Marine Insurance, is either partial or total. A total loss is either constructive or actual. An actual total loss of the subject-matter of assurance by reason of the perils insured against occurs in three different situations; (1) Where the res is totally destroyed or is wholly annihilated; (2) Where the res ceases to remain in its original condition; and (3) Though the res is not destroyed and it remains in specie but it is irretrievably lost to the assured.

82. Section 57 of the Act says, "Where the assured is irretrievably deprived of the" subject-matter of the assurance "there is an actual total loss" but it does not say under what circumstances an assured is irretrievably deprived of the subject-matter of the assurance. An actual total loss by irretrievable deprivation can only be understood if the principles relating to constructive total loss are properly appreciated.

83. Where the irretrievable deprivation has not yet taken place but the assured is deprived of the possession of his ship or goods by a peril insured against and it is unlikely that he could recover the ship or goods as the case may be and he has reasonably abandoned them to the insurers it is a case of constructive total loss under Section 60 of the Act. A constructive total loss is not a factual loss. It is a loss presumed by the law. Abandonment is the foundation of every constructive total loss and without an abandonment there can be no constructive total loss. Abandonment must be duly notified within a reasonable time from receiving the intelligence of the accident which must also be made on the true facts though unknown to the assured but it cannot be made on the facts supposed to be true when they are not really true.

84. The doctrine of constructive total loss originated in the cases of capture. It has a long history behind it but

It is not necessary to dip into this vast Ocean. A chance of a recapture within a reasonable time makes the capture a constructive total loss provided the capture is followed by a duly notified abandonment is the law laid down by Lord Abinger in Roux v. Salvador, (1836) 43 RR 638 at pp. 649-50 of the report in the following terms:

"there may be a capture, which though prima facie a total loss, may be followed by the recapture which would revert the property in the assured. There may be a forcible detention which may speedily terminate or may last so long as to end in the impossibility of bringing the ship or the goods to their destination * * * in all these cases a party insured may for his own benefit as well as that of the underwriter, treat the case as one of the total loss and demand the full sum insured. But if he elects to do this as the thing insured, or a portion of it still exists and is vested in him the very principle of the indemnity requires that he should make cessation of all his rights to the recovery of it and that too within a reasonable time after he receives the intelligence of the accident, that the under-writer may be entitled to all the benefits of or may still be of any value; and that he may, if he pleases, take measures, on his own costs, for realising or increasing the value".

85. It is not the law that merely because an assured is deprived of his possession of the ship he will be entitled to abandon her to the insurer so as to convert his partial loss into a constructive total loss. Her unlikelihood of recovery must prevail over her likelihood of recovery to entitle him to convert a partial loss into a total loss by abandoning her to the insurer is the underlying principle of the constructive total loss in the law of Marine Insurance. This likelihood or unlikelihood of recovery brings the subjective test into play. It is to be determined on the true facts and the circumstances prevailing at the time of abandonment. The rule is that where the insured ship exists in her original form and her recovery is unlikely the assured is put to an election either to treat her loss as a partial loss or as a constructive total loss. If he chooses to treat her as a constructive total loss he must give a notice of abandonment to the under-writer within a reasonable time from receiving the intelligence of her accident because he cannot by delayed election prejudice the rights of the under-writer to recover her possession for his own benefit. Where the assured exercises his right of abandonment in due time by a proper notice and the circumstance justifies such a course he will get her agreed value.

86. And even where the assured has not abandoned her to the under-writer but by the subsequent turn of events she becomes an actual total loss, during the currency of the policy, by the perils insured against the under-writer must pay her value in terms of the policy to the assured and no abandonment is required from him because there nothing remains to be abandoned for the benefit of the under-writer. In (1836) 43 RR 638 at pp. 643-644 of the report Lord Abinger laid down the law relating to actual total loss in the following terms:

"If the goods once damaged by the perils of the sea, and necessarily landed before the termination of the voyage, are, by reason of that damage, in such a state, though the species be not utterly destroyed that they cannot with safety be reshipped into the same or any other vessel; if it be certain that, before the termination of the original voyage, the species itself would disappear, and the goods assume a new form, losing all their original character; if, though imperishable, they are in the hands of strangers not under the control of the assured; if by any circumstances over which he has no control they can never, or within no assignable period, be brought to their original destination; in any of these cases, the circumstance of their existing in specie at that forced termination of the risk, is of no importance. The loss is, in its nature, total to him who has no means of recovering his goods whether his inability arises from their annihilation or from any other insuperable obstacle". Again at page 649 of the report the learned Law Lord said:

"The underwriter engages, that the object of the assurance shall arrive in safety at its destined termination. If in the progress of the voyage, it becomes totally destroyed or annihilated, or if it be placed, by reason of the perils against which he insures, in such a position, that it is wholly out of the power of the assured or of the underwriter to procure its arrival he is bound by the very letter of his contract to pay the sum insured".

87. The above statements of law were no doubt made in relation to the insured cargoes but they are equally applicable to the insured ships. Dr. Arnould in Art. 1048 at page 1025 under the heading "What amounts to actual total loss" summarises the law laid down by Lord Abinger and the material portion of it is set out below:

"If in the progress of the voyage, the thing insured becomes totally destroyed or annihilated, or if it be placed by the perils insured against in such a position that it is totally out of the power of the assured or the under-writer to procure its arrival, the latter is bound, by the very letter of his contract, to pay the sum insured.

The great principle, therefore, on which all the cases of actual total loss depend appears to be this: the impossibility, owing to the perils insured against, of ever procuring the arrival of the thing insured. If, by reason of those perils, the assured is permanently and irretrievably deprived not only of all present possession and control over it, but of all hope or possibility of ever ultimately recovering possession of, or further prosecuting the adventure upon it, that is a case of actual total loss, independently of the election of the assured to treat it as such. Notice of abandonment would in such case be a mere idle formality because nothing remains to be abandoned.

88. The law relating to constructive total loss was altered to the disadvantages of the assured by the Act but the law relating to the actual total loss remains the same. An actual total loss is not a pure question of law. The loss must be actual and the actual loss must be a total loss. An actual total loss does not depend on the treatment, volition or election of the assured whereas the foundation of the constructive total loss is the election of the assured. In actual total loss a total destruction of the insured ship must be proved as a fact. Her conversion into a completely different thing is also a pure question of fact. And every irretrievable deprivation of the ship stands on the same footing. And here there is no scope for applying any subjective test. And all facts, subsequent to an actual total loss are wholly irrelevant for the purpose of determining the rights of the assured and the liabilities of the insurer because once there is an actual total loss it is actual total loss for all time to come under the law of Marine Insurance and it does (not) matter in the least whether the assured or the underwriter have any knowledge of the actual total loss nor their futile attempt to procure her arrival can alter its legal consequence.

89. According to Dr. Arnould: "Every effective deprivation of the spes recuperandi amounts to an actual total loss: if the thing insured be in the hands of the strangers, not under the control of the assured; if, by any circumstances over which he has not control, it can never, or within no assignable period be brought to its original destination, in such cases the fact of its remaining in specie at any forced termination of the risk is of no importance. The loss is in its nature total to him who has no means of recovering his property, whether his inability arises from its annihilation or from any other insuperable obstacle." (See Art. 1052 at pp. 1028-9).

90. It is not the universal rule that a capture is always a constructive and not an actual total loss. The 'Romulus' was lost by capture and not by condemnation. The proximate cause of her loss was her capture and thereafter the assured lost his title by the condemnation under the Prize Law. No doubt, this loss of title related back to the date of her capture by a legal fiction but that does not mean that she became an actual total loss by reason of her condemnation. It is true that the obiter dictum of Bailhache, J. in Fooks v. Smith, underlined by me, the acceptance of opinion of Mr. Phillips by Lord Blackburn in Stringer's case, the judgment of Sir Arther Channel in Anderson's case and the opinions of Dr. Arnould in Art. 1130 and in footnote 2 of Art. 1102 and the law stated in Corpus Juris and restated in Corpus Juris Secundum are apparently in favour of the plaintiffs but they should be viewed in their proper perspective. It is also true that Mr. Roy Choudhury has not been able to place any direct authority in support of his contentions but I am unable to accept these two diametrically opposite and extreme contentions because an actual total loss is always a mixed question of fact and law and therefore it cannot be said that there is always an actual total loss by a mere sentence of condemnation of an enemy Prize Court.

91. The learned counsel for both the parties have proceeded on the footing that there will be an actual total loss of an insured ship if she is sold under a sentence of condemnation of the Prize Court of competent jurisdiction and therefore, subject to what are stated earlier, I do not propose to express any further opinion on it. But that again does not mean that in order to make her an actual total loss she should be sold to a neutral in execution of a sentence of an enemy Prize Court.

92. A condemnation of an insured ship though she has not been sold is not a mere fact but the most vital fact and should be regarded as of pivotal importance in those circumstances where her condemnation has taken place in such a situation that her destiny can no longer be altered by the assured or by the insurer by any means whatsoever or it has become wholly beyond their power to procure her arrival within a reasonable time to her destination. And in this situation she is then and there an actual total loss by the peril insured against, irrespective of any question as to whether she had been subsequently sold or not to a neutral under the sentence of condemnation of the Prize Court of the capturing state because the assured has already been actually and effectively deprived of his ship and has ceased to have any dominion over her. And here there is no sale and still the loss is actual and total. I repeat that no sale is even necessary to make her an actual total loss and the loss is actual and total to the assured where his insured ship is placed in such a situation by the perils insured against that he and the insurer have lost all control over her destiny and they have no means of procuring her arrival within a reasonable time to her destination. Lord Abinger, in (1836) 43 RR 638 said and it was reiterated by Lord Blackburn in James Rankin v. Lewis Potter (1873) 6 HL 83 at p. 128 that:

"Neither the assured nor the underwriters could at the time when the intelligence arrived exercise any control over the goods, or by any interference alter the consequences".

93. And this is the point where my journey comes to an end and here the spes recuperandi is gone and it is gone forever and the subject-matter of the insurance becomes an actual total loss.

94. The proximate cause of her capture was the Indo-Pakistan War. She was captured on September 5, 1965 while this war was actually going on. Her possession was taken away from the plaintiffs on this day. The war continued and, therefore, there was a faint chance of her recapture for the reason that there was a possibility of war being spread within the territories of East Pakistan in view of the deliberate provocative acts of the Pakistani Air Force in bombing a few places in West Bengal but due to the wisdom of our Government the war did not spread to East Pakistan. This war came to an end on September 23, 1965 under the command of the Security Council and the Military Observers were posted by the United Nations Organisation throughout the cease fire line. And on this day this ship was under absolute control and in unfettered possession of the Government of Pakistan. She was not condemned during the war and therefore she did not become the property of Pakistan but the plaintiffs had no control over her destiny nor they had any means of procuring her arrival to India or to any other destination. And on this day every possibility of her recapture was gone for ever. According to Lord Mansfield she became an actual total loss on this day but Lord Porter has supposed to have whispered the contrary was the contention of Mr. Roy Chowdhury.

95. Assuming, however that she was not an actual total loss on this day and on the further assumption that on this day a new faint possibility arose of her restoration to the plaintiffs within a reasonable time for the reason that she was still in the possession of the Government of Pakistan and she might have been allowed to come back to India by the Government of Pakistan. I will now deal with the subsequent events for ascertaining whether she became an actual loss at all and if so on which date. The hostilities came to an end on September 23 and the Government of Pakistan did not take her to the Prize Court upto October 17 but during this period the plaintiffs had no means to recover her possession and the Government of Pakistan retained her as a Prize in exercising of its sovereign right.

96. She was then taken to the Prize Court on October 18, 1965 and why she was taken there? Because the Government of Pakistan wanted to take her away from the plaintiffs forever. She was condemned on this day at the instance of the Government of Pakistan and the Government of Pakistan became the owner of this ship. The Government of Pakistan wanted to deprive the plaintiffs permanently of this ship and it was done long after the cessation of the hostilities and on this day the Government of Pakistan wanted to have her sold so that the plaintiffs could never get her back by any chance whatsoever.

97. The day she was condemned, her men were also taken from jail to a Concentration Camp where they were not only detained but were also tied up with ropes (Bose Q. 25). Her possession was forcibly taken away from the plaintiffs on September 5, and this dispossession was permanently confirmed on October 18, when her title was also taken away from the plaintiffs. They had no control whatsoever over her. They had no means of procuring her arrival. Under no circumstances they could intervene and alter the situation. They could not even go to East Pakistan for securing their rights and furthermore who on earth would have listened to them there? Had any one of plaintiffs gone there by any chance he would have been sent to the same place where her men were detained for meeting the same treatment. The Government of Pakistan took away everything from the plaintiffs so far as the "Shakeela" was concerned and it was done deliberately by the Government of Pakistan. And her destiny was finally sealed and settled on this day so far as the law of Marine Insurance is concerned.

98. These were the insuperable obstacles that stood on the way of the plaintiffs from recovering her and they were irretrievably deprived of the vessel and there can be no doubt that she became an actual total loss to them. The Insurers were in no way in a better position than the plaintiffs. All hope of her recovery was extinguished and the spes recuperandi was totally vanished on October 18, 1965. The "Shakeela" was lost and she was lost forever so far as the law of Marine Insurance is concerned. Her possession was taken away from the plaintiffs by capture on September 5 and this dispossession continued uninterrupted right upto this day and therefore her loss was proximately caused by the perils insured against on this day and on this day she was not under any attachment of any Civil Court whatsoever. And the Insurers must pay her agreed value to the plaintiffs.

99. She was not actually sold and the Order for her sale was rescinded but that does not mean that she ceased to be an actual total loss because once there is an actual total loss it is an actual total loss for all time to come under the law of Marine Insurance. No doubt, there was an agreement between the two Governments for exchanging her with the 'Elahi Bux' but that could not alter the situation because she became an actual total loss long before this agreement was entered between the two Governments. Furthermore, she was not exchanged at all with the 'Elahi Bux'.

100. The plaintiffs were irretrievably deprived of her on October 18, and its effect was not the suspension of a mere chance of her recovery but an absolute and total destruction of all chances and hope of her recovery. They had no remedy against the Government of Pakistan whatsoever. The 'Elahi Bux' was not condemned but 'the Sakeela' was. Had the exchange been materialised she would have belonged not to the plaintiffs but to the Government of India and it was still said that our Government might have given her to the plaintiffs but this gift or grant by the grace of our Government and this act of benevolence cannot alter the law relating to actual total loss and, furthermore, the Insurers could have taken her away as salvage upon payment of the agreed value to the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs would have no say in the matter.

101. The actual total loss that happened on October 18, 1965 continued to be the actual total loss on the date the suit was filed because her possession was never restored to the plaintiffs and the plaintiffs and the Insurers had no means of procuring her arrival to India at any point of time. The agreement relating to her exchange with the "Elahi Bux" or her attachment by the Civil Court cannot by any principle of law be said to have destroyed the efficacy of her actual total loss and the Insurers must pay her value to the plaintiffs in terms of the policy.

102. All relevant facts relating to the "Sakeela" were communicated by the plaintiffs without any loss of time to the Insurers. They took time to consider their own position. They kept the matter hanging for an indefinite period and if they have prejudiced their own rights, if any, they are to suffer and not the plaintiffs. Furthermore, the question of any prejudice to them can never arise because she was an actual total loss.

103. Price of a ship of her nature had gone up by leaps and bounds and the plaintiffs for this reason were vitally interested in getting her back and for this purpose they have rendered all possible assistance to the Insurers. This assistance was sought to be utilised against the plaintiffs on behalf of the Insurers for showing that the plaintiffs were exercising their right of ownership over her after she was condemned and were still hoping for her recovery and, therefore, she was not an actual total loss. There is no substance in this submission and the complete answer is that her actual total loss did not depend on the behaviour of the plaintiffs and by rendering assistance the plaintiffs did not destroy their rights under the policy.

104. The plaintiffs have paid off the last defendant after the institution of this suit and in view of this payment Mr. Roy Chowdhury expressly abandoned the first two issues raised by him. He and Mr. Roy Mukherjee requested me not to decide these two issues and therefore, I am not answering them and I answer the remaining issues as follows:—

Issues 3 (a), (b) & (c)	Yes.
Issue No. 4	Yes.
Issue No. 5	No.
Issue No. 6

The vessel was not released but not for the reasons stated in paragraph 6 of the Written Statement.

Issue No. 7	'Yes' but it is of no legal consequence.
Issue No. 8	Yes.
Issue No. 9	Yes, as stated below.

105. The plaintiffs have succeeded in this action and therefore, the suit is decreed in terms of prayer (b) and (f) of the plaint with interim interest and further interest on the decretal amount at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until realisation. The suit is dismissed as against the last defendant who will get the costs from the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The plaintiff will also get the costs of two Commissions including the fees paid to their Counsel for appearing in Commissions from the defendants Nos. 1 to 4. Certified for two counsel.

106. The case was opened by Mr. Sen on March 3, 1971 and it was closed by Mr. Roy Choudhury on May 7, 1971. They did not waste a single moment of this Court for which I am grateful to them. I have taken a considerable time at home to consider the complicated questions involved in this action. Hence I suo motu stay the execution of this decree till the 15th December, 1971 to enable the Insurers to test the correctness of this decision, if they are so advised.

Order accordingly.

(C) Constitution of India, Art. 19(1) (g) — Acceptance or rejection of tender — No question as to infringement of Art. 19 (1) (g) or Art. 14 arises — (X-Ref:— Art. 14). (Para 5)

(D) Constitution of India, Article 226 — Natural Justice — Principles of — Rejection of tender — Tenderer whether entitled to opportunity of being heard.

A tenderer cannot claim any hearing before cancellation of his tender where the acceptance or rejection of a tender is not based on any statute or statutory rule. Mere submission of tender does not create any right to property in favour of the tenderer. The fact that the tenderer has quoted the lowest rate also does not entitle him to a hearing especially when one of the terms specified in the tender form is "the Railway Administration reserved the right to reject any tender without assigning any reason and does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender or to assign any reason for doing so". (Para 6)

ORDER:— This Rule is obtained against an order rejecting petitioner's tender and accepting the one submitted by the respondent No. 3.

2. Tenders were invited by the Chief Commercial Superintendent, Eastern Railway, for street collection and delivery of goods and parcels from Calcutta and Baranagore Booking Offices and also from several other stations. The petitioner as also others submitted their tenders in the form and manner indicated by the authorities. On 6th April, 1970, these tenders were opened in the presence of the petitioner when it was found that only two other tenders were received besides the petitioner's one, of respondent No. 3 and the other, of one Ram Kumar Agarwalla. Of these three tenders only two namely those of the petitioner and the respondent No. 3 were found in order but the rates quoted by the petitioner were lower than the rates quoted by the respondent No. 3. It is alleged that the tender submitted by the respondent No. 3 did not moreover conform to the rules contained in clauses (15) and (17) of the tender form. Even so, the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 considered and ultimately accepted the tender of the respondent No. 3 in preference to the petitioner. In spite of repeated representations the respondents Nos. 1 and 2 did not cancel the acceptance of such tender. That is how, in short, the petitioner felt aggrieved and obtained the present Rule.

3. The first point raised on behalf of the petitioner is that the acceptance of the tender submitted by respondent No. 3 on consequential rejection of the petitioner's tender is in contravention of rules and provisions embodied in the form of the tender.

Secondly, it is stated that the rejection of the tender of the petitioner offends against the fundamental rights guaranteed under the Constitution of India, and amounts to illegal discrimination contrary to Article 14 of the Constitution. Thirdly, it is submitted, in any event, cancellation of the petitioner's tender without giving an opportunity of hearing has violated the rules and principles of natural justice but no such ground, I find, was taken in this form in the writ petition.

4. I think, this Rule fails on a preliminary point raised by Mr. Basak on behalf of the respondents. First, it is said in paragraph 3 of the affidavit-in-opposition that at the material time there was no such post of Chief Commercial Superintendent (Development) Eastern Railway, and even no person now is holding such post. The Writ Petition is not maintainable in absence of the Chief Commercial Superintendent, Eastern Railway, who is not a party. Secondly, it is said that the petition is also bad for non-joinder of parties, viz., the members of tender-committee whose names have been disclosed in paragraph 13 of the affidavit. It is stated, that the tender-committee in its meeting held on 23rd April, 1970, considered the tenders submitted by the petitioner and the respondent No. 3 and ultimately recommended for acceptance of the tender submitted by the respondent No. 3 which was accordingly accepted by the Chief Commercial Superintendent. In paragraph 5 of the affidavit-in-reply of the petitioner affirmed on 20th June, 1970, it is however, denied that the petition is defective as under clause (2) of the instructions to tenderers the Chief Commercial Superintendent (Development) has been described as the officer for presentation of the tenders for registration. With regard to the tender-committee it is said in the said affidavit in paragraph 14 that there was no reference of such committee under the instruction clauses in the tender form. I think, both the Chief Commercial Superintendent and the members of the tender-committee are necessary parties. For, before the final acceptance or rejection of the tenders in dispute the whole thing had to pass through a continuous process of scrutiny, recommendation and then final acceptance and rejection. So, not only the Chief Commercial Superintendent but also the members of the tender-committee who participated in the scrutiny and recommended for acceptance of the tender are, in my view, necessary parties for effective adjudication of questions in controversy in the present Rule. The petitioner had all the particulars about the officer and the members of the tender-committee from the affidavit-in-opposition affirmed by Vasant Vithal Vhedi on 3rd July, 1970; even then, he did not take any steps to bring the Chief Commercial Superintendent, Eastern Railway and the members of the tender-committee on record. It is well known, a writ petition shall fail by reason of non-joinder of necessary parties. See Udit Narain Singh v. Board of Revenue, AIR, 1963 SC 786.

5. Even on merits, I think, there is no substance in the petitioner's case. Regarding the first and second points, even if there is breach of rules or regulations in accepting or rejecting the tenders that would at best come within the domain of contract, no writ will lie for enforcement of contractual right. No question also arises as to infringement of fundamental rights under Article 19 (1) (g) or violation of provisions of Article 14 of the Constitution either in acceptance or rejection of tender for obtaining a contract. See AIR 1959 SC 490, C. K. Achutan v. State of Kerala, AIR 1967 SC 1753, G. J. Fernandez v. State of Mysore and (1969) 73 Cal WN 267, Regional Director v. A. S. Bhangoo.

6. On the third point learned Counsel for the petitioner has relied on an unreported decision of the Supreme Court in D. F. O. South Kheri v. Ram Sanehi Singh, Civil Appeal No. 1638 of 1969 (SC). It is urged that in any case the petitioner's tender could not be cancelled without giving him an opportunity of hearing. Following the principles indicated in K. N. Guruswamy v. State of Mysore, AIR 1954 SC 592, it was held in the above case that even though "the order was administrative and not quasi-judicial the order had still to be made in a manner concerned with the rules of natural justice when it affects the respondent's rights to property." This decision, I do not think, has any bearing to the question involved in the present Rule. For, the acceptance or rejection of a tender was based not on any statute or statutory rules and the authority concerned did not pass any order vested with certain statutory power. Secondly, mere submission of tender did not create any right to property in favour of the petitioner. In any event, therefore, the petitioner cannot claim any hearing before cancellation of such tender. Thirdly, it is stated in paragraph 11 of the affidavit that one of the terms specified in the tender form is that "the Railway Administration reserved the right to reject any tender without assigning any reason and does not bind itself to accept the lowest or any tender or to assign any reason for doing so. The said Administration also reserves the right to accept any tender in part or in whole. The tenderers should note that the charges quoted by them must conform to the rates and fares sanctioned for the area by the Regional Transport Authority." There is no denial by the petitioner to the correctness of these provisions. Such being the terms of the agreement between the parties no question of giving an opportunity of hearing arises before cancellation of the petitioner's tender just because he quoted, although denied by the respondents, the lowest rate.

7. The result is, the petition fails. The Rule is discharged but there will be no order as to costs.

Rule discharged.

Civil Revn. No. 223 of 1971, D/- 21-2-1972.

West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act (12 of 1956), Sections 17-D and 13 (1) (i) — Suit for ejectment of tenant for default — Compromise decree under which tenant agreeing to vacate premises by certain period — Application by tenant under S. 17-D is maintainable.

In a case, where the plaintiff prays for a decree for ejectment on the only ground of default, and by consent a decree is passed, that decree comes within the purview of Section 13 (1) (i) of the Act, and can be set aside under Section 17-D of the Act. Absence of any provision for payment of arrears of rent in the compromise decree does not change the character of that decree and takes it outside the scope of clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 of the Act. Case law discussed. (Para 11)

Arunendra N. Basu, for Petitioner.

ORDER:— This Rule was obtained by the plaintiff-landlady and it is directed against an order of the learned Munsif holding that the tenant defendant's application under Section 17-D of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 was maintainable for setting aside a consent decree.

2. Plaintiff brought a suit for ejectment against the opposite party from a portion of premises No. 21/2, Belgachia Road, on the ground that the opposite party was a defaulter in payment of rent since December 1964. The opposite party in his written statement denied that he was a defaulter. On or about March 12, 1968, the plaintiff and the opposite party filed a joint petition of compromise and in terms of the same, the learned Munsif passed a decree. In terms of the said compromise decree the tenant undertook to vacate the premises within December, 1969. In default, execution might be started for recovery of possession. While continuing in occupation of the premises in suit in terms of the said consent decree, on 6th December, 1969, the tenant opposite party filed an application under Section 17 D of the Act for setting aside the said decree passed in the suit. The petitioner resisted the said application on the ground that it was not maintainable in view of the fact that decree in question was a consent decree and not a decree in invitum. The learned Munsif by his order dated 3rd of December 1970, allowed the opposite party's prayer in preliminary form upon the view that the opposite party's said application under Section 17 D was maintainable. Petitioner, being aggrieved against the said order, moved this court and obtained the present Rule.

3. Mr. Basu, appearing on behalf of the petitioner, contended that as no decree was passed for recovery of possession of the premises in suit on the ground in clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, the learned Munsif acted illegally and with material irregularity in exercise of his jurisdiction in holding that Section 17-D of the Act was applicable in the instant case.

4. Mr. Basu, further, contended that the consent decree was but a contract with the command of the court super-added to it and the court had no jurisdiction to read into it something which the parties did not agree upon, namely, the defendant being declared a defaulter in payment of rent.

5. The plaintiff brought the ejectment suit on the ground under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Act. The defendant denied that he was a defaulter in his written statement. Except default, there was no other ground for ejectment. A Division Bench of this Court held in Dr. T. S. Gupta v. Kanahilal Ruia, (1964)

68 Cal WN 353, that the court had no jurisdiction to pass a decree for ejectment, even by consent of parties. In absence of any of grounds mentioned in Section 13 (1) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act. In Ferozi Lal Jain v. Man Mal, AIR 1970 SC 794, the Supreme Court held that the jurisdiction of the court to pass a decree for recovery of possession of any premises depends upon its satisfaction that one or more of the grounds mentioned in the section for ejectment in the Tenancy Act have been proved. The court was not competent to pass a decree solely on the basis of the compromise arrived at between the parties.

6. In the instant case, the only ground for ejectment was default under clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 of the Act. So, in the instant case the decree was passed under Section 13 (1) (i) of the Act, otherwise, the court was not competent to pass a consent decree for ejectment, in view of the above decision of the Supreme Court.

7. Next point for consideration is, whether a consent decree can be set aside under Section 17-D of the Act. The provisions of Section 17-D are similar to paragraph 9-B (3) of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order 1943, as amended on 29-8-1949. Mr. Basu referred to some of the decisions of this Court under the said paragraph of 1943 Rent Control Order where it was held that para 9-B (3) of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order 1943, has no application to a decree for possession obtained by consent.

8. Mr. Basu in this connection referred to two Bench decisions of this Court, Manick Chandra Pal v. Haripada Roy, 52 Cal WN 230 = (AIR 1949 Cal 151); Mrs. Julie Sen v. Surjendra Mohan Roy Chowdhury, (1945) 49 Cal WN 700 and two Single Bench decisions, Smt. Parbati Debi v. Dr. S. N. Sen, (1946) 50 Cal WN 242 and Sm. Kironasahi Dassee v. Hirendra Nath Das, (1946) 50 Cal WN 245.

9. In 52 Cal WN 230 (231) = (AIR 1949 Cal 151), two Single Bench decisions of this Court, (1946) 50 Cal WN 242 and (1946) 50 Cal WN 245 were considered, one of which was decided by Gentle, J. and other by Clough, J. Both the learned Judges held that a decree for possession passed on consent of the parties is excluded by the language of paragraph 9-B (3) of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order. The Division Bench, however, does not decide the question whether or not paragraph 9-B (3) excludes consent decree altogether. At page 234 of the report, Mukherjee, J. (as he then was) observed that the wording of paragraph 9-B (3) of the Calcutta House Rent Control Order does not in terms exclude a consent decree. In that case an application of the defendant under Section 9-B (3) of the Order to set aside the consent decree was dismissed on the ground that the decree did not attract the provisions of the said paragraph. So, that decision does not help the petitioner. As regards the next Bench Decision referred to by Mr. Basu, (1945) 49 Cal WN 700, in that case the point was left undecided.

10. In Haji Mohd. Ekramul Haque v. Rebati Bhushan Mukherjee, (1949) 53 Cal WN 859, a Division Bench of this Court held that the words used in sub-paragraph (3) of paragraph 9-B of the order are quite general and there is no reason for excluding a consent decree from its purview.

11. In a case, where the plaintiff prays for a decree for ejectment on the only ground of default, and by consent a decree is passed, in my opinion, that decree comes within the purview of Section 13 (1) (i) of the West Bengal Tenancy Act, and can be set aside under Section 17-D of the Act. Absence of any provision for payment of arrears of rent in the compromise decree does not change the character of that decree and brings it outside the scope of clause (i) of sub-section (1) of Section 13 of the Act, as I have said before, otherwise the court had no jurisdiction to pass a consent decree for recovery of possession in absence of any of the grounds mentioned in Section 13 (1) of the Act. In the instant case only ground for ejectment was of default. So, the consent decree was passed under clause (i) of sub-section 13 (1) of the Act and as such, provisions of Section 17-D of the Act are attracted.

12. In the result, this rule is discharged but there will be no order as to costs.

Revision dismissed.

Civil Revn. Case Nos. 330 and 331 of 1971, D/- 8-2-1972.

Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act (2 of 1949), S. 7-A (as inserted by Second Amendment Act of 1969) — Power of Controller to set aside order for eject-ment — Applicability — (X-Ref: Calcutta Thika Tenancy (Second Amendment) Act (29 of 1969), S. 13).

The order of the controller allowing the landlord's application for eject-

CP/CP/B530/72/GDR

ment under sub-section (1) of Section 5, is subject to compliance of sub-sec. (2), in a case where compensation is payable under clause (ii) of the proviso to Section 4. Therefore, even if the order for ejectment passed by the Controller before the date of the commencement of the Second Amendment Act under sub-section (1) of Section 5 is upheld in an appeal, but the question of compensation remains undecided the order cannot be said to have become final. The application for ejectment in such a case still remains pending and the provisions of Amendment Act will apply by virtue of Section 13 of the Amendment Act.

Thus, the order of the Controller rejecting the application by a Thika tenant, made under Section 7-A of the Amendment Act for setting aside the order for ejectment, on the ground that the order has become final before the date of the commencement of the Amendment Act cannot be sustained. Nor can it be said that the application is premature because the question of compensation remains undecided. (Paras 4, 8)

Himansu Kumar Bose, for Opposite Party.

ORDER:— These two Rules were obtained by a tika tenant and are directed against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, Alipore, dismissing the petitioner's application under Section 7-A of the Calcutta Tika Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1969.

2. The landlady opposite party filed two applications for eviction under Section 5 of the Calcutta Thika Tenancy Act, against the petitioner on the ground of default and her own requirement for the purpose of construction of building on the disputed holdings. The Controller allowed the said applications on 17-9-1966 on the ground of default only; he found that the landlady did not require the land for the purpose of building. On appeal from the said order of the Controller, the appellate court found that the landlady proved her case of requirement. The petitioner moved this Court in Revision against the said appellate order. This Court affirmed the order of the appellate court, sent back the case to the Controller to proceed with the determination of compensation in accordance with proviso (ii) to Section 4 of the Act. In view of West Bengal Ordinance V of 1967, which came into force in the meantime, as a result, further proceedings for determination of compensation was stayed. On 30th October, 1969, the Calcutta Thika Tenancy (Amendment) Act, 1969, came into force. On the date of reopening of the Court after the Xmas Holidays, on January 2, 1970, the petitioner filed applications under Sec. 7-A of the Amendment Act for setting aside the order of ejectment. The controller dismissed the petitioner's said application upon the view that those applications were premature because compensation payable under (ii) of the proviso to Section 4 had not been determined as yet. On appeal, the appellate court dismissed the petitioner's applications upon the view that as the appeals from the order made on such applications by the landlady having been disposed of before the commencement of the Amendment Act, the provisions of the said Act did not apply to the instant case. The petitioner, being aggrieved against the said appellate order, moved this Court and obtained the present Rule.

3. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the petitioner's applications under Section 7-A of the Second Amendment Act upon the view that the order of the appellate authority allowing the landlady's applications under Section 5 of the Act was final and conclusive in so far as the landlady's prayer for ejectment was concerned. As the appeal from such order had been disposed of before the commencement of the Amendment Act, 1969, the provisions of the said Act did not apply to the instant case.

4. Under Section 5 (1) of the Act, if a landlord wishes to eject a thika tenant on one or more of the grounds specified in Section 3, he is required to file an application before the controller for an order in that behalf. The said section further provides for the procedure to be followed by the controller in dealing with such an application. The order of the controller allowing the landlord's application for ejectment under sub-section (1) of Section 5, is subject to compliance of sub-sec. (2) in a case where compensation is payable under clause (ii) of the proviso to Section 4. If the landlord fails to pay the amount of compensation to the thika tenant or does not deposit the same with the controller, no order allowing his application under sub-section (1) shall be made.

5. In the instant case, it is not disputed that the compensation has not been determined as yet and no order allowing the application under sub-section (1) of Section 5 has been passed in terms of sub-section (2).

6. Under Section 27 of the Act, an appeal may be filed against any of the order of the controller. Therefore it follows, an appeal can be filed against orders passed by the controller both under sub-sections (1) and (2) of Sec. 5 of the Act. In the instant case, an appeal was filed against an order passed under sub-sec. (1) of Section 5. This court confirmed the appellate order and remanded the case to the controller directing him to determine the compensation and if the same is deposited or paid, then to pass an order for ejectment in terms of Section 5 (2) of the Act. So, in my opinion, application for ejection of the thika tenant is still remaining undecided and pending before the Controller.

7. Provisions of Section 7-A of the Amendment Acts are made applicable in cases where order for ejection of a thika tenant has been made before the date of the commencement of the second Amendment Act, but the possession of the land has not been recovered by the landlord from the thika tenant. Under sub-s. (1) of Section 5 of the Act, an order for, ejection can be passed, but without compliance of sub-section (2) of Sec. 5, a landlord cannot recover possession of the land from the thika tenant. So, the learned Subordinate Judge was in error in holding that the order of the appellate authority allowing the landlord's applications under Section 5 of the Act was final and conclusive. The learned Subordinate Judge ignored the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of Section 5 of the Act as well as the second part of sub-section (1) of Section 7-A of the Amendment Act.

8. In the instant case, both the conditions as laid down in Section 7-A of the Amendment Act have been fulfilled and as the petitioner's application is still pending, the provisions of the Amendment Act are made applicable under Section 13 of the said Act. The thika controller was also in error in dismissing the petitioner's application under Section 7-A of the Amendment Act upon the view that it was premature. So, his order also cannot be sustained.

9. In the result, both these Rules are made absolute. The orders of the learned Subordinate Judge and also of the thika controller are set aside; the case is remitted back to the Controller to decide the petitioner's applications under Sec. 7-A of the Amendment Act in accordance with law. There will be no order as to costs.

10. Let the records go down to the thika controller as early as possible.

Order accordingly.

Nishakar Pan and others, Petitioners v. Mahadeb Ghosh and others, Opposite Parties.

Civil Revn. No. 1290 of 1968, D/- 2-2-1972.

(A) W. B. Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act (20 of 1949), S. 6 — Applicability.

The manner of enjoyment of non-agricultural land prescribed in Section 6 applies to non-agricultural land simpliciter. The rights given by Section 6 have no relevance to the enjoyment of a tank.

(Prs. 10, 11)

(B) W. B. Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act (20 of 1949), S. 24 — Pre-emption — Finally published record of rights showing separation of interests of co-sharers — Transfer by one of them of his share — Others have no right of pre-emption. (X-Ref:—W. B. Estates Acquisition Act (1 of 1954), Ss. 6, 44).

Ordinarily persons who were co-sharers before the date of vesting of the land in the State Government under the provisions of W. B. Estates Acquisition Act would become co-sharers in the new tenancy under the State of West Bengal. Where, however, the finally published record-of-rights indicates the splitting up of the tenancies and separation of the interests of the co-sharers, the co-sharers must be held to have ceased to be co-sharers of the land. Hence when one of them transfers his share the others have no right of pre-emption. (1963) 67 Cal WN 848, Distinguished; (1969) 73 Cal WN 742, Approved.

J. C. Pal with N. L. Pal, for Petitioners; D. K. Choudhury, for Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 2.

SANKAR PRASAD MITRA, J. —

This Rule has been obtained against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Asansol made on the 17th January, 1968 in Miscellaneous Case No. 2 of 1967 arising out of Misc. Case No. 20 of 1966 in the court of the Munsif, Second Court, Asansol. By this order the petitioners' claim for pre-emption has been refused. The property in dispute is a tank. It is Dag No. 40, P. S. Kansa, Mouza Aima Biswanathpur, District Burdwan. The petitioners, the opposite party No. 3 and one Nishingha Thakur were co-sharers of this tank having Niskar right. The petitioners had 12 annas share in the tank, the opposite party No. 3 had 2 annas share and Nishingha Thakur had the remaining 2 annas share. On the 14th April, 1954 the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act, 1953 came into force. In accordance with the provisions of this Act the aforesaid co-sharers retained the tank. In the record-of-rights under the Estates Acquisition Act several Khanda-khatians were made. These Khanda-khatians show that each of the co-sharers above named was to pay a specified portion of the total rent in respect of specified areas of the tank which they had retained.

2. On the 7th July, 1965 the opposite party No. 3, Gopal Chandra Ghosh transferred out of his 2 annas share 5 pice share in the tank to the opposite parties Nos. 1 and 2. On the 28th. February, 1966 the petitioners applied for pre-emption under Section 24 (1) of the West Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act, 1949. The relevant provisions of this Section are that if a portion or share of land is transferred, the immediate landlord or one or more co-sharer tenants of such land may, within four months of the service of notice issued under Section 23, apply to the Court for such land or portion or share thereof to be transferred to himself or themselves, as the case may be.

3. In the instant case the application under Section 24 (1) was allowed by the Munsif but the Subordinate Judge has set aside the Munsif's order.

4. The Rule was originally issued and heard by a Judge sitting singly of this Court. Mr. Justice Chakravarti who heard the Rule was of the view that the case raised an important point of law, namely, whether a tenancy which had been shown as Prithak in the revisional settlement-operations had actually effected a partition of the tenancy to such an extent that the original co-sharer would cease to be a co-sharer. Mr. Justice Chakravarti has referred this question of law to a Division Bench.

5. We have to observe at the outset that the record-of-rights we have already referred to has now become final. It could have been challenged in accordance with the procedure laid down in Section 44 of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act but none of the co-sharers we have named above had chosen to take any steps for its rectification.

6. We have therefore to decide this matter in the context of the finality of the record-of-rights and the entries made in the Khasda-Khatians.

7. Mr. J. C. Pal, learned Advocate appearing for the petitioners does not dispute that when the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act came into force the disputed property vested in the State and the rights and obligations as between the aforesaid co-sharers and their landlord were extinguished but under Section 6 of the Act these co-sharers were entitled to, and in fact did retain, the disputed property as non-agricultural land. The words 'to retain' in Section 6 mean 'to keep possession' or 'to continue to have possession'. Under Section 6 (1) (c) the intermediary was entitled to retain non-agricultural land in his Khas possession within a certain limit. In the instant case, says Mr. Pal, the non-agricultural land, namely, the tank was in the Khas possession prior to the vesting not of one intermediary but of several intermediaries, in other words, this was a case of joint Khas possession and when they exercised their option to retain that is to say, to keep in possession or to continue to have possession they were doing so jointly. Mr. Pal has invited our attention to Form B in Schedule B to the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Rules, 1954. This is a form which is used by intermediaries desirous of retaining lands under Section 6 of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Act. Mr. Pal wanted us to consider particularly Column 4 of Form B. Under this Column the intermediary has to state his share "in the interests written in Column 3 and the date of the document under which interests were acquired". Counsel for the petitioners submits to us that when co-sharers are retaining land they have to specify in Column 4 what their respective undivided shares are. In the case before us Mr. Pal assumes that the co-sharers aforesaid had properly filed in Column 4 of Form B. Neither the original document nor any authenticated copy thereof were however produced before us.

8. Learned Advocate for the petitioners then referred to Section 6 (2) which provides, inter alia, that the intermediary retains land directly under the State subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed. He then went on to Rule 4 (2) of the West Bengal Estates Acquisition Rules, 1954 which, according to him, prescribes the terms and conditions of retention. Under this Rule land is retained by an intermediary as a tenant of the State under the provisions of the West Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act, 1949.

9. We were then referred to Sec. 3 of the West Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act, 1949. Section 3 (2) of the Act defines a 'tenant'. A 'tenant' means inter alia a person who has acquired from a proprietor or a tenure-holder a right to hold non-agricultural land for any of the purposes provided in the Act. We were then shown Section 6 which prescribed the manner of use of non-agricultural lands. Under this section a tenant holding non-agricultural land is entitled to (a) erect any structure including any pucca structure; (b) dig any tank; and (c) plant, enjoy the flowers, fruits and other products of, and fell and utilize or dispose of the timber of, any tree. Mr. Pal says that if these tests are applied to the tank which is the disputed property in the suit, enjoyment in terms of the Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act is possible only if it is held that it was in the joint possession of all the co-sharers.

10. It seems to us that the manner of enjoyment which Section 6 prescribes applies to non-agricultural land simpliciter. The rights given by this Section have no relevance to the enjoyment of a tank.

11. Mr. Pal then took us to Section 7 (2) of the West Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act. Under this sub-section if the non-agricultural land comprised in any tenancy has been or is created after the commencement of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 and has been held for a term of not less than 12 years without any lease in writing, the non-agricultural tenant would enjoy certain rights specified therein. Mr. Pal contends that if the co-sharers named above were non-agricultural tenants within the meaning of Section 7 (2) they would be entitled to enjoy the property in the manner laid down in Sec. 6 but, as we have pointed out, Section 6 does not in terms apply to a tank.

12. Mr. Pal then invited us to look into the provisions of Section 108 of the Transfer of Property Act and said that the rights and obligations of a lessor and lessee enumerated in that section could not be given effect to if the entries in the Khanda-Khatians herein were accepted as correct. The landlord, argued Mr. Pal, cannot lease out an undivided share in the property because he would be faced with difficulties in making over possession. And if separate possession cannot be given, the rights and obligations contemplated by Section 108 cannot also be enforced.

13. This argument of Mr. Pal would have deserved consideration if the property had been non-agricultural land simpliciter but in the case we do not feel the necessity of expressing our views on this question. The property in this case is a tank and there can be no question of enjoyment of a tank with portions separated for each co-sharer. What kind of difficulties would be created by Khanda-Khatians of the nature we are dealing with in this revision case when the subject-matter is not a tank but a simple non-agricultural land does not call for our decision at the moment.

14. Reliance was placed on behalf of the petitioners on the judgment of Mr. Justice Chatterjee in Dhananjoy Senapati v. Debendranath Senapati, (1963) 67 Cal WN 848. At p. 850, the learned Judge has observed as follows:

"By an amendment of the Estates Acquisition Act in 1956, subsequent to this purchase in 1953 the interest of the occupancy raiyats was declared to be deemed to be that of an intermediary. The result was that under Section 4 of the Estates Acquisition Act the interest of the intermediaries would vest in the State of West Bengal free from all encumbrances and, therefore, the interest of the tenants as tenants under the then landlord would cease and the tenancy would cease. Therefore, whatever interest, the parties had, before the vesting under the Estates Acquisition Act, would be extinguished and the original rights of the parties would be gone. The interest of the petitioners by virtue of their purchase in 1953 (before the vesting) as co-sharers of the tenancy then existing would cease, but subsequent to such vesting and as a result of such vesting the persons, who are deemed to be intermediaries, would still be entitled to retain the land and if they retain the land, they would become tenants of a new tenancy under the State of West Bengal on such terms as the State may prescribe. The terms have now been prescribed under the rules and under the rules if the land is agricultural, they would retain the land under the State with the right of an occupancy raiyat. Hence, at the date of the application for pre-emption which was subsequent to the date of vesting or at the date of the transfer in question which was also subsequent to the vesting, the interest of all the co-sharers in the new tenancy was created not by any act of parties nor by any purchase but by operation of law, namely, the provisions of the Estates Acquisition Act and the rules thereunder. Therefore, the opposite party No. 1 and the petitioners ceased to be co-sharers of the Original holding but became co-sharers of a new holding under the State of West Bengal."

15. Ordinarily, there can be no dispute, persons who were co-sharers before the date of vesting would become co-sharers in the new tenancy under State of West Bengal. But in the peculiar facts of our case the position is different. Here we find that when the new tenancy was created it was not a tenancy between the State of West Bengal on the one hand and the co-sharers on the other. On the contrary several new tenancies came into existence between the State of West Bengal as the landlord and the previous co-sharers as the tenants. The original Khatian was Khatian No. 74 which ceased to exist and in its place and stead five separate Khatians came into existence, namely, Khatians Nos. 385, 387, 390, 417 and 424. The rents payable under each of these separate Khatians have been fixed and the shares that each of the Khatian holders would enjoy have also been separately fixed.

16. On these facts we have to consider the provisions of sub-sec. (2) of Section 6 of the West Bengal Estate Acquisition Act 1953 which runs thus: "An intermediary who is entitled to retain possession of any land under sub-section (1), shall be deemed to hold such land directly under the State from the date of vesting as a tenant, subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed and subject to payment of such rent as may be determined under the provisions of this Act and as entered in the record-of-rights finally published under Chapter V....."

17. For our purposes, therefore, the finally published record-of-rights is the only relevant document. This record indicates the splitting up of tenancies and separation of the interests of the tenants. The present petitioners do not appear to be co-sharers under the Khatians in respect whereof this application arises.

18. It is relevant to refer in this connection the judgment of Mr. Justice Bijayesh Mukherji in Chakradhar Ghosh Mandal v. Ram Ratan Pal, (1969) 73 Cal WN 742. Mr. Justice Bijayesh Mukherji has said that a Khanda-Khatian means a Khatian which has been cut off from the parent khatian, for a separate tenancy for the land retained by the individual owner up to the prescribed ceiling. And to allow the persons recorded in the parent Khatian to hold lands in Khanda-Khatians carved out thereof is to bring back latifundia to destroy which the Estates Acquisition Act is there all these years. Therefore, the learned Judge has held that, no case for pre-emption under Section 24 of the West Bengal Non-Agricultural Tenancy Act can lie, when the sole recorded tenant in a Khanda-Khatian, necessarily with no co-sharer, sells his land.

19. We are in agreement with this view and if we apply this principle to the facts of the case before us, we find that the petitioners' claim for pre-emption was not maintainable at all. There has been a separation of tenancies as reflected by the Khanda-Khatians. The non-agricultural land we are dealing with is a tank. Physically it is impartible and if any person purchases any portion of this tank he is to enjoy it in collaboration with others. The Khanda-Khatians have not been challenged under Section 44 of the Estates Acquisition Act. They have now become final. Even if the entries therein are wrong, in a collateral proceeding of this nature they cannot be challenged. Since the petitioners on the face of the Khanda-Khatians have ceased to be co-sharers of the tank, they have no right of pre-emption.

20. This Rule therefore is discharged.

21. There will, however, be no order as to costs.

S. K. DATTA, J.:— 22. I agree.
Rule discharged.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 261 (V 59 C 46)

B. C. MITRA AND AJAY K. BASU, JJ.

Prem Nath Mayer, Appellant v. Registrar of Trade Marks and another, Respondents.

Appeal No. 191 of 1968, Matter No. 682 of 1968, D/- 28-1-1972.

(A) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), S. 11 — Registration of trade mark — Proposed mark not likely to deceive or confuse — Onus to prove lies on applicant.

The burden of proving that the trade mark which a person sought to register was not likely to deceive or cause confusion was upon the applicant. The rules under the Act do not enjoin a shifting of the onus from the applicant to the opponent at any stage of the proceedings.

(Paras 7 and 9)

Failure to discharge the onus debars the claim of applicant to registration of his mark under Section 11 (a). (Para 16)

(B) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), S. 12 — Prohibition of registration of identical or deceptively similar trade marks.

A question of confusion or deception cannot be decided by comparing the two marks by keeping them side by side and noting the similarities and differences between the two marks. Such a question is to be decided by the Court itself by the impression which is to be gathered by looking at the two marks, and it is the duty of the Court to find out what impression, what association of ideas and what significant feature the purchaser of the object bearing the registered trade mark would carry in his mind. A meticulous scrutiny of the similarities and differences in the two marks is hardly likely to be of any assistance in coming to a conclusion if the new mark proposed to be registered would create confusion or would lead to deception. The question of deceptive similarity of the two marks has to be answered by looking at the two marks, and then deciding if the association of ideas that would be formed in the mind would deceive or confuse, not when two objects bearing the two different marks are produced before a purchaser, but when one object bearing the new mark proposed to be registered is produced before him. This is the correct and only method of approach to be applied in deciding a question of confusion and deception. (Para 22)

Thus where an application for registration of a trade mark consisting of a label containing the image of a Goddess seated on a lion and the words "Ma Durga Brand" in respect of agricultural implements specially for Chaff cutter blades was filed and it was opposed, by a prior user of a registered trade mark in respect of identical goods.

Held, that the essential feature in the registered trade mark of the opposing party was the device of a Lion and the idea that is conveyed to a prospective purchaser is the symbol of the Lion. It is the concept or idea of a Lion that is carried in his mind by an average purchaser of ordinary intelligence. The use of the same mark of a Lion in the applicant's trade mark proposed to be registered, would undoubtedly lead to confusion in the mind of a purchaser. Case law discussed. (Para 21)

(C) Trade and Merchandise Marks Act (1958), S. 109 (5) — Appeal under — Questions of facts can be gone into.

High Court in dealing with the appeal under Section 109 (5) of the Act is not a Court of second appeal under Section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for that reason, it can go into questions of fact. The provisions of the Act enjoin the High Court to determine questions of deception, confusion and deceptive similarity, and that can only be done by taking into consideration the evidence tendered on behalf of the parties. I. P. Mukharjee with D. P. Mukherji, for Appellant; A. C. Roy with Amal Kumar Roy, for Respondents.

B. C. MITRA, J.:— On April 28, 1960 the second respondent filed an application for registration, in Part A of the Register, of a trade mark consisting of a label containing the image of a Goddess seated on a lion and the words "Ma Durga Brand in class V", "in respect of agricultural implements specially for chaffcut-ter blades". The application was there-after advertised in the Trade Mark Journal. The application for registration was opposed by the appellant, and the opposition was based on the provisions in Sections 11 and 12 (1) of the Trade and Merchandise Marks Act, 1958, (hereinafter referred to as the Act). The appellants in their opposition claimed that they were the prior users of a trade mark, which was duly registered, under the provisions of the Act, being trade mark No. 12301 registered in Class VII in respect of, inter alia, "Chaffcutter Blades and Knives". The substance of the appellant's contention in the opposition to the registration of "Ma Durga Brand" with the device mentioned above, was that the mark proposed to be registered, resembled the registered trade mark of the appellant and such resemblance would lead to confusion and deception. This part of the opposition is based on Section 12 (1) of the Act which runs as follows:

"Save as provided in sub-section (3) no trade mark shall be registered in respect of any goods or description of goods which is identical with or deceptively similar to a trade mark which is already registered in the name of a different proprietor in respect of the same goods or description of goods."

The second branch of the opposition is founded on Section 11 (a) of the Act which is as follows:

"A Mark—

(a) the use of which would be likely to deceive or cause confusion, shall not be registered as a trade mark."

2. By an order dated November 7, 1964, the Deputy Registrar of Trade Marks dismissed the appellant's opposition. Being aggrieved by the Deputy Registrar's order the appellant preferred an appeal to this Court under Section 109 of the Act. This appeal was dismissed by a judgment and order dated April 24, 1968, against which this appeal has been preferred.

3. The foundation and basis of the bar imposed by Section 11 in the Act, against registration of certain marks, is the acquisition of a reputation by other users of similar marks, to such an extent that the registration of the mark of the applicant would be likely to deceive or cause confusion. In other words, if the Registrar is satisfied that a mark proposed to be registered would deceive or confuse a buyer in the market, because there are similar marks in use by persons who have acquired a reputation with regard to such marks, the Registrar would decline to register the mark.

4. The first question that arises is on whom does the onus lie to prove that the use of the mark would not deceive or cause confusion? Does the onus lie upon the applicant who has made the proposal for registration of the mark? Or does it lie upon the party who has given notice of opposition to the registration of the mark? The provisions in Section 11 of the Act are pari materia with Section 11 of the English Trade Marks Act, 1938, which is as follows:—

"11.—It shall not be lawful to register as a trade mark or part of a trade mark in matter the use of which would, by reason of its being likely to deceive or cause confusion or otherwise, be disentitled to protection in a Court of Justice, or would be contrary to law or morality or any scandalous design."

5. The English Courts have held that the onus of proving that the use of a mark would not deceive or cause confusion lies on the applicant. In Kerly's 9th Ed. P. 448 the law is stated to be as follows: "In such cases the onus is on the applicant to satisfy the Registrar that the Trade Mark applied for, is not reasonably likely to deceive or cause confusion, so that refusal to register does not involve the conclusion that the resemblance is such that either an infringement action or a passing-off would succeed." Relying upon these observations in the text book and also on several decisions of the English Courts, and also of the Courts in India, to which I will presently refer, Mr. I. P. Mukherjee, Counsel for the appellant contended that the onus is entirely on the applicant to prove that the registration of his mark would not lead to deception or confusion. In support of this contention reliance was placed by Counsel for the appellant on a decision of the Supreme Court Amritdhara Pharmacy v. Satya Deo Gupta, AIR 1963 SC 449. In that case an application was made for registration of a trade name of a medicinal preparation known as "Lakshmandhara". The applicant claimed that the mark known by that name was distinctive to the article, and that there was turnover of a large sum of money. Opposition was filed by a company known as Amritdhara Pharmacy Ltd. It was contended by the opponent that the word "Amritdhara" was already registered as a trade name for medicinal preparation which had been introduced as early as 1901. The contention of the applicant was that the two names "Amritdhara" and "Lakshmandhara" were distinctively different, and no one could pass off one for the other. The Registrar allowed the registration of the applicant's name, but for the State of Uttar Pradesh only. Appeals were preferred against the decision of the Registrar. The Allahabad High Court held that there was no possibility of confusion and deception, and there was no justification for refusal to register the trade mark "Lakshmandhara" for the whole of India. Against this decision, an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court. Dealing with the question of onus, the Supreme Court held in paragraph 7 of the Report, that on an application to register, the Registrar or an opponent might object that the trade mark was not registrable and in such cases, the onus was on the applicant to satisfy the Registrar that the trade mark applied for, was not likely to deceive or cause confusion. It was also held that where it was thought that there was doubt as to whether deception was likely, the application should be rejected. Dealing with the question of deception and resemblance it was held in paragraph 9 of the Report: "we agree that the use of the word 'Dhara' which literally means 'current or stream' is not by itself decisive of the matter. What we have to consider here is the overall similarity of the composite words having regard to the circumstances that the goods bearing the two names are medicinal preparations of the same description. We are aware that the admission of a mark is not to be refused, because unusually stupid people, 'fools or idiots', may be deceived. A critical comparison of the two names may disclose some points of difference but an unwary purchaser of average intelligence and imperfect recollection would be deceived by the overall similarity of the two names having regard to the nature of the medicine he is looking for with a somewhat vague recollection that he had purchased a similar medicine on a previous occasion with a similar name. The trade mark is the whole thing — the whole word is to be considered." I shall deal with the question of deception or confusion later, but on the question of onus it seems to me that the view of the Supreme Court was that the onus of proof that registration would not lead to deception or confusion, was on the applicant for registration.

6. Let us now test the contention that the onus lies on the opponent and not on the applicant. Supposing in a case there is no opposition at all either from the owner of a registered mark or from the user of a similar mark which is not registered. In such a case, when considering the application what is the Registrar to do? The requirement of Section 11 of the Act is mandatory in nature. The Registrar may himself raise an objection to registration and if he does, who is to prove that there would be no deception or confusion? As the Registrar has to be satisfied that the mark would not deceive or confuse, he has to be satisfied that such would not be the result if the mark is registered. In such a case the applicant must prove that the applicant's goods when marketed with the mark proposed to be registered, would not lead to deception or confusion among buyers. Supposing again the Registrar does not raise any objection on his own, even then, the mandatory provisions of Section 11 prohibits the Registrar from registering a mark, the use of which would be likely to deceive or cause confusion. The Registrar has to be satisfied on these two points, and such satisfaction can be obtained only when the applicant proves by such evidence as he can tender, that deception or confusion would not be the result of marketing the goods with the proposed registered mark. Looked at either way it seems to us the onus, so far as Section 11 (a) is concerned is upon the applicant for registration.

7. The question of onus also came up for consideration before a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in James Chadwick & Bros. v. The National Sewing Thread Co. Ltd., AIR 1951 Bom 147. In that case an application was made for registration of a mark in connection with cotton sewing thread. Opposition was filed and the Registrar came to the conclusion that as the mark sought to be registered was likely to deceive and cause confusion, registration was refused. An appeal was preferred to the High Court and the trial Court came to the conclusion that the mark ought to be registered. From this decision an appeal was preferred to the Division Bench. Dealing with Section 10 of the Trade Marks Act, 1940, which corresponds to Section 11 of the Act with which we are concerned, the Division Bench held that the burden of proving that the trade mark sought to be registered was not likely to deceive or cause confusion, was upon the applicant and it was for him to satisfy the Registrar that his trade mark did not fall within the provisions of Section 8 or 10 and therefore it should be registered. This decision went up in an appeal to the Supreme Court. The decision of the Supreme Court is in AIR 1953 SC 357. The Supreme Court upheld the decision of the Division Bench of the Bombay High Court and in dealing with the question of onus, held in paragraph 22 of the Report that the burden of proving that the trade mark which a person sought to register was not likely to deceive or cause confusion was upon the applicant. The English decisions also adhere to the view that in an application for registration of a new mark, the onus is on the applicant to prove that the mark proposed to be registered is not likely to deceive or confuse. Reliance was placed by Mr. Mukherjee on in the matter of an Application by Smith Hayden & Co. Ltd., (1946) 63 RPC 97. In that case Evershed J., held that the onus lay upon the applicant for registration to satisfy the Court that a negative answer should be given to both questions,

8. This trial Court, however, came to the conclusion that the provisions in the Trade and Merchandise Marks Act, 1958 and the Rules thereunder, show that the onus shifts from one person to the other. We have carefully considered the relevant Rules, and we have compared them with the Rules under the English Act. We find that the Rules under the Indian Act are substantially the same as those under the English Act. In the view of the trial Court, although Rules 37 to 43 indicate that the preliminary onus lies upon the applicant, Rules 51 to 55 indicate that the onus shifts to the opposer to support his grounds of opposition by evidence. Rules 51, 52, 53, 54 and 55 of the Indian Rules correspond to Rules 46, 47, 48, 49 50 and 51 of the English Rules. The English decisions in laying down that the onus lies on the applicant have construed the English Rules and came to the conclusion that it was for the applicant to prove that there would be no deception or confusion if a trade mark was registered.

9. Turning now to Rules 51 to 55 of the Indian Rules, let us see if there is any indication of shifting of onus from applicant to the opposer. Rule 51 deals with notice of opposition and prescribes what is to be included in such notice. Rule 52 deals with counter statement required by Section 21 (2) of the Act. Rule 53 deals with the evidence in support of opposition. It says that within two months from the service of a copy of counter-statement upon him, the opponent shall file with the Registrar such evidence by way of Affidavit as he may desire to adduce in support of his opposition. R. 54 deals with the evidence in support of an application and says that within two months from the receipt by the applicant of the Affidavit in support of the opposition, or of intimation that the opponent does not desire to adduce any evidence, the applicant shall leave with the Registrar such evidence by Affidavit as he desires to adduce in support of his application. R. 55 deals with the evidence in reply by the opponent and says that within a month of receipt by the opponent of copies of the applicant's affidavit, the opponent may leave with the Registrar evidence by affidavit-in-reply. These are the relevant Rules which were considered by the Trial Court and which are to be considered by us in determining if there is any indication that the onus shifts from the applicant to the opponent at any stage. As I read the Rules I see nothing therein to justify the conclusion that the onus shifts from the applicant to the opponent at any stage. On the contrary, the indication in Rule 54 is clear, that the onus lies upon the applicant because that rule says that even if the opponent does not file any affidavit to adduce evidence in support of the opposition, the applicant has to file within two months from the receipt of copies of the affidavits in support of the opposition, such evidence by way of affidavits as he desires to adduce in support of his application. This Rule, in my view, makes it clear that even if the opponent is unable or unwilling to adduce any evidence by Affidavit in support of his opposition, the applicant must file his evidence by Affidavit in support of the application. The Rules therefore do not enjoin a shifting of the onus from the applicant to the opponent at any stage of the proceedings. The onus of proving, that the mark is registered, will not lead to confusion or deception, is squarely upon the applicant. Furthermore, the question as to on whom the onus lies, has been settled and set at rest by the Supreme Court in the two decisions mentioned earlier, and I do not think it can now be held that the onus lies upon the opponent and that it shifts from the applicant to the opponent at any stage of the proceedings.

10. There is one other decision on the question of onus to be referred to before I proceed to consider the evidence produced by the second respondent in support of his application. That is a decision of the English Court of Appeal Orr Ewing & Co. v. R. Johnston & Co., (1880) 13 Ch D 434. That was an action to restrain the defendants from imitating the plaintiff's trade mark. The plaintiffs were merchants of Turkey red yarn, the business consisting chiefly in the dyeing and exporting of yarn and other fabrics to various countries. Besides selling goods to merchants they exported goods to their own agents in India. Amongst other marks the notable mark on the wrapper of the yarn exported was a golden Crown on each side of which was a golden elephant with its head turned away from the Crown. The defendants were also general merchants and exported to India Turkey red yarn. They used a ticket on the outside wrapper of the yarn, on which was printed in gold the figure of the Goddess Minerva and a tiger. The Goddess had in one of her hands a shield on which the figure of Ganapatty was printed. There were also two golden elephants and a golden banner. The two elephants were placed on each side of Ganapatty with their heads turned towards Ganapatty. The plaintiffs had applied for registration of their two-elephants ticket but their application was refused. The evidence showed that the plaintiff's yarn had become known in the Bombay market as "The Hathi". The evidence also showed that the defendants' ticket would not deceive the merchants in Bombay who purchased plaintiffs' yarn. Fry J., in the trial Court held that the defendants had taken a large part of the plaintiffs' mark as the two elephants at the top corners of the plaintiffs' ticket were repeated in the top corner of the defendants' ticket. On the question of onus it was held that it was for the defendants to prove that their ticket would not deceive purchasers into the belief that their goods were the goods of the plaintiffs. It was further held that in a case where a party had taken a substantial part of another man's tickets or marks, the onus was upon him to prove that there would be no deception. An appeal was taken to the Court of Appeal from this judgment. The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment of Fry J. Dealing with the question of onus, Cotton L. J., observed at P. 463 of the report: "Where the addition to the ticket is shown to be such as is calculated to deceive, then a burden is thrown upon them of satisfactorily explaining how and why they made the particular addition. That, I think, is what Mr. Justice Fry meant — not that in all cases where fraud is charged, or in a case of this sort, the burden of proof is not on the plaintiff to make out his case, but that where the defendants do use under suspicious circumstances, a ticket which of itself is calculated to deceive, then the burden of proof is thrown upon them to displace that prima facie evidence against them and to show that in fact they were innocent in doing that which is not innocent, because it is calculated to deceive." I shall refer to this decision at greater length in dealing with the question of deceptive similarity under Section 12 (1) of the Act.

11. I shall now proceed to consider the evidence produced by the second respondent in support of his application for registration to see if he had discharged the onus which lay upon him. The Registrar noted that a Bill Book was produced by the respondent containing the Carbon copy of Bill No. 224/16 of January 25, 1960. Keeping in mind the fact that the application was made on April - 18, 1960, it should be seen that this Bill was the only evidence of sale of the respondent's goods and the Registrar came to the conclusion that the respondent's mark was in use prior to the date of his application. Copies of several other Bills, however, were filed with the Registrar but excepting for the one, mentioned above, all of them relate to a period subsequent to the application for registration.

12. In addition to the Bills which were produced by the second respondent in support of his application for registration, he relied on several Affidavits to which I will now refer. The first of these is an affidavit of Bhagwati Prashad dated December 1, 1962. He is the proprietor of a firm of Commission Agents. He says in paragraph 3 of the affidavit that chaff-cutter blades manufactured by the second respondent were handled by his firm from 1959. He does not say how many chaff-cutter blades his firm handled and on what dates. In paragraph 4 he says that chaff-cutter blades, bearing the mark "Ma Durga Brand" are very popular, and in paragraph 5 he says that customers ask for these blades by that name. He is significantly silent about the names and number of customers who had asked for these blades by that name. In paragraph 6 he says that he received no report of confusion among customers, between the chaff-cutter blades bearing the mark "Ma Durga Brand" and "Lion Brand". This is a strange statement because the deponent does not say that he had dealt, in course of his business, with the blades bearing mark "Lion Brand". The question of confusion can arise only if one deals with the blades bearing the two different marks.

13. The next affidavit is that of Kanhayalal Gupta dated December 8, 1962. He is a trader dealing in hardware goods and had dealings with the firm of the second respondent. He sells chaff-cutter blades manufactured by the second respondent. According to him the blades bearing the mark "Ma Durga Brand" are popular in the market and customers prefer the goods, known as "Ma Durga Brand Chaff-cutters." In paragraph 6 he says that he had not received from his customers any report of confusion between the goods of the appellant and the second respondent. Here again the deponent does not say that he has dealt with the goods of the appellant. For that reason he is hardly competent to give any views on confusion among purchasers of chaff-cutter blades. This deponent again says nothing about the number of blades of the second respondent that he has dealt with or disposed of in course of his business, nor the dates of the transactions.

14. The third affidavit is by Brij Krishna Das dated December 6, 1962. He is the agent of a concern which deals in chaff-cutter blades in Bhagalpur. He says that blades bearing the mark "Ma Durga Brand", manufactured by the second respondent were sold by him and that such blades are popular among Kisans in Bihar. He says nothing about the number of blades of the second respondent that he sold, nor the dates when such sales took place. He goes on to say that the purchasers of chaff-cutter blades do not commit mistakes in the purchase of blades bearing the mark "Ma Durga Brand" and the blades bearing the mark "Lion Brand."

15. The probative value of the three affidavits is altogether insignificant.

None of the deponents said that he had ever seen the blades manufactured by the appellant and bearing the trade mark "Lion Brand". Nor have they said that in course of their trade they have dealt with these blades or have even heard of or seen such blades. The evidence in the affidavits, such as they are is in my view altogether useless for the purpose of establishing that the use of the mark "Ma Durga Brand" would not lead to confusion or deception.

16. In my view the second respondent has wholly failed to discharge the onus that the registration of his proposed mark would not lead to deception or confusion as contemplated by S. 11 (a) of the Act. The onus of proving that there would be no deception or confusion if his mark was registered, was on the second respondent and on him alone. In our view, he has failed to discharge that onus and such failure debars his claim to registration of his mark under S. 11 (a) of the Act. This conclusion would have been enough to dispose of this appeal but we shall now proceed to consider the question of deceptive similarity between the two marks so as to attract the provisions of S. 12 (1) of the Act.

17. Section 12 (1) of the Act prohibits registration of a mark which is identical with or deceptively similar to a mark which is already registered. The appellant's trade mark is a registered trade mark, and this registration, upon renewal from time to time, is still continuing and is in force. It is in this background that the question of deception has to be examined. The first thing to be borne in mind in considering this question, is the possibility of a purchaser being misled into believing that the second respondent's chaff-cutter is that of the appellant's manufacture. We have to consider, if it is likely that a purchaser who wants the "Lion Brand" chaff-cutter of the appellant would be deceived by the lion mark on the second respondent's chaff-cutter or whether the image of the Goddess is such as to caution him that he was not getting what he wanted, namely a chaff-cutter of the appellant's manufacture. A comparison of the two marks, emphasis on the difference between the two, emphasis on the lack of similarity, emphasis on the difference in the combination of words which describe the marks and a visual comparison of the two marks, are not, in our view, the proper approach in deciding a question such as this. The matter to be looked into is the impact on the mind of the purchaser, when he is offered a chaff-cutter bearing the second respondent's mark with the image of a lion and a Goddess seated upon it and the words "Ma Durga Brand" written thereunder.

18. Mr. I. P. Mukherjee, counsel for the appellant contended that it was for the Court to decide the question of deception upon examination of the two marks. He argued that the purchasers of chaff-cutters are not educated persons who could notice the difference between the words "Lion Brand" and "Ma Durga Brand", but would go by the mark as it appeared on the chaff-cutter. The impression that such a person would get, counsel contended, was that he was getting a chaff-cutter bearing the mark of a lion, and that was all he wanted. In support of this contention reliance was placed by counsel for the appellant on a number of decisions which I now proceed to discuss.

19. The first of the decisions on which the counsel for the appellant relied was (1880) 13 Ch D 434 (supra), to which I have referred earlier in another connection. In the trial Court Fry, J. held, while discussing the question of deception, that the matter to be looked into was whether one of the parties had taken a material and substantial part of the other party's mark. In that case, it is to be remembered, the defendant's mark had two elephants, with the image of Ganapatty printed in gold in between the two elephants. The plaintiff had also two elephants in his mark but instead of the image of the Ganapatty, the plaintiff had a Crown between the two elephants. In these facts Fry, J. held, that upon looking at the two marks a large part of the plaintiff's mark which impressed the eye had been taken by the defendant, and that this mark of two-elephants was a significant mark and further that the image of Ganapatty instead of a crown in the defendant's mark made no difference. In that case also it is to be noticed, there was significant difference, as in the one case there was a Crown, and in the other the image of the God Ganapatty, the plaintiff's mark had no "Howdahs" on the back of the elephants while the defendant's mark had them, and further that the trunks in the two marks were turned in different directions. It was held that it was the mark of the elephant which impressed the eye with a considerable amount of similarity. This decision went up in an appeal and the Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment of Fry, J. In affirming the judgment the observations of James L. J. at P. 453 of the report are significant: "Now, what would have been the only motive which can be suggested to a man of the world by a man of the world of the defendants in doing that, but to do something which was likely to be mistaken for the plaintiff's goods, which would be accepted by the customers of the man who had been in the habit of selling them as being a continuation of the same goods which he had been in the habit of supplying to them? It is not necessary for this case to decide that a man actually intended to tell a lie, or that a lie has been told. It is sufficient in the language of Lord Kingsdown, that a man who willfully used a part of the trade mark of his neighbour, that part so used being by the user of it, calculated to enable his goods to be passed off for the goods of his neighbour. I am of opinion, independently of the mass of evidence which has been given in support of that probability, that it was probable and probable almost to a certainty that the new ticket of the defendant should tend to enable anybody so minded to represent those goods as being the goods of the same character, proceeding from the same manufacturer, as the goods which have been formerly accepted with confidence under the mark which was a guarantee of the plaintiff's goods." The observations of Cotton, L. J., at P. 461 of the report may also be usefully quoted: "I am satisfied that very few purchasers who asked for 'Two Elephants' yarn would not be misled when the parcel was produced to them having this ticket with the two elephants at the end of it. We must, in dealing with questions of this kind, not look for minute difference, or even that which appears when one hearing the case argued thoroughly with a mind directed to the particular difference, in some respect a substantial difference, but we must see what would be the effect upon the mind of the general class of buyers." Again, at P. 463 of the report it was observed: "Therefore, if we are called upon to give a judgment upon it, although, in my opinion, it is not necessary, I could not arrive at the conclusion that this particular form of ticket was arrived at bona fide by or on behalf of the defendants or without any intention of deception, but I should have said that it was done with the intention of getting for themselves by the ticket the credit which the plaintiffs had acquired in the market."

20. The decision of the Court of Appeal in Orr Ewing and Co.'s case, (1880) 13 Ch D 434 (supra) went up in appeal to the House of Lords and the decision of the latter is reported in (1882) 7 AC 219. The House of Lords affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal and held that no trader had a right to use a trade mark so nearly resembling that of another trader as to be calculated to mislead incautious purchasers. One important observation of Lord Selborne, L. C., dealing with the question of modification of a trade mark to avoid confusion, may be noticed. It was held that the variations made in the infringing trade mark might not unreasonably be supposed to have been made by the owners of the trade mark themselves for reasons of their own. This dictum, in our view, is a very pertinent and significant one in deciding questions of confusion and deception likely to be caused to an unwary purchaser.

21. On this question I should refer back to the Bench decision of the Bombay High Court AIR 1951 Bom 147 (supra). In that case the appellants were using two registered trade marks for over 50 years; one of the trade marks bore the name "Eagley Sewing Machine Thread". This trade mark had the representation of an eagle. The other trade mark was a mere representation of an eagle without any writing. The goods which were sold under these two marks were known and asked for as "Eagley" or "Eagle". The respondents had used the trade mark which they sought to register in 1943 for about 2 years and they had been selling their goods under that mark. The respondent's mark was the representation of a bird of prey and bore the name "Peerless Quality Vulture Brand Real Thread". It appeared from the evidence that for the 2 years that the respondents used this mark, they called it "Eagle Brand" and while applying for registration they changed the name from "Eagle Brand" to "Vulture Brand". Dealing with the question of confusion, because of similarity of the two marks, it was held that the Registrar had to come to a conclusion independently of any comparison with any registered trade mark. It should be noticed that the Court was considering the provisions in S. 8 of the Trade Marks Act, 1940, which corresponds to S. 11 of the Trade and Merchandise Act, 1958. It was also held that what the Registrar had to decide was whether looking at all the circumstances of the case, the particular trade mark was likely to deceive or to cause confusion. Proceeding further to deal with the question of confusion Chagla, C. J. held that what was important was to find out what was the distinguishing or the essential feature of the trade mark already registered, and what was the main feature underlying the trade mark and if it was found that the trade mark whose registration was sought, contained the same distinguishing or essential feature or conveyed the same ideas, then the Registrar would be right if he came to the conclusion that the trade mark ought not to be registered. On the question of confusion among purchasers it was held at Pp. 152-153 of the Report: "The real question is as to how a purchaser, who must be looked upon as an average man of ordinary intelligence, would react to a particular trade mark, what association he would form by looking at the trade mark, and in what respect he would connect the trade mark with the goods which he would be purchasing. It is impossible to accept that a man looking at a trade mark would take in every single feature of the trade mark. The question would be, what would he normally retain in his mind after looking at the trade mark? What would be the salient feature of the trade mark which in future would lead him to associate the particular goods with that trade mark? Relying upon these observations, counsel for the appellant contended, and we think rightly, that the essential feature in the registered trade mark of the appellant in this case was the device of a Lion and the idea that is conveyed to a prospective purchaser is the symbol of the Lion. It is the concept or idea of a Lion that is carried in his mind, by an average purchaser of ordinary intelligence. The use of the same mark of a Lion in the respondent's trade mark proposed to be registered, would undoubtedly lead to confusion in the mind of a purchaser.

22. The Division Bench of the Bombay High Court thereafter proceeded to consider the evidence in order to find out if the registration of the mark of the respondent in that case would lead to confusion. It was found that it was on record that the goods sold under the trade mark were well-known and commonly asked for as "Eagley" or "Eagle". The Division Bench, upon examination of the evidence, disagreed with the conclusion of the trial Court, which came to the conclusion that the points of difference were so numerous, and the points of similarity so few, that there was no such resemblance as was likely to cause confusion. Chagla, C. J. held that what the learned Judge was to do was not to keep the two trade marks before him, and find out how they differed and how little they resembled, but that he should have decided for himself what was the distinguishing or essential feature of the appellant's trade mark, and then looking at the respondent's trade mark decide for himself whether there was any resemblance in the trade mark of the respondent to that distinguishing or essential feature. The conclusion of the trial Court based on the evidence that the Bird appearing in the respondent's trade mark was different in its posture, in its poise and the position of its head and in the spreading of its wings from that of the appellant's, was also criticized and rejected. It was further held that in a case where only one party sold a class of goods under a particular trade name, instead of several parties dealing in the same class of goods under similar marks any attempt to sell the goods under a trade mark which fix in the mind of the purchaser the association of a particular mark, would not be justified. We respectfully agree with the views of the Division Bench of the Bombay High Court and also the observations relating to the question of confusion arising out of similar trade marks. A question of confusion or deception in our view, cannot be decided by comparing the two marks by keeping them side by side and noting the similarities and differences between the two marks. Such a question is to be decided by the Court itself by the Impression which is to be gathered by looking at the two marks, and it is the duty of the Court to find out what impression, what association of ideas and what significant feature the purchaser of an object bearing the registered trade mark would carry in his mind. A meticulous scrutiny of the similarities and differences in the two marks is hardly likely to be of any assistance in coming to a conclusion if the new mark proposed to be registered would create confusion or would lead to deception. The question of deceptive similarity of the two marks has to be answered by looking at the two marks, and then deciding if the association of ideas that would be formed in the mind would deceive or confuse, not when two objects bearing the two different marks are produced before a purchaser, but when one object bearing the new mark proposed to be registered is produced before him. This, in our view, is the correct and only method of approach to be applied in deciding a question of confusion and deception.

23. The decision of the Division Bench of the Bombay High Court, mentioned above, went up in an appeal to the Supreme Court and was upheld and approved. The decision of the Supreme Court is reported in AIR 1953 SC 357. In dealing with the question of the duty of the Court in deciding questions of confusion, it was held at P. 363 of the Report: "Moreover, in deciding whether a particular trade mark is likely to deceive or cause confusion, that duty is not discharged by arriving at the result by merely comparing it with the trade mark which is already registered and whose proprietor is offering opposition to the registration of the mark. The real question to decide in such cases is to see as to how a purchaser who must be looked upon as an average man of ordinary intelligence, would react to a particular trade mark, what association he would form by looking at the trade mark, and in what respect he would connect the trade mark with the goods which he would be purchasing." Similar observations were also made by a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in Ciba Ltd. v. M. Ramalingam, AIR 1958 Bom 56. In that case it was again held that it was not for a witness to tell the Court whether there was likelihood of deception and that the Court could not abdicate its function which was to decide, on looking at the two trade marks and in considering whether they resembled each other and whether there was likelihood of deception. It was further held that if the resemblance between two marks was clear, it was the duty of the Court to remove from registration the mark which was likely to cause deception.

24. In our view, it is for the Court to decide upon looking at the two marks, whether the second respondent's mark is likely to deceive a purchaser of average intelligence. It is to be borne in mind, that such a purchaser is not likely to have the appellant's mark before him, when he is offered a chaff-cutter bearing the respondent's mark of a Lion with a Goddess seated upon it. It is true that phonetically the words written under the appellant's mark and those written under the respondent's mark are altogether different. But in judging a question of deception and confusion, it should not be overlooked that a purchaser of goods, such as this may not necessarily be a literate person, able to read and write. In all probability he would go by the marks as they appear on the merchandise. We have had the advantage of looking at the marks as they appear on the two chaff-cutters manufactured by the parties. These two chaff-cutters were produced before this Court upon an order obtained under Order 41, Rule 27 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appellate Court felt and we think rightly, that the question such as this, could not be decided by the Court without looking at the marks as they appeared on the merchandise, and by merely looking at the photographic prints of such marks as printed in the Paper Book. That order was made by a Bench of which I was a member and the order was made because it was felt that in deciding the question of confusion and deception, in an application for registration of a trade mark, the best evidence would be the marks themselves as they appeared on the merchandise of the registered proprietor and also on that of the applicant for registration.

25. Counsel for the appellant next relied upon the decision in Re: Dunn's Trade Mark, (1889) 41 Ch D 439. In that case the respondent applied to register the words "Dunn's Fruit Salt Baking Powder" as a trade mark for Baking Powder. The appellant, who had for many years used the words "Fruit Salt" as his trade mark for use in producing an effervescing drink, opposed the application. Kay, J., in the trial Court, held that although the appellant had no monopoly in the use of the words "Fruit Salt", which were descriptive only, and not deceptive, yet under the circumstances they were calculated to deceive the public within the meaning of S. 73 of the Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, and that the trade mark ought not to be registered. The Court of Appeal reversed the decision of Kay J., on the ground that the words "Fruit Salt" were proposed to be used by the respondent for a totally different article namely, Baking Powder which did not interfere with the appellant's trade. This decision went up in an appeal to the House of Lords whose decision is reported in (1890) 15 AC 252. The majority of the House of Lords reversed the decision of the Court of Appeal and restored that of Kay, J., and in doing so, held that although the words "Fruit and Salt" were in common use in English language, and in combination they had no technical or scientific meaning, the use of the words "Fruit Salt" by the appellant for many years was a material circumstance in considering whether the use of those words by the respondent would be calculated to mislead. It was held that the use of the words "Fruit Salt", although such use was made in connection with a different substance, namely Baking Powder there would be a supposed connection between the two articles in the mind of many persons who would naturally assume that the Baking Powder had been manufactured with the appellant's Fruit Salt and such persons would purchase the Baking Powder in that belief. Although this decision did not deal with the question of a mark or design but a combination of common English words, yet it throws light on the considerations to be taken into account in dealing with the question of confusion and deception. The next case relied upon by counsel for the appellant was in Re: The Australian Wine Importers Ltd., (1889) 41 Ch D 278. In that case an application was made for registration of a trade mark and this was objected to on the ground of its similarity to a trade mark already on the register. The trade mark already registered was for Spirits and it consisted of a representation of a Golden Fleece with the words "Golden Fleece" adding in one case the words "Old Jamaica Rum" and in another "Pure Old Scotch Whisky". The applicant wanted to register a mark, not for Spirits but for Wines and the proposed mark consisted of a Golden Fleece and the words "Golden Fleece, Australian Champagne, Sparkling Verdeillio". It was held that Wines were of the same description of goods as Spirits, and the registration of the trade mark was prohibited by the Act, and also that even if there was no such prohibition, the similarity of the marks was such, as having regard to the similarity of Wines and Spirits, to be calculated to induce the public to believe the goods of the registered owner to be of the applicant and in such circumstances, the Court ought not to direct the applicant's mark to be registered. In this case again, the trade mark consisted partly of a device and a combination of words and though the combination of words was very different, yet because of the similarity of the words and the device, registration was refused. Reliance was next placed by counsel for the appellant on another decision of the House of Lords in Yorkshire Copper Works Ltd.'s application, (1954) 71 RPC 150. In that case an application for registration was made for registering the words "Yorkshire". It was contended by the applicant that the words "Yorkshire" had lost its geographical significance and had become distinctive of the applicant's mark. The application was refused by the Registrar. It was held that the application was rightly refused. I do not think, this decision is of any assistance to the appellant as the primary question before the House of Lords was whether a geographical name can become a distinctive mark so as to make it eligible for registration. The next case relied on by counsel for the appellant was in the Matter of an application by William Henry Huxley, (1924) 41 RPC 423. In that case an application was made to register a trade mark consisting of 4 pictorial panels intended to represent the history of oil from the well to the consumer. One of the four panels depicted a ship. The application was opposed by a company who was the registered owner of several trade marks consisting of the picture of a ship, and also of a mark consisting of the words "Ship Brand". In holding that the proposed trade mark ought not to be registered, it was observed that although there might be persons who were sufficiently intelligent and well-informed to grasp the significance of the grouping of four pictures in one mark, there might be others equally intelligent who might take a different view of what was presented. It was further held that the four pictures in the proposed trade mark were not combined in such a way as to take away from the picture of the ship, its own individual significance, and for that reason there was probability of confusion. This decision is of great importance so far as this appeal is concerned, because the proposed mark in that case consisted of four pictorial panels, only one of which was a ship. The opponent's registered mark consisted of only the picture of one ship, yet it was held that because there was possibility of confusion, the mark ought not to be registered. In this case, it is to be recalled that the proposed mark was the device of a Lion with a Goddess seated upon it and the registered mark of the appellant was a Lion with a banner above it. Mr. Mukherjee argued, and we think rightly, that if the mark consisting of 4 panels, only one of which was a ship, was refused registration because it might confuse with a registered trade mark which had the picture of one ship only it should be held that the respondent's mark ought not to be registered as it was bound to deceive and confuse.

26. On a careful consideration of the two marks we find that the main feature of the two marks is the figure or mark of the Lion. The appellant's mark is a Lion with a banner covering the entire length of its body, with its tail coiled and turned up. The respondent's mark is a Lion with a Goddess seated upon it. The image of the Goddess is by no means the image of the Goddess Durga. Anyone familiar with Hindu Mythology would at once see that the image as appearing on the Lion in the second respondent's mark has not ten hands, which is an indispensable feature of the image of the Goddess as is known all over India. As I see the image, it has two hands, with a discus in one hand, and a trident in another. Counsel for the respondent said that the image is that of the Goddess with four hands but all the four hands were not discernible to the eye. In any case, a Goddess is there, seated on a Lion with arms in her hands. To us, it seems that the main feature in the two marks is the figure of the Lion in both. It is to be remembered in this connection that the merchandise over which the marks are used are identical in nature namely, chaff-cutters. The question is, what is the association of ideas which a purchaser of average intellect will have in his mind when he goes into a store or shop to purchase a chaff-cutter of the appellant's manufacture? The only concept, and the only association of ideas that such a person would have in his mind, is the mark of a Lion. If, therefore, he is offered a chaff-cutter bearing the respondent's mark of a Lion with a Goddess seated upon it, would he be deceived? Would he be so confused in his mind as to think that the chaff-cutter with the mark of a Lion and a Goddess seated upon it, is the chaff-cutter of the appellant's manufacture? We think, yes. The purchaser, upon seeking the mark of a Lion on the chaff-cutter would, no doubt, be led into believing that it is a merchandise of the appellant's manufacture. He may, as well, think that the modification of the mark with the image of the Goddess seated upon the Lion is a modification which has been made by the appellant himself. In the mark of the second respondent the dominant feature is a Lion with a coiled and turned-up tail. The figure of the Goddess is so small compared with the size of the Lion as to become almost insignificant. When a purchaser is offered a chaff-cutter of the second respondent's manufacture with the marks mentioned above, there is, every likelihood of his being deceived into believing that he was getting a chaff-cutter of the appellant's manufacture. He will not have the opportunity of comparing the two marks and finding out the difference between the two so as to be aware of the distinction.

27. I will now refer to the cases on which counsel for the respondent relied to repel the contention regarding confusion and deception. Mr. Roy relied upon a decision of the Judicial Committee in Thomas Bear and Sons (India) Ltd. v. Irayag Narain, AIR 1940 PC 86. In that case the appellants manufactured and sold cigarette and tobacco described as "Virginia Bird's Eye" smoked in pipes. These goods were sold in packets bearing a mark, the distinguishing feature of which was the representation of an elephant. The packets and tins of cigarettes bore the designation "Elephant Cigarettes", and on tobacco the representation of the elephant appeared in red. These goods were well-known and asked for as "Elephant Mark", "Hathi Markah" and "Lal Hathi". The defendants had been manufacturing and selling chewing tobacco for a long time and sold the same in packets and tins. The goods in the packet were intended for use with lime. Both packets and tins in which the chewing tobacco was sold bore the picture of an elephant. It was in these facts that it was held that there could be no monopoly use of a mark which was the representation of an animal or any other device, and no objection could be taken to the use of identical marks on different kinds of goods. This case is of no assistance to the respondent, firstly because it was not a case of registered trade mark, and secondly what is of greater importance, is that the marks were used in a different kind of goods, namely, chewing tobacco, which differed widely in appearance and use from cigarette and tobacco used in pipes. But this decision is important for another reason namely, that it affirmed the well-known principle that the test of comparison of marks side by side was not a sound one, since a purchaser would seldom have the two marks actually before him when he makes his purchase.

28. Before proceeding to refer to the other cases relied on by Mr. Roy, I should briefly notice his contention on the question of deception and confusion. It was argued that the animal in the respondent's mark was not a Lion at all, but was some other animal. Secondly, it was argued that the image of the Goddess Durga was the distinguishing feature in the mark proposed to be registered by the respondent. Thirdly, Mr. Roy said any purchaser who could read, would at once see that the respondent's mark with the writing "Ma Durga Brand" was altogether different from the appellant's mark "Lion Brand". In my view, none of these contentions has any merit. As for the animal, it is preposterous to suggest that the Goddess Durga would be seated on an animal other than a Lion. Anyone familiar with Hindu Mythology would be shocked, if told that the Goddess Durga was seated on an animal other than a Lion. Besides, visually the representation of the animal in the mark is quite plainly that of a Lion. The second point about the Goddess Durga, being the distinguishing feature, seems to us to be equally without any substance. As I see the mark on the respondent's chaff-cutter, it is clear to me that the image of the Goddess above the Lion is insignificant compared to the figures of the Lion in the mark. The concept that catches the eye, as I see the respondent's mark is the figure of the Lion and not that of the Goddess seated above it. It is the animal which is the dominant feature in the respondent's mark and not the deity. The third point made by Mr. Roy about the writing under the rival marks seems to me to be equally without force. It cannot be assumed that in this country everyone who goes to purchase a chaff-cutter would be a literate person and would be able to distinguish between writing of the appellant and the respondent. It is true that some of the purchasers may be able to read the writing under the mark but it is equally true that a large number of them would either not be able to read, and even if able to read, would not care to read the writing under the mark in very small and illegible character.

29. To turn now to the other case relied on by Counsel for the respondent. Reliance was placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in Malayam Tobacco Distributors Ltd. v. United Kingdom Tobacco Co. Ltd., AIR 1934 PC 167. That was an action for infringement of trade mark and the ratio of the decision was that no finding of fraud could be made by a Court when there was neither any pleading nor any evidence to support a case of fraud. On the question of confusion in an action for infringement it was held that in the absence of evidence of actual confusion a strong case must be made out to justify conclusion that confusion would result, as a result of the infringement of the mark. We do not see, how this decision is of any assistance to the respondent. Reliance was next placed on a decision of this Court in 69 Cal WN 947 = (AIR 1965 Cal 417). In that case an application was made for registration of the name "sagar" to be used in sewing machines. Opposition was put forward by a company who used the name "Singer" in its sewing machines. It was held that there was no similarity between the words "Sagar" and "Singer" as the former was not deceptively similar to the latter. This decision again has no application to the facts in this case in which we are concerned with both a name and a mark, the device rather than the words being the dominant feature of the mark.

30. Mr. Roy next argued that as this appeal was a second appeal, this Court should not interfere with the finding of facts made by the Registrar and the trial Court. In support of this contention he relied on the decisions in AIR 1929 PC 286; AIR 1934 PC 112; AIR 1938 Pat 38 and AIR 1961 Bom 147.

31. We cannot accept this contention of Counsel for the respondent. In dealing with this appeal this Court is not a Court of second appeal as contemplated by Section 100 of the Civil Procedure Code. The appeal which this Court is dealing with, is not from the judgment of Court subordinate to the High Court. The trial Court dealt with the appeal as a High Court under Section 109 (2) of the Act and this Court is dealing with the appeal again as a High Court under Section 109 (5) of the Act. Secondly, under Section 109 (6) of the Act, the High Court in dealing with an appeal, has all the powers of the Registrar and can make any order which the Registrar could make under the Act. Then again, in dealing with the question of deception and confusion under Section 11 (a) of the Act and the question of deceptive similarity under Section 12 of the Act this Court must necessarily look into the evidence adduced by the parties in order to determine whether the bar created by Section 11 and Section 12 of the Act can be invoked by a party opposing registration of a trade mark.

32. In repelling the contention of Counsel for the respondent that the Court should not go into questions of fact in second appeal, Counsel for the appellant relied on a decision of the Judicial Committee in Jogesh Chandra Roy v. Emdad Meah, AIR 1932 PC 28, in which it was held that finding of a fact based on the failure of a party to discharge the onus of proof which the first appellate Court wrongly held to be incumbent on him, was not a finding on positive evidence and was not binding in second appeal. Reliance was also placed on another decision of the Judicial Committee in Sm. Bibhabati Devi v. Ramendra Narayan Roy, 73 Ind App 246 = (AIR 1947 PC 19).

33. We are unable to accept the respondent's contention that this Court in dealing with the appeal under Section 109 (5) of the Act is a Court of second appeal under Section 100 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for that reason, is unable to go into questions of fact. The provisions of the Act enjoin this Court to determine questions of deception, confusion and deceptive similarity, and that can only be done by taking into consideration the evidence tendered on behalf of the parties.

34. Counsel for the second respondent next sought to raise an altogether new point, namely that the respondent was an honest concurrent user of the appellant's registered trade mark, and as such the Registrar had jurisdiction under Section 12 (3) of the Act to register the second respondent's proposed trade mark. We cannot accept this contention on behalf of the second respondent for more than one reason. In the first place, this point was not raised before the Registrar or before the Court below, and is now sought to be raised for the first time. The question of concurrent use is a question of fact and a case such as this, has to be pleaded and proved. In compliance with the elaborate provisions in the Act for filing affidavits in support of the application, in answer to the opposition and also in the affidavit evidence, the second respondent nowhere suggested, much less made out a case of concurrent user. Secondly, under Section 12 (3) of the Act, in the case of an honest concurrent user, a mark can be registered, if in the opinion of the Registrar, it is proper to do so. The Registrar in this case has expressed no such opinion. Nor has the respondent filed any cross-objection against the Registrar's order. It is true that this Court has jurisdiction to make any order, which the Registrar could make, under Section 109 (6) of the Act and in exercise of this jurisdiction this Court, in an appropriate case, can make an order on the ground of honest concurrent use. But such an order, in our view, cannot be made having regard to the nature of the evidence such as it is, and also the case made out by the respondent before the Registrar and the Court below. Lastly, even if the second respondent was allowed to make out a case of honest concurrent use, the only evidence of sale of the respondent's chaff-cutter, as noticed by the Registrar, was the sale of a single chaff-cutter as proved by Bill No. 224/16 of January 15, 1960. The other evidence of sale of the respondent's merchandise, namely the affidavits of the traders to which I have referred earlier, is of no assistance in coming to a conclusion regarding concurrent use of the mark by the respondent. The contentions of Counsel for the second respondent regarding honest concurrent use must therefore be rejected.

35. For the reasons mentioned above, this appeal succeeds and is allowed: The judgment and order of the Court below and also that of the Registrar are set aside. The Registrar is directed not to register the mark of the second respondent. The second respondent to pay to the appellant the costs of this appeal and also the costs of the Court below. Certified for two Counsel.

AJAY K. BASU, J.—36. I agree.
Appeal allowed.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 278 (V 59 C 47)

ANIL KUMAR SINHA AND SALIL
KUMAR DATTA, JJ.

Sambhu Das Pyne, Petitioner v. Corporation of Calcutta, Opposite party.

S. C. A. No. 44 of 1970, D/- 20-1-1972, for certificate of fitness for appeal to Supreme Court against Judgment of Division Bench of this Court in F.M.A. No. 288 of 1969.

BP/CP/A709/72/LGC

1972 Cal/18 VII G—21

Constitution of India, Art. 133 (1) (c) — Certificate of fitness for appeal — Judgment of affirmance — Petitioner must establish that the appeal involves some substantial questions of law notwithstanding that the requirement of value under Clause (b) is satisfied — Substantial question of law — What is. (Prs. 5, 6)

A question of law either of general public importance or directly and substantially affecting the rights of parties would be substantial question of law. But where the law is practically settled or covered by a decision of the highest court and it is a question of application of general principles, it would not be a substantial question of law. When a question of law is fairly arguable, when there is room for difference of opinion on the point, it would be a substantial point of law. AIR 1962 SC 1314 and AIR 1951 Mad 969, Relied on.

Where the delegation of authority to revalue "bustee" under the provisions of Calcutta Municipal Act was made by the Executive Officer in his official capacity, the contention that the delegation came to an end with the cessation of his office and at the time of assessment in question there was no valid delegation, is not a fair arguable proposition and is palpably untenable. Accordingly there is no substantial question of law on this question for which a certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court can be given. (Para 6)

Similarly the contention that where the delegation was about the power to value the basti there could be no delegation of the discretion vested in the Executive Officer to assess the basti, does not involve a substantial question of law as it is well settled that while powers and duties are inter-connected, it is not possible to separate them and the delegation of power takes with it the duties attached to the exercise of the power delegated. Noni Kumar Chakravarti, Manas Nath
tacharjee, for Opposite party.

SALIL KUMAR DATTA, J.— This is an application for a certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court against a decision of a Division Bench of this Court in F. M. A. No. 238 of 1969. The appeal arose out of an annual valuation made by the Corporation of Calcutta in respect of a basti situated in premises No. 105/3, Ultadanga Main Road within the Corporation of Calcutta, for assessment of consolidated rates with effect from 3rd quarter of 1951-52. The annual valuation was made departmentally by the Corporation at Rs. 20240/-. An objection was preferred by the owner, the petitioner before us, contending inter alia that the assessment was illegal, exorbitant and without jurisdiction, while the previous annual valuation was Rs. 7420/- from third quarter of 1950-51 as ultimately determined by the Court of Small Causes, Sealdah on May 21, 1954. On objection filed by the petitioner, the Deputy Commissioner (II) reduced the valuation from Rs. 20240/- to Rs. 15304/-. An appeal was preferred by the petitioners to the said Court and the valuation was further reduced to Rs. 7544. On an appeal to this Court by the Corporation this valuation was set aside and the case was sent back on remand for rehearing. After remand the Court of Small Causes, Sealdah affirmed the valuation made by the Deputy Commissioner (II) and dismissed the appeal. Against that decision the present appeal was taken by the petitioner which also was dismissed by the Division Bench of this Court as already stated. Against this decision, the present application has been preferred by the appellant owner.

2. In the present case, the question in dispute is whether the excess valuation made by the Deputy Commissioner (II) and affirmed by the Court of Small Causes, Sealdah as also by this Court has been in accordance with law and within the powers of the Corporation. On the valuation test, Mr. Noni Kumar Chakravarti learned Advocate appearing for the petitioner, has contended that the value of the subject-matter of the dispute in the Court of the first instance and in appeal was and is much above Rs. 20,000/- inasmuch as the property in dispute namely premises No. 105/3, Ultadanga Main Road could be valued at not less than Rs. 1,48,400/- being the capitalised value of the annual valuation of Rs. 7420/- at twenty times of the annual valuation which according to him is the accepted normal standard. Mr. Chakravarti accordingly submitted that cl. (a) of Article 133 (1) of the Constitution is satisfied in so far as the valuation is concerned. These contentions have been disputed by Mr. Subodh Kumar Bhattacharjee, learned advocate appearing for the Corporation who has contended that the basis of valuation made out by the petitioner is wrong and untenable. According to Mr. Bhattacharjee, the question with which the appeal is concerned was the excess annual valuation of Rs. 15,304/- over the then existing valuation of Rs. 7420/-. The subject-matter of the dispute in all these proceedings is therefore the difference in valuation only and this cannot be stated to be to satisfy the requirement of the said clause (a) of Article 133 (1).

3. As was pointed out in Ramritlal Saha v. Sachindra Narayan Roy, AIR 1968 Cal 316 that the value of the property concerned in appeal is something different from the value of the subject-matter in dispute. Though we are concerned with the increased annual valuation of the municipal premises in question the appeal is really not concerned with the property itself but only with the legality and validity of the excess annual valuation. In that view, it could not be proper, in our opinion, to assess the capitalised value of the annual valuation as the value of the subject-matter in this proceeding. Accordingly we are of opinion that the requirement of clause (a) of Article 133 (1) has not been satisfied in the instant case.

4. Even though the clause (a) is not applicable there can be no dispute that the excess valuation as assessed by the impugned judgment will involve and increase the valuation of the entire premises, which even on the existing valuation exceeds the limit of Rs. 20,000/-, thereby attracting clause (b). The Supreme Court in Chittarmal v. Shah Pannalal, AIR 1965 SC 1440 considered the ambit of the two clauses (a) and (b) of Article 133 (1) and observed in paragraph 5 as follows:

"To attract the application of Art. 133 (1) (b) it is essential that there must be—omitting from consideration other conditions not material—a judgment involving directly or indirectly some claim or question respecting property of an amount or value not less than Rs. 20,000/-. The variation in the language used in clauses (a) and (b) of Article 133 pointedly highlights the conditions which attract the application of the two clauses. Under clause (a) what is decisive is the amount or value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance and "still in dispute" in appeal to the Supreme Court; under clause (b) it is the amount or value of the property respecting which a claim or question is involved in the judgment sought to be appealed from. . . . But the property respecting which the claim or question arises must be property in addition to or other than the subject-matter of the dispute. If in a proposed appeal there is no claim or question raised respecting property other than the subject-matter, clause (a) will apply; if there is involved in the appeal a claim or question respecting property of an amount or value not less than Rs. 20,000/- in addition to or other than the subject-matter of the dispute, clause (b) will apply."

In the present appeal, undoubtedly the subject-matter of the dispute is the excess valuation of Rs. 15,304/- over the existing valuation of Rs. 7420/- and it could be urged that the subject-matter of the dispute is less than Rs. 20,000/-. This enhanced valuation impugned in the appeal however does not stand by itself and on the contrary this valuation impugned in this application involves and affects the premises No. 105/3, Ultadanga Main Road which are not the subject-matter of the dispute, in that it touches and enhances the valuation respecting said premises the value whereof undisputedly is over Rs. 20,000/- even without such enhancement. If there is a reduction of the valuation as claimed by the petitioners, it would involve the said property reducing its valuation. It would thus appear that clause (b) is attracted as the appeal ultimately involves the valuation of the said premises which in turn, as we have seen, is valued much over Rs. 20,000/- apart from the impugned enhancement.

5. The judgment under appeal being one of affirmance, the petitioners must further establish that the appeal involves some substantial questions of law notwithstanding that the requirement of value under Clause (b) is satisfied. A question of law either of general public importance or directly and substantially affecting the rights of parties has been held to be a substantial question of law. But where the law is practically settled or covered by a decision of the highest court and it is a question of application of general principles, it would not be a substantial question of law, as was held in Chunilal Mehta & Sons Ltd. v. Century Spg. & Mfg. Co. Ltd., AIR 1962 SC 1314. It will not be a substantial question of law if a plea raised is palpably absurd though a decision on the merits of the case would be directly affected by it as was held in the decision in Rimmalapudi Subba Rao v. Noony Veeraju, AIR 1951 Mad 969 (FB). It was further observed that when a question of law is fairly arguable, when there is room for difference of opinion on the point, it would be a substantial point of law. These principles have been approved by the Supreme Court in the case cited above.

6. Mr. Chakravarti has contended firstly that the delegation of authority to revalue 'bustees' under Section 12 (1) of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1923 made by the Executive Officer then in office, came to an end with the cessation of his office and at the time of assessment in question there was no valid delegation. The judgment under appeal, following the decision in Gayadinram v. A. D. Khan, (1951) 55 Cal WN 667, repelled the above contention quoting with approval, the observations in the above case that the delegation was made not in personal capacity but in official capacity and that individuals may go and come but the statutory office remains unless the Corporation itself ceases to exist, and, further, in absence of revocation which could be done, the successor-in-office must be deemed to have accepted and approved of the delegation made by his predecessor. The contention now raised by Mr. Chakravarti is that the question of delegation in the said circumstances raises a substantial question of law calling for a decision by the Supreme Court. The delegation in the present case is by the executive officer in his official capacity (vide the delegation dated 8-4-1924 as follows: "The following powers, functions and duties are delegated by me as the executive officer of the Corporation of Calcutta under Section 12 (1) of Bengal Act, III of 1923 to the officers noted below: Section 131 (2) (a) To Value annually bustees — to Assessor, Dy. Assessor, Sub-assessors"). This proposition about delegation, if accepted, would lead to an intolerable situation as observed by Bose, J. in Gayadinram's case cited above. We are also of the opinion for the same reasons that such contention is not a fair arguable proposition and is palpably untenable. Accordingly there is no substantial question of law on this question for which a certificate of fitness for appeal to the Supreme Court can be given.

7. The other question of law of substantial importance involved in this appeal is, as Mr. Chakravarti contended, that the delegation was about the power to value the bustee but there could be no delegation of the discretion vested in the Executive Officer to assess the bustee which was a pre-requisite of assessment of bustee by the Executive Officer or his delegated authority. This Court in dealing with this point, on a construction of the relevant provisions of the statute came to the conclusion that discretion vested in the Executive Officer under clause (a) of Section 131 (2) could not operate as a distinct or separate element from the power to be exercised by him so that when the power is delegated to any municipal officer, it carries with it also the discretion to be exercised by such officer. In support of the proposition, reference was made to the decision in Mungoni v. Attorney General of North Rhodesia, 1960 AC 336, approved by the Supreme Court in Hazrat Syed Shah v. Commr. of Waks, W. Bengal, AIR 1961 SC 1095, wherein it was observed that while powers and duties are inter-connected, it is not possible to separate them and the delegation of power takes with it the duties attached to the exercise of the power delegated. Extending the principle, this Court held that discretion under the present case is really an expansion or limitation of his power but always a condition for exercise of such power, so that with delegation of power, the discretion also passes. The Court also relied on the decision in Daluram Pannalal v. Asst. Commr. of Sales Tax, Indore, AIR 1963 SC 1581 wherein again it was observed that the duty of being satisfied that sales escaped assessment was inseparably connected with power to re-assess and passed to the delegatee along with it and it was not a duty that could be independently delegated.

8. It is thus obvious that the principles involved about delegation as in the present case are well settled. This Court applied the said principles of law in the circumstances of the present case. That being the position, this point of law urged by Mr. Chakravarti in support of his case for a certificate is also not a substantial question of law as contemplated in Article 133 (1) of the Constitution.

9. The application accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs: hearing fees assessed at 5 Gms.

Saktinath Mukherjee, Sibadas Ghosal, for Appellant; Jitendra Nath Guha, K. G. Mitra and D. K. Das, for Respondent.

SANKAR PRASAD MITRA, J.— This is a second appeal from the judgment of the Additional District Judge, 24 Pargannas dated the 3rd of March, 1962 dismissing an appeal from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge, 4th Court, Alipore, who had decreed the suit declaring the plaintiff's title to the disputed property and declaring further that a patta dated the 8th August, 1940 granting a mourasi mokarari right was void.

2. Before we come to the facts it would be convenient to set out a genealogical table which is as follows:—

3. Briefly the facts are that the premises No. 17 Jadu Bhattacharya Lane, in Calcutta, consists of about 5 cottahs of land. Out of these 5 cottahs, on the 8th April, 1936, Narayan Lal leased out about 1 cottah to one Ramlagan. And Ramlagan, on the 23rd October, 1940, sold his lease-hold rights to the defendant Kaileswar Singh.

4. There is another lease of about 1 cottah of land which Balaji had granted to the defendant Kaileswar on the 8th August, 1940.

5. In this appeal, therefore, we are concerned with these two leases, namely, the lease of the 8th April, 1936, and the lease of the 8th August, 1940. There is no dispute that the plaintiff Upendra Nath Kayal is now the owner of the entire premises No. 17, Jadu Bhattacharya Lane, Calcutta.

6. In 1948, Upendra instituted in the Alipore Court Title Suit No. 34/48 against Kaileswar for recovery of possession of about 2 cottahs 9 chhattaks and 24 sq. ft. of land being a part of the premises No. 17, Jadu Bhattacharya Lane, Calcutta.

RADHA KRISHNA MAHATA

In this suit, there is no dispute that, the land comprised in the lease granted by Narayan on the 8th April, 1936, the interests whereof were subsequently acquired by Kaileswar, was included. But the parcel of land which was settled by Balaji on the 8th August, 1940, was not included.

7. In 1949, Upendra instituted a partition suit in the Alipore Court. This suit was marked as Title Suit No. 209/49. It was a suit for partition of 4 cottahs 13 chattacks and 22 sq. ft. of premises No. 17, Jadu Bhattacharya Lane, Calcutta. Kaileswar was made a party to the suit as the defendant No. 1. Upendra in this suit asked for partition of the suit properties with Kaileswar provided that Kaileswar was found to have a title to any portion thereof.

8. On the 31st March, 1952, Title Suit No. 34/48 and Title Suit No. 209/49 were both disposed of by the same judgment of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Alipore. It was ordered: "that Title Suit No. 209 of 1949 be decreed on contest in a preliminary form against defendant No. 1 (Kaileswar Singh) and dismissed with costs against defendant No. 2, defendant No. 1's interest in the suit property as a tenant under the plaintiff is 1/3rd. If the parties fail to amicably partition the property within two months of this date a Commissioner will be appointed to effect partition by metes and bounds having regard to the possession of the parties. Parties will bear their own costs up to this stage."

9. In 1952, Upendra preferred an appeal, being Title Appeal No. 474/52. It was an appeal against the dismissal of Title Suit No. 34/48 but he preferred no appeal at all against the decision in Title Suit No. 209/49. The appeal was allowed. It was held that the defendant Kaileswar did not acquire any interest under the settlement granted on the 8th April, 1936, by Narayan. The operative part of the appellate judgment of the Additional District Judge is as follows:—

"The decision of the trial Court in Suit No. 34 of 1948 is set aside. As the plaintiff has made the issue cumbrous by bringing suit No. 209 during the pendency of this suit I award no cost to the plaintiff either in the trial Court or in the Appellate Court. Plaintiff's title in the suit land is declared and he shall get khas possession of the suit land by evicting the defendants. The plaintiff shall also get mesne profits from the defendant No. 1 (Kaileswar Singh) which shall be ascertained on plaintiff's application and a final decree shall follow."

10. The result of this appellate judgment, therefore, is that Kaileswar loses his right acquired under the settlement of Narayan in favour of Ramagan on the 8th April, 1936. But the rights conferred on him under the partition suit being Suit No. 209/49 were not touched as there was no appeal against the preliminary partition decree.

11. In the next stage, we come to the suit which is the subject-matter of the second appeal before us. This is a suit by Upendra against Kaileswar for recovery of possession of 1 cottah of land which Kaileswar was holding under the lease granted to him by Balaji on the 8th August, 1940. The allegation is that Balaji's lease was void. The suit was marked as Title Suit No. 31/54 in the 4th Court of the Subordinate Judge at Alipore. The trial Court decreed the suit. Kaileswar preferred an appeal being Title Appeal No. 1169/58 which was dismissed. Thereafter, Kaileswar preferred this second appeal.

12. To complete the picture we may refer to certain additional evidence which we have allowed to be introduced at the hearing of this appeal. In 1961, Kaileswar filed a suit being Title Suit No. 312/61 in the 4th Court of the Munsif at Alipore, against Upendra for a declaration that the decree in Title Appeal No. 474/52 arising out of Title Suit No. 34/48 is null and void and for permanent injunction restraining Upendra from proceeding with Title Execution Case No. 31/58 which Upendra had instituted for executing the decree in Title Suit No. 34/48.

13. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The findings inter alia, were (a) there was no fraud on the part of Upendra as alleged, (b) the decree in Title Appeal No. 474/52 nullifies the decree in Title Suit No. 209/49 and (c) the suit was not maintainable because of the bar of Section 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

14. Against this judgment Kaileswar preferred an appeal being Title Appeal No. 643/68 to the 5th Court of the Subordinate Judge, Alipore. The appeal has been dismissed.

15. The question which arises for our decision centres round the fate of the lease of Balaji on the 8th August, 1940, on the facts stated above. The appellant's contention is that Balaji's lease still remains unaffected and Upendra cannot get possession of the parcel of the land comprised in that lease. The respondent's contention is that the Courts below have decided that, like Narayan's lease, Balaji's lease is also void.

16. Mr. Mukherjee learned Advocate for the respondent has advanced the following arguments:—

1. In Title Suit No. 34/48, the title of Kaileswar under both the leases, namely, the lease of Narayan and the lease of Balaji were in dispute, and their validity had to be decided before granting the decree for recovery of possession.

2. If two decrees are contradictory and inconsistent, the last decree would prevail and the sanctity of res judicata would attach to the last decree.

3. When two suits are disposed of by the same appeal and appeal is preferred against one of them, the bar of res judicata does not apply and

4. In the last title suit (Title Suit No. 312/61) the propriety of both the leases was raised and Kaileswar had failed to establish that any of them was validly executed.

17. We are unable to accept the points which Mr. Mukherjee has raised. Firstly, in Title Suit No. 34/48 the validity of the second lease was disputed merely by inference. There were no pleadings and no issues specifically challenging the second lease at all. Naturally, the observations that were made by the Courts below regarding the second lease are not binding on Kaileswar.

18. Secondly, this is not a case where two contradictory or inconsistent decrees were passed; the decree in Title Suit No. 34/48 and the decree in Title Suit No. 209/49, so far as the second lease is concerned, are not inconsistent as there is no identity or community of cause of action or issues in the two suits.

19. Thirdly, the bar of res judicata may be inapplicable when two suits are disposed of by the same judgment, but appeal is preferred only against one when both the suits cover the same issues. But in our case, the second lease was the subject-matter of Title Suit No. 209/49 only. It was not the subject-matter of Title Suit No. 34/48.

20. Fourthly, the observations in Kaileswar's Title Suit No. 312/61 affecting the second lease which the respondent has introduced by way of additional evidence do not assist the respondent inasmuch as the second lease was not the subject-matter of that suit.

21. We now proceed to refer to the authorities on which counsel for the respondent has relied.

22. In Mariamnis Bibee v. Joy-nab Bibee, (1906) ILR 33 Cal 1101, M. and J., two Mahomedan co-widows, brought two separate suits for recovery of their dowers from the estate of their deceased husband. A question was raised in these suits, whether two houses belonged to the estate of the husband. By consent of the parties the Subordinate Judge tried both the suits together and disposed them of in one judgment, it being found that the two houses belonged to M as her separate property. But two separate decrees were drawn up in accordance with that judgment.

23. J. preferred an appeal to the District Judge against the decree in her own suit mainly on the ground that the conclusion arrived at by the Subordinate Judge in the suit of M respecting the title of the two houses was erroneous; but no appeal was preferred in M's suit.

24. At the hearing of this appeal a question was raised on behalf of M, the respondent, that the judgment in M's suit not having been appealed against operated as res judicata. But it was held by this court that there was no bar of res judicata to the hearing of the appeal preferred by J.

25. Clearly, this is a case of common issues. Whether or not the two houses belonged to the estate of the deceased husband, was an issue in both the suits and an appeal against the decision in one of them was sufficient for the purpose of challenging the decision. In our case, the second lease was not in issue in both the suits.

26. The same conclusion was reached by a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in the case of Mt. Lachhmi v. Mt. Bhulli, AIR 1927 Lah 289 (FB) where two widows A and B were jointly in possession of certain land. Each sued the other for declaration that she (plaintiff) was the exclusive owner of that land and that the other (defendant) had no right in it of any kind. Both suits were disposed of by a single judgment which decided that A was the owner, but that B was entitled to hold possession of half the land in lieu of maintenance. A separate decree was drawn up in each suit declaring the rights of the plaintiff according to that decision. B appealed against one of these decrees only, namely, the decree given in the suit in which she was the plaintiff. The Full Bench held that the fact that no appeal had been preferred by B against the decree in the other suit of A could not prevent B's appeal from proceeding.

27. It appears that the Supreme Court has approved of this judgment of the Lahore High Court in Narhari v. Shankar, AIR 1953 SC 419 on similar facts.

28. The next decision which Mr. Mukherjee cited was the decision given in the case of Bahadur Singh Singhee v. Rani Jyotirupa Debi, (1936) 40 Cal WN 1176. Here, it has been held that when two suits involving common issues are tried together and are disposed of by one judgment and appeal is filed against the decree in one suit but no appeal is filed against the decree in the other, the matter decided in the latter suit does not become res judicata so as to bar its re-agitation in the appeal.

29. This case, therefore, reiterates the same principles which the judgments cited earlier had laid down. But the whole point is that both suits must have common issues. In our case there were no common issues.

30. The next case cited by learned counsel for the respondent is the case of Rajani Kumar Mitra v. Ajmaddin Bhuiya, AIR 1929 Cal 163 where a Division Bench of this Court has held that when there are two conflicting decrees, the last should prevail on the ground that in the eye of law it is binding between the parties and the previous decree should be taken as pleaded in the latter suit and not given effect to, or must henceforth be regarded as dead.

31. This judgment is of no help to us because in our case there are no conflicting decrees in respect of the second lease granted by Balaji.

32. Mr. Mukherjee then cited the case of Jagadish Chandra Roy Choudhury v. Kashba Ballygunje Co-op. Society Ltd., AIR 1954 Cal 443. It is a decision of a Single Judge and the relevant portion is quoted below:

"After the dismissal of the second execution case on the ground of limitation, the decree was allowed to be executed without objection by the judgment-debtor either on the ground of limitation or on the ground of its execution being barred by res judicata by reason of the aforesaid decision."

33. It was held that the actual res judicata in the judgment-debtor's favour was thus superseded by a later res judicata, though constructive, in favour of the decree-holder. And the plea of res judicata on the basis of the said decision in the second execution case was no longer open.

34. Again this judgment is not relevant for our present purpose inasmuch as in our case there is no identity of subject-matters.

35. Reliance was then placed on behalf the respondent on the judgment of Andhra Pradesh High Court in the case of Kaliseti Subbarayudu v. Pagadala Balamayya, AIR 1955 Andhra 194. The Andhra Pradesh High Court observed as follows:

"In cases of judgments 'inter partes' the later adjudication should be taken as superseding the earlier whether or not the earlier adjudication was pleaded as a bar to the trial of the suit in which the later adjudication was made."

36. There can be no dispute as to the above-mentioned proposition so long as there is identity of title or subject-matter.

37. The last case to which reference was made on behalf of the respondent is the case of Smt. Rajlakshmi Dasi v. Banamali Sen, AIR 1953 SC 33. This was a case of a former proceeding for compensation money in respect of some property which was the subject-matter of a subsequent suit, and the Supreme Court has observed that the first test of res judicata is the identity of title in the two litigations and not the actual property involved in the two cases. In our case, the second settlement dated 8-8-40 was not at all touched either by the pleading or by the issues in the first suit marked as Title Suit No. 34/48.

38. Finally, Mr. Mukherjee has contended that Kaileswar was given 1/3rd share in the preliminary partition decree on the basis of both the leases of Narayan and Balaji. Since Narayan's lease has been declared to be invalid, a final decree in the partition suit, so far as Kaileswar's share is concerned, would create difficulties unless we hold that Balaji's lease is also invalid.

39. It seems to us that this contention is of no substance. We may conveniently quote the observation of Mookerjee, J. in the case of Nuri Mian v. Ambica Singh, ILR 44 Cal 47 = (AIR 1917 Cal 716). The observation which is at p. 55 is as follows:—

"Now, it may be conceded that ordinarily the decree in a suit should accord with the rights of the parties as they stand at the date of its institution. But this principle is not of universal application, and in a long series of decisions which will be found reviewed in the case of Rai Charan Mandal v. Biswanath Mandal, 20 Cal LJ 107 = (AIR 1915 Cal 103) the doctrine has been recognised that there are cases where it is incumbent upon a court of justice to take notice of events which have happened since the institution of the suit and to mould its decree according to the circumstances as they stand at the time the decree is made. This principle will be applied where it is shown that the original relief claimed has, by reason of subsequent change of circumstances, become inappropriate, or that it is necessary to base the decision of the Court on the altered circumstances in order to shorten litigation or to do complete justice between the parties."

40. The position, therefore, is that in Title Suit No. 34/48 only one lease was challenged namely the lease of Narayan dated the 8th April, 1936. The lease of Balaji granted on the 8th August, 1940, was not included in that suit at all. Then in Title Suit No. 209/49 both the leases were involved and a share was given to Kaileswar in the suit property by the preliminary partition decree on the basis that both the leases were valid. By the same judgment Title Suit No. 34/48 was dismissed. Upendra was affected by the judgment delivered in both the suits. He preferred an appeal against the decision in Title Suit No. 34/48 but did not prefer any appeal against the preliminary partition decree in Title Suit No. 209/49. The result has been that by virtue of Upendra's success in respect of Title Suit No. 34/48, the lease of the 8th April, 1936, has been set aside and Kaileswar has lost his interest therein. But the lease of 8th August, 1940 remained unaffected and inferentially by reason of conclusions reached in relation to the earlier lease, the second lease cannot be held to be invalid.

41. In this connection reference may be made to the Privy Council's judgment in Raja Bommadevara Naganna Naidu v. Ravi Venkatapavva, 28 Cal WN 588 = (AIR 1923 PC 167). In this case in certain suits by the Zemindar against his raiyats to enforce the acceptance by them of pattas or lease of Faslis 1314 and 1315 which had been tendered to them, the latter pleaded that certain rates had been fixed in Fasli 1292 which alone were recoverable and not the asara or varam rates (produce sharing system) demanded by the Zemindar. The first two courts upheld the tenants' plea but on second appeal the High Court held that the pattas tendered were proper pattas and the tenants must accept them. The decrees of the High Court were reversed by the Privy Council, but during the pendency of the appeal to the Privy Council, the Zemindar instituted similar suits for arrears of rent in respect of 1316 Fasli to 1322 Fasli against the tenants and recovered decrees which he realised in execution. After the Privy Council's decision the tenants, who had made no application for stay of trial of the later suits pending the disposal of the appeal by the Privy Council, sued the Zemindar for refund of the amounts paid by them in excess of the rates determined in the previous suit in consequence of the Privy Council's decision.

42. The Judicial Committee has held that the decision in the later rent suits was not reversed or superseded by the decision of the Privy Council in the earlier suits and the suits for refund were not maintainable.

43. To our mind, a similar situation has arisen in the instant case. By reason of Upendra's failure to prefer an appeal against the preliminary partition decree in Title Suit No. 209/49, Kaileswar's interest created by the second lease of the 8th August, 1940, has remained intact. By making observations on the validity of the second lease in the other suit or in proceedings, the subject-matter whereof is the first lease only, Kaileswar's interest in the second lease cannot be put an end to.

44. At page 27 of the Paper Book we find that the Additional District Judge has made the following observations:—

"The learned Subordinate Judge heard both the suits together and decreed Partition Suit No. 209/49 in a preliminary form and it was declared that the defendant's tenancy right to the extent of one-third share was to be separated by partition by metes and bounds. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the Title Suit No. 34/48. Plaintiff Upendra Nath Kayal thereafter filed an appeal against the judgment and decree passed in Title Suit No. 34 of 1948 and no appeal was preferred by anybody against the judgment and decree in Title Suit No. 209/1949. The appeal against the decree in Title Suit No. 34 of 1948 was allowed and plaintiff's title to the suit land was declared and he was given a decree for khas possession of the land after eviction of the defendants. It may be noted in this connection that the plaintiff did not include lease dated 8-8-40 which is the subject-matter of the present suit granted by Balaji to Kaileswar Singh in Title Suit No. 34 of 1948, though in Title Suit No. 209 of 1949 defendant's title as a co-sharer on the basis of both the leases, namely, the leases of Narayan and Balaji (8-4-36) and (8-8-40) was declared. The learned appellate Court allowed the appeal from the judgment and decree in Title Suit No. 34 of 1948. The learned appellate Court held that defendant No. 1 did not acquire any valid interest in the property by taking lease from Narayan and Balaji. The learned appellate court could not have granted a decree for khas possession to the plaintiff by eviction of the defendants unless the court held that the lease granted by Balaji to Kaileswar Singh was void.... Hence it is evident that though the lease of Balaji in favour of defendant was not directly involved in Title Suit No. 34 of 1948, the decision of the appellate Appeal No. 474 of 1952.. finally decided the issue regarding tenancy right of defendant

In our opinion, the conclusion learned Additional District Judge cannot be supported. The lease of 8th
 August, 1940, was not in issue in Title Suit No. 34 of 1948 or Title Appeal No.
 474/52 and any observation made or decision given with regard to this lease of the 8th August, 1940, in Title Appeal No.
 474/52 cannot be binding on Kaileswar
 Singh.

46. In this view of the matter, this appeal is allowed. The judgment and decree of the courts below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed.

47. There will be no order for costs.

ORDER.— This application has been made by the Union of India inter alia for stay of the suit No. 4009 of 1969 (Raymon Engineering Works Ltd. v. Union of India) instituted in this Court by the respondent, Raymon Engineering Works Ltd.

2. The said suit was filed by the Raymon Engineering Works Ltd. inter alia for a declaration that letters dated 17th February, 1965, 27th February, 1965, and 18th November, 1965, mentioned in paragraphs 20 and 38 of the plaint are void, inoperative and not binding upon the plaintiff. The plaintiff has also prayed for delivery and cancellation of the said letters.

3. The plaintiff in the said suit has claimed also a decree for Rupees 32,33,391.08 P, alternatively an enquiry into the compensation and damages and decree for such sum as would be found due. The money part of the claim of the plaintiff in the plaint has been made on the basis of three several contracts entered into by and between the respondent and the petitioner whereby the respondent agreed to manufacture and supply railway wagons of diverse specifications on the terms and conditions mentioned in the said three contracts. The said contracts are contained in three several orders in writing bearing Nos. 61/RS(I)/954/1/258 dated the 14th April, 1961. No. 61/RS
 (I)/954/14/283 dated the 6th February, 1962 and No. 62/RS(I)/954/15/306 dated the 26th October, 1962, respectively. Each of the said contracts was subject to the terms and conditions contained in the Indian Railway Standard Conditions of contract known as A5-51 in so far as the said terms and conditions were not inconsistent with the conditions mentioned in the said contracts themselves. One of the terms or conditions of the said Indian Railway Standard Conditions of Contract provided as follows:

"In the event of any dispute arising under these conditions or in connection with the contract (except as to any matter the decision of which is specifically provided for in these conditions) the matter in dispute would be referred to two arbitrators, one to be nominated by the petitioner and one to be nominated by the respondent or in the case of the said arbitrators not agreeing then to an umpire to be appointed by the arbitrators in writing before proceeding on the reference and the decision of the arbitrators or in the event of their not agreeing, of the said umpire, would be final and conclusive and the provisions of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1940 and the rules thereunder and any statutory modification thereof would be deemed to apply to and to be incorporated in the contracts."

4. The said arbitration clause by express agreement formed part of each of the said three several contracts.

5. In the suit the respondent has claimed various sums on account of claims in respect of Wages Escalator, Materials Escalator and Sales Tax in respect of the wagons manufactured and delivered by the respondent to the petitioner under the said three several contracts. The respondent in the plaint has pleaded that the petitioner through the Railway Board fraudulently and with the mala fide intention of gaining unfair and undue advantage and making unlawful gain induced and compelled the respondent to accept as condition for extension of due dates of delivery of the said wagons under the second contract by letters dated 17th February, 1965, and 27th February, 1965. The said conditions related to the giving up by the respondent its rights to claim additional sums on account of its claim for Wages Escalator, Material Escalator and Sales Tax in terms of the express contract between the parties.

6. Similarly it is alleged in the plaint the petitioner fraudulently and with mala fide intention of gaining unfair and undue advantage induced the respondent to accept conditions mentioned in the Railway Board's letters dated 16th February, 1965, and 18th November, 1965, for extending the due dates of delivery under the 3rd contract, by fraud, undue influence and/or coercion. Particulars of such fraud, undue influence and/or coercion have been set out in paragraph 21 of the plaint. The respondent seeks to avoid the said modification of the terms of the said contract in so far as it relates to the respondent's claim on account of Wages Escalator, Materials Escalator and Sales Tax as specified in the above mentioned letters on the aforesaid grounds of fraud, undue influence and/or coercion.

7. It appears from the affidavit-in-opposition filed by Manish Chandra Roy affirmed on 31st August, 1970, that Union of India filed a suit against the respondent being suit No. 842 of 1969 for a declaration that the respondent is holding number of wheel sets and other components for manufacturing wagons as well as 1973 Tons of Steel and a prototype wagon for and on account of the Union of India and for return of the same and also for damages suffered by the Union of India under a similar contract between the parties. Union of India has also filed another suit being suit No. 3042 of 1969 against the respondent for the recovery of Rupees 3,86,991.10 p. in respect of another contract. Both the aforesaid suits filed by the Union of India are in respect of contracts consisting similar arbitration clauses.

8. From the nature of affidavit evidence it seems to me that the claims in the suit No. 4009 of 1969 are in respect of contracts which contained valid and subsisting arbitration agreement and the subject-matter of the suit including the plaintiff's claims that the matters are within the terms relating to claims of Wages Escalator, Materials Escalator and Sales Tax mentioned in the aforesaid letters were void and not binding upon the plaintiff are matters agreed to be referred under the arbitration clause set out in the earlier part of this judgment. The said clause is a valid and subsisting arbitration clause and binding upon the respondent as well as the petitioner who are parties to the said arbitration agreement. There is nothing on record to show that at the commencement of the suit No. 4009 of 1969 the petitioner in the instant case was not ready or willing to do everything that was necessary to be done for the conduct of the arbitration in terms of the arbitration agreement between the parties. It is apparent also that the disputes which have arisen are matters agreed to be referred under the arbitration clause mentioned above.

9. Two grounds have been urged in opposition to this application by Mr. Rudra. First, the most important dispute between the parties involved in the suit is as to whether the plaintiff was induced to agree to abandon its claims on account of Wages Escalator, Materials Escalator and Sales Tax in terms of the contract between the parties by fraud or undue influence and/or coercion perpetrated and/or exercised by the petitioner. The said issue as to fraud or undue influence and/or coercion should be decided by the Court and should not be allowed by the arbitrators to decide.

10. Secondly, Mr. Rudra contended that the suit No. 842 of 1969 and suit No. 3042 of 1969 of the Union of India on similar contracts are pending in this Court. The subject-matters of the said suits are similar and if the present suit be stayed, there will be a possibility of giving inconsistent decisions by two tribunals of competent jurisdiction, one this court and the other, the arbitrators on similar questions of fact and law. On that ground, also this suit should not be stayed.

11. Mr. Rudra referred to various decisions. I shall deal with the said decisions hereinafter.

12. The first decision mentioned by Mr. Rudra is Pramada Prasad Mukherjee v. Sagarmal Agarwalla, AIR 1952 Pat 352. In the said case it was observed that "when the suit is independent of the contract, the allegation of fraud in the plaint is enough to oust the jurisdiction of the arbitrators and stay should be refused. Even if the contract be admitted and the application arising on the breach of the contract be repudiated on the ground of fraud, stay should be refused if a prima facie case of fraud is made out". Similar was the view of Harries, C. J. in Narsingh Prasad Boobna v. Dhanraj Mills, ILR 21 Pat 544 at p. 569 = (AIR 1943 Pat 53).

13. In Abdul Kadir Shamsuddin Bubere v. Madhav Prabhakar Oak, AIR 1962 SC 406, the Supreme Court held that where serious allegations of fraud were made against a party and the party charged with fraud desired that the matter should be tried in open court, that would be a sufficient case for the Court not to order an arbitration agreement to be filed and not to make reference. But in the instant case the party charged with fraud is the petitioner. Therefore, this case does not help Mr. Rudra.

14. In Bengal Jute Mills Co. Ltd. v. Lalchand Dugar, AIR 1963 Cal 405 it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that whether a contract containing an arbitration clause or not was denied, the defendant in a suit based on such a contract alleged fraud, collusion and conspiracy on the part of the plaintiff, the suit should not be stayed. It was laid down that it was the right of the party charged with fraud or other serious misconduct to have his character vindicated in open court. Such was the decision also of the Supreme Court in Printers (Mysore) Pvt. Ltd. v. Pothan Joseph, AIR 1960 SC 1156 (See paragraph 8 of the said judgment).

15. In Basantlal Jagatramka v. Dominion of India, AIR 1952 Cal 340, relied on by Mr. Rudra it was decided that where the whole existence of the contract was challenged on the ground of fraud an arbitrator was not a suitable tribunal to decide such a question. Thus where such an allegation is made in a suit, such suit should not be stayed. That case, in my opinion decided that where the existence or validity of the main contract containing an arbitration agreement is challenged, the arbitrators have no jurisdiction to decide the said question. The said question must be decided by a Court and the suit wherein such an issue is involved should not be stayed. That case also does not in my view help Mr. Rudra.

16. The next case relied on by Mr. Rudra is the case of Eastern Steam Navigation Co. Ltd. v. Indian Coastal Navigation Co. Ltd., 46 Cal WN 933 = (AIR 1943 Cal 238). That case decided that if a charge of fraud of misconduct is made against any of the parties to a suit and the (sic) has to make such charge a fact in issue then if that party desires that such charge should be investigated not by a domestic tribunal like arbitrators, but by a court of law in public, the suit should not be stayed.

17. The last case relied on by Mr. Rudra is the case of Bilasrai and Co. v. Tolaram Nathmall, (1948) 52 Cal WN 858 lays down that where the contract is void, on the plea of fraud or misrepresentation the Court should not stay the suit as it ousted the jurisdiction of the arbitrators. That is not the case here. In the instant case the party charged with perpetration of fraud has applied for stay of the suit. It must be noted here that the fraud as pleaded in the plaint does not specify any person who perpetrated the fraud; Union of India, or for that matter, the Railway Board, is not a person in that sense.

18. In England now, under Section 24 (2) and (3) of the Arbitration Act, 1950, if a dispute involving a charge of fraud arises under an arbitration agreement the Court has the power to order that the agreement ceases to have effect and to refuse the stay of an action brought in breach of the agreement. In India that is not the position and we are governed by the position prevailing in England prior to the enactment of the said statutory provision. In the instant case the charge of fraud is levelled against the petitioner who however desires to have the disputes tried by the Arbitrators.

19. For the reasons stated above and on the basis of the aforesaid authorities I am unable to accept the contention of Mr. Rudra that the allegation of fraud as pleaded by the plaintiff is a sufficient cause why this suit should not be stayed. This contention of Mr. Rudra must, therefore, fail.

20. The second contention of Mr. Rudra in regard to the possibility of conflicting decisions must also fail. No particulars have been pleaded to show that the same issue of fact or law arises in different proceedings mentioned in paragraphs 37 and 54 of the said affidavit of Manish Chandra Roy. There is nothing to show that identical or even similar facts are involved in this suit being suit No. 842 of 1969 and the other suits viz. suit No. 1866 of 1969 and No. 3042 of 1969. Thus in my opinion the ratio decidendi in Taunton-Collins v. Cromie, (1964) 2 All ER 332 does not apply to the facts and circumstances of the instant case. Thus both the contentions of Mr. Rudra fail.

21. This application must succeed. There will be an order in terms of prayer (a) to the petition.

22. The costs of the application must abide by the result of the arbitration proceedings.

Application allowed.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 283 (V 59 C 50)
HAZRA, J.

Sisir Kumar Chandra and another, Petitioners v. Sm. Monorama Chandra and others, Respondents.

Suit No. 183 of 1971, D/ 7-1-1972.

(A) Succession Act (1925), S. 283 —
Probate proceedings — Probate Court cannot pass decree in terms of private agreement between parties.

BP/CP/B46/72/SNV

A Court of probate is a Court of conscience which is not to be influenced by private arrangements of the parties. Either it grants probate to a Will or it rejects such grant. For such a Court there is no middle path for a happy compromise. The rule of law is that there can be no probate by consent. Either it is a grant or refusal. The Court has to be satisfied in each case whether the Will proposed is truly the Will of a capable testator or not. It is not concerned with any other arrangement. There is no such thing as conditional probate or an amended probate. But nevertheless, the Court has formulated a practice, consistently followed, almost without exception, of making the terms of such agreement not a rule of the Court but a record on the file of the Court. That, however, does not mean that these terms become a part of the grant or refusal of the probate or executable as such. But it only means this that the records of the Court will show that the interested parties had arranged to dispose of the property according to such agreement when it reaches their hands, but then such agreement does not thereby become executable as a decree of Court but can only be enforced by independent proceeding or suit in the ordinary way as an agreement. AIR 1961 Cal 359 and (1943) 48 Cal WN 294, Followed; AIR 1940 Cal 236 and AIR 1944 Cal 385, Distinguished. (Paras 16, 21, 23)

(B) Specific Relief Act (1963), S. 34 — Relief of declaratory decree, when available.

A judgment, order, decree can be challenged as nullity by proving fraud or collusion on the part of adverse party. S. 34 is not exhaustive of the cases in which a declaratory decree may be made and the Court has power to grant such a decree independently of the requirement of the section. (Paras 26, 27, 28)

(C) Specific Relief Act (1963), S. 34 — Declaratory suit — Application for injunction — Maintainability.

Discretion to grant injunction is not affected by delay where the Court granting decree had no jurisdiction to pass decree. (Para 30)

ORDER:— Two brothers Sisir Kumar Chandra and Manick Lal Chandra have made this application for injunction restraining their step-mother Sm. Monorama Chandra from selling premises No. 21 Dr. Jagabandhu Lane Calcutta in execution of the decree dated September 7, 1946 passed by this court in Testamentary Suit No. 10 of 1946 (Shyamlal Malakar v. Sm. Monorama Chandra). The petitioners are praying that the order dated March 11, 1969 for sale of premises No. 21 Dr. Jagabandhu Lane, obtained by Sm. Monorama Chandra in execution of the decree dated September 7, 1946 be stayed pending the hearing of the suit.

2. The suit in which this interlocutory application has been made was filed by the petitioners on April 29, 1971 against Sm. Monorama Chandra and others, inter alia, for a declaration that the consent decree dated September 7, 1948 passed in Testamentary Suit No. 10 of 1946 by this Court is a nullity and not binding upon the petitioners and the same be set aside or cancelled, stay of execution of the decree, injunction receiver, costs such further or other reliefs.

3. In order to decide the question whether I shall in the exercise of my discretion grant temporary injunction, pending the hearing of this suit the circumstances under which this suit has been instituted and this application has been made have to be appreciated.

4. One Kristo Chandra, a Hindu governed by Dayabhaga School of Hindu Law died on May 1, 1946. Before his death he executed a Will on 2nd Baisakh 1863 B. S. corresponding to April 15, 1946. He married thrice. His first wife Matibala died long ago leaving a daughter Parul Bala who is married. He married second time Sm. Elokeshi Bala and had three sons by the second wife, viz. Raj Kumar, Sisir Kumar and Manick Lal. His second wife died. He married third time. His third wife is Sm. Monorama Chandra, the defendant No. 1 in this suit. He had a daughter Sm. Arati Bala by the third wife

Sm. Monorama Chandra. The relationship of the parties will appear from the geneological table set out hereunder:—

5. By and under his Will dated April 15, 1946 the testator Krishna Lal Chandra appointed his friend Shyamlal Malakar, as the executor and his third wife Sm. Monorama as the executrix.

6. I am quoting hereunder the relevant provisions of the Will:

"In all I have got five children. By my first wife there is Sm. Parul Bala Dassi who is married. By my second wife I have got three sons: 1st. Raj Kumar Chandra, 2nd Sisir Kumar Chandra, 3rd Manick Lal Chandra. After my death the aforesaid three sons of mine shall get an equal share, i.e., a third share each in all my movable and immovable properties with rights of transfer (like sale, gift etc.) and shall go on holding and enjoying the same down to their sons, sons' sons and heirs in succession and shall be competent to divide their respective shares amicably or with the help of proper court.

"By my third wife my daughter's name is Arati Bala Chandra. When she reaches the age of marriage my three sons shall contribute equally the amount of Rs. 200/- out of the income derived from my estate.

"My third wife Srimati Monorama Chandra shall get her maintenance and clothings if she lives in my house. On no account shall my sons be entitled to stop her maintenance and clothes. If however my wife has differences of opinion with my sons and if she wishes to live elsewhere, then she shall be entitled to an allowance of Rs. 20/- per month. If she lives with my family then my sons shall bear the expenses of maintaining and clothing her equally but if she takes to bad way then she will get nothing of my property. If my wife treads the path of immorality then she shall get nothing.

"I make my wife Sm. Monorama Chandra and Sri Shyamlal Malakar the guardian of my three sons and one daughter. One will not be entitled to act when the other dissents. As long as my son Mr. Raj Kumar Chandra remains a minor, I appoint these two persons the executrix and executor of all my movable and immovable properties till my son attains majority, but after my son becomes a major no one shall continue to be the executor."

7. The will also provided that no executor shall be competent to do anything with regard to these properties until his sons attain majority. On attaining majority his sons shall take possession of their shares. With the consensus of the three brothers they can do anything they like. The properties of the testator Krishna Lal Chandra consisted of his dwelling house at No. 21 Dr. Jagabandhu Lane, Calcutta and premises No. 27 Gopi Bose Lane and also several shares in Calcutta Tramways Company, which the testator valued at Rs. 30,000/-.

8. After the death of the testator Shyamlal Malakar, one of the executors of the Will applied in this Court for probate of the Will of Krishna Lal Chandra. The executrix, Sm. Monorama Chandra however, contested the application for probate on the ground, inter alia, that the testator lost the balance of his mind at the time of the making of the Will. The said application for probate was set down as a contentious cause and marked as Testamentary Suit No. 10 of 1946 with Shyamlal Malakar as the plaintiff and Sm. Monorama Chandra as the defendant.

9. The said Testamentary Suit was called on for hearing on July 28, 1948 before N. C. Chatterjee J. The suit was part-heard and during the pendency of the suit three sons of the testator, namely, plaintiffs and defendant No. 3 Raj Kumar were added as defendants presumably for the purpose of settling the suit. The sons of the testator were all minors. Mr. Dhananjay Roy a Solicitor of this Court was appointed Guardian-ad-litem of the three sons. Sm. Arati Bala the daughter of the defendant Sm. Monorama was also added as a party and Sm. Monorama was appointed as her guardian-ad-litem.

10. The suit was dismissed on August 6, 1948. On September 4, 1948 the suit was mentioned for fixing a date for the purpose of proving the Will and for putting the terms of settlement.

11. Thereafter on September 7, 1948, the learned counsel appearing for the executor informed the Court that the suit has been settled between the parties and the terms of settlement have been signed by the parties. Certain witnesses were called but there was no cross examination. Certain terms of settlement were filed in Court. Shyamal Malakar gave an undertaking to Court that he will administer the estate in accordance with the terms of settlement. Thereafter on September 7, 1948 the Court revoked the decree dated August 8, 1948 dismissing the suit and granted probate in terms of settlement put in. Leave was granted to the guardian-ad-litem to enter into compromise and it was certified for benefit of minors. Thus a consent decree was passed in the Testamentary suit. The minutes of the Court dated September 7, 1948 are relevant for the purpose of this application. I am setting out hereunder the minutes of the Court:

"Tuesday the 7th September 1948.

Before

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chatterjee (Court sits at 10.40 a.m.)

Mr. B. K. Ghose — appears for the executor.

Mr. S. K. Basu (with Mr. A. K. Bhat-tacharjee) — appears for the defendant.

Mr. B. N. Roy Choudhury — appears for the minors.

Mr. Ghose informs the Court that the suit has been settled between the parties and the T/S have been signed by the parties to propose to prove the will before the T/S are put in.

Calls Dunilal Dawn and examines him in chief.

Shown and tendered original Will annexed to the petition. (Ex. "A")

No cross-examination.

Calls Shamlal Malakar and examines him in chief to prove that he has signed the T/S

No cross-examination.

The Court — Shamlal Malakar gives an undertaking to the Court that he will administer the estate in accordance with the Terms of Settlement he has signed.

Mr. Basu calls Monorama Chunder and examines her in chief regarding her consent to the T/S.

No cross-examination.

The Court—The decree dated 8-8-48 dismissing this suit is revoked and set aside. Probate granted in terms of the Terms of Settlement put in. Leave granted to the G/A to enter into compromise. Certified to her for the benefit of the minors. Parties are directed to act in accordance with the terms of settlement put in."

The consent decree dated September 7, 1948 as drawn up is as follows:

"This cause coming on this day for final disposal before the Honourable Nirmal Chandra Chatterjee, one of the Judges of this Court in the presence of the advocates for the parties and upon hearing the evidence given in this suit on behalf of the parties and this court being of opinion that it would be for the benefit of the infant defendant that the following decree should be made and granting leave to the guardian-ad-litem of the infant defendant to compromise the suit upon the terms of settlement set forth in the schedule hereto annexed and marked "A". And the adult parties and the guardian-ad-litem of the infant defendant having agreed to the said terms of settlement, it is declared with the consent of the adult parties and of the guardian-ad-litem of the infant defendant by their respective advocates that the said terms ought to be carried out and the same are ordered and decreed accordingly. It is ordered that the caveat entered by the defendant in the goods of Kristo Lal Chunder in the pleadings in this suit mentioned (hereinafter referred to as the said testator) be and the same is hereby discharged. And it is further declared with the like consent that the said testator while living and of sound mind memory and understanding rightly and duly made as and for his last Will and Testament the writing in the Bengali Language and character and dated the second day of Baisakh 1353 Bengal Style corresponding to fifteenth day of April, 1946 exhibited and pleaded in this suit and did, will, give, bequeath, devise, dispose and do all things as therein contained. And it is further ordered and decreed with the like consent that the probate of the last Will and testament of the said testator with a copy thereof annexed be granted and issued to the plaintiff as the sole executor therein named limited to the province of West Bengal subject to and as modified by the said Terms of Settlement."

12. The relevant provisions of terms of Settlement which was filed in Court are as follows:

"1. Probate granted of the Will of Krishnalal Chunder. The estate will be administered as follows:

2. Mr. T. K. Ghosh is appointed valuer to value the premises No. (a) 21 Dr. Jagabandhu Lane (b) 20 Ordinary shares in Calcutta Tramways Co. Ltd., and (c) 5 Pref. shares in the said company (d) Gold Necklace Weighing 14½ tolas. He will be paid Rs. 300/- altogether. Sm. Monorama Chunder will be entitled to one fourth of the above properties on the basis of the valuation made by the Surveyor and of the balance sale proceeds of No. 27 Gopi Bose Lane (after meeting the expenses as hereinafter mentioned) in full payment of the right of maintenance and residence on herself and her daughter Arati. She will get the said one-fourth share absolutely.

3. Mr. P. Mullick, Solicitor for the plaintiff do sell the premises No. 27 Gopi Bose

Lane, Calcutta by public auction or private treaty at a price not below Rupees 21,000/- and out of the sale proceeds thereof pay:

(a) In the first instance the costs of sale and of Registration of this decree and costs of the parties of the suit including pending application, notwithstanding any order for costs already made. The costs of the defendant Sm. Monorama Chunder, and of the Guardian-ad-litem are assessed at Rs. 3,000/- and Rs. 250/- respectively and the assessed costs of Sm. Monorama Chunder to be paid to her attorney Mr. B. K. Mukherjee. Costs of Mr. P. Mallik be taxed as between attorney and client.

(b) Costs of redeeming the said necklace.

(c) One-fourth of the total value arrived at by the surveyor in respect of the items of the property mentioned in cls. (2a) (b), (c) and (d) and of the balance of the sale proceeds of No. 27, Gopi Bose Lane to Sm. Monorama Chunder. Sm. Monorama Chunder and Sm. Arati Debi do vacate the premises No. 21, Dr. Jagabandhu Lane upon such payment.

(d) The balance of the sale proceeds, if any, of No. 27, Gopi Bose Lane will belong to the three minors, Raj Kumar Chunder, Sisir Kumar Chunder and Manik Lal Chunder absolutely in terms of the Will.

(e) Premises No. 21, Doctor Jagabandhu Lane are charged with the payment of sum of Rs. 5000/- for the marriage expenses of Sm. Arati Debi daughter of the testator and of Sm. Monorama Chunder and also the deficit, if any, payable to Monorama Chunder in case the sale proceeds are insufficient to pay the amount payable to her under these terms. Three months before marriage of the said Sm. Arati the said sum will be paid by the Executor or the three minor sons of the testator to Sm. Arati herself. In default of such payments the official receiver who is hereby appointed receiver will take possession of the said premises and sell the same and out of the sale proceeds pay the costs of the sale and his commission, and pay the deficit, if any, payable to Sm. Monorama Chunder as hereinbefore stated and Rs. 5000/- to Sm. Monorama Chunder or in her absence the guardian of Sm. Arati. The said premises subject to the said charges as also the properties mentioned in 2 (b), (c) and (d) shall belong to the three sons of the testator, absolutely in terms of the Will.

4. The Official Receiver who was appointed Administrator-pendente lite under order dated November 21, 1946 is hereby discharged and he do deliver over possession of the properties to the executor. He do pass his accounts and do pay half the money in his hand to Mr. P. Mullick, Solicitor, and the balance half to Mr. B. K. Mukherjee towards part-payment of their costs as mentioned in clause 4 (a) aforesaid.

5. Liberty to apply."

13. On February 5, 1969 Arati was married to one Sri Anil Kumar Roy. The defendant No. 1 Sm. Monorama Chandra applied for execution of the said consent decree for realisation of Rupees 5000/- by sale of premises No. 21, Dr. Jagabandhu Lane, Calcutta. On March 11, 1969 Sm. Monorama Chandra obtained an order for sale of premises No. 21, Dr. Jagabandhu Lane, Calcutta from this Court. From the affidavit of Sm. Monorama affirmed on 14th July 1971, it appears that one Shri Bhupendra Kumar Dey, Supreme Court Advocate wrote a letter on February 17, 1969 that he had instructions to oppose the application on behalf of his clients Raj Kumar Chandra, Sisir Kumar Chandra and Manick Lal Chandra. Directions were given by this Court for filing of affidavit-in-opposition to the application for sale of premises No. 21, Dr. Jagabandhu Lane, Calcutta by Sm. Monorama Chandra but Sri Bhupendra Nath Dey did not appear or file any affidavit or oppose the application and the said order for sale was passed ex parte.

14. The case of the petitioners in this application, is that on August 12, 1969 the petitioners came to know the consent decree dated September 7, 1948 on searches made after Sm. Monorama threatened to sell premises No. 21, Dr. Jagabandhu Lane. The petitioners stated that they were minors at the time when the consent decree was passed. The petitioner Sisir Kumar attained majority on or about November 28, 1956 and the petitioner Manicklal attained majority on or about August 16, 1959. They say that premises No. 21 Dr. Jagabandhu Lane is their residential house and if the said premises is sold in execution of the said consent decree which is impugned in this suit the petitioners would be dispossessed from their family dwelling house and the purpose for which the present suit has been instituted will be defeated. According to the petitioner unless an order for injunction restraining Sm. Monorama Chandra from selling the premises No. 21 Dr. Jagabandhu Lane is passed, the petitioners will suffer irreparable loss and injury and the suit would become infructuous.

15. Mr. M. B. Sarkar, the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioners relied on the judgment of the Court of appeal presided over by P. B. Mukharji, J. (as he then was) and H. K. Bose J. reported in AIR 1961 Cal 359 (363) (A. E. G. Carapiet v. A. Y. Derderian) and submitted that the consent decree as passed on September 7, 1948 is a nullity because a Court of Probate being a Court of conscience cannot grant probate by consent. He states that the terms of settlement may be annexed to the records of the probate proceedings but no decree could be passed on the terms of settlement. To enforce the agreement or the right, if any, under the agreement other independent proceedings are necessary. The testamentary suit cannot be decreed in terms of settlement filed in Court nor such a decree could be executed.

16. He placed before me the following portions of the said judgment which is set out hereunder:

"A point of probate practice of great importance, however, remains to be disposed of. The learned counsel for the parties appear to have agreed to certain arrangements for disposal of the estate of the testator. These terms, which are described as terms of settlement, are supposed to be signed by all the interested persons. We are asked to keep these terms on the records of this Court. A Court of probate is said to be a Court of conscience which is not to be influenced by private arrangements of the parties. Either it grants probate to a Will or it rejects such grant. For such a Court, it is said, there is no middle path for a happy compromise. The rule of law is stated to be that there can be no probate by consent. Either it is a grant or refusal. The Court has to be satisfied in each case whether the Will proposed is truly the Will of a capable testator or not. It is not concerned with any other arrangement. It has been said over and over again that there is no such thing as conditional probate or an amended probate. It is either all or nothing. That seems to be sensible enough law.

"The Court, however, has a way of softening the austerity and rigour of this procedure. The practice of the Court has discovered on such way in this regard. In England, such terms of settlement are allowed to be filed and are made what is said to be a "rule of the Court". See In the Estate of Cook (1960) 1 All ER 689 where the Court pronounced for the Will in solemn form and the terms of compromise were made a Rule of Court. The testamentary rules and probate practice in this Court do not seem to indicate that there is such a procedure available here for making such terms of settlement a rule of the Court. But nevertheless, it has formulated a practice, consistently followed, almost without exception, of making the terms of it, not a rule of the Court but a record on the file of the Court. That does not mean that these terms become a part of the grant or refusal of the probate or executable as such. But it only means this that the records of the Court will show that the interested parties had arranged to dispose of the property according to such agreement when it reaches their hands, but then such agreement does not thereby become executable as a decree of Court but can only be enforced by independent proceeding or suit in the ordinary way as an agreement. The procedure as adopted may be justified rationally by suggesting that this gives a certain amount of authenticity and solemnity to the agreement. In practical effect, the procedure helps nobody because the filing of the agreement does not help in the execution nor does it conclude any possible question on the validity or enforceability of such agreement. The Court only allows to be filed with its records a written declaration by the parties themselves that the parties have between themselves come to a certain arrangement and nothing more. But this does not mean that the Court makes a declaratory decree in terms of the agreement filed. It does nothing of the kind. The Court expresses no opinion whatever on such agreement. The Court's task is over by its judgment in refusing or as in the case by granting the probate independently of whatever agreement the parties may have arrived at."

17. Relying on this decision Mr. Sarkar submitted that the consent decree dated September 7, 1948 granting probate was without jurisdiction and a nullity. According to him his clients who were minors did not and/or could not make such an agreement. He quoted the affidavit of Shri Dhananjay Roy affirmed on July 12, 1971, where it was stated that Dhananjay Roy did not take part in the settlement. He submitted that his clients are challenging the consent decree as nullity. His clients are also challenging the consent decree on the ground of fraud. He further submitted that his clients are very much affected by the decree and the order for sale. They were minors. They are illiterate fishermen. Their father bequeathed the residential house to them by a Will. But their step mother is now seeking to sell the property for payment of Rs. 5,000/- for her daughter's marriage under the terms of the said consent decree. His case further is that the petitioners never gave any instructions to the Supreme Court Advocate and in any event the said Bhupendra Kumar Dey did not appear on behalf of his clients or point out before the executing Court that the decree was a nullity and not executable.

18. Mr. P. K. Mullick, the learned Counsel appearing for Sm. Monorama Chandra strenuously contested this application. The first point taken by Mr. Mullick is that this suit is not maintainable and does not lie. In any event, he submitted that the suit is barred by limitation.

19. In this connection Mr. Mullick relied on two cases, namely, reported in AIR 1940 Cal 236 (Rai Bahadur Pannalal v. Lala Hansraj Gupta) and AIR 1944 Cal 385 (Kailash Chandra v. Nanda Kumar), and submitted that a suit for revocation of a grant of probate does not lie and the proper remedy would be to file an application under Section 263 of the Indian Succession Act. Mr. Mullick invited my attention to Section 263 of the Indian Succession Act and illustration (1) of Sec. 263 and submitted that the grant of probate may be revoked or annulled if the Court by which the grant was made had no jurisdiction. Mr. Mullick further submitted that Manick Lal attained majority in 1959 but this suit had been filed on April 30, 1971 and therefore this suit is barred by the law of limitation. Mr. Mullick further submitted that even if the suit lies there is no cause of action in the instant suit. Further there was great delay in making this application. As such no order should be passed on this application.

20. In my view the two cases relied on by Mr. P. K. Mullick which are in AIR 1940 Cal 236 and in AIR 1944 Cal 385, do not apply under the facts and circumstances of the instant case. The ratio decidendi of the aforesaid two cases are that the judgment of a Court of probate is a judgment in rem and binds all the world. A judgment in a Civil suit is a judgment in personam and is operative only between the parties to the suit. A judgment in rem cannot be revoked or set aside by a judgment which is only conclusive between the parties. Therefore the proper remedy of the party who wants revocation of a grant of probate is to apply to the probate court under Section 263 of the Indian Succession Act, and not to file a Civil Suit. To revoke the grant of probate the exclusive remedy should be an application under Section 263 of the Indian Succession Act.

21. But what do I find in the instant case? I find that though some evidence was given but probate was granted by consent of the parties. It appears from the decree that the testamentary capacity of the testator was also decided by consent. Certain terms of settlement were filed in Court and a decree was passed in terms of settlement. It was not simply a decree granting a probate but a composite decree by which probate had been granted by consent and also a decree by consent on the terms of settlement filed in the Probate Court. It is well established that probate decides merely on the factum of the Will. The agreement arrived at between the parties is a different matter altogether. This agreement can be kept in the records of Court and the parties can take such steps as they think best by independent proceedings on the agreement. But in the instant case there was a decree in terms of the settlement filed in Court and grant of probate by consent.

22. The whole question is whether this can be done? It seems to me that the attention of the Court was not drawn to the case reported in (1943) 48 Cal WN 294 (Jagadish Chakravarty v. Upendra Chandra Chakravarty) when the consent decree dated September 7, 1948 was passed. It was held by this Court in (1943) 48 Cal WN 294 at p 299 as follows:

"That a Court exercising probate jurisdiction cannot grant or refuse probate of a Will by consent and without taking evidence is settled law. When a Will is actually put before such a Court, the parties to the proceedings cannot say to the Court, that the probate be granted without proof of the due execution of the Will or probate refused without any evidence being led. This principle is well established and has for its basis the fact that a probate or an order refusing probate operates as a judgment in rem. Monmohini Guha v. Banga Chandra Das, (1904) ILR 31 Cal 357 and Sarada Kanta Das v. Gobinda Mohan Das, (1910) 12 Cal LJ 91. When a Will is put before the probate Court for proof, the parties before the Court can, however, enter into an agreement which changes the terms of the Will and say that probate be granted. The effect of such an agreement will be the withdrawal of the objections to the proof of the Will in consideration of the division of the estate in the manner agreed upon. In such a case the probate Court will have to take evidence about the Will and if it comes to the conclusion that the Will is valid must grant probate of the Will, as it stands and unmodified by the terms of the agreement but should make the agreement arrived at between the parties an annexure to the decree. The parties agreeing would be bound to regulate their rights inter se according to that agreement, and if any of them refuse, the others will be entitled to bring a suit against the party in breach, Kamal Kumari Devi v. Narendra Nath Mukherjee, (1907) 9 Cal LJ 19 or may compel the executor to distribute the estate in accordance with that agreement by filing an application in the probate Court under Section 302 of the Indian Succession Act, in cases in which that section applies. Secy. of State for India in Council v. Smt. Parijat Debi, (1935) 63 Ind App 61 = 40 Cal WN 185 = (AIR 1935 PC 203) The principle of law laid down in (1943) 48 Cal WN 294 (299) was accepted as correct by the more recent division Bench judgment of this Court in AIR 1961 Cal 359 (Carapiet's case).

23. In view of the above principles of law and procedure as to probate practice, it seems to me, that by passing the consent decree dated September 7, 1948, the Court of probate has exercised a jurisdiction which it could not do.

24. In course of the argument I drew the attention of the learned Advocates appearing for the parties to a recent case of the Supreme Court reported in AIR 1969 SC 823 (Official Trustee, West Bengal v. Sachindra Nath Chatterjee). In the Supreme Court case, it was held by their Lordships that "before a Court can be held to have jurisdiction to decide a particular matter it must not only have jurisdiction to try the suit brought but must also have the authority to pass the orders sought for. It is not sufficient that it has some jurisdiction in relation to the subject-matter of the suit. Its jurisdiction must include the power to hear and decide the question at issue, the authority to hear and decide the particular controversy that has arisen between the parties. The Supreme Court in this case accepted the principle that in order that jurisdiction may be exercised, there must be a case legally before the Court and a hearing as well as a determination.

25. Thus one must be careful to distinguish between exercise of jurisdiction from existence of jurisdiction. Even if there is existence of jurisdiction the question may still arise whether the Court has exercised the jurisdiction in an illegal or irregular manner. Questions may arise wherefrom the Court got the power or authority to pass the decree or order. Certain non-compliance of the law and/or procedure may not be mere irregularity but may amount to illegality and thus destroy the effect or validity of the proceedings or the decree or order passed by it.

26. In my view these matters would arise for consideration in the instant suit filed by the petitioners. This suit filed by the petitioners is not a suit for declaration that the grant of probate be revoked but a suit for declaration that the consent decree dated September 7, 1948 passed in Testamentary Suit No. 10 of 1948 by this Hon'ble Court is a nullity and not binding upon plaintiffs. In the suit the petitioner also prayed for a declaration that the consent decree be set aside and cancelled on the ground of fraud. The suit has been filed under Section 34 of the Specific Relief Act 1963. In any event Section 34 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963 is not exhaustive of the cases in which a declaratory decree may be made and the Court has power to grant such a decree independently of the requirement of the section.

27. Any party to a suit or other proceedings may show that any judgment, order or decree which was proved by the adverse party was delivered by a Court not competent to deliver it. Any party to a judgment or decree may avoid a judgment or decree by proving fraud or collusion by the adverse party. In other words, a decree can be challenged as nullity on the above grounds. This can be done by a separate suit.

28. Therefore I think this suit is, prima facie, maintainable.

29. With regard to the point of limitation raised by Mr. Mullick in my view there is no question of limitation because in this suit the consent decree has been challenged as nullity and void. There is also the question of fraud. In the plaint it has been pleaded that the petitioners came to know the consent decree on August 12, 1969. This is a question of fact to be tried in the suit.

30. The other point raised by Mr. Mullick as to delay in making this application will not affect the exercise of my discretion to grant an injunction in the instant case because from the facts placed before me, it appears that the probate Court was not competent to pass the consent decree. If all these points which are now raised before me were placed before the executing Court, there may not have been any order for sale at all. It has been held by the Supreme Court that even at the execution stage or at any stage the Court can take into consideration the point that the Court which passed the decree which is sought to be executed was not competent to pass it. (See AIR 1954 SC 340 at p 342, Kiron Singh v. Chaman Paswan). Therefore the question of delay in this case is not of much importance.

31. In the premises, I think that there is sufficient prima facie case to go to trial and all the matters raised by the petitioners would be finally decided in the suit.

32. During the pendency of the suit I cannot allow the residential house of the petitioners to be sold in execution of the consent decree passed by the probate Court. The daughter of Sm. Monorama Chandra has already been married. The property if sold would cause irreparable loss and injury to the petitioners because it is their residential house and if it is sold they would be turned out from their residential house.

33. In view of the above matter there should be an order for injunction restraining the respondent Sm. Monorama Chandra from selling the said premises No. 21, Dr. Jagabandhu Lane, Calcutta in execution of the decree dated September 7, 1948 pending the disposal of the suit.

34. Accordingly there will be an order in terms of prayers (a) (c) and (d) of the petition.

Sm. Monorama Chandra shall pay the costs of this application to the petitioners. The other parties except respondent No. 2D. Roy Solicitor shall pay and bear their own costs. The cost of respondent No. 2D. Roy will abide by the result of the suit.

Order accordingly.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 291 (V 59 C 51)

S. C. GHOSE, J.

Benarasi Prosad Sharma and others, Petitioner v. Bhagwan Choudhury and others, Respondents.

Matter No. 400 of 1971, D/- 7-1-1972.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 24 — Transfer of suit — Grounds. (Para 11)

Where a party to a suit participated for quite a period in the proceeding and obtained benefit of orders of adjournment, condonation of delay in filing written statement as well as setting aside ex parte decree, the Court refused to transfer the suit to another court on ground that identical questions are involved in two suits before different courts. (Para 11)

ORDER:— On or about December 19, 1968, a suit was filed in this Court by the respondent, Bhagwan Choudhury, against the petitioner, Smt. Fulla Devi Sharma and Basdeo Prosad Sharma, as partners of a firm Shree Ganesh Electric Works as well as the said Shree Ganesh Electric Works inter alia for the specific performance for an alleged agreement entered into by the defendants partners of the said firm, to sell the said firm to the respondent at and for the sum of Rs. 40,000/-. In the alternative the respondent claimed in the same suit refund of the sum of Rs. 10,000/- being earnest and/or consideration paid under the said contract for sale of the said firm together with interest at 12% per annum and damages and other reliefs. The said suit has been numbered as suit No. 3243 of 1968 (Bhagwan Choudhury v. Shree Ganesh Electric Works & Ors.). The petitioner duly filed his written statement denying the contract for sale of the said business but admitting the receipt of the sum of Rs. 10,000/- as and by way of temporary accommodation.

2. The respondent in March, 1969, filed a Money Suit being Money Suit No. 123 of 1969 in the City Civil Court for the recovery of Rs. 5,200/- alleged to have been advanced to the petitioner by the respondent. According to the petitioner, the said sum of Rs. 5,200/- was a part of the aforesaid sum of Rs. 10,000/- paid as and by way of temporary accommodation. The petitioner duly filed his written statement in the said Money Suit No. 123 of 1969 in the City Civil Court on or about 18th July, 1969, after the time to file written statement had expired and after obtaining an order from the City Civil Court condoning the delay in filing written statement. In the written statement the petitioner alleged that the said sum of Rs. 5,200/- formed part of the aforesaid sum of Rs. 10,000/-.

3. On or about 18th September, 1969, the petitioner's application for stay of the said Money Suit No. 123 of 1969 under Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the City Civil Court was dismissed.

4. On the 11th September, 1970, hearing of the suit was adjourned by the City Civil Court at the instance of the petitioner until 12th November, 1970, and then again at the instance of the petitioner until 16th December, 1970. On 16th December, 1970, the hearing was adjourned until 29th January, 1971. On 29th January, 1971, the petitioner again applied for adjournment of the suit. The said application was dismissed and the suit was heard ex parte and decreed on 30th January, 1971.

5. On 1st March, 1971, the petitioner applied for setting aside of the ex parte decree under Order 9, Rule 13 of the Code of Civil Procedure. On the 5th June, 1971, the ex parte decree dated 30th January, 1971, was set aside and the suit was directed to be heard on 18th of June, 1971 when it was adjourned as the Learned Judge was presiding over a Sessions trial. The suit again appeared for hearing on the peremptory list on 21st July, 1971 when it was adjourned to 17th August, 1971 at the petitioner's instance. On the 17th August, 1971, it was again adjourned until 10th September, 1971, at the instance of the petitioner.

6. On the 9th September, 1971, this application was filed by the petitioner for transfer of the said Money Suit No. 123 of 1969 (Bhagwan Chowdhury v. Benarasi Prosad Sharma) pending in the City Civil Court, Calcutta to this Court for disposal thereof.

7. It is apparent from the records that the main issue involved in the said suit in the City Civil Court i. e. as to whether the payment of the said two several sums of Rs. 1000/- and Rs. 4,200/- aggregating Rs. 5,200/- formed part of the aforesaid total sum of Rs. 10,000/- being the subject-matter of the High Court Suit No. 3243 of 1968.

8. The ground for transfer of the said suit, besides the aforesaid, is stated to be the fact that the Trial Judge of the City Civil Court has dealt harshly and without discretion and that the petitioner would not get a fair trial in the City Civil Court. Except the bald allegation no particular has been furnished to corroborate or prove the aforesaid allegation that the petitioner will not get a fair trial in the City Civil Court. I am also unable to hold that a prima facie case has been made by the petitioner that the respondent instituted the said Money Suit No. 123 of 1969 in the City Civil Court mala fide or that the said suit is an abuse of the process of the Court.

9. It is true that if identical facts or issues are involved in two separate suits pending in two different tribunals of competent jurisdiction, one of them may be stayed or removed from one tribunal to the other wherein the other suit is pending in order to prevent possibility of conflicting decision on identical facts or issues by two different tribunals of competent jurisdiction. In the instant case in my opinion the Money Suit No. 123 of 1969 pending in the City Civil Court should not be transferred to this Court on the aforesaid ground of possibility of conflicting decisions by the two Courts for the reasons stated hereinafter. The said ground has not been pleaded even specifically in the instant petition.

10. From the facts stated hereinabove it is clear that the petitioner participated in the said suit, filed an application under Section 10 of the Code of Civil Procedure in the said suit for stay of the said suit and took the chance of having the said suit stayed by taking proceedings in the said suit itself. Moreover, the petitioner applied for condonation of delay in filing his written statement and obtained an order from the said Court condoning such delay and filed his written statement in the said suit. Between 11th September, 1970, and 29th January, 1971, the petitioner from time to time obtained adjournment of the hearing of the said suit in the City Civil Court. Then again, when the said suit was heard and decreed ex parte on 30th of January, 1971, as stated earlier, the petitioner applied to have the said decree set aside in the said suit itself. The petitioner obtained the order in the said suit setting aside the said ex parte decree and then got the said suit adjourned from time to time from the beginning of June, 1971 until 10th September, 1971.

11. For the aforesaid reasons and specially in view of the fact that the petitioner for more than one and half years took part in different proceedings in the said suit in the City Civil Court and obtained benefit of orders of adjournment, condonation of delay in filing written statement as well as setting aside of the said ex parte decree made in the said suit by the said court, no relief should be granted to the petitioner as asked for.

12. For the reasons aforesaid in my opinion it would not be in the interest of justice to have the said suit removed now from the City Civil Court to this Court.

13. In the premises this application must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed.

AMIYA KUMAR MOOKERJI, J. —

This appeal is by the referring claimant and it arises out of a reference under Section 8 of the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952 (hereinafter referred to as the Act).

2. On May 13, 1944, C. S. Plot Nos. 801, 805, 994, 998 (p), 1025, 1026, 1029, 1030, 1033, 1148 and 1149 of mouja Digla in the district of 24 Parganas, were requisitioned under Rule 75A (1) of the Defence of India Rules. Thereafter on November 4, 1959, these plots measuring about 3.69 acres were acquired under Section 7 of the Act. On November 9, 1959, the Land Acquisition Collector awarded compensation at the rate of Rs. 1,000/- per bigha with respect to lands in the above C. S. Plot except plot No. 1149 which is a doba and the same was assessed at Rs. 500/- per bigha. As no agreement was reached between the parties with regard to the assessment made by the Land Acquisition Collector, an Arbitrator was appointed by a notification dated 17th of May, 1960, and a reference was made to him on 29-6-60. The claimant claimed Rs. 4,000/- per bigha as fair compensation for the lands and Rupees 2,000/- per bigha for the doba. The claimant contended before the Arbitrator that clause (b) of Section 8 (3) of the Act was ultra vires and the Arbitrator should award compensation under clause (a) of Section 8 (3) of the Act. The learned Arbitrator rejected the claimant's contention and awarded compensation of the lands at Rs. 1400/- per bigha and the doba at Rs. 700/- per bigha, being double the rate that was prevalent at the time of requisition. The claimant, being aggrieved against the said award of the learned Arbitrator, preferred this appeal in this Court.

2A. Mr. Gupta, the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the claimant, contended that as clause (b) of Section 8 (3) of the Act had been declared ultra vires by the Supreme Court in Union of India v. Kamalabai Harjivandas Parekh, AIR 1968 SC 377, the value of the land should be assessed as on the date of acquisition.

3. Mr. Sen, the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the State, contended that after the Constitution (4th Amendment) Act, 1955, under Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution inadequacy of compensation is not justiciable and when Parliament has expressly enacted that no law shall be called in question in any court on the ground that the compensation provided is not adequate, it was intended clearly to exclude from the jurisdiction of the court an enquiry as to whether the amount fixed or determined by the application of the principles stated in the statute is 'a just equivalent' of what the owner of the land is deprived of. In other words, the argument is, that neither the principles prescribing the 'just equivalent' nor the amount awarded as 'just equivalent' can be questioned by the Courts on the ground of inadequacy of compensation.

4. Union of India v. Kamalabai, AIR 1968 SC 377 was decided by the Supreme Court following the principle stated in Mrs. Bela Banerjee's case, AIR 1954 SC 170 in respect of the Acts enacted before the Constitution (4th Amendment) Act, 1955. The Amendments made in Article 31 of the Constitution are not given retrospective operation. The result is, that in a case where acquisition was made pursuant to a statute enacted before April 27, 1955, the law declared in Bela Banerjee's case and followed by Kamalabai's case would continue to apply (Vide, State of Gujarat v. Shantilal Mangaldas, AIR 1969 SC 634 at p. 649). The Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immovable Property Act, 1952 (Central Act XXX of 1952) was enacted on March 14, 1952. The Supreme Court in Kamalabai's case decided the vires of the said Act on the anvil of the Constitution as it stood before the fourth amendment.

Therefore, the amended provisions of Article 31 (2) of the Constitution are not attracted to the present case, in view of the fact, that the Central Act, XXX of 1952, was enacted prior to the date when the Constitution (4th Amendment) Act, 1955, came into force.

5. The learned Arbitrator passed the award in the instant case on the basis of clause (b) of Section 8 (3) of the Act and so he did not come to any finding as to what was the value of the land on the date of the acquisition. Mr. Sen submitted that we should remit the case to the learned Arbitrator for determining the valuation on fresh evidence. We find there is sufficient material on record which makes it possible for us to come to a reasonable assessment of the value of the lands of the land on the date of the acquisition.

6. Ext. I (c) is a kobala executed on the 12th February, 1959, which would be relevant for ascertaining the rate of the market value near about the date of the acquisition. In that kobala lands were sold at the rate of Rs. 10,950/- per bigha. The acquired lands are situated within the Dum Dum Municipality. It is only five miles from Calcutta. Many industries, — big and small have grown up in and around the locality. The claimant however has claimed only Rs. 2,800/- per bigha. Considering the nature of the land and the evidence on record, we are of opinion that the valuation of the land cannot be less than Rs. 2800/- per bigha as claimed and on that basis the value of the doba (C. S. Plot No. 1149) also cannot be less than Rs. 1400/- per bigha.

6A. In the result, this appeal is allowed. We order that a sum of Rs 15,542.19 calculated on the basis of Rupees 2800/- per bigha of the lands including the 'doba' be paid to the claimant-appellant in addition to the sum which had already been paid to him. The claimant is also entitled to interest at the rate of 6% (six per cent) per annum on the compensation money till the date of payment.

There will be no order as to costs.

GUPTA, J.:— 7. I agree.

Appeal allowed.

Kutubuddin Ahammed and others, Petitioners v. Kashim Ali and another, Opposite parties.

Civil Revn. No. 902 of 1969, D/- 10-8-1971.

(A) West Bengal Land Reforms Act (10 of 1956), S. 8 (2) (a) — Heba-bil-ewaz — Consideration not money but some other commodity — Transaction is an exchange which is excepted under S. 8 (2)

CP/CP/B306/72/MVJ

(a) — Application for pre-emption not maintainable.

A Heba-bil-ewaz is a sale when the consideration is only money. If the consideration is not money but some other valuable consideration it may be an exchange or a Barter but not a sale. AIR 1968 SC 200, Followed. (Para 8)

Thus an application for pre-emption is not maintainable under S. 8 (1) where a transfer is by an exchange or barter under Heba-bil-ewaz as it is within the exception provided for in S. 8 (2) (a) of the Act.

(Para 8)

(B) West Bengal Land Reforms Act (10 of 1956), S. 8 (2) (b) — Heba-bil-ewaz — Whether a gift. (X-Ref:— T. P. Act (1882), S. 122).

A gift is a transfer without consideration. Therefore a Heba-bil-ewaz is not a gift and does not come within the exception under S. 8 (2) (b) of the Act. (Para 7)

B. C. Roy and Mrs. Diptikana Bose, for Petitioners; Sudhanshu Bhushan Sen,
Miss Archana Roy and Nemai Chandra
Kumar, for Opposite Parties Nos. 1 and 3.

ORDER:— This Rule was obtained by the petitioners against an appellate order of the learned Munsif, rejecting the petitioners' application for pre-emption under Section 8 (1) of the West Bengal Land Reforms Act, 1955.

2. One Hazi Fakiruddin, since deceased, the father of the petitioners Nos. 1-7 and husband of petitioner No. 8, was a co-sharer tenant with respect to the land in khaitan No. 235 in mouja Chandpur in the district of Malda. The opposite party No. 4, another co-sharer, on 5th of April, 1965, transferred. 22 $\frac{3}{4}$ th acre of land out of the lands in the aforesaid khaitan to opposite party nos. 1-3, who are neither co-sharers nor riyats possessing adjoining land of the said khaitan, for a consideration of a copy of Holi koran, under a deed described as "Heba-bil-ewaz". For the purpose of registration the said deed was valued at Rs. 1,000/-. The said Hazi Fakiruddin, thereafter, made an application on 11th of June, 1965, to the Revenue Officer praying pre-emption under Section 8 (1) of the West Bengal Land Reforms Act (hereinafter referred to as "the Act"), with respect to the above transferred land and deposited Rs. 1,000/- together with 10% interest. On 2nd of September, 1967, the Revenue Officer dismissed the said application upon the view that Heba-bil-ewaz is a gift for consideration, it may be a sale in reality but it is a gift in form. The pre-emptee took an appeal against the said order of the Revenue Officer. During the pendency of the said appeal, the said Hazi Fakiruddin died and the petitioners were substituted in place and stead of the deceased pre-emptee. The learned Munsif by his order dated 30th November, 1968, dismissed the petitioners' appeal holding that the transaction was a gift and as such, it was exempted from pre-emption under sub-section (2) (b) of Section 8 of the Act. The petitioners, being aggrieved, against the said order of the learned Munsif, moved this Court on an application under Art. 227 of the Constitution and obtained the present Rule.

3. Mr. Roy, the learned Advocate, appearing in support of the Rule, contended that the learned Munsif and the Revenue Officer were in error in holding that Heba-bil-ewaz was a gift, pure and simple; and, therefore, the transfer under such a deed, was exempted from pre-emption under the exception in sub-section (2) (b) of Section 8 of the Act. Mr. Roy submitted that Heba-bil-ewaz as understood in India, is nothing more than a sale as has been held by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as well as many of the decisions of this Court. In support of his contentions Mr. Roy referred to a number of decisions.

4. It is submitted that a Heba-bil-ewaz, as distinguished from a Heba or a simple gift, is a gift for consideration. It is in reality a sale, and has all the incidents of a contract of sale. As a sale, it also gives rise to the right of pre-emption (Vide, Satyendra Nath Roy Choudhury v. Fulsom Bibi, 36 Cal WN 486 = (AIR 1932 Cal 625)). Where the property covered under a Heba-bil-ewaz is immovable and is of the value of Rs. 100/- and upward, it must be affected by a registered instrument as required under Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act which relates to sales. (Vide, Abbasali v. Karim Bash, (1909) 13 Cal WN 160). The true characteristic of Heba-bil-ewaz has been explained in Saraffuddin Mohd. v. Mohiuddin Mohd., ILR 54 Cal 754 (757) = (AIR 1927 Cal 808). It is observed at p. 766, that the transaction falsely termed in India as Heba-bil-ewaz is not governed by the Mohammadan Law of Heba, but is amenable to the General Law in India relating to the contracts and the Transfer of Property. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in Ranee Khujooroonissa v. Mst. Roushen Jehan, (1876) 3 Ind App 291 (PC) observed at p. 308, that a consideration for Heba-bil-ewaz may be perfectly valid which is wholly inadequate in amount when compared with the thing given. Some of the cases have gone so far as to say that even a gift of a ring may be a sufficient consideration. In Jerafat Mondal v. Kamrezvan Bibi, ILR (1955) 1 Cal 144, it is held that a Heba-bil-ewaz should be regarded as a sale, whatever might be the value given in exchange of the property transferred. Koran Sarif, a string of bed or a carpet is a good consideration for a Heba-bil-ewaz. Accordingly, Mr. Roy submitted that a copy of Holi Koran in the instant case, is a good consideration for a Heba-bil-ewaz, it should be regarded as a sale and not a gift within the exception under sub-section (2) (b) of Section 8 of the Act. Therefore, the Tribunals below illegally exercised its jurisdiction in rejecting the petitioners' application for pre-emption.

5. Mr. Sen, the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the opposite party, contended that a copy of Koran or a carpet might be a valid consideration for a Heba-bil-ewaz but unless the consideration was in the term of money, there could not be a sale, and when there was no sale, provisions of Section 8 (1) of the Act are not attracted. In this connection Mr. Sen referred to a decision of the Supreme Court, Commr. of Income-tax, Andhra Pradesh v. Motors and General Stores (P.) Ltd., AIR 1968 SC 200, wherein the Supreme Court has laid down the essential elements in a transaction of sale. Mr. Sen further contended that Heba-bil-ewaz is a gift for a consideration. So it is a kind of gift. The exception provided in Section 8 (2) is for a gift without any qualification or restriction. The expression "any pecuniary consideration" occurring in sub-section (e) of Section 26F (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act includes and Connotes all consideration either in the shape of cash money or other materials having a pecuniary value but such expression is absent in Section 8 (1) of the Act. The said section provides that on deposit of consideration money, an application for pre-emption can be made. So the word "transfer" occurred in Section 8 (1) of the Act must be a transfer for consideration of money and not a transfer for any other consideration.

6. In AIR 1968 SC 200, the Supreme Court held that the presence of money consideration is an essential element in a transaction of sale. If the consideration is not money but some other valuable consideration it may be an exchange or a Barter but not a sale.

7. The chief characteristic of a gift is, that it is a transfer without consideration. Gift is defined in Section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act, as "the transfer of certain existing movable or immovable property made voluntarily and without consideration". So, Heba-bil-ewaz is not a gift and therefore, in my opinion, it does not come within the exception under sub-section (2) (b) of Section 8 of the Act.

8. The next point that remains for determination is, whether Heba-bil-ewaz is a sale. It is well settled that Heba-bil-ewaz is a sale when the consideration is money. In ILR 54 Cal 754 (757) = (AIR 1927 Cal 808) there was a deed by Mohammadan lady purporting to transfer certain property in consideration of donee's paying her a fixed annual sum of maintenance. It was held that the transaction was one of a sale and not a "Heba" in any form. In another case referred to by Mr. Roy, 36 Cal WN 486 = (AIR 1932 Cal 625), Heba-bil-ewaz was executed in consideration of donee's executing in favour of the donor another deed by which the donee agreed to pay Rs. 5/- per month for donor's maintenance, the transaction was held to be a sale so as to attract the provisions of S. 26F of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The cases of pre-emption under Section 26F of the Bengal Tenancy Act, may be distinguished from Section 8 of the Act, because "any pecuniary consideration" occurring in that section might include consideration in kind. But in the instant case, considering the nature of the transaction, it cannot be said that the said transaction was a sale because admittedly there was no consideration of money. In view of the above decision of the Supreme Court, the transaction is either an exchange or a Barter. A transfer by exchange is exempted under sub-section (2) (a) of Section 8 of the Act. A Barter is also to give in exchange for some other commodities, it is another name of an exchange. Therefore, I hold that the petitioners' application for pre-emption is not maintainable under Section 8 (1) of the Act as the transfer in the instant case is by an exchange under a Heba-bil-ewaz and it is within the exception provided for, in sub-section (2) (a) of Section 8 of the Act.

9. In the result, this Rule is discharged.

10. There will be no order as to costs.

Petition dismissed.

Where a building contractor sought to claim damages from its employer on the basis of delay for non-supply of steel and cement and that claim directly flew from the contract for breach thereof, the employer having himself directed the contractor to make reference to arbitrator under the arbitration clause could not later on challenge the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to decide this claim. The arbitrator did not act in excess of his jurisdiction by entertaining such a claim. 1942 AC 356 and AIR 1952 SC 119 and AIR 1969 SC 488, Followed. (Paras 22, 25)

(B) Arbitration Act (1940), S. 30 — Misconduct of arbitrator — Determination — Appreciation of evidence by arbitrator if relevant consideration.

The weight or the appreciation of the evidence by the arbitrator should not be considered by the Court in coming to the finding as to whether there was legal misconduct or not. The arbitrator is the only judge of the quality or the quantity of evidence and it will not be for Court to take upon itself the task of being a judge of the evidence before the arbitrator. It may be possible that on the same evidence that Court might have arrived at a different conclusion than the arbitrator but that by itself is no ground of setting aside an award of an Arbitrator. 1971 be declared null and void and/or be set aside.

2. The facts are that on or about 1955 the then National Life Insurance Company Limited (hereinafter called the said company) accepted the tender of the respondent for the construction of a building at New Delhi. The work orders were issued and the respondent was asked to commence the work on the understanding that the formal contract would be issued in due course. In the matter of the said agreement the petitioner's architects Messrs. Ballardie, Thompson and Matthews acted as the agent of the petitioner all throughout. The petitioner from time to time made various payments against the running bills submitted by the respondent on the certificate of the said architects in terms of the said agreement. In 1958 the Life Insurance Corporation of India came into existence and the said Corporation duly took over the said contract on behalf of the said National Insurance Co. Ltd.

3. The building was admittedly completed in April, 1959. On or about October 7, 1959 the respondent made out the final bill wherein it claimed for the balance price of work by calculating the price of the additional work and the deviations and described the said claim as their claim under category "A". The respondent also put forward another claim by describing the same as claim under category "B". As stated above, under the terms of the said agreement the said architects were to give a certificate to enable the respondent to receive payment. On or about June 1, 1960 the said architects issued a certificate for payment of Rupees 3,70,632.44 paise in respect of the claim under category "A" and in respect of the claim under category "B" the said architects recommended the sum of Rupees 1,14,385.06 paise. The said architects recommended payments in respect of various items which were mentioned in their letter dated June 1, 1960 addressed to the petitioner. Out of the total sum so recommended for payment the petitioner agreed to pay a sum of Rs. 3,50,107.00 and actually paid a sum of Rs. 3,50,000.00 by leaving a balance sum of Rs. 107.00 but refused to pay the balance sum of Rupees 20,632.44 paise claimed under category "A". As regards category "B" the petitioner did not act in terms of the said recommendation of their architects and rejected the entire claim of Rs. 1,14,385.06 paise.

4. The formal contract was executed by and between the parties herein on or about October 28, 1960, i.e., long after the work was completed. The said formal contract provided various terms and conditions including the arbitration clause as follows:—

ORDER:— This is an application for an order that the award dated April 29,

"30. Provided always that in case any dispute or difference shall arise between the employer, or the architects on his behalf, and the contractor, either during the progress of the works, or after the determination, abandonment or breach of the contract, as to the constructions of the contract or as to any matter or thing arising thereunder (except as to the matters left to the sole discretion of the architects under clauses 1, 4, 5, 16, 19, 19A and 29, and as to the exercises by them under clause 18 of the right to have any work opened up) or as to the withholding by the architects of any certificates to which the contractor may claim to be entitled, then either party shall forthwith give to the other written notice of such dispute or difference, which notice shall specify the matters which are in dispute, and such dispute or difference of which such notice has been given, and no other, shall be and is hereby referred to the arbitration and final decision of the chief engineer C.P.W.D. department, Government of India if he is able and willing to act, otherwise to some person to be mutually agreed upon between the contractor and the architects, and the award of such arbitration shall be final and binding on the parties. Such reference shall not be entered upon until after the completion, or alleged completion, of the works, or until three weeks or more shall have elapsed after the practical cessation of the works arising from any cause unless with the written consent of the employer or architects and the contractor. The arbitrator shall have power to open up, review and revise any certificate, opinion, decision, requisition or notice, save in regard to the said matters, expressly excepted above, and to determine all matters in dispute which shall be submitted to him and of which notice shall have been given as aforesaid. Upon every and any such reference the costs of, and incidental to, the reference and award respectively, shall be in the discretion of the arbitrator who may determine the amount thereof, and shall direct by whom and to whom and in what manner the same shall be borne and paid. This submission shall be deemed to be a submission to arbitration within the meaning of the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, and any statutory modification thereof for the time being in force. The employer and contractor hereby also agree that arbitration under this clause shall be a condition precedent to any right of action under the contract with regard to the matters hereby expressly agreed to be so referred to arbitration."

5. Under the said contract the petitioner was described as the employer and the respondent was described as the contractors. Clauses 3 and 4 of the formal contract, inter alia, provided that the architects under the conditions of contract would mean Messrs. Balardie, Thompson and Matthews or such other person as might be named for this purpose by the employer at any time. The employer agreed that cement and steel as would be required to execute the said contract would be supplied to the contractors on their requisition duly certified by the said architects. The amount of money involved for such a purchase by the employer would be deducted and recovered at the rate of Rs. 100/- per ton for cement and Rs. 500/- per ton for steel inclusive of sales tax delivered at site. Under clause 7 of the conditions of contract the contractors were required upon the request of the said architects to (furnish?) them with all the invoices, accounts receipts and other vouchers that they might be required in connection with the said contract. Clause 22 of the said conditions provided, inter alia, that the work would be completed not later than April 30, 1959. Clause 23 of the said conditions provided, inter alia, to the effect that if the contractors would fail to complete the work by the date mentioned in clause 22 or within any extended time and if the architects would certify in writing under conditions mentioned therein to the effect that the works could reasonably have been completed by an earlier date than when it was so completed then the contractors would pay a sum of Rs. 500/- per week as agreed and liquidated damages for the period during which the said work would remain unfinished. Under clause 27 of the said conditions the contractors would be entitled to payment under the certificates to be issued by the said architects to the contractors in the manner as provided therein. Under clause 29 (a) of the conditions the contractors would be at liberty to determine the contract by notice in writing to the architects in case of non-payment of its dues under the certificate to be issued by the architects under certain conditions mentioned therein.

6. By their letter dated August 9, 1961 the respondent's solicitors claimed a total sum of Rs. 2,34,674.99 paise as the balance amount due in respect of category "A" and for the entirety of the claim in respect of category "B" viz., Rs. 1,14,385.06 p. On or about September 13, 1961 the petitioner paid a sum of Rs. 1,00,000.00 in full payment against the respondent's claim under category "A". Thereafter on October 27, 1961 the petitioner by their letter to the architects rejected both the balance claim of Rs. 20,632.44 under category "A" and the entire claim of Rupees 1,14,385.06 paise under category "B". A copy of the said letter was sent to the respondent.

7. Thereafter various correspondence were exchanged between the parties and sometime on or about July 6, 1964 the respondent's solicitors requested the architects to concur in the appointment of one Sri S. Bandopadhyaya as the sole arbitrator in terms of the said arbitration clause. The respondent filed its statement of claim before the said arbitrator. Again a series of correspondence passed between the parties. Sometime on or about June 24, 1968 Sri S. Bandopadhyaya declined to act as arbitrator unless both the parties would agree to the appointment. On or about October 3, 1969 the respondent made an application, inter alia, for the appointment of an arbitrator. In the said application various points were urged on behalf of the petitioner. Inasmuch as the same related to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator and the parties' right to go to arbitration, Masud, J. after hearing the parties delivered a judgment thereon and appointed Sri S. C. Mitter, Barrister-at-Law, as the sole arbitrator.

8. The said arbitrator held about 19 effective sittings and made and published his award dated April 29, 1971 which provided as follows:—

"Whereas I, S. C. Mitter, Barrister-at-Law of No. 19, Camac Street, Calcutta was by an order made by the Hon'ble High Court, Calcutta, dated 17th day of July, 1970, appointed Arbitrator in respect of the disputes and differences between the parties to the above arbitration and whereas I having taken upon myself the burden of the reference of the said arbitration and whereas my time to make the said award has been extended by the Hon'ble High Court until 30th day of April, 1971 and whereas I having considered the statements, documents, records and papers filed on behalf of the parties before me and having heard and considered the submissions made on behalf of the parties I do hereby make my award as follows:

(A) I award and direct that the respondents Life Insurance Corporation of India do pay to the claimants M. L. Dalmia and Co. Ltd. a sum of Rs. 1,34,674.99 paise (Rupees One Lakh thirty four thousand six hundred seventy four and Paise ninety nine only) in full satisfaction of its claim against their final bills including category "A" and category "B".

(B) The claim of the claimants for interest is not justified and hence rejected. I award and direct that the respondents Life Insurance Corporation of India shall pay Rs. Nil to the claimants M. L. Dalmia and Co. Ltd.

(C) I award and direct that the respondents Life Insurance Corporation of India do pay to the claimants M. L. Dalmia and Co. Ltd. a sum of Rs. 19,000/- (Rupees Nineteen thousand only) as cost of this arbitration including the cost of High Court proceedings resulting in Order dated 17th July, 1970.

(D) I award and direct that the Stamp Duty for the publication of the award shall be borne by the claimants M. L. Dalmia and Co. Ltd. As the Arbitrator had initially purchased the stamp paper of the value of Rs. 100/- (Rupees One hundred only), on which the original award is published, it is directed that the claimants M. L. Dalmia and Co. Ltd., should pay the said sum of Rs. 100/- (Rupees One hundred only) to the Arbitrator in repayment of the amount so spent by the Arbitrator,

Sd/- (S. C. Mitter)
ARBITRATOR.
29-4-71."

9. It would appear that the said arbitrator has allowed the entire claim except only a little amount as claimed in the statement of claim filed by the respondent herein.

10. Mr. Basu, learned counsel, appearing on behalf of the Life Insurance Corporation of India the petitioner herein, argued several points for setting aside the said award.

11. According to the learned counsel the award in so far as the claim under category "B" was concerned, was wholly outside the scope of the contract and as such the same was outside the scope of the arbitration clause in the contract. From the said letter dated June 1, 1960 written by the said architects to the petitioner it was pointed out that although the said architects assessed the sum of Rupees 1,14,385.06 paise as the amount payable to the contractors against the category 'B' yet no final certificate for payment was issued because the nature of the claims put forward under category 'B' would reveal that the same were outside the scope of the said contract. It was also pointed out to Court that a certificate was given in so far as the claim under category 'A' was concerned by the certificate dated June 1, 1960 because the said claim was within the scope of the said contract. The petitioner too considered the said claim under category 'B' as outside the scope of the said contract and as such rejected the same.

12. It was also pointed out by the learned counsel that under paragraph 15 of the statement of claim the respondent claimed the said amount under category 'B' on the basis that the petitioner had taken benefit of the works done by the respondent contractor and the claim under category 'B' arose in the process of execution of and out of the said agreement and the work thereunder; and the petitioner was liable to compensate and/or to pay the said sum to the respondent claimant. On the basis of the said pleading it was contended that the respondent was claiming the amount under Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act. On the basis as aforesaid it was argued that the claim under Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act was outside the purview of the contract and as such outside the scope of the arbitration clause contained in the said contract.

13. Mr. Basu relied on the case of Johurmull Parasram v. Louis Dreyfus and Co. Ltd., AIR 1949 Cal 179 for support of his proposition that a claim under Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act would be outside the scope of the arbitration agreement if the arbitration clause provided that the dispute "under the Contract" was to be decided by the arbitrator, as was the case here. Mr. Basu also relied on the case of Alopi Parshad and Sons Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1960 SC 588 for the proposition, inter alia that the claim on account of excess price paid due to rise in prices were matters which could not affect the contract.

14. On behalf of the respondent Mr. Bhabra referred to the arbitration clause, the opening words whereof signified that any dispute under the contract would be covered by the arbitration clause. The arbitration clause, accordingly, was wide enough to cover the claim made under category 'B'. It is submitted that the claim under category 'B' is based on non-supply of steel and cement by the employer i.e. the National Insurance Co. Ltd. Mr. Bhabra referred to condition No. 4 of the said formal contract which spoke of supply of steel and cement by the employer. The learned counsel also referred to the said letter dated June 1, 1960 written by the said architects to the petitioner recommending payment of the said sum to the said contractor, being the respondent herein. In the said letter each item of claim had been discussed and it would appear therefrom that the said claims were in respect of damages arising out of breach of contract committed by the said employer due to non-supply of the said steel and cement. As a result of such breach of contract delay was caused in supplying steel and cement with the result that the respondent suffered heavy damages for which the respondent asked for damages. The said claims were dealt with itemwise in the said letter of the said architects and the recommendation was for the following items and for the following amounts:

1. Deterioration of shuttering, balli crops etc.

On this heading the following writings appear:

"This deterioration was due to stoppage of work in the first instance from March to August, 1956 when cement, steel were not available and then again from September to November, 1957 after the nationalisation of the Insurance Company before it was definitely decided as to the course of action to be taken with regard to the construction of the building. The contractor's claim for this item is as follows:—

Statement "A"
"B"

Rs. 63,100/-

Rs. 44,888/-

Rs. 1,07,988/-

Against this, we assess that an amount of Rs. 78,949/- as shown in detail in the bill is reasonable."

In respect of the second item it is provided as follows:—

"2. Idle establishment charges (Statements A and B).

The extra costs incurred owing to the stoppage of work for the reasons mentioned above for the following periods:—

(a) March to August, 1956 — 6 months
(b) 3rd September to 18th

November, 1957 — 2½ months

The establishment charges asked for in the first stage are as follows:—

Staff salary	Rs. 1,000/- per month
Watchmen	Rs. 200/- do.
Mechanics	Rs. 300/- do.

Rs. 1,500/- per month.

Total for six months Rs. 9,000/-.

The establishment charges asked for in the second stage was as follows:—

Staff salary	Rs. 2,500/- per month
Mechanics and Drivers	Rs. 350/- do
Watchmen	Rs. 250/- do

Rs. 3,050/- per month.

Total for 2½ months Rs. 7,625/-.

The increase in the establishment charges in the second stage is due to extra staff employee on the job.

We have verified the actual payment from the books of the contractor and are in a position to recommend that the amounts charged by the contractor totalling Rs. 16,625/- are in order."

15. As regards the other items Nos. 3 to 9 the same relate to matters arising under the contract. Some of those items have been rejected and in respect of some other the architect has recommended lesser amount than claimed. At the conclusion of the said letter it is provided as follows:—

"On the above basis we assess that an amount of Rs. 1,14,385.06 is payable to the contractor against category "B". But we wish to have your final view before the final certificate for payment is issued. If desired, we should discuss the details with you at your convenience when the contractor should also be requested to be present with all records so that any further information required can be furnished by him."

16. Mr. Bhabra also contended that in paragraph 15 of the statement of claim filed by the respondent herein it has been categorically stated that the claim arose out of the agreement and accordingly it is not correct to say that the claim under category "B" was founded on Section 70 of the Indian Contract Act.

17. In my opinion, Mr. Bhabra's contentions should be accepted and I have no hesitation to come to the finding that the claim under category "B" was made under the contract and the damages were sought to be claimed on the basis of delay for the non-supply of the steel and cement and accordingly, damages claimed under category "B" directly flew from the contract for breach thereof and accordingly this was a claim under the contract. Furthermore, by the letter dated November 30, 1962 the Zonal Manager of the petitioner addressed a letter to the solicitors for the respondent whereby he indicated that the respondent might refer the matter to arbitration under the terms of the contract if so advised. It was stated categorically therein that no Court of law had jurisdiction to entertain the claim of the respondent in the face of the arbitration clause in the agreement. That being the position, the petitioner themselves had admitted that this matter was within the scope of the arbitration clause. This letter was written in reply to the respondent's solicitors' letter dated November 20, 1962 wherein the claims both under category "A" and under category "B" for payments were made. It follows from the said letter that the want of a certificate in respect of category "B" could not stand in the way of the arbitrator deciding the dispute in respect thereof (sic) because the petitioner itself asked the respondent to refer the said dispute to arbitration.

18. Furthermore, it would appear from the said arbitration clause itself that only such matters in disputes and differences in respect whereof notice would be given and no others would be referred to the arbitration by the parties herein. Before Masud J. this question was agitated as to whether such notice was actually given in respect of categories "A" and "B". Masud J. was satisfied that such formal notice was given. In any event, the petitioners having suggested the arbitration themselves cannot be allowed to maintain that the formal notice should have been sent.

19. In the case of A. M. Mair & Co. v. Gordhandas Sagarmull, AIR 1951 SC 9 the Supreme Court relied on a passage quoted in Heyman v. Darwins Ltd., 1942 AC 356, where Lord Dunsedin propounded the test in the following language:—

"If a party has to have recourse to the contract, that dispute is a dispute under the contract."

20. In the case of Ruby General Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Pearey Lal Kumar, AIR 1952 SC 119 at p 121, it was observed:—

"The question to be decided is whether the point on which the parties are in dispute is a difference arising out of the policy in terms of Clause 7 of the policy. The test for determining such a question has been laid down in a series of cases and is a simple one. The test is whether recourse to the contract by which the parties are bound is necessary for the purpose of determining the matter in dispute between them. If such recourse to the contract is necessary, then the matter must come within the scope of the arbitrator's jurisdiction."

21. Reliance was placed on the case of Union of India v. Salween Timber and Construction Co., (India), AIR 1969 SC 488, where the Supreme Court made similar observation regarding the test to be applied in respect of an arbitration clause which provided the determination of the dispute, inter alia, under the contract.

22. In my opinion, the contentions of Mr. Bhabra on this point should be accepted by the Court to the effect that in this case the claim under category "B" related to a dispute under the contract for which due notice was given to the petitioner. In respect of category "B" the petitioner having asked the respondent to go to arbitration cannot now be allowed to contend about the want of jurisdiction of the arbitrator to decide such dispute. In the final bill, it was pointed out by Mr. Bhabra, the price of steel and cement had actually been credited to the petitioner.

23. At the reply stage Mr. Basu wanted to raise another point by relying on the case of AIR 1960 SC 588. It is argued that by allowing the claim made under category "B" the arbitrator in effect has increased the rates mentioned in the contract and accordingly, the same was beyond the scope of the arbitrator's jurisdiction. In the case before the Supreme Court the persons who supplied ghee to the agents appeared before the arbitrators and produced extracts from their books showing the amount actually due to them from the latter. The arbitrators were satisfied that the statement produced by the suppliers reflected a general rise in prices and cost of labour. Taking into consideration the fact that the other persons were buying ghee at rates considerably in excess of the stipulated rates the arbitrators held that the agents were entitled to be reimbursed to the extent of Rs. 11,27,965-11-3. But the terms of the contract, stipulating the rate at which the financing and overhead charges were to be paid remained binding so long as the contract was not abandoned or altered by mutual agreement and it was observed by the Supreme Court that the arbitrators had no authority to award any amount in excess of the amount expressly stipulated to be paid. Mr. Bhabra argued that in the case before the Supreme Court the arbitrators expressly increased the rate and gave reasons for the same but in the case before this Court no reasons have been given by the arbitrator and the Court is not in a position to conclude that the arbitrator increased the rate as stipulated in the contract. In any event Mr. Basu's argument cannot be accepted because the increase in the total amount, if any, is on the basis of the damages suffered by the contractor as mentioned in the particulars of category "B" in the letter of the said architects.

24. Mr. Basu then argued that Masud J. was not called upon to decide the question of jurisdiction in the application before him & as such the judgment of Masud J. cannot operate as res judicata in this proceeding because the observation of Masud J. in that connection were obiter. Mr. Basu relied on several cases on that point. Mr. Bhabra did not dispute the propositions of law and the principles involved therein but contends that in the application before Masud J. the said point relating to jurisdiction was directly mooted.

25. That being the position, in my opinion, the arbitrator did not act in excess of his jurisdiction by entertaining the claim of the contractor in respect of the claims referred to them for category "B".

26. The second point that is argued by Mr. Basu is that the arbitrator was guilty of legal misconduct in arriving at the compensation without any evidence. It is argued that any reasonable man acting in such position could not have come to the conclusion he has arrived at without the required evidence to substantiate the items in the statement of claim. In paragraph 14 of the petition the disputed items in category "A" have been indicated. The total amount in respect of category 'A' is to the extent of sum of Rs. 20,632.44 p. which was rejected by the said National Insurance Co. Ltd. Since the said items were disputed hence evidence was to be adduced in order to enable the arbitrator to arrive at the figure if the same was to be awarded. The letter dated October 27, 1961 would show that there was a conference at New Delhi between the contractor, the architects and the petitioner. The petitioner gave its decision in that conference. Thereafter no further recommendation was made by the said architects. Accordingly, it is argued that there was no documentary or oral evidence to justify the arbitrator to give his finding unless the writing containing the provisional recommendation of the architects would be taken as the documentary evidence. It is argued that even the certificate was not binding; if it was so binding then there was no scope for arbitration. The fact remains that ultimately it was rejected in a conference. Hence no reasonable man acting in that position could have made the award without such evidence.

27. Mr. Basu relied on the case of Chhogmal Rawatmal v. Sankar Chand G. Shah, 53 Cal WN 828 where the Division Bench consisting of Harries, C. J. and Chatterjee, J. considered a case where the arbitrators decided the question of extension of time without any evidence at all in support of the same. In that case there was no material before the arbitrators to justify the said finding or conclusion of the arbitrators and accordingly, the Division Bench held that the question was not of mistake but of misconduct because the arbitrators decided that issue of fact without any evidence or material before them and such a decision amounted to a serious dereliction of duty. The Division Bench accordingly, held that the arbitrators were guilty of misconduct and upheld the decision of S. B. Sinha J. in the Trial Court where the award was set aside.

28. Mr. Bhabra, on the other hand, contended that there was sufficient evidence before the arbitrator to enable him to make an award in the manner he has done. The certificate dated June 1, 1960 which was an admitted document and which was placed before the arbitrator certified that the said Messrs. Ballardie, Thomson & Mathews, the architects of the petitioner certified that the sum of Rupees 3,70,632.44 paise could be paid to the contractor against category "A". The said certificate was acted upon by the petitioner inasmuch as they paid to the extent of Rs. 3,50,000/- out of the said certificate amount. Accordingly, the question before the arbitrator was whether the balance sum of Rs. 20,632.44 paise was payable to the contractor by the petitioner or not. The entire correspondence and the documents were placed before the arbitrator. The arbitrator had before him enough documentary evidence and admission on the part of the said architects who were in effect acting as the agent of the petitioner all throughout and on the basis of their recommendation all payments were made all throughout until the said final bill. Even on the face of the said recommendation and certificate the said payment to the extent of Rs. 2,50,000/- was made. It appears from Clauses 27 and 29 (a) of the said formal contract that the payment was agreed to be made to the contractor by the employer from time to time by instalments upon certificate being issued by the said architects. It was provided under cl. 29 (a) that the contractor was given the right even to determine the said contract if the payment would not be made under the certificate of the said architects as provided therein. It appears from the counter-statement of facts that the said certificate was produced before the arbitrator on behalf of the petitioner and accordingly the arbitrator could consider the said document as a piece of evidence. Under the definition of evidence as provided under Section 3 of the Evidence Act it is provided as follows:

"Evidence" means and includes—

(1) xx xx xx

(2) all documents produced for the inspection of the Court, such documents are called documentary evidence."

In any event, Indian Evidence Act by Section 1 makes it specifically clear that it will not apply to proceedings before an arbitrator. Various English authorities have been cited at the bar on this point but, in my opinion, in view of the specific provision in the Indian Evidence Act the law in India is clearly different from the law which is prevailing in England. In my opinion, it was rightly contended on behalf of the respondent that the oral evidence in this case was not adduced before the arbitrator in view of the fact that the parties might have thought that it was not necessary because on the basis of the documentary evidence the matter could be decided. The fact remains that no issue of fact was actually raised on behalf of the respondent and there was no difficulty on the part of the arbitrator to consider the documentary evidence adduced before him and to make the award in the manner he has done. The case of 53 Cal WN 828, was a case where there was no evidence at all. The Court observed that there was no material whatsoever before the arbitrators to arrive at their decision and on the basis thereof it was observed at p 830:

"It is legal misconduct to decide that there was an extension when there was absolutely no evidence in support of it and really no material before the arbitrators to justify this findings or conclusion. The question here is not of mistake but of misconduct. To decide such an issue of fact without any evidence or material before the arbitrators is serious dereliction of duty." Accordingly, in my opinion, that case is clearly distinguishable from the facts of the case before me. To my mind, the weight or the appreciation of the evidence by the arbitrator should not be considered by the court in coming to the finding as to whether there was legal misconduct or not. The arbitrator in this case did not give any reason in making his award and there being enough documentary evidence before him I see no reason why the arbitrator could not be in a position to make his award in the manner he has done. In the case of Haji Ebrahim Kassam Cochinwalla v. Northern Indian Oil Industries Ltd., AIR 1951 Cal 230 P. B. Mukharji, J., as he then was, now the Chief Justice, at page 232, observed:

"In my opinion appraisement of evidence by the arbitrator is ordinarily never a matter which this Court questions and considers.... The arbitrator in my opinion is the only judge of the quality or the quantity of evidence and it will not be for this Court to take upon itself the task of being a judge of the evidence before the arbitrator. It may be possible that on the same evidence that Court might have arrived at a different conclusion than the arbitrator but that by itself is no ground in my view of setting aside an award of an Arbitrator. It is familiar learning but requires emphasis that by Section 1, Evidence Act the Evidence Act in its rigour is not intended to apply to proceedings before an Arbitrator."

29. As regards the claims under category "B" Mr. Bhabra argued that the said architects made their recommendation to the employers for the payment of the said sum of Rs. 1,14,385.08p. The respondent put forward a claim which was higher than what was recommended by the said architects. The architects in their letter dated June 1, 1960 dealt with each individual item in details and gave reasons for such recommendation. As expert they had given their reasons and in respect of some of the items they had rejected the claim of the respondent and in respect of some others have reduced the figure as claimed. It is mentioned in the said recommendation that they had verified the books, vouchers, documents and bills in arriving at the said figures. The question is whether the arbitrator could rely on the said documents as a piece of evidence to arrive at his finding in making the award. Actually speaking, what was considered and in what manner the arbitrator considered the said evidence are matters of conjecture in view of the fact that he has not given reasons in the said award. Mr. Bhabra argued that, in any event the said architects were the agents of the employers and as such agents they recommended payment. The said letter dated June 1, 1960 was filed before the arbitrator on behalf of the petitioner as document No. 16. The said document was an admitted document before the arbitrator and was produced on behalf of the petitioner and as such the arbitrator had enough material to rely on such evidence to come to his finding in making the said award. My attention has been drawn to paragraph 2 of the petition where the petitioner pleaded that the tender was accepted by Messrs. Ballardie, Thompson & Matthews as agents for and on behalf of the said National Insurance Co. Ltd. and the fact remained that they were acting as the agents and that would also appear from the letter dated August 19, 1955 written by the said architects to the respondent whereby they on behalf of the said National Insurance Co. Ltd. accepted the tender and advised the respondent to start the work immediately.

30. In view of the aforesaid, in my opinion, it was practically an admitted case before the arbitrator that the said architects were acting as the agents of the said employers and consequently the said letter dated June 1, 1960 which was placed before the arbitrator could be considered as good piece of evidence for the purpose of arriving at the decision of the arbitrator. Accordingly, in my opinion, there is no misconduct legal or otherwise in making his award.

31. In the case before me none of the parties ever offered to adduce any oral evidence before the arbitrator nor did the arbitrator have any occasion to refuse any such evidence. Under those circumstances, in my opinion, it could not be argued that the arbitrator was guilty of any legal misconduct and accordingly, I reject the said contention of Mr. Basu.

32. The third point that was argued by Mr. Basu was to the effect that the counter-claim made by the petitioner in their counter statement of facts before the arbitrator had neither been mentioned nor had the same been considered by the arbitrator in making his award. Mr. Basu contended that there was delay for 19 months and in terms of the contract the petitioner was entitled to damages at the rate mentioned in the said contract. In my opinion, there is no substance in this point and Mr. Basu also did not press his point any further as soon as Mr. Bhabra pointed out from the said formal contract that the time for completion was actually extended by the said formal contract upto April 1959 within which time the building was admittedly completed. In any event, no such point was ever taken or made out at any stage of the proceeding until the counter-statement was filed and even there also no particular amount was mentioned and the claim was absolutely vague. In view of the fact that Mr. Basu ultimately abandoned the said point regarding delay it is not necessary to consider whether the award was in complete or not. That being the position the argument as of Mr. Basu on this point is rejected.

33. The fourth point that was argued by Mr. Basu was to the effect that the arbitrator exceeded his jurisdiction by directing the payment of a sum in his award although the arbitration clause merely required him to fix the amount payable. As and when such an award would be made, thereafter on the basis of the said arbitration award a suit was to be filed in order to obtain payment. It appears that before Masud J. this point was never raised nor in the grounds (a) to (v) of paragraph 24 of the petition had the point been specifically taken. Mr. Basu indicated a few grounds on the basis whereof he submitted that the same were taken in connection with this point but to my mind, those grounds did not relate to the point now raised before me. In any event, in my opinion, the arbitration clause herein is wide enough to include reference to arbitration for any dispute relating to the payment of money. Mr. Basu has relied on the last sentence of the said arbitration clause but to construe the arbitration clause in the proper manner the entire clause has to be read as a whole. The opening words make it clear that any dispute or difference as to the construction of the contract or as to any matter or thing arising thereunder could be referred to arbitration upon notice being given as to the matters in dispute. In this case the respondent made a claim in respect of the said sums under category "B". The petitioner by their reply dated November 30, 1962 asked the respondent to go to arbitration in the following language:

"In case your client feels aggrieved by this decision of our he may refer the matter to arbitration under the terms of the contract if so advised. No Court of law has jurisdiction to entertain the claim of your client in face of arbitration clause in the agreement."

The above letter was written by the petitioner in answer to the respondents' claim for payment of their dues. Obviously, the petitioner expressed its mind to the effect that seeking to recourse to arbitration was not the proper step but filing of suit was the only proper remedy which was open to the respondent.

34. Mr. Bhabra relied on the case of National Fire General Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Union of India, AIR 1956 Cal 11 where P. B. Mukharji J. (as he then was, now the Chief Justice,) had occasion to consider an usual arbitration clause in the Fire Insurance policy. The speciality of that clause was that the same incorporated the following language viz, "Independently of all other questions". On the basis of the said words it was observed that the same indicated that although there was a special stipulation in the Insurance Policy itself that the amount of loss or damage was alone to be the subject of arbitration, that did not defer the parties from submitting to the jurisdiction of the Arbitrators the other question regarding the liability to pay the amount and as to who should pay to whom.

35. In the instant case also the opening words of the arbitration clause as indicated above vest the arbitrator with jurisdiction to decide the question of payment in the manner he has awarded and that is how I interpret the said arbitration clause. In any event, as in the case of National Fire and General Insurance Co. Ltd. above so also in the instant case before me the parties had submitted to the jurisdiction of the arbitration in deciding the question and to make an award for the payment of money.

36. The fifth and the last argument put forward by Mr. Basu was to the effect that the arbitrator was guilty of misconduct in not intimating the parties that the case was closed and that he was going to consider the making of the award. In paragraph 23 of the petition it is stated that the Nineteenth Meeting of the arbitrator was held on April 21, 1971. At the conclusion of that meeting the parties were intimated that the next meeting would be held on April 22, 1971 at the same time and place as fixed by the arbitrator. It is alleged that without holding any such meeting and without giving any notice or intimation to the parties that the arbitrator was concluding the reference and proceeding to consider the award he made and published a purported award on April 29, 1971. It is further alleged that the petitioner was seriously prejudiced in not being able to present his entire case before the arbitrator. The concluded portion of the minutes of the meeting of April 21, 1971 were incorrect and wrong by reason of the fact that the original minutes had been struck out in the absence of the parties and a new line substituted to the effect that the hearing of the arbitration was concluded.

37. I called for the original minutes as supplied to the parties. They have been marked as exhibits and the same have been filed in the records. The same contained correction in the handwriting of the arbitrator and both the said minutes bear the initials of the arbitrator. From the records of the arbitration proceedings as filed by the arbitrator it appears that the said copy of the minutes as corrected in the hands of the arbitrator which has been produced from the custody of the petitioner and filed in the proceedings, as stated above, were collected by the petitioner's representative by the name of one G. D. Arora, Administrative Officer, personally from the arbitrator on April 21, 1971. The said receipt was produced before me from the file of the arbitrator. Mr. Basu after looking into it, admitted the same to be the signature of the said representative of the petitioner who used to attend regularly all the meetings held by the arbitrator as representative of the petitioner. The admitted position is that none of the lawyers on behalf of either party went to the residence of the said arbitrator at the time fixed for the meeting excepting the said G. D. Arora on behalf of the petitioner and one J. Dalmiya on behalf of the respondent. Both the said representatives instructed the arbitrator that they had concluded their respective arguments and neither party had anything further to add. On that basis at the request of the said representatives the arbitrator corrected the minutes of April 21, 1971 by deleting the sentence "next meeting to be held on April 22, 1971 at the same place at 5 P.M." and by writing in its place the following sentence viz. "hearing concluded and neither party has anything further to add". The arbitrator initialled the said portion in both the minutes but by mistake he put the date as April 21, 1971 instead of April 22, 1971 when actually the correction was made. Mr. Bhabra has pointed out from the receipt granted by the said representative of the petitioner that whereas the receipts were all throughout granted by the petitioner's solicitors in obtaining copies of the said minutes but only on the last occasion the said representative granted the receipt whereby it was indicated that none of the lawyers attended the said meeting. It was thought fit that no further meeting was required to be held and on the basis of the said representation the arbitrator concluded the hearing of the case and closed the reference and proceeded to make his award.

38. The said paragraph 23 of the said petition wherein the said allegations have been made have been verified by one Anil Kumar Banerjee, the Assistant Secretary and constituted attorney of the petitioner at its Zonal Office at Calcutta as based on information received from the records and files relating to this case and believed by him to be true. There is no supporting affidavit by the said representative who actually received the said copy of the minutes of April 21, 1971 containing the said allegations from the arbitrator. Even the records which are produced before me do not in any way support the petitioner's case on this point. On the contrary, the correct position is revealed to the effect that the arbitrator rightly closed the case at the request of the parties' representatives. As to the date of the corrections of the minutes as initialled by the arbitrator I accept the explanation given by Mr. Bhabra that by mistake he put the date as April 21, 1971 instead of April 22, 1971 but the covering letters were correctly dated as April 22, 1971 and that made the position absolutely clear. The said letter was received by the petitioner's solicitor Mr. S. K. Mondal on April 23, 1971 as would appear from the rubber stamp put on the said covering letter of the arbitrator which letter was also produced and tendered in this proceeding. It is surprising that although the petitioner through its own representative directly received the said minute as corrected on April 22, 1971 and although the petitioner's solicitors also received the same on April 23, 1971 yet no protest whatsoever was made at any point of time in respect of the said corrections made by the arbitrator. In paragraph 22 of the affidavit-in-opposition the position has been made clear and I have no hesitation to accept the said statement made in the paragraph in respect of the facts concerning the closure of the case. It appears from the records that on April 6, 1971 the argument on behalf of the petitioner was concluded by the petitioner's counsel and on April 21, 1971 the arguments on behalf of the respondent were concluded by the respondents' attorney. If anything further was to be added on behalf of the petitioner then the petitioner's lawyers would surely have attended the meeting on April 22, 1971 but since they concluded ed their arguments and since they had no further submissions to make that was why they did not choose to attend at the said meeting. The arbitrator made his award on April 29, 1971 but even thereafter no protest whatsoever was made in respect thereto. In my opinion, the allegation and the charge of interpolation behind the back of the petitioner which were made on behalf of the petitioner by the said affidavit of the said Anil Kumar Banerjee who had no personal knowledge thereof and who could not produce any such record to support the said charge, were reckless and irresponsible and could not be accepted at all. The arbitrator's records have been clearly maintained and show the real position. I have no hesitation to come to the finding that there was no misconduct at all on the part of the said arbitrator in the manner as alleged or at all.

39. In the facts and circumstances of this case, in my opinion, the passage in Russell on Arbitration 17th Edition at page 171 has no application whatsoever. It is provided therein that the arbitrator should make it clear if there would be any possibility of doubt, that the proceedings were at an end. Mr. Basu has also relied on the case of Peterson v. Ayre, (1854) 14 CB 665 = 139 ER 273 at page 278 where on the facts involved therein it was observed that the arbitrators did not inform one of the parties that they were about to conclude the case and no opportunity was given to produce evidence if such party had any such evidence to produce. On that ground it was held that the award was unsatisfactory and the award was remanded. It would appear from page 275 of the said report that in that case an affidavit was filed saying that the said party had many witnesses who were to be called before the arbitrators. In my opinion, neither the passage appearing in Russell nor the said case have any application whatsoever in the facts and circumstances of the case before me.

40. That being the position, in my opinion, the arbitrator was not guilty of any misconduct and the points made out by Mr. Basu cannot be accepted and the same are accordingly rejected. I accordingly dismiss this application with costs.

Application dismissed.

Motor Vehicles Act (1939), S. 110-B — Purpose of compensation — Factor for consideration.

The compensation is provided to replace the money that the heirs of the deceased used to receive by way of maintenance. The compensation is not in the form of a monthly allowance. It is in the form of a lump sum. To say that an investment of such lump sum would yield a steady profit of ten per cent and to reduce the compensation by ten per cent is little short of speculation. Hence the deduction by reducing the amount of compensation by 10 per cent on this ground is unwarranted. (Para 3)

B. P. Chatterjee, for Appellants;
Somen Ch. Bose and Sundarananda Pal, for Respondent.

ARUN K. MUKHERJEA, J.:— This appeal is directed against an order of the Motor Accident Claims Tribunal. The short facts of the case are as follows: One Gopinath Dey died as a result of a motor accident on 5th March, 1964 at about 2 P.M. The accident took place near the junction of Upper Circular Road and Raja Rammohan Roy Road. It is an admitted fact that Gopinath was knocked down by State Bus No. WBS 1735. The widow and the children of Gopinath filed an application for compensation before the Tribunal. They alleged that the accident was due to the negligence of the driver of the aforesaid bus. The claimants claimed further that the income of Gopinath at the time of his death was about Rs. 100/- per month and that his age was 36 years at the time of death. The claimants claimed a sum of Rs. 10,000/-. Some evidence was adduced on behalf of the claimants regarding the circumstances in which Gopinath was knocked down by the State Bus. The opposite party Calcutta State Transport Corporation did not adduce any evidence though they sought to make out a case that Gopinath was overrun because of his own negligence. The learned Tribunal came to a finding on facts that Gopinath was really run over because of the negligence of the driver of the State Bus. On this basis the Tribunal held that the petitioners were entitled to compensation. The present appeal is directed against the sum assessed by the Tribunal for compensation.

2. It appears that the Tribunal assessed the compensation in the following manner: In the first instance the Tribunal estimated the net annual loss suffered by the legal representatives of the deceased. Following a decision in AIR 1960 Punj 300 the Tribunal held that the net compensation to be awarded to the petitioners should be 15 times the net annual loss suffered by them on account of the death of the deceased. Since the Tribunal had found on facts that the income that Gopinath would handover to his family for maintaining them amounted to Rs. 40/- per month, the Tribunal computed the net compensation to be Rs. 7,200/-. After coming to this finding the Tribunal made certain deductions which we find very difficult to appreciate. The first deduction that the Tribunal made was on account of what the Tribunal described as benefit derived by the petitioners from the death of Gopinath. According to the Tribunal the fact that after Gopinath's death his widow and children would have an undivided share in their native house at Joy-nagar amounted to a definite gain on their part by Gopinath's death. The Tribunal took twenty years rent for this accommodation as the capitalised value of these rooms and deducted a sum of Rs. 1700/- from the net compensation to be given to the petitioners. The Tribunal, however, allowed Rs. 200/- to be deducted from this sum as depreciation and cost of annual repairs. On this basis the Tribunal calculated that the petitioners had obtained an inheritance worth Rs. 1500/-. This was deducted from Rs. 7200/-. The Tribunal made a further deduction of Rs. 500/- which, the Tribunal assumed, was to be given to the heirs of Gopinath out of a fine of Rs. 1000/- that had been imposed in a criminal case upon the driver of the bus. These two deductions leave a total sum of Rs. 5200/-. The Tribunal does not, however, stop here. The Tribunal again calculated that since this sum would be invested by the heirs and would yield some profit to the heirs, there should be a further deduction of ten per cent. This gives the final figure of Rs. 4680/- which, according to the Tribunal, shall be an adequate compensation in this particular case.

3. We have carefully considered the Tribunal's method of calculation and to say the least, we find ourselves more than puzzled by the logic adopted by the Tribunal in making the deductions. To say that when a person dies his family makes a gain by reason of the fact that the dwelling house or the house which belonged to the family before, becomes the exclusive property of the heirs to the exclusion of the deceased person is a fantastic consideration. Even the learned Advocate on behalf of the respondent did not want to justify this deduction. As for the second deduction, namely, Rs. 500/- on account of the sum that was expected to be given to the petitioners out of the fine imposed in a criminal case, an affidavit has been filed in this case that no such fine has been realised. Therefore, this deduction is also unjustified. The last and final deduction by reducing the balance amount of compensation by ten per cent on the ground that the sum would be invested shows that the learned Judge entirely lost sight of the purpose of the compensation. The compensation is provided to replace the money that the heirs of the deceased used to receive by way of maintenance. The compensation is not in the form of a monthly allowance. It is in the form of a lump sum. For the sake of convenience the monthly allowance of Rs. 40/- has been converted into a capitalised value and the net compensation on this basis has been fixed at Rs. 7200/-. If the net allowance be again reduced by the income that may accrue from the capitalised amount, it is difficult to understand how the balance sum will yield the monthly maintenance which it is theoretically supposed to bring to the petitioners. In any event, to imagine that an investment would yield a steady profit of ten per cent and to reduce the compensation by ten per cent is, in our opinion, little short of speculation. We have no manner of doubt that the deductions made by the learned Tribunal are thoroughly unwarranted.

4. In this view of the matter we allow the appeal and set aside the order of the Motor Accident Claims Tribunal. The petitioners should get an award of Rs. 7,200/- against the opposite party without any deduction whatsoever. The opposite party is directed to pay the aforesaid sum within three months from date. If, however, some amount have already been taken away by the appellants that amount should be adjusted against the sum of Rs. 7,200/-. The appellants shall get the costs of the appeal as well as the costs before the Tribunal.

M. M. DUTT, J.— 5. I agree.
Appeal allowed.

ORDER — The petitioner in this application challenges the order of confiscation of a motor vehicle seized by the customs. The order was passed on 28th August, 1967. According to the petitioner, the petitioner by an agreement in writing had hired out to the respondent No. 3 an Ambassador Motor Car bearing No. GED 7173 upon a hire-purchase agreement. The said car was seized near Krishnagar Division on the ground that the car was used as a means of transport of smuggling goods to the then Indo-Pakistan border. A show cause notice was issued and it was alleged that the car was liable to be confiscated under Section 115 (2) of the Customs Act. The petitioner showed cause. Thereafter personal hearing was granted and the respondent No. 1, the Collector of Customs on the 28th August, 1967 passed an order and the order was received by the petitioner on the 9th November, 1967. The respondent No. 1 found that the car had been utilised on several occasions for the alleged smuggling of goods and transporting of passengers to the then Indo-Pakistan border. In the aforesaid view the respondent No. 1 directed confiscation of the car absolutely under Section 115 (2) of the said Act. The petitioner contends in this application that the petitioner should have been given an option in terms of the proviso to Section 115 (2) of the said Act. Section 115 (2) of the Act provides as follows:—

CP/DP/C9/72/GDR

“(2). Any conveyance or animal used as a means of transport in the smuggling of any goods or in the carriage of any smuggled goods shall be liable to confiscation, unless the owner of the conveyance or animal proves that it was so used without the knowledge or connivance of the owner himself, his agent, if any, and the person in charge of the conveyance or animal and that each of them had taken all such precautions against such use as are for the time being specified in the Rules.

Provided that where any such conveyance is used for the carriage of goods or passengers for hire, the owner of any conveyance shall be given an option to pay in lieu of the confiscation of the conveyance of fine not exceeding the market price of the goods which are sought to be smuggled or the smuggled goods, as the case may be.”

2. The petitioner made an application to this Court which came up for hearing before B. C. Mitra, J. and by a judgment delivered on the 17th July, 1969 his Lordship was pleased to discharge the Rule on the ground that the Union of India in whom the title of the said motor vehicle had vested on confiscation had not been made a party to the said proceeding. The petitioner thereupon made this application under Art. 226 of the Constitution making the Union of India a party respondent to this application.

3. It was urged that inasmuch as it was held in the decision of B. C. Mitra,

J. in the case of Vaishali Finance Corporation v. D. R. Kohli, Matter No. 18 of 1968 (Cal.), that under the proviso to Section 115 (2) of the said Act an option should have been given to the owner before making the order of confiscation and as in this case no opportunity for exercising any option had been given to the petitioner the order was liable to be set aside. It has been further contended that the defect which was there in the previous application had been remedied.

4. Counsel for the respondent, on the other hand, has contended that this Court should not accept the finding of B. C. Mitra, J. that proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 115 of the Act would apply to the instant case. It was contended that the proviso covered only of cars or vehicles in respect of which there were permits, in other words, in cases of legal hirings. It was urged that under the Motor Vehicles Act hiring out of vehicles or conveyances without a permit was illegal. In the premises it was submitted that in the instant case there having been no permit the instant hiring was illegal and did not come as such within the proviso to Section 115 (2) of the said Act. B. C. Mitra, J. did not specifically deal with this contention. This contention is of some substance. However, in view of the judgment of B. C. Mitra, J. I would not have as at present advised taken a view contrary to that taken by B. C. Mitra J. on this point but left the parties to agitate this contention in an appropriate appeal.

5. In this case there are certain other aspects of the matter. In reply to the show cause notice the petitioner stated as follows:—

“After making over possession of the said motor vehicle to the hirer, we had and have no control over the plying of same and if you will please refer to the Registration Book of the said motor vehicle, you will find therein an endorsement in our name as follows:

“The motor vehicle above described is held by the person registered as Registered Owner under a Hire-Purchase Agreement with Messrs. Banwari Lal Pasari, 16, India Exchange Place, Calcutta.

Regarding your allegation that we are the owner of the motor vehicle, we regret, the legal position is in a flux now. The Supreme Court by a majority judgment in a case of Sundaram Finance v. The State of Kerala, AIR 1966 SC 1178 has decided that the so-called Hire-Purchase Agreements are in fact Financing Agreements only and the Financiers are not the owners of the motor vehicle; but they have a charge on the said motor vehicle.”

6. The petitioner appeared before the respondent No. 1 at the personal hearing. There the petitioner repeated the said contention that the petitioner was not the legal owner of the motor vehicle. In any event, the petitioner did not raise any contention that the petitioner was the legal owner and as such was entitled to exercise an option under the proviso to Section 115 (2) of the Act. The position the petitioner took before the respondent No. 1 was that the petitioner was not the legal owner because under the provisions of law, as the petitioner wanted those to be interpreted, under the hire-purchase agreement the petitioner was not the owner but only had a charge in respect of the said motor vehicle. In my opinion, the party which asked an adjudicating authority to decide a contention on the plea that he was not the owner is not entitled to reverse that contention and claim a relief under Art. 226 of the Constitution on the ground that he was the legal owner and that certain rights as legal owner had been denied to him. In view of the contentions made even though in a case like this where proviso to sub-section (2) of Section 115 of the Act had applied, if the adjudicating authority was not called upon to give that option to an owner in view of that fact that nobody was claiming to be the owner, then in my opinion, it would not be proper to interfere with the order of the adjudicating authority in an application under Art. 226 of the Constitution on the ground that it had not given the right of option to the legal owner enjoined by the section. There is, however, another aspect of the matter which by itself would not have really mattered very much but in conjunction with this factor would affect the Court's discretion in this matter. The order in question was passed as mentioned hereinbefore on 28th August, 1967. The petitioner had moved an application which came up for hearing before B. C. Mitra, J. in June, 1968 when it was adjourned for a fortnight. B. C. Mitra had mentioned that at the first hearing a point was taken that the previous application was incompetent in the absence of the Central Government. The matter could not be taken up by his Lordship until July, 1969. The petitioner in the meantime had taken no steps for making the Central Government a party. B. C. Mitra, J. had mentioned about that fact in his Lordship's judgment. Taking all the aforesaid facts and circumstances of this case, I am, therefore, of the opinion that the petitioner is not entitled to any relief under Art. 226 of the Constitution. In that view of the matter this application fails and is dismissed. Rule nisi is discharged. All interim orders are vacated. There will be no order as to costs. There will be a stay of operation of this order for four weeks.

Petition dismissed.

Order for production of documents —
When can be made.

The Court has got ample powers to make an order for production of a document at any time during the pendency of the suit. But before such an order can be made the Court must satisfy itself and record a finding to the effect that the documents are in the possession or power of the party against whom the order is sought and they relate to the matter in question before the Court. An order made without such satisfaction is without jurisdiction and is liable to be set aside. AIR 1953 All 251 and AIR 1958 Andh Pra 157 and AIR 1959 Punj 189, Ref.; (1946) 50 Cal WN 845, Dist. ORDER:— This is an application for appropriate order and/or directions directing the respondents not to give effect to or enforce an order of the respondent No. 1, being order No. 27 of July 3, 1971.

2. The petitioner's employees are members of a Trade Union known as India Foils Employees' Union. According to the petitioner most of the supervisors and staff assistants, who are members of the Association, are not "workmen" within the meaning of the Industrial Disputes Act and for that reason, are not competent to raise any industrial dispute. According to the petitioner again although the supervisors and staff assistants are not entitled to raise an industrial dispute, they purported to raise such a dispute before the Labour Directorate, Government of West Bengal through the third respondent. An order of reference was made on June 4, 1969, by which the dispute raised by the said workmen was referred to the first respondent. The issues framed in the order of reference are:

1. Incentive/Production bonus.
2. Gratuity.

Written statements were filed before the first respondent according to the directions given. On March 21, 1971, the third respondent filed a petition before the first respondent in which it was stated that the Association would at the time of hearing of the case rely on documents which were filed as annexures to the written statements. On May 2, 1970, the third respondent filed another petition setting out a list of other documents to be relied upon at the time of hearing the case. On July 3, 1971, the third respondent filed a petition stating that the documents mentioned in their petition of May 2, 1970, were in the possession of the petitioner and that on May 28, 1971, the Association served a notice on the petitioner asking it to produce the documents, particulars whereof were given in the notice. It was alleged in this petition that the documents would be required to prove the case of the employees in connection with the preliminary objection raised by the petitioner.

3. On July 3, 1971, the first respondent made the impugned order which is as follows:

"Both parties are present. Heard the learned lawyers of both sides. The Association files a petition in duplicate. Make over a copy of the petition with a copy of Annexure 'M' to the company. The company to produce the documents mentioned by the Union on its petition dated 2-5-70 and in Annexure M of 27-5-71 if in power and possession.

Documents be filed by the company within a fortnight from the date of this order."

Being aggrieved by this order, the petitioner made an application under Article 226 of the Constitution and obtained the rule nisi which is the subject-matter of this application. The first point urged by Mr. A. K. Dutt, appearing for the petitioner was that the first respondent had no jurisdiction to make the order for production of documents. He argued that this order was made contrary to and in violation of the provisions in the Code of Civil Procedure and the rules framed under the Industrial Disputes Act. He referred to Section 11 (3) of the Act which provides that the first respondent shall have the same powers as are vested in a Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure. He also referred to Rule 24 of the Rules framed under the Act which says that in addition to the powers conferred by the Act, Boards, Labour Courts and Tribunals shall have the same powers as are vested in a Civil Court under the Code of Civil Procedure when trying a suit in respect of five different matters set out under Rule 24. Mr. Dutt argued firstly that the third respondent had no right to call upon his clients to produce the documents before the Tribunal as it purported to. Secondly, he argued that the impugned order could not be made by the first respondent as there was nothing on record to show that the documents required to be produced by the petitioner were in the petitioner's possession and power. The documents, production of which has been ordered by the first respondent, are set out in a letter dated May 27, 1971, addressed by the third respondent to the petitioner. Mr. Dutt submitted that if the third respondent felt that those documents were in the possession and power of the petitioner, he should have made an application before the Tribunal for discovery of documents under Order 11, Rule 12 of the Civil Procedure Code. In support of this contention reliance was placed by Mr. Dutt on a decision of this Court in AIR 1956 Cal 592, in which it was held that until an affidavit of documents has been directed to be filed, the court would have no jurisdiction to order inspection and that this was not a procedure which could be omitted. In that case, however, the question was one of inspection and not of production only. But it seems to me that the observations of Sinha, J. in that decision are very relevant for determining the questions in this application.

4. Counsel for the third respondent, however, submitted that the Tribunal had ample jurisdiction under Order 11, Rule 14 of the Civil Procedure Code to make the order which it did. He argued that under that Rule the Court could at any time during the pendency of a suit, order production by any party of documents. He submitted that there was no restriction on the powers of the Court to make an order for production of documents. He argued that in this case the Tribunal had made the order under the provisions of Rule 14 of Order 11 of the Code, though the Tribunal had not stated that the order was made under that Rule. In support of this contention Mr. Saraf, counsel for the third respondent, relied upon several cases to which I shall now refer. The first decision relied upon by him is one of this Court, in (1946) 50 Cal WN 845. In that case it was held that an order for production of documents under Order 11, Rule 14 of the Civil Procedure Code was not dependent on a prior order for discovery under Rule 12 and that the two rules relate to different matters. In that case, however, the respondent had admitted that the books which were directed to be produced were in its possession or power. This decision to my mind, is not of any assistance to the third respondent in this case inasmuch as there was a clear admission by the respondent that the books were in his possession or power. The next case relied upon was a decision of the Allahabad High Court in AIR 1955 All 251. In that case also it was held that on a plain reading of Order 11, Rule 14 it would be clear that this rule was not subject in all cases to Rule 12. Reliance was also placed on a decision of the Andhra Pradesh High Court in AIR 1958 Andh Pra 157 and a decision of the Punjab High Court in AIR 1959 Punj 189. It seems to me that although the Court undoubtedly has a power to make an order for production of documents at any time during the pendency of any suit, such an order can be made only if two pre-conditions as contemplated by Rule 14 are satisfied, namely, that the documents must be in the possession or power of the party against whom the order is made; and secondly, the documents must relate to the matter in question in the suit. It is amply clear from the text of the rule itself that wide power to direct production of documents at any stage of the suit has been given to the Court subject to the two conditions mentioned above.

5. The Court has therefore, to be satisfied either upon admission of the party against whom the order is made or from an affidavit filed on his behalf or from other material such as correspondence that the documents which are directed to be produced are in the possession and power of the party against whom the order was to be made. To my mind, it seems that unless there is evidence before the Court that the documents are in the possession or power of the party against whom the order is sought, the Court will have no jurisdiction to make an order for production of the same. The second condition is also very relevant and important, namely that the documents must relate to the matter in question in the proceeding pending before the Court. It is not open to a party to come to Court and ask for an order for production of numerous documents without satisfying the Court that the documents are relevant, and that on the records there is ample evidence that the documents are in the possession or power of the party against whom the order was to be made. In this case, it is amply clear from the text of the order itself made on July 3, 1971 that the Tribunal was far from clear in its mind as to whether the documents were in the power and possession of the petitioner, because the petitioner was directed to produce the documents if in its power and possession. That makes it amply clear that the Tribunal had no materials before it to satisfy itself that the documents were in its possession or power, and in my view in the absence of such material, or in the absence of admission by a party that the documents were in its possession or power, no such order could be made by the Tribunal. I should also mention that the Tribunal has not stated that the documents are relevant to the matters in question pending before that Tribunal. In order to exercise the wide powers given by Rule 14 of Order 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court has to come to a conclusion that the documents relate to matters in question pending before that Court. If it is not so satisfied the Court will have no jurisdiction to make an order for production of such documents in exercise of the powers under Order 11, Rule 14 of the Code. In this case there is neither evidence nor admission relating to the possession of the documents by the petitioner nor is there any finding by the Tribunal that the documents are relevant for the purpose of the pending proceedings. In the absence of satisfaction of the conditions mentioned earlier in this judgment the Tribunal in my opinion, had no jurisdiction to make the impugned order.

6. For the reasons mentioned above, the Rule is made absolute. There will be no order as to costs. Let the records be sent down to the Tribunal expeditiously.

Rule made absolute.

Sm. Manjusha Debi, Appellant v. Sunil Chandra Mukherjee and others, Respondents.

A. F. A. D. No. 680 of 1959, D/- 21-3-1972.

(A) T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 11, 54 — Sale — Vendee gets all interest in property — A habendum in sale deed cannot override provisions of S. 54 — Habendum imposing conditions or limitation in conveyance deed is repugnant to S. 11.

When a property is transferred absolutely, it must be transferred with all its legal incidents; the vendor is not competent to sever from the right of property incidents which the law inseparably annexes to it, and thereby to abrogate the law by private arrangement, creating a life estate in favour of the vendee in a deed of Conveyance.

A purchaser cannot limit her own interest in a Conveyance executed by her vendor. She can do so by executing a deed by herself.

A habendum cannot override Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. A sale is a transfer of ownership of the property. By it a transferor divested himself of his interest in the property to the transferee. Thereafter he has got no right to create a life estate in favour of a transferee. If any condition or limitation is imposed in the deed of Conveyance they are repugnant to Section 11

J. N. Ghosh, Dwijendra Nath Lahiri and Himansu Kumar Bose, for Appellant, Apurbadhan Mukherjee, Nirmal Kumar Ganguly, and Sakti Prasad Mukherjee, for Respondents.

JUDGMENT:— This appeal is by the plaintiff No. 1. It arises out of a suit brought by her and one Sambhu Mukherjee for a declaration that premises No. 51/A & B, Lansdowne Road were Debuttar properties of the deities, Sree Durgajee and Sree Baraha Kalijee and, they were the respective Shebait.

2. The plaintiff No. 1 is a granddaughter (daughter's daughter) of Kalidashi Devi who executed a Will, by which, she dedicated 51/B, Lansdowne Road, to the deity — Sree Durgajee, and appointed her only daughter Durgarani, the Shebait and after her death, her daughter, — the plaintiff No. 1. The premises No. 51/A, Lansdowne Road was dedicated to the deity Sree Baraha Kalijee and Sambhu Nath Mukherjee, her grandson (son of the defendant No. 1) was appointed a Shebait. After the death of Kalidashi Devi, who died on the 24th of November, 1949, plaintiff No. 1 applied for letter of administration in respect of the will of the said Kalidashi. Three days thereafter, defendant No. 3 brought a partition suit being title suit No. 65 of 1950, in the 1st court of Subordinate Judge, Alipore. The plaintiff No. 1 applied to the learned Subordinate Judge for being added as a party in that suit. Her prayer was rejected. The plaintiff No. 1, after contest, however, obtained a letter of administration regarding the Will of Kalidashi. Thereafter, a Receiver was appointed in the said partition suit. As the Shebait was deprived of the income of the Debuttar Estate, the plaintiffs brought the above suit for necessary declaration and for an injunction restraining the defendants from realising rents from the tenants of the Debuttar Properties.

3. The defendants Nos. 2 and 3, Sekharesh and Sunilesh, the sons of Kalidashi, contested the suit. Their defence, in substance, was, that Kalidashi had only a limited interest with regard to the disputed properties. She had no right to dispose of the same by a Will. W. C. Banerjee, the father of Kalidashi was a rich coal mine owner, who advanced the loan to one Durgadas Chatterjee and, subsequently, purchased the property with his own money for the benefits of his widowed daughter — Kalidashi, during her life time and thereafter for the absolute benefits of her sons—the defendants. Since the death of their mother, the defendants have been possessing the properties.

4. The trial court decreed the plaintiffs' suit upon the findings that Kalidashi advanced Rs. 30,000/- to Durgadas Chatterjee; W. C. Banerjee — the father of Kalidashi, made a gift of the said money to his widowed daughter; Kalidashi became absolute owner of the suit premises by purchase and the limitation of her interest created in the Conveyance was unlawful under Sec. 11 of the Transfer of Property Act and not binding upon the plaintiffs. The learned Subordinate Judge further observed that under the Indian Law the vendor has no right to limit the interest of the purchaser in the deed by which the property had been transferred absolutely to the purchaser. The vendor was not competent to abridge the interest of the vendee in the habendum.

5. On appeal, the court of appeal below set aside the judgment and decree of the trial court and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit upon the view that Kalidashi was the holder of a life estate only, so the Will made by her, upon foundation of which the plaintiffs brought their action must fail. It found, that total consideration for the Conveyance was Kalidashi's money; the disposition the Conveyance Ext. I made, was not absolute interest in favour of Kalidashi. So that grant did not offend Section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act.

6. Mr. Ghosh, appearing on behalf of the appellant, contended that having found that the consideration for the Conveyance was Kalidashi's money, the court of appeal below erred in holding that Kalidashi by a "self-denying ordinance" limited the right, title and interest which passed to her by the said Conveyance to a life estate. Absolute right was conveyed by the vendor upon Kalidashi and it was beyond the competence of the vendor who transferred all his right, title and interest in properties covered by the said Conveyance to the purchaser, to limit or restrict the right of Kalidashi in properties transferred, to a life estate only or to create rights in favour of persons who were not parties to the said Conveyance. Mr. Ghosh, further contended that Court of appeal below erred in law in holding that the restrictive covenant provided for, in the habendum in Ext. 1, did not offend Section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act.

7. The habendum in the Conveyance reads as follows:—

"To have and to hold the said messuages tenements or dwelling houses lands hereditaments and premises hereby granted or expressed so to be free from all encumbrances unto and to the use of the said purchaser Sreemati Kalidashi Devi to be held by her for the term of her natural life as the estate of a Hindu widow and from and after her death to her three sons Samaresh Chandra Mukherjee, Sikharesh Chandra Mukherjee and Sunil Chandra Mukherjee to be held by them as tenants in common during their representatives lives without power of anticipation and after their death unto and to the use of their respective heirs absolutely and forever".

8. In a gift the donor may impose condition upon the donee or restrict the enjoyment of the property gifted and that condition and limitation must be accepted by donee during the life time of the donee. A limited interest can also be created by a Will; by a deed of partition or by a family settlement. But it is impossible to conceive a deed of Conveyance creating a life estate by the vendor in favour of the vendee. The Conveyance is not required to be accepted by the purchaser as in the case of a gift. There is no evidence that Kalidashi imposed upon her the "self-denying ordinance" or created "an implied trust" by imposing a limitation upon herself. Undoubtedly she was capable and competent to impose upon her restriction on her proprietary rights but she could not by a collateral agreement annex a condition to an absolute grant. The learned Additional District Judge found no word of limitation being there in the premises, but the habendum, a special provision prevailed over the general provision in the Conveyance. It was not open to Kalidashi to say that she had accepted the Conveyance minus "habendum". According to the learned Judge, Kalidashi created an implied trust by imposing a limitation on herself, it was her creation, a "self-denying ordinance". Vendor divested himself of all he had. His right, title and interest was extinguished. The new right came into being was the right of Kalidashi for her life and after her, of others. Kalidashi could and did limit her own interest.

9. When a property is transferred absolutely, it must be transferred with all its legal incidents, the vendor is not competent to sever from the right of property incidents which the law inseparably annexes to it, and thereby to abrogate the law by private arrangement, creating a life estate in favour of the vendee in a deed of Conveyance.

10. A purchaser cannot limit her own interest in a Conveyance executed by her vendor. She can do so by executing a deed by herself.

11. Mr. Mukherjee, appearing on behalf of the respondent, contended that in the instant case, transfer was not absolute, so provisions of Section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act, were not attracted. In support of his contentions he referred to the following decisions:—

(a) Kedarnath v. Gayanath, AIR 1930 Cal 731; (b) Kandarpa Mohan Gossain v. Akhoy Chandra Bose, AIR 1934 Cal 379; (c) Kamakhya Dat Ram v. Khushal Chand, 38 Cal WN 477; (AIR 1934 PC 72); (d) Ammireddi Sotamma v. Ammireddi Venkataratnam, AIR 1952 Mad 166.

12. I will deal with the cases referred to by Mr. Mukherjee later on.

13. The court of appeal below held that grant was absolute, no word of limitation being there in the premises, the habendum was the only place where intention should manifest itself. The habendum, a special provision, therefore prevails over the general provisions elsewhere in the Conveyance.

14. Mr. Mukherjee could not place a single decision in support of the proposition as laid down by the learned Judge of the court of appeal below that a habendum prevails over the general provisions elsewhere in the Conveyance.

15. Mr. Mukherjee referred to Norton's On Deed and Prideaux's Forms and Presidence in Conveyancing. It is said in Norton's On Deed's that the right conferred in the premises cannot be abridged in the habendum. With regard to English Rules of conveyancing, in Barmanaya v. Kalicharan Singh, (1911) 15 Cal WN 393 (PC) the Privy Council observed "Rules of construction are rules designed to assist in ascertaining intention, and the applicability of many such rules depends upon the habits of thought and modes of expression prevalent among those to whose language they are applied. English rules of construction have grown up side by side with a very special law of property in a very artificial system of conveyancing and the success of those rules in giving effect to the real Intention of those whose language they are used to interpret depends not more upon their original fitness for that purpose than upon the facts that English documents of a formal kind are ordinarily framed with a knowledge of the very rules of construction which are afterwards applied to them. It is a very serious thing to use such rules in interpreting the instrument of Hindus, who view most transaction from a different point, think differently, and speak differently from Englishmen and who have never heard of the rules in question."

16. The Rules of English mode of Conveyancing cannot prevail over the conception of 'sale' in Transfer of Property Act.

17. In AIR 1930 Cal 731 the first case cited by Mr. Mukherjee, the question arose whether a direction against the alienation made in a Will bequeathing a life estate on the donee was valid under Section 138 of the Indian Succession Act. It is held that where the bequest is of a life estate it cannot be said that it is bequeathed absolutely. That decision is not applicable to the facts and circumstances of the present case.

18. In AIR 1934 Cal 379, Mr. Mukherjee drew my attention to certain observations at page 383 of the report where it was observed "you may prohibit alienation absolutely; you may restrict it by prohibiting a particular class of alienation; you may restrict it by prohibiting it to a particular class of individual; or you may restrict alienation by restricting it to a particular time." That observations were made in the context of one's power to dispose of the Shebaitship. It was not a case of sale. In 38 Cal WN 477 = (AIR 1934 PC 72) it was also a case for construction of a Will.

19. The Madras case referred to by Mr. Mukherjee reported in AIR 1942 Mad 166 is, with regard to a construction of a partition deed. As I have said already that by a gift, by a Will, by a partition or by a family settlement, a limited interest can be created. So, all the decisions referred to by Mr. Mukherjee do not solve the real point in controversy.

20. Where a transfer is not absolute, Section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act has got no application. That proposition is well-settled and it is not disputed by Mr. Ghose. The real point for consideration is, whether a life estate can be created by a deed by the vendor. If it can be created, then the transfer in the instant case is not absolute. So, the provision of Section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act do not come in at all. But once it is found that a transferee of a property, takes an absolute interest, he cannot be restrained in his enjoyment of disposition of it by condition inserted in the transfer. The transferor has no right to prescribe the methods in which property transferred should be applied or enjoyed by the transferee (Vide, Chamaru Sahu v. Sona Koer, (1912) 16 Cal WN 99 = 14 Cal LJ 308).

21. So, in my view, a habendum cannot override Section 54 of the Transfer of Property Act. A sale is a transfer of ownership of the property. By a transfer, a transferor divested himself of his interest in the property to the transferee. Thereafter he has got no right to create a life estate in favour of a transferee. If any condition or limitation is imposed in the deed of Conveyance that are repugnant to Section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act.

22. Accordingly, I hold that restrictions imposed in the habendum in the deed of Conveyance Ext. 1, are invalid and repugnant under Section 11 of the Transfer of Property Act. Kalidashi became the absolute owner of the premises No. 51/A & 51/B, Lansdowne Road, by purchase and she had right to dispose of the same by a Will.

23. Let the plaintiff No. 1 be declared as Shebait in terms of the Will of Kalidashi Devi.

24. In the result, this appeal is allowed with costs, the judgment and decree of the court of appeal below are set aside and that of the trial court with respect to plaintiff No. 1 are restored. Hearing fee being assessed at 5 gold mohurs. Leave under clause 15 of the Letters Patent is prayed for and granted.

Appeal allowed.

(A) Houses and Rents — West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act (12 of 1956), Section 20 — Applicability — Applies to a suit or proceeding by landlord against tenant for recovery of possession simpliciter — Other suits or proceedings by a landlord against tenant in a competent court, not barred.

(B) Houses and Rents — West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act (12 of 1956), Section 20 — Joinder of parties and causes of action — Provisions of O. 1, Rr. 3 and 5 and O. 2, R. 3, Civil P. C. govern joinder of parties and causes of action — They are not abrogated or repealed by Section 20 — (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908), O. 1, Rr. 3 and 5 and O. 2, R. 3). (Para 6)

Where a suit was filed for recovery of possession of A schedule premises against tenant defendant 1 and for possession of B Schedule premises against defendants 1 and 2 as trespassers, for declaration of title in respect of B Schedule premises and for damages, it was held that the suit was not bad for multifariousness as common questions of fact and law would arise if suits in respect of A and B Schedules were filed separately. It was further held that High Court would not be justified in interfering with the discretionary order of trial Court allowing the suit to proceed as the plea of multifariousness was raised more than five years after framing of issues and other proceedings had taken place.

C. Banerjee and Rathindranath Battacharjee, for Petitioner; Samarendra Kumar Dutta and Pramatha Nath Palit, for Opposite Parties.

SANKAR PRASAD MITRA, J.:—

This Rule was obtained against an Order of the Third Subordinate Judge at Alipore in Title Suit No. 50 of 1962 made on the 21st January, 1970. By this Order the Subordinate Judge has overruled two objections to the maintainability of the Suit. The first objection was with regard to misjoinder of parties and cause of action. And the second objection was based on Section 20 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 challenging the jurisdiction of the Court to try the Suit.

2. Briefly speaking the facts are that the plaintiff is the owner of premises No. 24 Russa Road South, Post Office, Tollygunge in the District of 24-Parganas which subsequently came to be known as premises No. 91, Deshapran Sasmal Road. The building appears to be a fairly large one consisting of 32 rooms and three shop rooms facing the road. The plaintiff's case is that originally the defendant No. 1 became a tenant in respect of 23 rooms in this property. These 23 rooms have been described in Schedule 'A' to the plaint. In 1959, alleges the plaintiff, the defendant No. 1 and her husband the defendant No. 2 resisted the plaintiff's ingress to and egress from the premises in Suit. In 1960, the defendant No. 1 started depositing the rents payable in respect of the aforesaid 23 rooms with the Rent Controller but in making these deposits the defendant No. 1 described herself to be the tenant of the entire premises. The plaintiff's further allegation is that in January 1961 both the defendants trespassed into the other nine rooms which we have mentioned above and these nine rooms have been described in schedule 'B' to the plaint. The plaintiff has also alleged that the defendant No. 2 has converted all the thirtytwo rooms aforesaid into a Factory without the plaintiff's consent although the original tenancy for 23 rooms was for residential purposes only. In the last paragraph, that is to say, paragraph 16 of the plaint it is alleged: "That in the facts and circumstances set forth in this plaint the defendant No. 2 is made a party (to) this Suit and more particularly for the act of trespass committed by him also in respect of properties mentioned in Schedule 'B' (to) this plaint, and also for the fact that he is the husband of (the) defendant No. 1 and whatever has been done by (the) defendant No. 1 has been done in conspiracy with (the) defendant No. 2 in respect of the disputed premises." The plaintiff's prayers, inter alia, are (a) decree for recovery of Khas possession in respect of property described in Schedule 'A' by evicting the defendant No. 1 therefrom; (b) decree for damages in respect of Schedule 'A' properties from 1-4-1962 till Khas possession is obtained; (c) declaration of title and recovery of possession in respect of property described in Schedule 'B' after evicting the defendants therefrom and (d) a preliminary decree for mesne profits in respect of Schedule 'B' properties.

3. The first contention of the petitioner before us is that the Subordinate Judge's Court has no jurisdiction to try the Suit for recovery of possession of 'A' Schedule properties. Such a Suit, according to counsel for the petitioner, should have been instituted in the Munsiff's Court.

4. This contention is founded on the provisions of Section 20 of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956. The provisions are as follows: "Notwithstanding anything contained in other law, a Suit or proceeding by a landlord against a tenant in which recovery of possession of any premises to which this Act applies is claimed shall lie to the Courts, as set out in the Schedule, and no other Court shall be competent to entertain or try such Suit or proceeding."

5. There is no dispute that where a landlord institutes a Suit or proceeding against a tenant merely claiming recovery of possession of any premises to which the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 applies the Suit or proceeding can be instituted only in the Court specified in the Schedule to the Act depending on valuation. But we do not find in these provisions any bar express or implied to joinder of parties and causes of action provided that such joinder is permissible in law. To us it seems that Section 20 applies to a Suit or proceeding by a landlord against a tenant for recovery of possession simpliciter. The section does not stand in the way of institution of a Suit or proceeding other than simply a Suit or proceeding by a landlord against a tenant for possession in a Court competent to try such Suit or proceeding. And neither the non-obstante Clause nor the Clause "no other Court shall be competent etc." can operate as a bar to such a Suit or proceeding. In the instant case we have to consider the provisions of Order 1, Rule 3, Order 1, Rule 5 and Order 2, Rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure. These provisions are as follows:

Order 1, Rule 3 — All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction of series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, if separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise.

Order 1, Rule 5 — It shall not be necessary that every defendant shall be interested as to all the relief claimed in any Suit against him.

O. 2, R. 3(1) — Save as otherwise provided, the plaintiff may unite in the same Suit, several causes of action against the same defendant, or the same defendants jointly, and any plaintiffs having causes of action in which they are jointly interested against the same defendant or the same defendants jointly may unite such causes of action in the same Suit.

(2) Where causes of action are united, the jurisdiction of the Court as regards the Suit shall depend on the amount or value of the aggregate subject-matters at the date of instituting the Suit.

6. These are the relevant provisions for joinder of parties and causes of action. In our opinion these provisions have neither been abrogated nor been repealed by Section 20 of the West Bengal Tenancy Act, 1956. Section 20 does not lay down that the Cause of action for a Suit for possession by a landlord against a tenant cannot be joined in a proper Suit with another Cause of action. The position, therefore, is that the Subordinate Judge had jurisdiction to try the Suit as framed if he was satisfied that there was a proper joinder of parties and causes of action.

7. We now proceed to discuss whether under the aforesaid provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure the plaintiff has properly framed his Suit. The plaintiff admittedly is the owner of the premises. The series of acts alleged in the plaint in respect of the premises are (a) the defendant No. 1 became a tenant of Schedule 'A' properties (b) in 1959 the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 prevented the plaintiff from entering into the premises (c) in 1960 the defendant No. 1 started depositing rents for the entire property with the Rent Controller (d) in January 1961 the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 trespassed into the 'B' Schedule properties and (e) the defendant No. 1 in conspiracy with the defendant No. 2 has converted a residential property into a factory without the plaintiff's consent. Assuming that the plaintiff had filed two Suits one against the defendant No. 1 only for recovery of possession of 'A' Schedule properties in the Court of the Munsiff under the provision of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956 and the other in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for recovery of possession of 'B' Schedule properties on the ground that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had trespassed into these properties, the common questions of facts that the plaintiff had to prove in both the Suits were: (1) that the defendant No. 1 was a tenant of 23 rooms only and had trespassed into 9 rooms along with the defendant No. 2 (2) the deposits which the defendant No. 1 made with the Rent Controller were not for the entire premises but for 23 rooms only.

8. If the plaintiff had succeeded in establishing these two common facts a further common question of law would have arisen as to the validity of the deposits in view of the provisions of Section 22 (2) of the West Bengal Premises Tenancy Act, 1956.

9. In these circumstances, we cannot but hold that the plaintiff was justified in order to avoid, multiplicity of Suits and proceedings and also the possibility of conflicting decisions, in bringing one consolidated Suit covering both the 'A' Schedule and 'B' Schedule properties. To us it seems that this is the precise reason why the aforesaid provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure have been introduced.

10. We may now refer to a few decided cases. The earliest case on the subject to which our attention has been drawn is the case of Ramendra Nath Ray v. Brojendra Nath Dass, 21 Cal WN 794 = (AIR 1918 Cal 858). In this case the plaintiff asserted that he was the owner of certain bales of jute and the Defendant B. N. D. obtained possession of the same and of the documents of title relating thereto (namely ten bills of lading and railway receipts) by means of fraud. B. N. D. transferred nine of the documents of title to C. & Co. and C. & Co. transferred them to L. J. M. & B. Bros. One railway receipt was pledged by B. N. D. with B. N. B. Part of the goods were taken delivery of by L. J. M. and part stopped by the plaintiff in transit. Plaintiff brought an action praying in the alternative for the recovery of goods and documents of title relating thereto or the value of the goods making B. N. D., C. Co. L. J. M. B. Bros. and B. N. B. party defendants. A Division Bench of this Court has held that the defendants were properly joined in the Suit under the provisions of Order 1, Rule 1 and Order 1, Rule 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Mr. Justice Woodroffe at page 802 observes:

"..... The next question then is whether the joinder in the present case is justified by that rule (that is Rule 3. of Order 1). It is contended that it is not, it being argued that there are different sets of transaction and no common question of law or fact. The foundation of the case, on which the rest of it depends, is the alleged fraud of B. N. Das. If such fraud is proved the question is did the defendants who all claim under B. N. Das obtain any title? If the plaintiff fails to prove fraud on the part of B. N. Das, the case fails against all the defendants. If he proves fraud, it may be that the defendants may have a different answer by way of defence; but that does not make the case any the less one of a common question of law and fact. The same act or transaction which concerns all parties is the alleged fraud of B. N. Das, and this involves a common question of law or fact. All defendants have derived title from a person who is alleged to have obtained the goods by means of fraud. By reason of this the possession of all is alleged to be wrongful. Whether a common question arises may be tested by seeing what the evidence will be It is true so far as the plaintiff's cause of action, as based on the fraud of B. N. Das, is concerned though there may be some facts which are particular to particular parties being offered in the proof of the Plaintiff's case (i.e., present possession of the goods as a result of such fraud) or by the defendants as part of their defence. The rule does not say that all questions must be common. It is sufficient that there is a common question. In my opinion, then, the plaint is within the provisions of Order 1, Rule 3"

11. We have already discussed the series of acts alleged in the plaint herein relating to the premises in Suit. We have also said that one common question of fact arises with respect to both the defendants and that common question is whether the defendant No. 1 is a tenant of the entire premises or only a portion thereof. Mr. Banerjee, learned counsel for the petitioner has urged that the defendant No. 2 is not at all interested in the eviction of the defendant No. 1 from 23 rooms in the premises. In other words so far as these 23 rooms are concerned no relief can be or has been claimed against the defendant No. 2. But that in our opinion does not make the Suit bad for misjoinder of parties and causes of action. Rule 5 of Order 1 of the Code specifically provides that it shall not be necessary that every defendant shall be interested in all the reliefs claimed in any Suit against him. In Ramendra Nath Ray's case also all the defendants were not concerned with all the reliefs claimed in the Suit. This contention of Mr. Banerjee, therefore, cannot be upheld.

12. A number of decisions on the relevant provisions of Orders 1 and 2 of the Code were placed before us but we need not refer to all of them. The next case we intend to rely on is the case of Kamala Prosad Gupta v. Chaman Lal Agarwalla, (1962) 66 Cal WN 391. This is also a judgment of a Division Bench. The Rule arises out of a suit for recovery of possession of the disputed property from the defendants after a declaration of the plaintiff's tenancy right therein under the defendants Nos. 3 and 4, a declaration of determination of the defendant No. 1's tenancy under the plaintiff and a further declaration that defendant No. 2 is a trespasser. An objection was taken to the maintainability of the suit on the ground that it was bad for multifariousness. In the plaint, there was a specific allegation of conspiracy amongst all the defendants for keeping the plaintiff out of possession of the disputed property, but the learned trial Judge held that this mere allegation of conspiracy would not be sufficient for a lawful joinder of the several causes of action against the several defendants and that, accordingly, it would be no answer to the defence objection of multifariousness. This Court made the Rule absolute and set aside the order of the Trial Judge. This Court was of the view that the allegation of conspiracy in the plaint, as it stood, would be sufficient for uniting or joining the several causes of action against several defendants under O. 1, R. 3 of the Code. This Court has pointed out that the provision in Rule 3 of Order 1 has been liberally interpreted by courts and its scope has never been attempted to be narrowed down or restricted. It is stated in the judgment that on the plaintiff's case, his claims are inter-connected, the several transactions conforming the basis of his claims being so inter-linked that they may be regarded as constituting one series of transactions within the meaning of Order 1, Rule 3 out of which the plaintiff's right to relief arises. This Court has said that it is true that, in the plaint, there are also other claims, namely, of arrears of rent and mesne profits but those are only incidental or consequential reliefs flowing from or arising out of the main relief for recovery of possession. This Court has held that the Civil Procedure Code expressly permits joinder of defendants and causes of action not only where the right to relief against the several defendants exists jointly but also severally or in the alternative and does not require that all the defendants should be interested in all the reliefs.

13. To our mind the main principles enunciated in this judgment apply to the facts of this case. It is true that the plaintiff has claimed recovery of possession of 23 rooms against the defendant No. 1 and recovery of possession of 9 rooms against the defendants Nos. 1 and 2. But the series of acts which the plaintiff has alleged including deposit of rent by the defendant No. 1 with the Rent Controller for the whole premises and the conversion of a residential building into a Factory by both the defendants are so interlinked that we cannot throw out the Suit on the ground of misjoinder of parties and causes of action.

14. There is one other feature of this case we wish to deal with. Learned Advocate appearing for the plaintiff placed before us from the records a few facts concerning the conduct of the two defendants in this Suit. The plaintiff instituted the Suit on the 25th May, 1962. On July 4, 1963, the trial Court framed the issues. On July 8, 1963 the trial Court made an Order for analogous hearing of this Suit and another Suit which the plaintiff had instituted in 1959, inter alia, for an injunction restraining the defendants from preventing the plaintiff's ingress to and egress from the premises. The defendants obtained a Rule against this order. The Rule was discharged on April 7, 1967. Thereafter the trial Court on June 3, 1967 made an Order for local inspection of the Suit premises. The defendants again obtained a Rule against this Order. The second Rule was discharged on January 9, 1968. And it was after the discharge of these two Rules by this Court, as late as the 17th September, 1968, the two defendants made the present application objecting to the maintainability of the Suit on the ground of jurisdiction and multifariousness. The objections were overruled and the trial Judge passed his Order on January 21, 1970. Immediately thereafter the defendants obtained the present Rule.

15. On these facts this Rule ought to be discharged so far as the plea of multifariousness is concerned. This Court in Ranjit Kumar Pal Chowdhury v. Murari Mohan Pal Chowdhury, AIR 1958 Cal 710 at page 713 in paragraph 13 observed: "The rule of multifariousness is a rule of convenience and it is primarily in the discretion of the Court to decide whether the plaintiff should be allowed to proceed with different causes of action in the same suit upon a consideration of all the facts and circumstances of the case. The omission of the defendants to raise the plea for a period of more than twelve years from the date of the framing of the issues, is fatal to their claim." In our case the plea of multifariousness was raised more than five years after the framing of issues and after various other proceedings have taken place both in the trial Court and in this Court. From this point of view also we would not be justified in interfering with the trial Court's discretion exercised in favour of the plaintiff.

16. In the result the Rule is discharged. There will be no order as to costs. The learned Advocate for the petitioner states that the Miscellaneous Appeal which the petitioner had filed against the said impugned order of the trial Judge has already been dismissed. Let the records be sent back to the trial Court expeditiously.

JANAH, J.:— 17. I agree.

Rule discharged.

AMIYA KUMAR MOOKERJI, J.

The Corporation of Calcutta, Petitioner v. The Building Tribunal and, others, Opposite Parties.

Civil Revn. No. 1573 of 1966, D/- 2-3-1972.

Calcutta Municipal Act (33 of 1951), Sections 6, 24, 34, 414 and 414-A — Powers and position of Commissioner — Order to demolish unauthorised construction — Review of order rejected — Appeal beyond limitation — Commissioner not impleaded — Appeal held bad and defective.

In view of the provisions of Sections 6, 24 and 34, when the Commissioner exercises statutory functions in regard to which he is the sole authority, he does not exercise powers as an agent of the Corporation. (Para 8)

After a notice under Section 414 (1) with respect to an unauthorised construction, the Commissioner passed an order on 15-5-1963 to demolish it under Section 414 (3). Stay and review applications were rejected finally on 21-1-1966 as there was no provision in the Act for review. However, provision for appeal against the order for demolition was introduced for the first time by Section 414-A from 1-4-1965. Appeal was, thereupon, filed before the Building Tribunal against the order rejecting review. The appeal was only against the Corporation without impleading the Commissioner.

Held (i) that the appeal which was against the order of demolition was on the face of it, time barred. (Para 6)

(ii) that as the order of demolition was passed by the Commissioner, his absence as a party to appeal rendered the appeal bad and defective and therefore liable to be set aside. (Para 8)

Sunil Kumar Basu, for Petitioner; Mrs. Kanika Banerjee, for Opposite Parties.

ORDER:— This Rule was obtained by the Corporation of Calcutta. It is directed against the appellate order of the Building Tribunal passed in an appeal under Section 414-A of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951.

2. The opposite party No. 2 as proprietor of Sree Printers & Binders and as the Managing Director of Essche Printers Pvt. Ltd., is a monthly tenant of a structure in the ground floor of premises No. 42, Dharamtolla Street Calcutta, since April, 1955. Sometime in the year 1960, by two letters dated 25-8-1960 and 3-9-1960 complaint was made by the owner as well as some co-tenants of the said premises, to the City Architect and the Commissioner of the Corporation of Calcutta respectively, that the said opposite party No. 2 without any permission covered the open space with corrugated sheets and constructed a room on the corridor space, thus created an unauthorised structure. On receipt of the said complaint, the site was inspected. Two unauthorised sheds of C. I. Sheets in the side space were detected. The said unauthorised sheds infringed Rules 32 and 33 of Schedule XVI of Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951. Thereupon, on 30th July 1962, a notice under Section 414 (1) of the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951, (hereinafter referred to as the Act) was served upon the said opposite party No. 2. On receipt of the said notice, the opposite party No. 2 on 4th August, 1962, addressed a letter to the City Architect of the Corporation of Calcutta, wherein he denied any construction, addition and alterations and, contended that the existing structures were more than 12 years old. Thereafter, on the 15th of May, 1963, the Commissioner passed an order of demolition under Section 414 (3) of the Act after duly intimating the said opposite party No. 2 the date of hearing which was fixed on 15th May, 1963. The opposite party No. 2, however, did not appear before the Commissioner at the date of the hearing of the demolition case. Immediately after the said order of demolition was passed, the said opposite party No. 2 by his letter dated 23rd May, 1963, asked the Commissioner, Calcutta Corporation, for rehearing of the case, and stay of the implementation of the order that passed on 15th of May 1963. The Commissioner rejected the prayer for review. Thereupon, a Lawyer's notice purported to be under Section 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure was served upon the Commissioner and the Special Officer (Building), Corporation of Calcutta, by the opposite party No. 2 expressing his intention to file a suit for setting aside order of the Commissioner and for other reliefs. A reply was sent thereto intimating that the Commissioner's order should not be stayed unless an injunction was obtained from a Civil Court. Thereafter, on the 17th of December, 1963, the opposite party No. 2 again applied to the Commissioner for review of his order passed on 15th May, 1963. On 4th of April, 1960, (1964?) the Commissioner declined to grant review and by a letter dt. 16th of March, 1963 (1965?) addressed to the opposite party No. 2 asked him to carry out the order of demolition. By Amending Act XVIII of 1964, Section 414-A was brought into force on the 1st April, 1965. The right of appeal was given under that section against the order of the Commissioner passed under sub-section (3) of Section 414 within the 30 days from the date of such order. On 16th of March, 1965, notice was given to the opposite party No. 2 to carry out the demolition order dated 15th of May, 1963. On the 20th of June, 1965, the opposite party No. 2 again applied for the third time for the review of the demolition case. On 21st January, 1966, the Commissioner rejected the opposite party No. 2's said application after hearing the parties. Thereafter on the 19th February, 1966, the opposite party No. 2 filed an appeal before the Building Tribunal under Section 414-A of the Act against the order dated 21-1-1966 passed by the Commissioner by which the opposite party No. 2's application for review had been rejected. The said appeal was filed against the Corporation of Calcutta and the Commissioner was not made a party. On 13th April, 1966, the Building Tribunal allowed the opposite party No. 2's appeal upon the findings that the sheds in question were erected more than 12 years before the issue of notice in sub-section (1) of Section 414. Accordingly, provisions of Section 414, clause (4) would be attracted. Therefore, no action could be taken under that section in respect of the sheds and as a result, the demolition case against the opposite party No. 2 was liable to be dropped.

3. Being aggrieved against the said appellate order of the Building Tribunal, the Corporation of Calcutta moved this Court on an application under Article 227 of the Constitution and obtained the present Rule.

4. Mr. Basu, appearing on behalf of the petitioner made a two-fold submission. In the first place he contended that as the order dated 21st of January, 1966, was not an order passed under Section 414 (3) of the Act, but the said order was merely an order rejecting a review application inasmuch as the order for demolition under Section 414 (3) of the Act was made on the 15th of May, 1963, and that order could not be set aside by the Tribunal under the provisions of the Section 414-A of the Act; moreover, the order dated 21-1-1966 could not be set aside while the order dated 15th of May, 1963, remained valid and subsisting, thereby the Building Tribunal exercised its jurisdiction not vested in it by law.

5. Under the Calcutta Municipal Act, 1951, there was no provision for review. The provisions of appeal under Section 414-A was introduced for the first time by the Amending Act XVIII and from 1st April, 1965. Section 414-A of the Act reads as follows:

"Any person dissatisfied with the order of the Commissioner made under sub-section (3) of Section 414 may, within 30 days from the date of the order, present an appeal accompanied by a copy of the order to the Tribunal constituted under Section 391-B (and the President of the Tribunal) may stay the execution of the order for such period or periods as (he may think fit) or until the disposal of the appeal."

6. It appears that in the instant case the order of demolition was passed on the 15th May, 1963, and the opposite party No. 2's appeal was filed on the 19th of February, 1966. So, on the face of it the said appeal was barred by limitation. Therefore I am of opinion that the Tribunal had outstepped the limits of its jurisdiction by entertaining the opposite party No. 2's Appeal under Section 414-A of the Act, and its order cannot be sustained.

7. Mr. Basu next contended that as Commissioner of Corporation of Calcutta had not been made a party in the said appeal preferred by the opposite party No. 2, the order of the Building Tribunal setting aside the order of the Commissioner passed under S. 414 (3) of the Act was illegal and without jurisdiction.

8. Under Section 6 of the Act the three authorities, namely, (a) The Corporation, (b) The Standing Committees and (c) the Commissioner are charged with carrying out the provisions of the Act. Under Section 24 of the Act, the Municipal Government of Calcutta is vested in the Corporation but the Corporation shall not be entitled to exercise or discharge any powers, duties or function expressly assigned to it by or under that Act or any other law to a Standing Committee or to the Commissioner. Under Section 34 of the Act, the Commissioner may delegate to any Municipal Officer any of his powers, duties or functions but not of those conferred under sub-section (3) of Section 414. So, where the Commissioner exercises statutory function, imposed upon him by the statute and in regard to which he is the sole authority, he does not exercise powers as an Agent of the Corporation and so, impleading of the Corporation is not enough for the purpose of challenging the impugned order passed by the Commissioner under Section 414 (3) of the Act. So the absence of the Commissioner as a party in the present appeal, has rendered the appeal bad and defective.

9. In the result this Rule is made absolute, the impugned order of the Building Tribunal is set aside and that of the Commissioner dated 15th of May, 1963, passed under Section 414

(3) of the Act, is restored. There will be no order as to costs.

Rule made absolute.

ANIL KUMAR SEN, J.

Sudhansu Sekhar Maity and others, Petitioners v. State of West Bengal and others, Respondents.

Civil Rule No. 3302 (w) of 1969, D/-
14-12-1972.

(A) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Ss. 4 and 6 — Notification for acquisition and declaration under Section 6 neither invoking delegate powers nor issued in appropriate form — Acquisition not vitiated for such irregularity.

If the authority has the power for any action taken, the act is competent and non recital or wrong recital of the authority for the action would not make the act incompetent or without jurisdiction. (Para 10)

Thus where the notification under Section 4 or the declaration under Section 6 did not invoke the delegated powers nor were the notifications and declarations issued in appropriate forms it would be a mere irregularity not affecting the substance which would not vitate the acquisition. AIR 1966 SC
334, Relied on. (Para 10)

(B) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Section 6 — Acquisition for establishment of subsidiary Port — Competency of State Government.

When establishment of a subsidiary port or a dock therein would undoubtedly serve at least the general public purpose even if it otherwise involves a purpose of the Union. It would not be beyond the authority of the State Government to acquire lands in exercise of its own powers and irrespective of the powers delegated by the Union Government in this respect. (Para 11)

Simply because the acquisition is for the purpose of setting up a subsidiary port, the purpose of the acquisition does not necessarily become solely a purpose of the Union. As it is a project which would not only be highly beneficial to the general public in this State but would serve public purposes in this State and as such the acquisition would be well supported on the ground that it is for a public purpose.
It is clearly so when the acquisition is being made at the expense of the local authority. AIR 1955 SC 810, Followed. (Para 11)

(C) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Section 6 — 'Purpose' — Undeclared purpose cannot be supported by declared purpose — However, real purpose, though undeclared, if it is well known it can be supported.

Port is a wider term of which dock may be a part but the dock itself cannot be equated with the port so that if the declared purpose of acquisition be establishment of a dock but the undeclared purpose be establishment of a port the undeclared purpose cannot be supported by the declared purpose. (Para 16)

Where however on a proper reading of the notifications and declarations on their well known background and along with the maps referred to therein, it could be held that the real declared purpose is not limited to establishment of the dock only then in spite of the defect and the irregularity in the terms of the notifications and declarations, the real declared purpose of the acquisition was completion of the Haldia project.
Such purpose being quite known to all concerned and the defect does not vitiate the acquisition and the acquisition is still well supported by a public purpose as there can be no doubt that the completion of the project by itself would be a public purpose within the meaning of Sections 4 and 6 of the said Act. Hence it cannot be said that acquisition is being made for a purpose other than the declared purpose and as such it is not in accordance with law. (Para 19)

(D) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Part 7 — Acquisition for establishment of subsidiary port — Grant of land to Indian Oil Corporation or Fertilizer Corporation of India — Propriety.

When the acquisition is not specifically made for these corporations or at their cost but the acquisition is for the project or the complex of which these corporations or their establishments constitute an integral part there can be no doubt that the establishments which would be run by these corporations as a part of the complex would be highly beneficial to the interest of the public. This being the position when the acquisition itself is for the project and at the cost of a local authority it can well be supported under Section 6 of the said Act and no question of following the provisions of Part 7 does at all arise. (Para 21)

(E) Land Acquisition Act (1894), Section 5-A — Second opportunity of hearing to owner of land not envisaged.

The Land Acquisition Act contemplates no second opportunity for making a representation after the enquiry under Section 5-A. The report that follows the enquiry is the recommendation of the Collector for consideration by the State Government along with the objections in the light of the enquiries held by him. No second opportunity to make further representation at this stage is contemplated by the statute and as such denial of a copy of the report cannot be said to have materially affected the petitioners' right to object. AIR 1968 SC 432, Followed. (Para 22)

(F) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Writ application against acquisition of land — For maintaining the application petitioners must make out a prima facie case that they are affected by such acquisition. (Para 24)

(G) Constitution of India, Art. 226 — Parties to petition— Misjoinder of parties and causes of action — Two independent acquisition proceedings based on two independent notifications and two independent declarations — Any or all of the petitioners not jointly interested in lands involved in proceedings — The two proceedings give separate cause of action and they cannot be joined in one petition. This cannot be supported under provision of Civil P. C. (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908), Order 1, Rule 1 and Order 2, Rule 3). AIR 1962 All 208, Relied on. (Para 25)

ORDER:— Two notifications under Section 4 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894 (hereinafter referred to as the said Act) and two consequent declarations under Section 6 of the said Act are the subject-matter of challenge in this Rule.

2. It would be necessary to set out the facts in short which are as follows. On May 5, 1959 a notification was issued by the State Government under Section 4 of the said Act. This notification merely recited that some land in the District of Midnapore is likely to be needed for a public purpose viz., establishment of a subsidiary port at the mouth of Haldia river. This notification further authorised the Engineers of the Commissioners for the port of Calcutta and the Local Officers for the time being engaged on the undertaking to enter upon and survey land and do all further acts required for the proper execution of their work. The notification further laid down the route for the survey through the sixty-eight villages chronologically set out in the said notification. One of such villages is mouja Hatiberia Police Station Sutahata, District Midnapore. This notification was issued in terms of paragraph 13 and in form 2 of the executive instructions contained in the West Bengal Land Acquisition Manual, 1951 Part I. Obviously, the notification was made to authorise local survey on a preliminary investigation for drawing up the scheme of a proposed project of establishment of a port subsidiary to the port of Calcutta.

3. As a result of the said investigation a proposed scheme was drawn up which was divided into five phases contemplated for its completion. Acquisitions were being made of lands covered by respective phases as and when works on those phases were being taken up by the requiring authority viz., the Commissioners for the port of Calcutta. Accordingly, on August 25, 1967 two notifications were issued again under Section 4 of the said Act. The first bearing No. 13998 L. A. was in respect of several plots set out in the notification in mouja Hatiberia Police Station Sutahata covering an area of 101.42 acres. The second one bearing No. 13991 L. A. was in respect of several other plots of the same mouja covering an area of 89.75 acres. Both these two notifications recited that the plots notified were likely to be needed for a public purpose viz., for the establishment of Haldia Dock at the expense of the Commissioners for the port of Calcutta.

4. On the issue of the said notifications under Section 4 notices inviting objections under Section 5-A of the said Act were also issued. Objections were entertained including one dated December 14, 1969 by or on behalf of the petitioners and others. An enquiry under Sec. 5-A was held on June 3, 1968 by the Special Land Acquisition Collector himself who submitted a report recommending overruling of the objections taken. The State Government accepted the recommendations and by an order dated November 4, 1968 overruled all objections. Consequently two declarations under Section 6 of the said Act one dated November 20, 1968 and the other dated November 25, 1968 covering the plots specified in the notifications under Section 4 were issued and were published in the Calcutta Gazette dated December 28, 1968. These two notifications under Section 4 and the two consequent declarations under Section 6 are the subject-matter of challenge in this Rule obtained by the sixty-one petitioners.

5. The Rule is being contested by respondents 1 to 4 who are the State of West Bengal and its Local Authorities and also by the added respondent No. 5 viz. the Commissioners for the port of Calcutta who are the requiring authorities for this acquisition. Two sets of affidavits have been filed by them.

6. Mr. Sinha appearing on behalf of the petitioners has raised four points in support of this Rule. In the first place, he has contended that establishment of a dock or a port is a Union purpose and for such a purpose the State Government could not have acquired the lands proposed to be acquired and certainly not in the manner proposed to be done. Secondly Mr. Sinha has contended that the actual purpose for which the lands are being acquired is materially different from the purpose declared in the notifications and the declarations and as such the proposed acquisition is unauthorised. Thirdly Mr. Sinha has contended that out of the sixty-eight villages covered by the first notification under Section 4 dated 5-5-1959, the State Government had already acquired vast tracts of lands covering thirty-eight villages which would be more than sufficient to meet the requirements of establishment of a dock and as such further acquisition of lands not really needed for such a purpose is colourable — more so when the requiring authority is transferring vast tracts of acquired lands to private companies and corporations at high premium though the lands are being acquired for the declared purpose of establishment of a dock. Lastly Mr. Sinha has contended that on June 24, 1968 and on several dates thereafter the petitioners had prayed for a copy of the report submitted by the Land Acquisition Collector on the enquiry under Section 5-A but their prayer for a copy of the said document having been denied they were denied a reasonable opportunity to make a representation to the State Government before disposal of the objections under Section 5-A; therefore, according to Mr. Sinha the declarations which followed in such a proceeding held in breach of the principles of natural justice are not in accordance with law and as such should be set aside.

7. Mr. Bose appearing on behalf of the State and its Authorities has contested each of the points raised by Mr. Sinha. Mr. Dutt, the learned Advocate for the added respondent, has also contested each of the points so raised by Mr. Sinha. Mr. Dutt has further raised a preliminary objection that the Writ petition is not maintainable both on the ground of misjoinder of petitioners and causes of action and on the ground that the petitioners had not made out specifically how they are affected by the impugned notifications or the declarations. As I do not propose to dispose of the rule solely on the preliminary objection raised by Mr. Dutt I will deal with these objections hereinafter. Further details of the arguments of the respective learned Advocates on the merits would be referred to hereinafter when I deal with the points raised by Mr. Sinha which I now propose to do in the same order as they have been raised by Mr. Sinha.

8. The first objection raised by Mr. Sinha appears also to have been raised in the objection under Section 5-A. Mr. Sinha relies on Entry 27, List I of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution. This entry runs as follows: "ports declared by or under law made by Parliament or existing law to be major ports, including their delimitation and the Constitution and powers of port authorities therein". Mr. Sinha next draws my attention to Entry 31, List 3 of the Seventh Schedule to the Constitution which reads: "ports other than those declared by or under law by Parliament or existing law to be major ports". According to Mr. Sinha the proposed acquisition is expressly for establishment of a port subsidiary to a major port like that of Calcutta or for the dock thereof. As such Mr. Sinha contends that it would come within Entry 27 of the Union list of the Seventh Schedule and the purpose of the acquisition must accordingly be construed to be Union purpose. Mr. Sinha next contends that if the purpose of acquisition is a purpose of the Union the acquisition must have been made either by the Union Government or by the State Government acting on the authority of the Union Government. He has drawn my attention to forms attached to the executive instructions to show that if the acquisition was for a purpose of the Union the notification under Section 4 should have been issued in form 2-A and not in form 2 and the declarations should have been issued in Form 3-A and not 3 as done in the present case. From the use of the forms and the manner of the issue of the notifications and the declarations Mr. Sinha contends that there can be no doubt that the acquisition is being made for a purpose other than a purpose of the Union. Accordingly Mr. Sinha contends that neither the notifications nor the declarations were validly made in the present case.

9. In dealing with this point it should first be noted that after the seventh amendment to the Constitution both entries 33 & 36 respectively of the Union list and the State list have now been deleted and entry 42 of the concurrent List has been appropriately amended to cover "acquisition and requisitioning of property". On this amendment acquisition is on the concurrent list and both the Union and the State are equally authorised to legislate on the subject of acquisition irrespective of purpose of such acquisition but subject to the usual limitations otherwise imposed by the Constitution. Thus acquisition irrespective of whether it is for the purpose of the State or the Union being within the legislative competence of the State is also within its executive powers. According to Banerjee, J. in the case of Gadadhar v. State of West Bengal, (1963) 67 Cal WN 460 at p. 470, after such amendment it is wholly inconsequential as to whether the acquisition is made for a purpose of the Union or the State. To quote his words:

"the disclosure that acquisition of land was being made for a purpose which was not the purpose of the Union; in the notification and the declaration, was possibly made under the time worn idea that since the State could legislate in the matter of land acquisition, for its own purpose only, every land acquisition by the State must be justified on that ground. After the Constitution Seventh Amendment Act, 1956 it was not necessary to make such a statement in the notification or the declaration, even if it was at all so necessary at a time when the Constitution had not been so amended".

This statement of the principle by Banerjee, J. can be well supported so long — as is usually the case — the State Governments are duly authorised on delegation of powers by the Union Government to acquire lands for a purpose of the Union. Because in the absence of such delegated authority on the statutory provisions of Sections 4 and 6 of the said Act read with the definition of the term 'appropriate Government' in Section 3(ee), the power of acquisition would otherwise be limited to the State or the Union Government respectively for purposes of the State or the Union.

10. Now in the present case it appears from the affidavit filed by the respondents Nos. 1 to 4 that by an appropriate notification dated May 14, 1955 issued under Art. 258 (1) of the Constitution the State Government in West Bengal was duly authorised by the Central Government to acquire land for the purposes of the Union. This factum of delegation is not disputed. If that is so, even if I assume that the purpose of the disputed acquisition is a purpose of the Union it would still be within the powers of the State Government to acquire and the acquisition cannot be struck down as beyond the competence of the State Government. Mr. Sinha, however, contends that in the present case neither the notifications under Section 4 nor the declarations under Section 6 invoke the delegated powers nor are the notifications and declarations issued in appropriate forms. In my view even if that be so, that would not vitiate the notifications or declarations. It would be a mere irregularity not affecting the substance which would not vitiate the acquisition. If the authority has the power for any action taken, the act is competent and non recital or wrong recital of the authority for the action would not make the act incompetent or without jurisdiction. Reference may be made to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Lekhraj v. Dy. Custodian, Bombay, AIR 1966 SC 334.

11. That apart, in my view there is great substance in the contention of Mr. Bose that simply because the acquisition is for the purpose of setting up a subsidiary port, the purpose of the acquisition does not necessarily become solely a purpose of the Union. According to Mr. Bose it is a project which would not only be highly beneficial to the general public in this State but would serve public purposes in this State and as such the acquisition would be well supported on the ground that it is for a public purpose. It is clearly so when the acquisition is being made at the expense of the local authority. Mr. Bose rightly relies on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of State of Bombay v. Ali Gulshan, AIR 1955 SC 810 in contending that there is no merit in the contention that merely because the purpose involves establishment of a port it serves no public purpose other than a purpose of the Union. In my view the following observations of the Supreme Court are clearly instructive, "that there is another way of looking at the question involved. An undertaking may have three different facets or aspects, and may serve the purpose of a State, the purpose of the Union and a general public purpose. Even if one may regard the requisition of a room for the accommodation of a member of a consulate as one appertaining to a Union purpose, it does not necessarily cease to be a State purpose or a general public purpose". Similar also was the view taken by this Court in the case of (1963) 67 Cal WN 460 (supra). Therefore, following the above view I must hold that when establishment of a subsidiary port or a dock therein would undoubtedly serve at least the general public purpose even if it otherwise involves a purpose of the Union, it would not be beyond the authority of the State Government to acquire lands in exercise of its own powers and irrespective of the powers delegated by the Union Government in this respect. In either view therefore this objection of Mr. Sinha must be overruled.

12. The second point raised by Mr. Sinha is of some importance. Although the initial notification under Section 4 recited the purpose to be establishment of a subsidiary port the same is now overriden by the impugned two notifications under Section 4 dated August 25, 1967. These two notifications along with the declarations under Section 6 undisputedly declared the purpose of the acquisition to be 'establishment of the Haldia Dock.' According to the petitioners establishment of the dock will not require more than 42 acres of land. Petitioners further state that much more than 42 acres had already been acquired for the said purpose in the thirty-eight villages in respect of which earlier acquisitions had been made. Petitioners allege that much of the lands already acquired are not being used for the establishment of the dock but are being used for various other purposes. Some of the lands have even been leased out to corporations and companies carrying on public and private enterprises. Petitioners' further grievance is that under the disputed acquisitions lands are being acquired not really for the purpose of establishment of dock but for other collateral purposes. The respondents 1 to 4 having broadly denied this allegation in paragraph 5 (c) of their affidavit-in-opposition, however, concede in paragraph 5 (c) that lands already acquired or sought to be acquired are being used for purposes other than establishment of the dock itself but claim such purposes to be incidental to the establishment of the dock; they have not denied the fact that some of the acquired lands are being leased out to corporations and companies but they have gone on to say; "It is difficult to imagine a dock without having ancillary industries surrounding it which are all interconnected with the existence of a dock and or which are part and parcel of a dock". This affidavit had been sworn by the Land Acquisition Collector himself and although the affidavit does not furnish any detailed information as to how the acquired lands are being used or for what actual avowed purpose the disputed acquisitions are being made such materials are to be found in the report submitted by the deponent of the said affidavit on an enquiry under Section 5-A of the said Act. This report has been made an exhibit in this case being exhibit A. I will quote in extenso from this report which clearly supports the complaint of the petitioners that actual purpose of the acquisition is not limited to the declared purpose. In page 4 of the report the Land Acquisition Collector states "preliminary notification was published for the purpose of establishment of a subsidiary port covering an area of 17 sq. miles and thereafter acquisitions are being made step by step according to the priority and the acquired lands are also being utilised for the project work. As regards the questions as to the purpose of notifications and the acquisition, I find little difference between the terms Port and Dock, which are almost the two coincident terms in the true sense of their meanings and purpose. There cannot be a port without a dock and vice-versa. The purpose of the Dock is to receive vessels for loading and unloading of goods and materials for export and import, for repair to the vessels and for construction and re-construction of vessels or ships. A port is a harbour where ships of all nations may load and unload and may be kept in safety. To serve the aforesaid purpose a vast area is necessary for making an artificial water basin and sidings for loading and unloading purpose and for making different parts of a vessel for its construction and repair, accommodation of offices, quarters for labourers and other staff, market place etc. Growth of various types of port based industries is quite likely within the port or dock area and such industries are absolutely necessary. For the greater national benefit the Port or the Dock area ultimately turns into an industrial town with all sorts of modern developments all centering round the Port or the Dock. From the view points of the very purpose stated above the Port and the Dock have practically no difference at all. Hence the purposes mentioned in the preliminary notification, as well as, in the subsequent notifications are the same and for this purpose a vast area including the objector's lands is necessary". The Collector then goes on to observe, "so the possibilities of the growth of port based industries, if any, within the area notified or the port or dock can hardly be considered as a purpose different from what has been mentioned in the notifications".

13. The affidavit read along with this report clearly establishes that the respondents were equating dock with the port and again were thinking of the port to include therein the entire complex of the project. This position is further clarified by the affidavit of the requiring authority the respondent No. 5. The material part of paragraph 6 of this affidavit recites: "I deny the allegations contained in paragraph 7 of the said petition and state that all lands acquired uptill now have been utilised for the following works (a) Construction of Dock (b) Dock Basin (c) Installation of Electricity (d) Police Station and Out-post (e) Staff quarters (f) Stabilisation Pond, (g) Railways' link for South Eastern Railway and C. P. C. (h) Oil jetty (i) Offices of the State and Central Government (j) Port Administrative office and Commercial offices (k) Internal Road connected with National High Way No. 6 (l) Pumping Station for supplying water, (m) Market, (n) Warehouse (o) Halipad (p) Post Office and Bank (q) Construction of building and re-building vessels (r) Training Institute and schools and colleges (s) Township of Port, State Govt. and Commercial establishment (t) Establishment of oil and fertilising factory (i) Indian Oil Corporation (ii) Fertilizer Corporation of India and (u) Rehabilitation for the evicted persons due to acquisition of land for the purpose of the establishment of Haldia Dock Project. I state in this connection that for the purpose of functioning of the Dock, factories, Oil industries, Chemical industries become ancillary to the main purpose i.e. the establishment of Dock and for these ancillary purposes, land is required to be allotted". The added respondent further admits that the establishment of the dock would require 92.80 acres of land and it is not denied that such quantum had already been acquired but asserts that for the establishment of the entire project 92.80 acres of land would be necessary and the acquisition is being made for the said purpose. There is candid admission in this affidavit by the added respondent that the acquisitions are being made to support completion of the project which contemplates a complex and a township.

14. On these facts Mr. Sinha contends that the acquisition is not being made really for the declared purpose of establishment of a dock. On the other hand, according to him acquisition is being made also for certain other purposes not declared either in the notification under Section 4 or on the declaration under Section 6. Petitioners, according to him, having been given no opportunity to file any objection against any proposed acquisition for such purpose other than establishment of dock, no enquiry was directed as to whether any land would be necessary for such a purpose or the disputed plots would be suitable for such purposes or not and above all there is no satisfaction arrived at by the State Government that acquisition of the disputed plots would be necessary for such other purposes. Mr. Sinha therefore contends that such an acquisition really for such an undeclared purpose is not in accordance with law. Strong reliance is placed by Mr. Sinha on the decision of Banerjee, J. in the case of (1963) 67 Cal WN 460 (supra) which indeed well supports him.

15. Mr. Dutt appearing on behalf of the added respondent has put forward four answers to this contention. In the first place, Mr. Dutt wanted to support the stand taken by the Land Acquisition Collector that within term 'establishment of dock' would come all the purposes set out in paragraph 6 of the affidavit-in-opposition of the added respondent. The term 'dock' is defined in Section 3 (3) of the Calcutta Port Act, 1890. This definition is "dock shall include all basin, cuts, quays, wharfs, warehouses, tramways and other works and things appertaining to any dock". He has also drawn my attention to Art. 860, Vol. 39 Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edn. where the term 'Port' has been explained to mean "port denotes a natural or artificial haven or access of the sea to which ships may conveniently come and at which they may load and unload. Consequently there will be in a port facilities either natural or artificial for loading and unloading, the latter being such facilities as quays, wharfs, warehouses docks, piers and jetties and a village or town in which those operating and using the port may dwell". Mr. Dutt has also drawn my attention to Art. 1250, Vol. 35 of the Halsbury's Laws of England 3rd Edn. which sets out the meaning of the term 'dock' as "a dock is an artificial enclosure, connected with a harbour or a river, provided for the reception of vessels, and is generally shut off from the harbour or river by gates for regulating the inflow or the outflow of water. A dock may be a dry or graving dock, that is, one which is used for the inspection and repair of vessels, or a wet dock, which is used for loading and unloading them. A dock may include a lock leading from it to a river".

16. In my view, however, there remains a fundamental distinction between a dock and a port and one cannot be equated with the other. Even definitions relied on by Mr. Dutt from Halsbury clearly establish the distinction. Port is a wider term of which dock may be a part but the dock itself cannot be equated with the port so that if the declared purpose of acquisition be establishment of a dock but the undeclared purpose be establishment of a port the undeclared purpose cannot be supported by the declared purpose. It should be noted that in the present case the declarations under Section 6 are not resting on the notification of the year 1959 but are resting on the notifications dated August 25, 1967 which declare the purpose to be establishment of a dock. Mr. Dutt seriously contends that when the definition of the term 'dock' in the Calcutta Port Act is an inclusive definition and includes works or things appertaining to dock it would cover within it all the purposes set out in paragraph 6 of the affidavit in opposition of the respondent No. 5. I am unable to accept this suggestion of Mr. Dutt. Many of the purposes set out in paragraph 6 do not come within the sanction of the works which could be carried on by the Commissioners under the Calcutta Port Act. Reference may be made to Section 35 of the Calcutta Port Act which enumerates the different construction works which could be carried out by the Commissioners as part of their normal activity. Many of the purposes set out in paragraph 6 of the affidavit of respondent No. 5 are widely extraneous to the works so authorised by the Statute. In my view, it would be improper construction of the definition clause to construe all these wide ranges of purposes set out in paragraph 6 of the affidavit of respondent No. 5 as included within the term 'works and things appertaining to any dock'. In order to be appertaining to dock it should necessarily be a requisite for the dock or proximately connected therewith. Unfortunately many of the purposes like establishment of Oil and Fertilizer Factories, Indian Oil Corporation, Fertilizer Corporation of India and others are so widely different that they cannot be brought within the meaning of the term 'works and things appertaining to a dock'. Many of the purposes set out in this para. 6 may themselves be valid public purposes justifying acquisition by themselves but they do not by any stretch of the meaning of the term 'dock' come within the declared purpose of the acquisition. In this view I must overrule the suggestion and contention of Mr. Dutt as also the stand taken by the Land Acquisition Collector that all these purposes including the establishment of dock based industries would come within the sanction of the declared purpose of establishment of a dock.

17. The second answer of Mr. Dutt is to the effect that notwithstanding the fact that some of the lands already acquired are being used for purposes other than establishment of dock the lands under disputed acquisitions are to be used solely for the purposes of establishment of dock itself. It is true that Mr. Dutt tried to impress upon me this position with reference to the map produced by him but in the absence of any proper evidence explaining the same it is difficult to come to any finding that all the disputed lands would be used as suggested by Mr. Dutt. It must, however, be conceded that on the pleadings of the parties it is not at all clear as to how the disputed plots are intended to be used. Petitioners' grievance is with reference to the user of the land already acquired and on an apprehension that the disputed lands would also be so used. The respondents having broadly denied the case of the petitioners have also made admissions which support the apprehension that the actual user of the disputed plots may not be restricted to the declared purpose of establishment of dock. This is how the uncertainty on the pleadings come in. But upon the respondent's admission that establishment of the dock would require only 92.80 acres of land, it cannot but be held that at least a part of the land sought to be acquired under the disputed acquisition must be for a purpose other than establishment of the dock. In this view this contention of Mr. Dutt must also be overruled.

18. Mr. Dutt has next suggested that subsequent use of the acquired land for purposes other than for which they are being acquired would not vitiate the acquisition. Mr. Dutt relies on the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Luchmeswar Singh v. Darbhanga Municipality, (1891) ILR 18 Cal 99 (100) (PC) and in the case of Secy. of State v. Amulya Charan, AIR 1927 Cal 874. It should, however, be noted that the principles laid down in the decisions relied on by Mr. Dutt are wholly inapplicable so far as the present case is concerned. These cases are distinguishable from the present one and no issue as in the present case did arise for consideration in these decisions. In the Privy Council decision land was acquired at the expense of the Darbhanga Municipality for the purpose of construction of a public ghat. The lands so acquired having been used for the purpose of the ghat left a surplus which was then used for establishing a market. The acquisition was validly and lawfully made and a bona fide purpose viz., construction of a ghat supported the acquisition. User of the surplus for purpose other than the ghat for which it was originally acquired was held to be inconsequential. But here on the complaint of the petitioners the very purpose of acquisition is not the one declared in the notifications and the declarations. Their complaint is that the acquisition is being made for undeclared purposes on the cover of a sham declaration of a purpose. If this complaint be upheld the decisions relied on by Mr. Dutt will not support the respondents in any manner. In this view this contention and suggestion of Mr. Dutt must also be overruled.

19. The last answer put forward by Mr. Dutt appears to me to be sound. Mr. Dutt contends notifications and the declarations are somewhat defective in not setting out the real purpose of the acquisition which is quite known to all viz., the acquiring authority, the requiring authority as also the petitioners. Mr. Dutt has rightly pointed out that in the present case acquisition in a special manner was being made. Initially a preliminary notification was made under Section 4 for survey and framing of a scheme. The scheme was framed to include not only establishment of a dock but a complex of Haldia port. This complex included various items within it including the items specified in para. 6. The scheme itself was sub-divided phase-wise and acquisitions are being made for completing the project. It is on the basis of this scheme that the subsequent notifications under Section 4 impugned in the present case were issued. Although the declared purpose therein is establishment of a dock, on the known background and on the plan referred to in the notifications themselves it was well known to all that the acquisition was being made for the entire project. Petitioners also fully knew about it when they directed their objections to the fact that the declared purpose was not the real purpose for which the acquisition was being made. The authorities holding the enquiry under Section 5-A may have misconceived the legal position to think that the dock includes the entire project but it was quite known both to the objectors and the authorities that it is the project itself which was the purpose behind the acquisition of these plots. Petitioners' objections under Section 5-A clearly proceed on the basis that the lands are being acquired for the project itself. So also is basis for the recommendation of the Collector. State Government too took into consideration all the factors when it overruled the objection and directed completion of the acquisition. Mr. Dutt is well supported on this point by the following decisions relied on by him: Radha Swami Satsang Sabha v. Tara Chand, AIR 1939 All 557 (63) and Muhammad Qamar v. State of Bihar, AIR 1966 Pat 420. On the conclusions as above I hold that although the different purposes as set out in paragraph 6 of the affidavit of respondent No. 5 and as referred to in the report of the Collector do not come within the purpose of establishment of dock, yet on a proper reading of the notifications and declarations on their well known background and along with the maps referred to therein, I must hold that the real declared purpose is not limited to establishment of the dock only. In spite of the defect and the irregularity in the terms of the notifications and declarations, the real declared purpose of the acquisition was completion of the Haldia project. On my finding such purpose was quite known to all concerned and as such the defect does not vitiate the acquisition and the acquisition is still well supported by a public purpose as there can be no doubt that the completion of the project by itself would be a public purpose within the meaning of Sections 4 and 6 of the said Act. In this view I must overrule the contention of Mr. Sinha that acquisition is being made for a purpose other than the declared purpose and as such it is not in accordance with law.

20. On the conclusions as above the third contention raised by Mr. Sinha must also necessarily fail. The third point raised by Mr. Sinha is to the effect that the acquisition is colourable because it was made for purposes other than those declared. On my findings made hereinbefore there might have been some defect or irregularity in the terms of the notifications and the declarations but the real purpose of the acquisition covers the purposes for which the lands are being used and as such there can be no foundation for a complaint that the acquisition is being made in colourable exercise of powers.

21. Incidentally Mr. Sinha also contended with reference to the statements made in paragraph 6 of the affidavit of respondent No. 5 that Indian Oil Corporations or Fertiliser Corporations of India are not departments of the Government and no land can be acquired for them except under Part 7 of the Act. Mr. Sinha strongly relied on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Andhra Pradesh State Road Transport Corpn. v. Income-tax Officer, AIR 1964 SC 1486 as also the decisions in the case of Charan Singh v. State of U. P., AIR 1964 All 42 and Rajaram v. The State, AIR 1970 Punj and Har 361 to support his contention that these Corporations incorporated under specific statutes cannot be considered to be a part of the Government establishment for which acquisition can be made without following the specific provisions of Part 7. Without disputing the position that these corporations are not departments of the Government, the point raised by Mr. Sinha can otherwise be met. In the present case the acquisition is not specifically made for these corporations or at their cost. The acquisition is for the project or the complex of which these corporations or their establishments constitute an integral part. There can be no doubt that the establishments which would be run by these corporations as a part of the complex would be highly beneficial to the interest of the public. This being the position when the acquisition itself is for the project and at the cost of a local authority it can well be supported under Section 6 of the said Act and no question of following the provisions of Part 7 does at all arise.

22. I will now consider the last point raised by Mr. Sinha in support of this Rule. It is not in dispute that objections under Section 5-A were preferred on December 14, 1967 and were enquired into by the Collector on June 3, 1968. The Collector submitted a report on June 10, 1968. The petitioners prayed for a certified copy of the report on June 24, 1968. This prayer, however, was refused on the ground that the report had already been sent to the Government. The Government disposed of the matter on November 4, 1968. On these facts Mr. Sinha contends there had been gross violation of principles of natural justice resulting in serious prejudice to the petitioners. According to Mr. Sinha had the petitioners been made aware of the contents of this report they could have effectively met the same and also supported their objections before the State Government. Reliance is placed on the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of State of Madhya Pradesh v. Vishnu Prasad, AIR 1966 SC 1593 and Gandhal v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1963 Guj 50. But neither of these two decisions relied on by Mr. Sinha is an authority for a proposition that the objectors must have two opportunities or opportunities at two stages in objecting to the proposed acquisition. The Statute contemplates that before the Government forms the final opinion persons interested must be given an opportunity to object (subject however to the other provisions where Section 5-A is ruled out). Therefore, when the petitioners preferred their objections to the proposed acquisition they were given ample opportunity to make out their case. An enquiry was then held to hear the petitioners and record any evidence if adduced on the objections preferred to the proposed acquisition. In my view this gives ample opportunity to the objectors. The report that follows is the recommendation of the Collector for consideration by the State Government along with the objections in the light of the enquiries held by him. No second opportunity to make further representation at this stage is contemplated by the statute and as such denial of a copy of the report could not have materially affected the petitioners' right to object. The Supreme Court in the case of Abdul Hussain v. State of Gujrat, AIR 1968, SC 432 specifically held that the Land Acquisition Act contemplates no second opportunity for making a representation after the enquiry under Section 5-A. In this view the last point raised by Mr. Sinha must fail and is overruled.

23. As all the points raised in support of this Rule fail this application falls on merits.

24. Nonetheless, I feel it proper to express my views on the preliminary objections raised by Mr. Dutt on the maintainability of the Writ petition although for disposal of the rule a decision on this point may no longer be necessary. Mr. Dutt's objections are two fold. In the first place Mr. Dutt has objected to the maintainability of the application on the ground that the petitioners have not made out any case as to how they are affected by either of the two notifications or the two declarations. Due to unfortunate defects in the pleading I find much substance in this contention of Mr. Dutt. Nowhere in the Writ petition or in the annexures thereto there is any material to indicate that any of the petitioners are in any way interested in any of the plots covered by either of the two notifications or the two declarations. Only tatement made is that the petitioners are residents of village Hatiberia Police Station, Sutahata and have right, title and interest in different plots recorded in their respective names in the last settlement records. It is, however, not stated that any of the plots so recorded in their names are the subject-matter of acquisition under the disputed notifications and declarations. It is indeed true that the petitioners in order to entitle them to challenge the acquisition, must make out a prima facie case that they are affected by such acquisition. No such case, however, having been made out in the entire Writ petition is not truly maintainable in law.

25. The next objection of Mr. Dutt is to the effect that the petition suffers from the defect of misjoinder of petitioners and causes of action. There can be no dispute that two independent acquisition proceedings based on two independent notifications and two independent declarations are the subject-matter of challenge in this joint Writ petition at the instance of sixty-one petitioners. It is not the case of the petitioners that any or all of the petitioners are jointly interested in lands involved in the two acquisition proceedings. The two proceedings in my view give separate cause of action and the question is whether they could be joined together in one Writ petition. According to Mr. Dutt unless the petitioners make out a case that they were jointly interested in both the acquisition proceedings such a joint application is not maintainable in law. Mr. Dutt is well supported by the decision relied on by him in the case of Balak v. State of U. P., AIR 1962 All 208 (209). Mr. Sinha on the other hand, contends that Civil P. C. is applicable to these Writ proceedings and the application as framed is maintainable under Order 1, Rule 1 and Order 2, Rule 3. There is no dispute that the Code has its application to these proceedings but in my view neither of the provisions thereof relied on by Mr. Sinha helps him in any manner. In order to apply Order 1, Rule 1 the right to relief must arise out of the same act or transaction or series of acts and transactions. But this test is not fulfilled if the different petitioners are differently and independently affected by the two independent acquisition proceedings. Similarly in order to join several causes of action by several plaintiffs in one suit under O. 2, R. 3 the several plaintiffs must jointly be interested in the causes of action and the defendants also must jointly be interested in the causes of action. But Mr. Dutt has rightly pointed out that in the present case the petitioners have failed to make out any case that they or any of them are jointly interested in both the acquisitions. In this view it is not possible to uphold the contention of Mr. Sinha that the application as framed can be supported by the provisions of either O. 1, R. 1 or O. 2, R. 3 of the Code. Mr. Sinha relies on the decision of this Court in the case of Manindranath v. Baranagar Municipality, AIR 1956 Cal 291 but in the said decision the point at issue was left undecided. Similarly the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Basharat Beg v. Hiralal, AIR 1932 All 401 is of no help to Mr. Sinha as on the findings of the Court in the said case the defendants were joint tortfeasors acting in pursuance of a common object so that the causes of action arose out of one act or series of acts. The other case relied on by Mr. Sinha—Ramendra Nath Ray v. Brojendra Nath Dass, ILR 45 Cal 111 —

(AIR 1918 Cal 858) — does not also help him as on the finding of this Court the right to relief against all the defendants was based upon the same act viz., fraud of the first defendant. The result is that Mr. Dutt's objection in this respect also must be upheld.

26. On the conclusions as above this application fails and the Rule is discharged.

27. There will be no order for costs.

28. Let the operation of this order remain stayed for a week.

Rule discharged.

AIR 1972 CALCUTTA 329 (V 59 C 62)

C. N. LAIK AND AJAY K. BASU, JJ.

Haridas Roy and another, Appellants v. Calcutta Commercial Bank Ltd. (In Liquidation) and others, Respondents.

A. F. O. O. No. 146 of 1969; Suit No 1357 of 1950, D/- 9-3-1972.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 22, R. 4 — Abatement of suit on mortgage — Death of a defendant — Plaintiff impleading all heirs of deceased known to him — Decree whether binds absent heirs — Principles to be applied in determining whether suit abates, stated. (X-Ref:— Civil P. C. (1908), S. 2 (ii) and O. 34, R. 1). (Para 22)

Where the plaintiff has impleaded under a genuine belief, all the heirs of deceased known to him and obtains a decree in mortgage suit, the same would be binding upon the other heirs interested in the estate, provided there is diligent and bona fide enquiry made by the plaintiff to find out all the heirs and provided further there would be no prejudice to the absent heirs on the passing of such a decree. It is also to be seen whether there could have been any sufficient and special defence by the left out heirs, which were not and could not be tried in the suit. The decree so passed would be binding on the estate even if any heir of the deceased is left out through oversight or on account of some doubts as to who are the heirs and if there is no fraud, collusion or other like grounds between the parties to the suit and if the trial of the action is real and fair and there is no motive to leave out the other heirs and if a preliminary or final decree has already been passed. The considerations which should generally weigh with the court in deciding such questions including the full representation of the estate are the fact of possession of the entire estate by the Administrator or by the Receiver or by those heirs who have only been impleaded. Applying these principles, it was held that there could not be any question of any abatement of suit in the circumstances of the case. (Paras 22, 23)

D. K. Dey with A. K. Guha and R. P. Sinha, for Appellants; S. C. Sen with K. P. Basu (for No. 1) and A. Law, (for Nos. 2 and 3) for Respondents.

LAIK, J.:— The relevant facts leading to the present appeal are as follows:

On August 4, 1941, one Debendra Chandra Roy (hereinafter referred to as Deben) and his son Indu Bhusan Roy (hereinafter referred to as Indu) executed a mortgage in favour of the Respondent No. 1, the Calcutta Commercial Bank, in liquidation (hereinafter referred to as the Bank), to secure the repayment of a sum of Rs. 8,000/- and odd. The mortgaged property was a piece of rent-free Brahmottar land, situate in Belghoria in the district of 24 Parganas, the mortgagors holding permanent intermediary interest therein.

2. In March 1950, a suit was instituted by the Bank for enforcement of the said security against Deben and his two sons Santi and Indu being Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 respectively. Two other persons viz., Soroshi and Aswini were impleaded as Defendants Nos. 3 and 5 respectively.

3. Deben died in May, 1950 leaving behind him, surviving his widow Sm. Saraju Bala and his 4 sons viz., the said Santi (Respondent No. 2), Indu (Respondent No. 3), Haridas (Appellant No. 1) and Narayan (Respondent No. 4), Deben left also one daughter viz., Sm. Sadhana Roy Chowdhury being Appellant No. 2 in the above appeal.

4. On July 1, 1954 before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Bachawat, the plaintiff Bank conceded that it was not entitled to claim relief against all the parties to the suit jointly. The learned Judge accordingly gave leave to the plaintiff to amend the plaint. Paragraph 7 of the original plaint was allowed to be deleted and a fresh paragraph was allowed to be substituted. The names of Soroshi and Aswini were deleted from the category of the Defendants. The total revised amount claimed, was for Rs. 13,000/- and odd including a sum of Rs. 4,500/- and odd, being on account of interest, calculated upto 28th February, 1950.

5. On or about July 9, 1954 a Master's Summons was taken out on behalf of the plaintiff Bank, inter alia for setting aside the abatement, caused on the death of Deben and for substitution of the names of his two sons Santi and Indu, Respondents 2 and 3 in the above appeal as the legal heirs and representatives of the deceased Deben. All the papers in the suit are not before us, but we find in the affidavit filed in July 1950, (1954?) that attempts were made by the Liquidator of the Bank to find out who are the legal heirs and representatives of the deceased Deben.

6. In August 1955 the order of abatement was set aside, the death of Deben was recorded and Santi and Indu were impleaded for self as well as the sons, heirs and legal representatives of the said deceased Deben.

7. In November of the said year, Santi and Indu filed their written statement inter alia stating generally, that all the legal heirs of the deceased Deben have not been brought on the record. They, however, did not specifically state that they had two other brothers and one sister, as well as their widowed mother, as stated above. In spite of the said defence in the written statement as to the non-impleading of all the legal representatives of the deceased Deben, the mortgage suit was decreed in the preliminary form on September 6, 1956 and that again by consent.

8. On July 23, 1962 Deben's widow, Sm. Saraju Bala died leaving behind her surviving, the aforesaid four sons and the said daughter Sm. Sadhana, since married.

9. After the said preliminary decree, the special Referee appointed by the Court, submitted his report on September 14, 1965 in which we find that a sum of Rs. 25,000/- and odd was due to the Bank (in liquidation) including the interest, calculated upto 31st August, 1964. Objection was taken to the said report and the matter came up before Justice S. K. Datta, who by his order, dated June 7, 1966 varied the said report to the extent that a sum of Rupees 15,380/- was due and payable by the defendants to the Bank, calculated up to the date of the said order with interest @ 6 per cent per annum.

10. The Bank thereafter made an application for final decree of the suit. The matter came up before his Lordship the Hon'ble Mr. Justice P. B. Mukharji (as his Lordship then was). On January 9, 1967, the final decree was passed, appointing a Receiver, directing him to sell the mortgaged property either by public auction or by private treaty as he thought fit.

11. In pursuance of the said final decree, the Receiver duly took possession of the mortgaged property and held various meetings. With the consent of the parties, the Receiver divided the mortgaged property (total area being 16 cottas and odd) into several plots. A plan was prepared by an Engineer which was also approved by the defendants. In December 1967, the Receiver entered into an agreement with a purchaser for the sale of Plot No. 1, measuring 2 Cottas and odd at Rs. 2,000/- per Cotta.

12. On June 7, 1968 the said Santi and Indu took out a Master's Summons disclosing for the first time, inter alia the names of all the said four sons and the said daughter of the deceased Deben.

13. On June 7, 1969 a Notice of Motion was taken out on behalf of the Respondent Bank praying inter alia that the death of the widow Sm. Saraju Bala and the names of all the other heirs (Haridas, Appellant No. 1, Narayan, Respondent No. 4 and Sm. Sadhana Roy Chowdhury, Appellant No. 2 in the present appeal) be recorded in the proceedings in the suit after setting aside abatement if any and the intending sale to the purchaser be confirmed. This application was opposed by the heirs of the deceased Deben.

14. On July 16, 1969 our learned brother, Justice A. N. Sen, made an order in terms of prayers (b) to (f) of the petition, holding inter alia, that "in the facts of this particular case and in view of the fact that the preliminary and final decree had already been passed, there cannot be any question of any abatement of the suit and in view of the provisions of the Banking Companies Act there is also no question of any limitation".

15. The present appeal is directed against the said order, preferred by Haridas and Sm. Sadhana, being the appellants Nos. 1 and 2 respectively. The other three sons viz., Santi, Indu and Narayan are impleaded as respondents 2 to 4 respectively. The Bank, still in liquidation, is Respondent No. 1.

16. We have heard at length Mr. Dey the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellants. His main contention was that the application on which the impugned order has been passed, should be dismissed, as the suit has already abated for not bringing on record within time all the heirs and legal representatives of the deceased Deben as well as of his deceased widow Sm. Saraju Bala. The Supreme Court decision in the case of Mohd. Sulaiman v. Mohd. Ismail, AIR 1966 SC 792 was cited by Mr. Dey in support of his contention. It was also submitted that there were no diligent and bona fide enquiries made on behalf of the Bank as to the number of heirs and legal representatives of the deceased Deben and accordingly the application should be dismissed and the appeal should be allowed.

17. Mr. Sen, the learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Bank, submitted that the said Supreme Court decision goes against the contention of Mr. Dey rather than supporting him. It was further submitted that the entire property viz., the Estate of the deceased was fully represented, originally by the two sons and later on, by the Receiver who went into possession of the property in pursuance of the final decree passed by this Court in the mortgaged suit. He further submitted that even if there be imperfect representation, it should be remembered that the decree being a mortgage decree, it will bind the Estate. It is also stated that there was no case of fraud and collusion between the parties at any stage of the suit, right from the beginning either before the trial Court or in this Court. Our attention was drawn that this point was not even argued by Mr. Dey. According to Mr. Sen when the Receiver took possession of the property long time back, the other heirs including the appellants who have been left out, did not take any objection from the beginning till date. It was suggested that the two sons (Santi and Indu) are now setting up their other brother and sister to raise these frivolous pleas. Lastly he contended that in view of the special protection given by the Banking Companies Act and Ordinance coming into force in 1953, to the Banks in liquidation, no question of limitation arises, specially in view of Section 45 (O) of the said Act.

18. Mr. Law, the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the respondents 2 and 3 (Shanti and Indu) supports the argument of Mr. Dey, advanced on behalf of the appellants.

19. The provisions of Sec. 2 (11), Order 22, Rules 3, 4, 5 and 11, as well as the provisions of Order 34, Rule 4 of the Code of Civil Procedure are considered by us.

20. Fourteen decisions are considered, six of which are of the Supreme Court, one of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, two of this Court, four of the Madras High Court and one of the Orissa High Court. They are: State of Punjab v. Nathu Ram, AIR 1962 SC 89 = (1962) 2 SCR 636; Ram Sarup v. Munshi, AIR 1963 SC 553 = (1963) 3 SCR 858; Daya Ram v. Shyam Sundari, AIR 1965 SC 1049 = (1965) 1 SCR 231; Mohd Sulaiman v. Md. Ismail, AIR 1966 SC 792 = (1966) 1 SCR 937 (950); Dolai Maliko v. Krushna Chandra, AIR 1967 SC 49 = 1966 (Supp) SCR 22; Ram Das v. Dy. Director of Consolidation, AIR 1971 SC 673 = (1971) 1 SCC 460; Khirajmal v. Diam, (1905) 32 Ind App 23 = ILR 32 Cal 296 (PC); Bibhuti v. Narendra, AIR 1951 Cal 228; Prabhat v. Birendra, (1969) 73 Cal WN 932; K. M. Marakkayar v. M. K. Ayyar, (1903) ILR 26 Mad 230; K. K. Behari v. Kunhipakki, AIR 1930 Mad 69; Chaturbhujadoss Kushaldoss v. Rajamanicka Mudali, AIR 1930 Mad 930 = ILR 54 Mad 212; Shanmugham v. Govindasami, AIR 1961 Mad 428; Sarat Chandra v. Bichitranada Sahu, AIR 1951 Orissa 212 (229).

21. Six other decisions of the Supreme Court and a Full Bench decision of this Court touching the point of abatement are also considered but they do not relate to the point at issue. They are: Union of India v. Ramcharan, (1964) 3 SCR 467 at p. 476 = AIR 1964 SC 215; Rameshwar Prasad v. Shyam Beharilal Jagannath, (1964) 3 SCR 549 at p. 556 = AIR 1963 SC 1901; Union of India v. Sree Ram Bohra, (1965) 2 SCR 830 at p. 836 = AIR 1965 SC 1531; Sri Chand v. Jagdish Pershad, (1966) 3 SCR 451 at pp. 454, 455 = AIR 1966 SC 1427; Ranil v. Santa Bala, (1970) 3 SCC 722 = AIR 1971 SC 1028; Mahabir Prasad v. Jaga Ram, (1971) 1 SCC 265 = AIR 1971 SC 742; Santosh Kumar v. Nanda Lal, AIR 1963 Cal 289 (FB).

22. On consideration of the aforesaid decisions, it seems safe to assume that in similar circumstances the following principles of law (though not exhaustive) are to be applied and the suit then would not be visited by an order of abatement:

(a) Where the plaintiff has impleaded under a genuine belief, all the heirs of the deceased known to him and obtains a decree, the same would be binding upon the other heirs interested in the estate, provided there was a diligent and bona fide enquiry made by the plaintiff to find out all the heirs of the deceased and provided further, there be no prejudice to the absent heirs on the passing of such a decree. It is also to be seen whether there could have been any sufficient and special defence by the left out heirs, which were not or could not be tried in the suit.

(b) The decree so passed, would be binding on the Estate even if any heir of the deceased is left out through oversight or on account of some doubts as to who are the heirs, and if there is no fraud, collusion or other like grounds between the parties to the suit.

(c) If the trial of the action is real and fair and there is no motive to leave out the other heirs.

(d) If a decree, preliminary or final, has already been passed.

(e) The considerations which should generally weigh with the Court in deciding such questions including the full representation of the Estate are the fact of possession of the entire estate by the Administrator or by the Receiver or by those heirs who have only been impleaded.

(f) The exercise of the discretion by the Courts in not impleading the left out heirs must be judicial and cautious and the Courts must have jurisdiction to exercise such discretion.

23. Circumstances in the instant case do not indicate that there has not been a fair and real trial of the suit. The Bank proceeded under a genuine belief that the two sons who were brought on record, were the only legal representatives of the deceased. Deben. Bona fide attempts were made by the liquidator of the Bank to find out the names of all the heirs but they failed to get all the names. Moreover, the other sons of the deceased did not disclose the names of all the heirs. There was a real contest in the mortgage suit, though ultimately the preliminary decree was a consent decree. No argument was advanced that there could have been sufficient and independent defence by the left out heirs or that there was fraud or collusion of the Bank with the other parties or that the Bank had any motive to leave out the other heirs. The Receiver was all along in possession for all these years of the entire estate without any objection by any of the heirs, either made parties or left out.

24. I disagree with the contentions of the appellant both on points of fact and law. The grounds seem to be tenuous. They are too little and too late. In view of the foregoing discussions, we are not called upon to decide other points of law raised by the Respondent Bank.

25. In the result we dismiss this appeal with costs. In the larger interest of administration of justice we hope that there would be the end of the litigation, started more than 20 years ago for recovery of such a small sum.

AJAY K. BASU, J.:— 26. I agree.
Appeal dismissed.

Sachindra Chandra Das Gupta and Gouri Prasad Mukherjee, for Appellant; Lala Hemanta Kumar and Narottam Chatterjee, for Respondents.

M. M. DUTT, J.:— These two appeals at the instance of the State of West Bengal are against the awards passed by the learned Additional District Judge, Purulia, in two land acquisition cases under Section 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894.

2. The property acquired is a premises comprising buildings, land and a tank. The premises is known as 'Kamala Kutir'. The notification under Section 4 of the Act in respect of the acquisition of Kamala Kutir was published on May 16, 1960. The description of the premises and the buildings, fixtures and other amenities appertaining thereto, appear from the following portion of the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge, as follows:—

"The premises 'Kamala Kutir' stand on 7.91 acres of land with a compound wall on all sides measuring 7 ft. 6 inches in height and 1931 Rft. in length. Within this boundary-wall, there was a Bungalow having a plinth area of 6061 Rft., with terraced roof on rolled steel joists and tees, all walls 20" thick at super structure containing a main hall covering a floor area of 692 sft., with a front Verandah of 900 sft., in marble floor and Mosaic dado, two rooms covering a floor area of 361 sft., having Mosaic floor and dado and five other rooms, septic latrine and bath and the remaining Verandahs having artificial stone floor and dado with electric fittings and glazed and Venetian shutters for outside doors and windows and pannel shutters for inside doors and also containing a circular and cast iron stair case for going to the roof. Besides the main building as above, there was one Pucca structure with C. I. Sheet roof measuring 1058 sft., one Pucca structure with Khapra roof measuring 1053 sft., one Chala with Pucca structure and C. I. sheet roof measuring 12 sft. (?) one attached Chala with C. I. sheet roofing of 709 sft., one Pucca structure with C. I. sheet roofing measuring 866 sft., one attached Chala with C. I. sheet roofing measuring 396 sft., one Pucca building measuring 1114 sft., one Pucca structure with Khapra roof measuring 144 sft., one Pucca walled house measuring 432 sft., one Pucca privy measuring 217 sft., one Pucca building measuring 377 sft., and one Pucca structure with C. I. sheet roof measuring 188 sft. In the premises there were further five pucca wells and two cisterns. There were also four Octagonal masonry gate pillars 13 ft. high above the ground level and M. C. Beam rail over the gate-opening joining the pillars and one M. S. ornamental iron gate, one round masonry platform in front of the Bungalow 19'6" diameter and one ft., high above the ground level, four cement statues on masonry base and six iron light-posts, one tank having a bed area of 1.23 acres with ridges measuring 1.51 acres and a Pucca Khat in it and also some trees. The main building was constructed in 1926 by late Lalit Kishore Mitra, who was a lawyer by profession and all other constructions within the premises were completed mostly by 1935, the tank only being constructed in 1938."

3. Although the premises comprise a compact area measuring 7.91 acres and surrounded by a boundary wall a portion of the area measuring 5.43 acres consisting of the entire homestead and a small portion of the bank of the tank appertains to mouja Purulia and the remaining portion measuring 2.48 acres consisting of the entire land and the major portion of the bank, appertains to mouja Raghabpur. In view of the fact that the area of the premises appertains to two moudas, two land acquisition cases were started by the Land Acquisition Collector.

4. The Land Acquisition Collector assessed the total amount of compensation in these two cases at a sum of Rs. 1,18,228.38 including the additional compensation under Section 23 (2) of the Act. The different items and the compensation allowed by the Land Acquisition Collector in both the cases appear from his award, as follows:—

	Rs.	Np.
1. For 5.17 decimals of land classified as Bastu Bagan at the rate of Rs. 7,000/- per acre	36,190	00
2. For 1.51 decimals of land classified as all Rs. 291.00 per acre	439	41
3. For bed of the tank measuring 1.23 decimals at the rate of Rs. 583/- per acre	717	09
4. For excavation cost of 4,00,000 cft. at the rate of Rs. 15/- per thousand cft. less a depreciation of 25 % the tank being out of repair	4823	00
5. Towards the value of the trees	429	78
6. Towards the value of the structures excluding wells and cisterns	51,708	00
7. To value of the wells and cisterns	8,500	00
8. Additional compensation at 15 %	15,421	10

5. The referring claimants who are the respondents before us in these two appeals made two applications under Section 18 of the Act objecting to the amount of compensation assessed by the L. A. Collector which gave rise to two land acquisition cases before the learned Additional District Judge, Purulia. The objections of the respondents as summarised by the learned Additional District Judge are as follows:—

"1. The Bastu Bagan land should have been valued at Rs. 12,000/- per acre.

2. The land of the ails and of the tank should have been classified as Bastu Bagan and compensation allowed at the rate of Rs. 12,000/- per acre.

3. The method of valuing the main building and some of the structures which had been let out to the D. F. O. at 20 times of the annual letting value is not the proper way of valuation of the structures. The L. A. Department ought to have accepted the valuation of the main building and the other structures as made by the Executive Engineer.

4. The excavation costs of the tank was based on an imaginary figure of 4,00,000 cft., earth work and should not have been valued in that way and instead the compensation for the tank should have been assessed at 20 times the annual value of fish that were got from the tank every year, such annual value being Rs. 1,500/- per acre.

5. No valuation of the compound wall, the Pucca Ghat, the gates in the compound wall, iron posts for electric light, the statues and the platform was made by the Land Acquisition Department and these should have been valued correctly.

6. The trees were under-valued and the masonry wells were also under-valued."

6. Both the land acquisition cases were heard analogously by the learned Additional District Judge. The learned Additional District Judge enhanced the amount of compensation by Rupees 9,954.16 in L. A. R. case No. 18 of 1962 and by Rs. 90,635.84 in L. A. R. case No. 19 of 1962. Both the amounts included the additional compensation at the rate of 15 %. It does not appear from the award that any interest was awarded by the learned Additional District Judge under Section 28 of the Act on the excess amount awarded.

7. The respondents have also filed two cross-objections. The cross-objection in respect of F. A. No. 906 of 1967 has been valued by the respondents at Rs. 4,100/-. In the memo of cross-objection several grounds have been taken. Under the first ground, the respondents claimed that the learned Additional District Judge should have passed a decree for a further sum of Rs. 4,101/- in respect of the tank including the pucca ghat. In case the claim made in the first ground of the respondents is allowed, it will exhaust the valuation of the cross-objection and the question of granting reliefs to the respondents as claimed in the other grounds of the cross-objection, will not arise. The cross-objection in respect of F. A. No. 907 of 1967 has been valued by the respondents at Rs. 7,900/-. In the first ground of this cross-objection the respondents claim that the learned Additional District Judge should have passed a decree for a sum of Rs. 7,900/- in respect of the acquired property including the structures and fixtures. In the remaining grounds other claims have been made. In ground No. IX, the respondents have claimed additional sum of Rs. 5,430/- for 5.43 acres of land and also a further sum of Rs. 2,350/- for the boundary wall, platform, statues and iron posts and also a sum of Rs. 570/- for the trees standing on the acquired property. Besides the claims made in other grounds, the claim made in ground No. 1 exhausts the valuation of the cross-objection. The claims made under different heads in ground No. IX also exceed the valuation of the cross-objection.

8. Mr. Das Gupta, learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the appellant submitted before us that the respondents were not entitled to press either of the cross-objections inasmuch as the claims made by the respondents in either of the cross-objections exceeded the valuation of the respective cross-objections. We would have upheld the contention of Mr. Das Gupta had not Mr. Lala, learned Advocate for the respondents abandoned part of the respondents' claim in respect of both the cross-objections so as to confine the respondents' claim in both the cross-objections within the limit of the valuation of the cross-objections. So far as the cross-objection in F. A. No. 906 of 1967 is concerned, Mr. Lala abandoned the respondents' claim in all the grounds excepting ground No. 1 and in F. A. No. 907 of 1967, Mr. Lala submitted that the respondents would only press their cross-objection in respect of part of the claims made in ground No. IX, namely, in respect of claims for the additional sum of Rs. 2,350/- for the boundary wall, platform, statues and iron posts and also the additional sum of Rs. 570/- for the trees standing on the acquired property. The other claims made in the other grounds including the claim for an additional sum of Rs. 5,430/- for 5.43 acres of land as contained in ground No. IX were expressly abandoned by Mr. Lala. We are unable to accept the contention of Mr. Das Gupta that even after the abandonment by the respondents part of their claims under both the cross-objections, the respondents were not entitled to press any of the claims made in either of the cross-objections. It is well settled that a plaintiff or an appellant is entitled to abandon part of the claim made by him in a suit or appeal so as to confine the suit or appeal within the valuation of the same or within the jurisdiction of the Court concerned.

9. The first contention of Mr. Das Gupta relates to the award of the learned Additional District Judge on the objection No. 1 of the respondents. The L. A. Collector assessed the value of the bastu bagan land at the rate of Rs. 7,000/- per acre. The respondents claimed that it should have been enhanced to Rs. 12,000/- per acre. The learned Additional District Judge, however, assessed it at the rate of Rupees 11,000/- per acre and enhanced the amount of compensation on that head by Rs. 20,680/-. Mr. Das Gupta submitted that in view of the documents of sale transactions filed by the respondents, the learned Additional District Judge should have assessed the price of bastu began land at Rs. 7,000/- per acre as made by the L. A. Collector.

10. It appears that the respondents filed certain documents containing transactions of sale. The documents are marked Exhibits 1 to 1 (e). Exhibit 1 relates to a property in mouja Nadiha and before us it was not relied on by either party. By the document Exhibit 1 (a) dated 4-1-1961, 3.95 acres of raiyati land was sold for Rs. 6,999/-, that is, at the rate of Rs. 1,772/- per acre, by the document Exhibit 1 (c) dated 3-9-1960, 48 acres of raiyati land was sold for Rs. 750/-, that is, at the rate of Rs. 1,652.50 per acre and by the document Exhibit 1 (d) dated 1-11-1961, 26 acres of bastu land was sold for Rs. 1,199/-, that is, at the rate of Rupees 4,615/- per acre. The lands covered by all these three documents are situate in mouja Raghampur. By the sale deed Exhibit 1 (a), 1 cotta of bastu land was sold for Rs. 600/- on 1-12-1958, that is, at the rate of Rs. 36,300/- per acre and by the sale deed Exhibit 1 (e) dated 9-12-1959, 1 cotta 13 chhataks of bastu land was sold for Rs. 949/-, that is, at the rate of Rs. 31,660/- per acre. These two sale deeds, namely, Exhibits 1 (a) and 1 (e) are sale transactions of land situate in mouja Purulia.

11. Mr. Das Gupta strongly relied on the sale deeds Exhibits 1 (a), 1 (b) and 1 (c) and contended that the respondents having themselves filed and relied on these documents, the valuation of the land in the acquired premises should have been made on the basis of these documents. It has been already stated that all these documents of sale have been filed by the respondents. These documents, namely, Exhibits 1 (a), 1 (b) and 1 (c) do not at all support the contention of the respondents that the land should have been valued at the rate of Rs. 12,000/- per acre. There is no indication in the records for what purpose the respondents filed these three documents of sale. Mr. Lala submitted that as there was much dispute as to the class of land to which the bed of the tank belonged, the respondents had to file these documents showing the class of land adjoining the tank. It may be stated here that the L. A. Collector classified the bed of the tank as Gora III land and assessed compensation on the basis of that classification. The reason for this classification as given by the L. A. Collector is, that the lands adjoining the tank are Gora III land. It has been already stated that the tank is situate in mouja Raghampur. Mr. Lala submitted that the respondents filed these documents, namely, Exhibits 1 (b) to 1 (d) for the purpose of showing that the lands in the neighbourhood of the bed of the tank are not Gora III lands, but they are superior to Gora III land and that the respondents also relied on the sale transactions embodied in these three documents for the purpose of determination of the price of the bed of the tank.

12. The aforesaid contention of Mr. Lala has much force. The tank is situate in the Raghampur mouja and these three documents also relate to the said mouja. The rates of price at which the lands covered by these three documents were sold, are much lower than the rate of price claimed by the respondents in respect of the bastu land appertaining to mouja Purulia. The highest of these rates is Rs. 4,615/- per acre under the sale transaction embodied in the document Exhibit 1 (d). It is not even the case of the appellant that the bastu land appertaining to mouja Purulia is valued at Rs. 4,615/- per acre. The L. A. Collector assessed the price of bastu-land in mouja Purulia at Rs. 7,000/- per acre. It is apparent from the valuation made by the L. A. Collector that he did not rely on these sale transactions in determining the market value of the bastu land in mouja Purulia. We are, therefore, of the view that these documents, namely, Exhibits 1 (b), 1 (c) and 1 (d) were relied on by the respondents for the purpose of showing the nature of land adjoining the Gora III land and also in support of the claim for compensation for the bed of the tank. We have already pointed out that all these transactions of sale took place long after the date of the notification under Section 4. By the documents—Exhibits 1 (a) and 1 (e)—very small parcels of land were sold. In our opinion, these two sales are not at all comparable sales. The learned Additional District Judge was justified in not relying upon any of these documents including the documents Exhibits 1 (a) and 1 (e) relating to transactions of sale of land in mouja Purulia.

13. The L. A. Collector valued the bastu began land at the rate of Rs. 7,000/- per acre, that is, at the rate of Rs. 117/- per cotta. There is nothing on record to show the basis on which the L. A. Collector assessed the price of the bastu began land at Rupees 7,000/- per acre. It has been simply alleged that the land was valued on the basis of sale transactions in the neighbouring areas. Our attention was not drawn to any such transactions from the records of the case nor do we find that any document evidencing any such transactions has been printed in the paper book. The nature and situation of the land appear from the judgment of the learned Additional District Judge as quoted above. Although Exhibits 1 and 1 (e) are post notification transactions of small quantity of land, we get some idea about the price of bastu land in mouja Purulia. The learned Additional District Judge enhanced the price of bastu bagan land from Rs. 117/- per cotta to Rs. 183.33 per cotta, that is Rs. 11,000/- per acre. We do not consider that the price thus assessed by the learned Additional District Judge of bastu began land situate in mouja Purulia is either excessive or unreasonable. We would accordingly overrule the contention of Mr. Das Gupta that the learned Additional District Judge should have affirmed the value of the bastu land at Rs. 7,000/- per acre as made by the Land Acquisition Collector.

14. It appears from the evidence of the Land Acquisition Collector that the bed of the tank was classified as Gora III land and the same was valued at 1/12th the price of the homestead land. The question is whether or not the bed of the tank can be classified as Gora III land. The documents filed by the respondents, namely, Exhibits 1(b), 1(c) and 1(d) do not show that the land in the locality of the disputed tank are Gora III lands. After assessing the value of the bed of the tank as Gora III land, the Land Acquisition Collector assessed the cost of excavation and by adding these two, he fixed the value of the tank at Rs. 583/- per acre. The bank of the tank measuring 1.51 acres was valued by the L. A. Collector at the rate of Rupees 291/- per acre.

15. The method adopted by the Land Acquisition Collector appears to be erroneous. In the first place, there is no evidence that the bed of the tank is Gora III land. Secondly, it is curious that the bank of the tank should be valued at a much lesser price than the price of the tank land. The respondents claimed that the bank of the tank measuring 1.51 acres should be valued at the same rate as that of the homestead land. It appears from Parks' Principles and Practice of Valuations (4th Ed. page 72) that the Courts have adopted during the past few years a method of valuing tanks at one-half the value of solid land. Although the learned author has termed this method as a Rule of Thumb method, in our opinion, in the absence of proper materials enabling the Court to determine the value of the tank in a logical and scientific manner, it will not be unreasonable for the Court to adopt this method. The learned Additional District Judge has assessed the value of the tank land including the bank of the tank, that is, the entire 2.74 acres of land at 1/3rd the rate allowed for the homestead land. In view of the facts and circumstances of the case, we do not find any unreasonableness in the decision of the learned Additional District Judge in valuing the tank land at 1/3rd the value of the homestead land. We would accordingly overrule the contention of Mr. Das Gupta and uphold the finding of the learned Additional District Judge as to the value of the tank land.

16. The objection No. 3 of the respondents relates to the value of the structures including the main building. The respondents examined on Commission one Ananta Kumar Sen Gupta, who was an estimator in the office of the District Board, Purulia. Ananta Kumar Sen Gupta valued, these structures appertaining to the acquired premises 'Kamala Kutir' and submitted a valuation statement dated September 22, 1963, which was marked as Exhibit 1 by the Commissioner. This witness deposed that he estimated the cost of construction of the structures in the year 1926 and also the value of the structures in the year 1960. The value was determined by him according to the P. W. D. rate that was in force in the year 1926 in the then province of Behar. The respondents also relied on the estimate of valuation of the structures made by the Executive Engineer of the District. It appears from the evidence of the parties and it is not disputed before us that the Executive Engineer had to value the structures at the instance of the Land Acquisition Department. The Land Acquisition Department accepted the valuation made by the Executive Engineer in respect of all the structures excepting the main building. The reason for not accepting the valuation of the Executive Engineer of the main building is that on the date of notification, the D. F. O. (District Forest Officer) was a tenant of the main building at Rs. 200/- per month. The L. A. Collector valued the main building at 20 times the annual rent which comes to Rs. 40,800/- after deducting the collection and other incidental charges at 15 per cent. of the gross annual rental. It may be stated here, that the D. F. O. became the tenant in respect of the main building in the year 1946 at monthly rental of Rs. 150/-. When the owners of the building served a notice to quit on the D. F. O., the building was requisitioned by the Behar Government and the monthly compensation was fixed at Rs. 100/- by the Court. Lalit Mohon Roy, the Kanungo of the Land Acquisition Department was examined as the sole witness on behalf of the appellant and he admitted in his cross-examination that they did not ascertain the rent of neighbouring premises which were let out nor did they enquire about the pro-able rent of premises having same accommodation and facilities. They did not also ascertain the cost of collection and incidental charges in respect of the tenancy of the D. F. O.

17. We may at this stage refer to the accepted modes of valuation of lands acquired under the Act. They are (1) the price paid, within a reasonable time, in bona fide transactions of purchase of the land acquired or the lands adjacent to the land acquired, and possessing similar advantages; (2) the number of years' purchase of the actual, or immediately prospective, profit from the lands acquired and (3) the opinion of valuers of experts (See Harish Chunder Neogy v. Secy. of State for India, (1907) 11 Cal WN 875; Special Land Acquisition Officer, Bangalore v. T. Adinarayan Setty, AIR 1959 SC 429). In the instant case, there is no evidence of bona fide transactions of sale of similar premises consisting of similar structures. In the absence of any such evidence the capitalisation of the annual rental for 20 years may represent the market value of the structures. The L. A. Collector relied on this mode of valuation as already stated above. It may, however, be pointed out that in capitalising the rental value for 20 years or in estimating the value on the basis of a number of years' purchase of the actual or immediately prospective profit from the lands acquired, the rent must be the fair rent or the prevailing rent in the locality in respect of buildings having similar advantages and amenities and the profit must be the actual or immediately prospective profit. The monthly rental of Rs. 200/- taken into consideration by the L. A. Collector for evaluating the main building is not the fair rent or rent prevailing in the locality in respect of buildings having similar advantages and amenities. We have already noticed the circumstances under which the D. F. O. occupied the building at a monthly rent of Rs. 200/-. We have also referred to the evidence of the Kanungo, who frankly admitted that nothing was done for ascertaining the prevailing rate of rent of buildings situate in the locality of the acquired premises and having similar advantages and amenities. The cost of collection and incidental charges were arbitrarily fixed at 15 per cent. of the gross annual rental without any basis therefor. In such circumstances, it is very difficult to uphold the valuation made by the L. A. Collector on the basis of the rent paid by the D. F. O. for the main building.

18. The learned Additional District Judge has rightly refused to accept the valuation of the main building as made by the L. A. Collector on the basis aforesaid. No reason has been given on behalf of the State why the valuation made by the Executive Engineer in respect of the main building was not correct. The Executive Engineer is an officer of the Government having expert knowledge about valuation. He is a disinterested person and no defect has been pointed out in the method of valuation adopted by him. The learned Additional District Judge has relied on the valuation made by the Executive Engineer in preference to that made by the L. A. Collector and the said Ananta Kumar Sen Gupta. We are of the same view as that of the learned Additional District Judge that the valuation made by the Executive Engineer in respect of the structures including the main building of the premises 'Kamala Kutir' should be accepted.

19. Mr. Das Gupta, however, drew our attention to Exhibit 'C' which is a letter from Shri K. P. Sen, officer on Special Duty, Education Department to the Deputy Commissioner, Purulia, dated February 23, 1960. In that letter it was stated that the owners of 'Kamala Kutir' were agreeable to sell the property to the Government at a price of Rupees 1,00,000 provided payment of Rs. 75,000 was made immediately. Mr. Das Gupta submitted that the said offer was a good piece of evidence to show that the property was not worth more than Rupees 1,00,000 and that the compensation should not exceed the said amount. We may, however, refer to the evidence of the respondent Ganesh Chandra Mitra who while admitting in his cross-examination the said offer, stated that the same was made for the purpose of clearing the debts. Apart from that there is no evidence that the Government accepted that offer or that the respondents pursued the said offer. It seems to us that the respondents were under pressing need for money for the purpose of clearing their debts. In view of that, we do not consider that the said offer of the respondents indicated the market value of the premises 'Kamala Kutir'.

20. The learned Additional District Judge allowed a sum of Rs. 3,000 for the compound wall, Rs. 1,000 for the gates, Rs. 100 for the platform, Rs. 30 for the statues, Rs. 150 for iron posts, and Rs. 4,000 for the pucca ghat, that is, in all Rs. 8,080. These structures were not valued by the L. A. Collector and accordingly no compensation was awarded by him on these items. In this connection we may refer to the cross-objection of the respondents, namely, ground No. I in F. A. No. 906 of 1967 and ground No. IX in F. A. No. 907 of 1967. There was some dispute about the existence of the pucca ghat. The Kanungo in his evidence stated that he did not see any pucca ghat in the tank. This evidence of the Kanungo appears to be untrue. It appears from the schedule of acquired land (Exhibit 'B') prepared by the Land Acquisition Department, that there is a reference to a cemented pucca ghat measuring 36' x 30'. Ananta Kumar Sen Gupta, in his evidence stated that the tank had a good pucca ghat. The evidence of this witness and the appellant's own document (Exhibit 'B') conclusively prove the existence of a cemented pucca ghat. The learned Additional District Judge valued it at Rs. 4,000. The respondents have claimed a further sum of Rs. 4,000. We do not, however, consider that a further sum should be allowed to the respondents as claimed by them on account of compensation for the pucca ghat. The boundary wall measures 7' 6" in height and 1931 Rft. in length. The learned Additional District Judge has allowed only a sum of Rs. 3,000 as compensation for the boundary wall. The respondents in their cross-objection have claimed a further sum of Rs. 2,050 for the boundary wall, platform, statues and iron posts. In the statement of valuation prepared by the respondents' valuer, Ananta Kumar Sengupta, the boundary wall has been valued at Rs. 4,634. In view of the length and height of the boundary wall, in our opinion, the respondents should have been awarded at least the said sum of Rs. 4,634 as valued by the said Ananta Kumar Sengupta. We would accordingly allow a further sum of Rs. 1,634, which is, the difference between Rs. 4,634 and Rs. 3,000. We do not, however, allow the respondents' claim in the cross-objection in respect of the platform, statues and iron posts.

21. The Land Acquisition Collector has valued the trees at Rs. 429.78 only. The learned Additional District Judge disallowed the claim of the respondents for further compensation for the trees. In their cross-objection the respondents have claimed a further sum of Rs. 570 on account of trees. In this connection we may refer to the list of trees (Exhibit 'A') containing the names and other particulars of the trees standing on the acquired property. The list was prepared by the Land Acquisition Department, Purulia and it has gone in the evidence at the instance of the appellant. We find from this list (Exhibit A) that the trees have been valued at Rs. 1,682.89. The Land Acquisition Collector should have allowed the said sum on account of compensation for the trees, but curiously enough only a sum of Rs. 429.78 was allowed by the Land Acquisition Collector as compensation for the trees. This document (Exhibit A) was not noticed by the learned Additional District Judge. We would accordingly allow the cross-objection of the respondents and allow the additional sum of Rs. 570 on account of compensation for the trees.

22. Mr. Das Gupta did not challenge the findings of the learned Additional District Judge on the objection No. IV of the respondents relating to the excavation cost of the tank.

23. For the reasons aforesaid, both the appeals are dismissed. The cross-objection of the respondents in F. A. No. 906 of 1967 is also dismissed. The cross-objection of the respondents in F. A. No. 907 of 1967 is allowed in part. The award of the learned Additional District Judge is modified to the following extent:— The respondents shall be entitled to an additional sum of Rs. 1,634 on account of compensation for the boundary wall and a further sum of Rs. 570 on account of the trees. The respondents are also entitled to a sum of 15 per cent on the market value of the land under Section 23 (2) of the Act. The respondents shall also be entitled to interest on the excess amount awarded by the learned Additional District Judge as modified by this judgment from the date on which possession of the acquired premises was taken by the Collector, that is, from June 22, 1962 to the date of payment of such excess amount in Court. The L. A. Collector shall make payment in Court of the outstanding amount of compensation within three months of the date of communication of the award to him as modified by this judgment. Save as stated above, the rest of the award of the learned Additional District Judge will stand.

24. In view of the facts and circumstances of the case, the parties are directed to bear their own costs in this Court both in respect of the appeals and the cross-objections.

ARUN K. MUKHERJEA, J.: 25.
I agree.

Order accordingly.

P. K. Mullick, for Applicant.

ORDER:— This is an application for cancellation or revocation of the registration of the design bearing No. 134095 dated the 26th June, 1968. This application has been made under Section 51-A of the Patent and Designs Act 1911. The said section reads as follows:—

"51-A. Cancellation of registration—

1. Any person interested may present a petition for cancellation of the registration of design—

(a) At any time after the registration of the design, to the High Court on any of the following grounds, namely:—

(i) that the design has been previously registered in (India); or

(ii) that it has been published in (India) prior to the date of registration; or

(iii) that the design is not a new or original design; or

(b) Within one year from the date of registration to the Controller on either of the grounds specified in sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of Cl. (a).

2. An appeal shall lie from any order of the Controller under this section to the High Court, and the Controller may at any time refer any such petition to the High Court, and the High Court shall decide any petition so referred".

2. The facts leading to the making of this application are set out hereunder:

On or about January 29, 1968 the petitioner applied to the Controller of Patents and Designs at Calcutta for the registration of a patent in respect of a 'picnic set' being an assembly of tumblers made of plastics. After making the said application the petitioner started manufacturing and marketing for commercial purposes the said assembly of tumblers.

3. The petitioner subsequently came to know that on or about June 26, 1968 an application was made by one J. K. Sayani of Bombay for the registration of a design in respect of assembly of tumblers. On the said date, i.e., 26th June, 1968 a certificate of registration of design bearing No. 134095 was issued by the Controller of Patents and Designs in favour of the said J. K. Sayani of Bombay. Prior to the said application made by the said J. K. Sayani for the registration of the said design on 26th June, 1968 but subsequent to the date of application for the issue of the Patent made by the petitioner the said J. K. Sayani also known as Jayantilal Kalidas Sayani produced and sold in the market the said assembly of tumblers according to the said design. The petitioner on coming to know of the said marketing of the said tumblers according to the said design complained of the infringement made thereby of its aforesaid patent in respect of the said 'picnic set'.

4. On 5th October, 1968 on behalf of the petitioner advertisement was published in the Gazette of India in respect of the said petitioner's patent by the Patent Office, Calcutta. Notwithstanding the complaint made by the petitioner it appears that the respondent J. K. Sayani went on marketing the said design in infringement of the aforesaid patent granted to the petitioner.

5. On April 2, 1969, the petitioner filed a suit in this Court being Suit No. 969 of 1969 (Cal), (B. K. Plastic Industries v. Plasto Metal) inter alia against the Respondent for a permanent injunction restraining inter alia respondent from infringing the petitioner's Patent in respect of the said 'picnic set'. The petitioner also made an application before the Controller of Patents for the cancellation of the said registration of the said Design.

6. Thereafter the petitioner made the present application.

7. The respondent has not appeared in the instant application. But it appears that the said J. K. Sayani also known as Jayantilal K. Sayani has assigned and transferred the said design bearing No. 134095 together with the rights, power, authority, privileges and advantages appertaining thereto to one Jethalal K. Sayani a partner of one Plasto Metal. The said assignment and/or transfer it appears however has not been registered in accordance with the provisions of the Patent and Designs Act and as such this Court is unable to take any notice of the said alleged assignment.

Be that as it may, the assignee was granted leave to appear in the instant proceeding and make his submission.

8. The main contentions on behalf of the assignee as made by the Counsel Mr. P. K. Mullick, are as follows: to wit, the said design was in any event an original design on the date of registration and therefore cannot be cancelled or revoked. Secondly the fact that the said application before the Controller of Patent is pending is a bar to this Court's entertaining the instant application for cancellation or revocation of the said registration of the said design. According to Mr. Mullick the right of an applicant for cancellation or revocation of a design in a forum under Section 51-A of the Act has been given in the alternative. Under clause (a) to sub-section (1) the applicant may choose his forum to be the High Court or under clause (b) of the said sub-section the applicant may choose his forum to be the Controller; but if the applicant chooses his forum to be the Controller of Patent and Designs the application for such cancellation has to be made within one year from the date of the registration and only on the grounds specified in sub-clauses (i) and (ii) of clause (a) of S. 51-A (1) of the Act. The grounds enumerated in sub-clause (iii) of clause (a) would not be available to an applicant before the Controller. In short the submission by Mr. Mullick was that the two forums prescribed by the said section for the relief of cancellation or revocation of a registration of design as prescribed in the said sub-section (1) of S. 51-A of the said Act are mutually exclusive.

9. An application for registration of a design is made under Section 43 of the Act. Sub-section (1) to the said section provides as follows:—

"The Controller may, on the application of any person claiming to be the proprietor of any new or original design not previously published in (India), register the design under this part".

10. Previously the words used in the corresponding section of the Invention and Designs Act of 1888 were "new and original design" which were substituted by the words "new or original design" in the said Section 43 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1911. Mr. Mullick laid stress on the substitution of the word 'and' by the word 'or' and submitted that even if a design be not new but only original the same may be registered. Publication, according to Mr. Mullick, does not do away with the originalities of a design. We are not really concerned with this aspect of the matter in the instant application because under sub-clause (iii) to clause (a) of sub-section (1) to S. 51-A of the Act the ground for cancellation is where the design is not new or where the design is not an original design. Therefore, as contended rightly, to my mind, by Mr. Ray if a design loses its novelty or newness on the date of registration the registration of such design shall be cancelled or revoked. In my opinion the case relied on by Mr. Mullick and reported in AIR 1941 Bom 188 at p. 189 does not assist Mr. Mullick. Even if a design which is original but is published earlier than the date of registration the registration may be revoked. It has been admitted in paragraphs 6, 7 and 10 of the affidavit affirmed by Amritlal K. Sayani affirmed on the 1st July, 1970 that the respondent since December, 1967 with the consent of J. K. Sayani has been manufacturing the plastic tumblers in the aforesaid form of the design for the purpose of selling the same in the market and has been selling the same in various parts of India through various agencies. In the case of Gunston v. Winox, Ltd., (1921) 1 Ch D 664 it was held that if a particular design was disclosed in good faith prior to the registration thereof that amounted to publication of the design. Similar was the decision also in the case of Blank v. Footman, Pretty & Co., (1888) 39 Ch D 678 where the inventor of a design showed it to his own agent who in his turn showed it to two persons and asked for their orders. The said soliciting of custom with regard to the said goods was held to be amounting to the publication of the design of the said goods within the meaning of the said Patent and Designs Act. In the instant case the invention or the method or dovetailing the tumblers under a cover is not of any intricate mechanism. It is true that any process is not registered but only the product i.e. the shape and configuration of the tumblers assembly with the cover but even then in any event the same has to be held to have been published on the basis of the admission itself made in the said affidavit of Amritlal K. Sayani.

11. Reliance of Mr. Mullick on Section 43 in my opinion is not of assistance to him. It is true that either a new or an original design may be registered under Section 43 of the Act but certificate of registration issued by the Controller under Section 45 (1) of the Act is only a prima facie evidence to the said effect. In an action for damages for infringement defence may raise the plea that the design is neither new nor original. Similarly, in an application for cancellation or revocation of a registration of a design the petitioner may raise the plea that the design is neither new nor original and on that ground should be cancelled or revoked. Upon proof of either of the said grounds, the registration may be cancelled. Mr. Mullick's first contention, therefore, fails for the reasons stated hereinabove.

12. It is true that the word 'or' prima facie or in the absence of ambiguity should be taken to be disjunctive. But the word 'or' should be construed in the context in which the same is used. Sub-clauses (ii) and (iii) in clause (a) of sub-section (1) of S. 51-A of the Act are preceded by the word 'or'. But it appears to me that a person is entitled to take any or all of the grounds set out in sub-clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) of Cl. (a) of sub-section (1) to the said section as the ground for cancellation or revocation of registration of a design. It cannot be said that since the word 'or' stands in between the sub-clauses, a person is entitled to take only one of the grounds mentioned in the said sub-clauses in the application for cancellation of registration. That would lead to an incongruous result. Mr. Ray was right when he submitted that the word 'or' here should be read as "and/or" namely, in the sense that a person is entitled to take one or all of the grounds mentioned in the said sub-clauses for cancellation or revocation of the registration of a design. Mr. Ray in support of his submission relied on the decision of this Court in Hari Das Mundra v. National & Grindlays Bank Ltd., 67 Cal WN 58=(AIR 1963 Cal 132) where in a Division Bench of this Court presided over by Mr. Justice Bachawat construed the word 'or' appearing in Section 176 of the Indian Contract Act as 'and'. To understand the said construction made by the said Division Bench, it is necessary to consider Section 176 of the Indian Contract Act which reads as follows:—

"176. If the pawnor makes default in payment of the debt or performance, at the stipulated time of the promise, in respect of which the goods were pledged the pawnee may bring a suit against the pawnor upon the debt or promise, and retain the goods pledged as a collateral security; or he may sell the thing pledged on giving the pawnor reasonable notice of the sale. If the proceeds of such sale are less than the amount due in respect of the debt or promise, the pawnor is still liable to pay the balance. If the proceeds of the sale are greater than the amount so due, the pawnee shall pay over the surplus to the pawnor".

It was argued in the said case that the pawnee in case of default to redeem by the pawnor has three rights, viz. (a) he may bring a suit against the pawnor upon debt or promise, (b) he may retain the goods pledged as a collateral security, or (c) he may sell it on giving the pawnor reasonable notice of the sale,

13. It was urged that the pawnee if he institutes a suit to recover the debt has the right only to retain the goods pledged. He cannot in that event sell the goods. In other words the right to institute a suit on the debt or promise is alternative to and not concurrent with the right to sell the goods pledged and are mutually exclusive rights under the said section. Bachawat, J. observed to the following effect, to wit:—

"I think that when the word "or" is used in relation to two or more alternatives, it is not necessarily the case that the alternatives are mutually exclusive. The question as to whether they are mutually exclusive or not must be determined by applying the general rule that words should be construed to ascertain the intention of the provision in question to be collected from the whole of its terms".

It was held by the said Division Bench that the word "or" preceding the last sentence of the first paragraph of Section 176 did not make the rights conferred by the two sentences of the said first paragraph of the said Section 176 mutually exclusive and it was held that the institution of the suit on the debt or promise by a pawnee in court does not destroy his right to sell the goods pledged out of Court.

14. In C. D. Fund Etc. v. Simpson, (1944) 2 All ER 60 it was observed at p. 73 by their Lordships that "In certain contexts meaning of the word 'or' might not be exclusive". In my opinion the entirety of the Section 51-A of the Patents and Designs Act would lead to anomalous and absurd result if the word "or" in between sub-clauses (i), (ii) and (iii) in sub-section (1) in clause (a) of the said section be not read as "and". The word "or" appearing before clause (b) of the said sub-section (1) should also be given the same meaning for the simple reason that the same word appearing in the same statute and in particular in the same section should be given the same meaning.

15. For the reasons stated above I am of the opinion that the forums prescribed by Section 51-A for cancellation or revocation of registration of Design in sub-clauses (a) and (b) are not mutually exclusive. In the premises, the application made by the applicant which is pending now before the Controller cannot operate as a bar to the initiation of the present proceeding by way of petition. The word "or" may mean "and/or" in the context of certain circumstances is also corroborated by Saunders' Words and Phrases Vol. IV. The last contention of Mr. Mullick must also fail for the reasons stated above.

16. In this premises this application must succeed. There shall be an order in terms of prayers (a) and (b) of the petition.

Application allowed.

Chandidas Roy Choudhury and Amaresh Chakraborty, for Appellant; Apurbadhan Mukherjee and Gopal Chandra Narayan Choudhury, for Respondent.

ARUN K. MUKHERJEE, J.:— This is an appeal from a decision dated 29 May 1963 of the learned Arbitrator, Alipore, 24-Parganas in connection with an award of compensation for certain properties which were originally requisitioned by Government under sub-r. (1) of Rule 75-A of the Defence of India Rules on 3 March, 1942 and thereafter permanently acquired on 27 March 1947 under the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immoveable Property Act, 1952, hereinafter referred to as the Act XXX of 1952.

2. The facts which are in short compass are as follows:—

The properties relate to five plots of land in Mouza Sultanpur and two plots of land in Mouza Jangalpur. The lands in Mouza Jangalpur are within North Dum Dum Municipality. The Land Acquisition Collector made an award in favour of the claimant for the total sum of Rs. 47,943-3 annas. In making this award he valued the land at the rate of Rupees

2,000/- per bigha and the tanks at Rupees 1,000/- per bigha and awarded a lump sum of Rs. 986-13 annas for the trees standing on the land and also a sum of Rs. 23,422/- for the structure standing thereon.

3. The respondent claimant on being dissatisfied with this award, made a reference to the Arbitrator. After this reference was made, the referring claimant came up to this High Court for determination of the question whether the provisions of Section 8 (3) (b) of Act XXX of 1952 the Requisitioning and Acquisition of Immoveable Property Act, 1952 are ultra vires. This Court, however, did not decide that question and disposed of the Rule that was obtained by the claimant on the following terms:

(a) The Arbitrator will give his award according to law.

(b) The arbitrator will give his finding as to value of the properties on the date of requisition as well as on the date of acquisition.

(c) Liberty was given to the petitioner to take the point of ultra vires at the hearing.

Thereafter the matter was heard before the learned Arbitrator. The claimant examined two witnesses viz., Shri T. K. Ghosh, a Chartered Engineer and Valuer and one Birendra Nath Ghosh. The opposite party, that is to say, the State of West Bengal, also examined two witnesses, namely, the Surveyor of the Office of the Land Acquisition Collector, 24-Parganas as well as one Officer of the C. P. W. D. who was at the material time posted at Dum Dum Air Port. The learned Arbitrator after hearing the evidence increased the amount of compensation awarded by the Collector to Rupees 75,988.94 p. In making this award the learned Arbitrator gave Rs. 3,000/- as compensation for each bigha of solid land and Rs. 1,500/- per bigha of tank. Further, he allowed the lump sum of Rs. 5,523/- as compensation for the trees and the sum of Rs. 35,164.38 p. as compensation for the structure standing on the land.

4. In computing the compensation for land and tank the learned Arbitrator proceeded on the basis of the prices obtaining at the date of requisition. Pursuant to the directions of the High Court, however, the learned Arbitrator also determined the values of the solid land and the tank as on the date of acquisition; these he found to be Rs. 4,500/- and Rs. 2,250/- per bigha respectively.

5. The State of West Bengal have now come on appeal from the award of the Arbitrator. The referring claimant has also filed a cross-objection.

6. The appellant's main objection in the grounds of appeal centred round the valuation of the land and the tank.

But this objection is no longer tenable in view of the recent Supreme Court decision. The appellant Union of India wanted to contend that the compensation for the lands and tanks should have been fixed at a lower figure. The appellant naturally accepts the position that the compensation should be fixed on the basis of the value at the date of requisition and not on the basis of the value obtaining on the date of acquisition. The claimant, of course, claims the value as on the date of acquisition.

7. The entire contention of the appellant on this ground fails for the simple reason that it is now settled law that in a case like this where land is acquired after an earlier requisition the compensation should not be limited to the value on the date of requisition but that it should be fixed at the value of it on the date of acquisition.

8. This question came up for decision in Union of India v. Harjivandas Parekh, AIR 1968 SC 377. Mitter, J. in delivering the judgment on behalf of the Court held that clause (b) of Sec. 8 (3) of Act XXX of 1952 was ultra vires Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution in so far as that clause directed that the excess of the value of the land arrived at in terms of the Land Acquisition Act in comparison with twice the price which the requisitioned property would have fetched in the open market if it had been sold on the date of requisition was to be ignored. In order to understand the ratio of his Lordship's judgment, it is necessary to set out the provisions of sub-section (3) of S. 8.

"The compensation payable for the acquisition of any property under Section 7 shall be—

(a) the price which the requisitioned property would have fetched in the open market, if it had remained in the same condition as it was at the time of requisitioning and had been sold on the date of acquisition, or

(b) twice the price which the requisitioned property would have fetched in the open market if it had been sold on the date of requisition, whichever is less".

Mitter, J. observes that Cl. (a) of Section 8 (3) lays down the principle aimed at giving the owner of the land something which approximates its just equivalent on the date of acquisition. Clause (b), however, directs the Arbitrator to measure the price arrived at in terms of Cl. (a) with twice the amount of money which the requisitioned property would have fetched if it had been sold on the date of requisition and to ignore the excess of the price computed in terms of Cl. (a) over that in terms of Cl. (b). Following the principles laid down in Bela Banerjee's case, AIR 1954 SC 170, his Lordship observes further that the basis provided by Cl. (b) has nothing to do with the just equivalent of the land on the date of acquisition. His Lordship, in fact, held that there is no principle for such a basis. On this ground his Lordship refused to accept the proposition that Cl. (b) satisfied the requirements of Art. 31 (2) of the Constitution.

9. The learned Arbitrator in this case allowed twice the price of the property as on the date of requisition. On this ground he allowed Rs. 3,000/- per bigha for land and Rs. 1,500/- per bigha for tank. In view of the Supreme Court decision to which we have just made a reference, there remains absolutely no scope for complaint against the Arbitrator's award so far as the appellant is concerned. On the contrary, the referring claimant is right in her contention that the Arbitrator should have given compensation on the basis of the value at the time of acquisition. Fortunately for us, the learned Arbitrator following the earlier directions given by this High Court has given us his finding as to the value of the lands and tank on the date of acquisition. He has valued the lands at the rate of Rs. 4,500/- per bigha and the tank at the rate of Rs. 2,250/- per bigha. There can be no manner of doubt that the claimant should get compensation for the lands and tank at this rate. In fact, the learned Advocate appearing for the appellant did not press this part of the grounds of appeal before us at all. He was obviously mindful of the decision of the Supreme Court. He pressed his claims only on two grounds, namely, as regards the valuation of the trees and the valuation of the structures.

10. According to the appellant, the Arbitrator's valuation of betel nuts and Mahogany trees is not supported by any evidence and is arbitrary. It was also contended by the appellant that the learned Arbitrator's assessment of the compensation for structures was wrong in so far as he did not allow proper depreciation of the property in regard to the structures. The claimant, on the other hand, in her cross-objection has claimed that the value of Mahogany trees should be at least Rs. 4,500/-. She does not complain about the compensation awarded by the Arbitrator in regard to the structures.

11. So far as the trees are concerned, we have gone into the evidence and also the judgment of the learned Arbitrator and we are of the opinion that the learned Arbitrator was not justified in rejecting the evidence of the valuer, Shri T. K. Ghosh to the effect that each of the Mahogany trees should be valued at Rs. 500/-. The learned Arbitrator allowed only Rs. 50/- for each.

The learned Arbitrator does not give any reason for this except making a general observation regarding the valuer's evidence that he had no knowledge of the conditions obtaining in the locality. In our opinion, it is well-known that Mahogany trees are very valuable and considering that Dum Dum is practically contiguous to Calcutta, we cannot ignore the valuation of the expert regarding the value of Mahogany trees merely because the expert has come from Calcutta and has no knowledge of local condition. We think it would be quite fair and reasonable to value the Mahogany trees at the rate of Rs. 300/- each.

12. Our attention was drawn to the Arbitrator's valuation of the betel nut trees at Re. 1/- for each tree on the basis of the evidence of witness No. 1 for the opposite party even though the witness had actually stated that the value of betel nut trees was Rs. 10/- each. Perhaps this was a mistake on the part of the learned Arbitrator but this point has not been taken in the cross-objection and we do not allow this objection to be raised at this stage.

13. We finally come to the valuation in regard to the structures. We have carefully considered the manner in which the learned Arbitrator has determined the value of the structures. He had annexed to his decision a schedule in which he has itemised all the different structures and then set out side by side (i) the Collector's assessment, (ii) the assessment of the valuation expert of the claimant, (iii) the assessment of the valuation expert of the opposite party and finally, (iv) his own assessment. Looking at this comparative chart we find absolutely no reason to cavil at what the Arbitrator has done in assessing the compensation for structures. The complaint that he has not allowed deduction for depreciation is not true. In fact, he has allowed deduction at the rate of 25 per cent., as will appear from page 49 of the paper-book.

14. In this view of the matter, the appeal falls on all the grounds. The cross-objection succeeds on two points, namely, as to the value of the land and tank and also as to the value of the Mahogany trees.

15. The appeal is dismissed and the cross-objection is allowed in part. The award of the learned Arbitrator is affirmed with the following modification: The compensation for the solid land should be given at the rate of Rs. 4,500/- per bigha and compensation for tank is to be given at the rate of Rs. 2,250/- per bigha. The value of the Mahogany trees should be determined at the rate of Rs. 300/- for each. If the State of West Bengal has already deposited the amount awarded by the learned Arbitrator in Court, the claimant will get interest at 4 per cent. per annum on the difference between the Collector's award and the Arbitrator's award from the date of acquisition upto the date of such deposit. The claimant will, however, get interest on the difference between the award made by this Court and the award of the learned Arbitrator from the date of acquisition upto realisation at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

16. There will be no order as to costs in the appeal. The claimant will get costs in the cross-objection.

M. M. DUTT, J.: 17. I agree.
Order accordingly.

Shankar Ghosh, for Applicants.

JUDGMENT:— This is an application for amendment of a petition filed in pro-inter esse-suo seeking inter alia to add in the said proceedings Indian Tea Association stated to be an unregistered Association of members. The petition was filed by Assam Bengal Cereals Limited, an existing Company within the meaning of Companies Act, 1956 of No. 10, Netaji Subhas Road. In the said petition the Assam Bengal Cereals Limited claimed inter alia to be examined pro-inter-esse-suo as to their right, title and interest in 19139 Quintals 87 Kilogramms and 805 gramms of wheat and/or Bhushi fully described in Annexure (a) to the said petition. The petitioner in the said petition also claimed a declaration to the effect that it was the absolute owner of the said goods.

2. The petition was necessitated because of the fact that on the aforesaid goods Joint Receivers were appointed by this Court on the application of the plaintiff in the Suit No. 248 of 1970, that is to say, Central Bank of India. The Central Bank of India claimed to be the hypothecatee or pledgee in respect of the said goods. The hypothecation or pledge was alleged to have been created by the defendants in the suit, Srish Chandra Guha and Debabrata Guha carrying on business under the name and style of Guha Rice Co.

3. After the petitioner Assam Bengal Cereals Limited made the said application in pro-inter-esse-suo an order was made on the said application by me on July 20, 1970 inter alia to the following effect to wit:—

"The petitioner shall be at liberty to take delivery of the goods claimed by it on furnishing bank guarantee for the controlled price of the goods. The form of the guarantee shall be settled by Mr. S. C. Mitter of Messrs. C. C. Basu and in case of dispute as to the form, the matter may be mentioned in Court. The rights of the parties in the goods so taken delivery of by the petitioner shall shift to the monies covered by the bank guarantee".

4. Pursuant to the said order the bank guarantee in terms thereof was duly furnished by the petitioner viz., Assam Bengal Cereals Limited. A part of the goods claimed by them were handed over to them by the Joint Receivers according to the petitioner. The Joint Receivers are not in possession of any goods now. Pursuant to the directions given by Court affidavits were duly filed by the parties. Thereafter the matter was directed to be tried on evidence.

5. The parties duly disclosed their documents, inspection whereof were given and taken by them respectively. In fact Examination De Benese of one of the witnesses of the petitioner is going on before Mr. Justice R. M. Datta.

6. By the proposed amendment, petitioners seek to claim a declaration in the alternative of the ownership of Indian Tea Association of the said goods upon examination of the members of the said Association in pro-inter-esse-suo.

7. The order for appointment of Receivers was made in this suit on June 18, 1970 for the first time and the application in pro-inter-esse-suo was moved before the Court for the first time on July 20, 1970. Notice of motion in the instant case was taken out by special leave of the Court on August 31, 1971 i.e. after more than a year from the date of making of the said application in pro-inter-esse-suo, by the Assam Bengal Cereals Limited, as well as the Indian Tea Association, an unregistered association of members. The applicants i.e., Kamal McNair Kidwai and Joseph Cajetan D'Souza, the Vice-Chairman and Secretary of the Indian Tea Association have applied to be added as party petitioners in the instant application in the pending application made by Assam Bengal Cereals Limited in a representative capacity, that is to say, on behalf of all the members of the said Association.

8. Mr. Shankar Ghosh, appearing on behalf of the applicants submitted that from the documents disclosed in the proceedings a view may be taken that Assam Bengal Cereals Ltd. were not the owners of the said goods but were the agents of the owners of the said goods, their principal the Indian Tea Association being the owners thereof. In the premises Mr. Ghosh submits in order to avoid multiplicity of proceedings and save unnecessary additional expenses this application has been made. Mr. Ghosh cited the cases of L. J. Leach and Co. Ltd. v. Jardine, Skinner and Co., AIR 1957 SC 357 where the original cause of action in damages for wrongful conversion of the goods was allowed to be amended by the Supreme Court by substituting the cause of action of breach of contract. Mr. Ghosh also cited Nichalabhai Vallabhai v. Jaswantlal Zinabhai, AIR 1966 SC 997 for the proposition that although Indian Tea Association was not formally a party petitioner in the pending application it was in substance the petitioner in the pending application through its agent the Assam Bengal Cereals Ltd. Thus adding in these circumstances of Indian Tea Association at the present moment is merely a formal matter. Mr. Ghosh also relied on Jal Jai Ram Manohar Lal v. National Building Material Supply Gurgaon, AIR 1969 SC 1267. Amendment in the said case was allowed on the ground that the firm which had sued as the plaintiff through the manager could not do so because the provisions of Order 30 of the Civil P. C. did not apply to the case of a proprietorship concern. It was heard however that in substance it was the person constituting that firm who had instituted the said suit. So amendment was allowed only to rectify the mis-description of the plaintiff by bringing in the proprietor of the firm as the plaintiff suing as such proprietor of the said firm. In AIR 1966 SC 997 the averments made by mistake in the plaint by describing the plaintiff as a present member of the joint family was allowed to be deleted by way of amendment on the ground that the suit was in substance a suit for partition and that averment was really made through inadvertence.

9. A proceeding in pro interesse suo is not provided for either in the Code of Civil Procedure or in the Rules of the Original Side of this Court. This is a procedure imported into this country from England. In order to do justice to a person, the Court allows that person to come in and be examined as to his title to the goods or property over which the Court has appointed Receiver in a proceeding between persons other than the said person. That is done so that no person may suffer because of any order that may be passed by the Court. It is the right in such a proceeding of that person who claims to be the owner of the goods or property to be examined as to his title to the said goods or property. It is in that sense a personal right of that person only. That person cannot in my opinion in such a proceeding ask the Court to examine some other person with regard to that person's right or title in the goods or property over which the Court has appointed a Receiver.

10. In the pending proceeding the interest of the Original applicant i.e. the interest of the Assam Bengal Cereals Ltd. was directed to be examined. Further subsequent to the making of the said application an order was passed on 20th July, 1970 directing the Joint Receivers to hand over the said goods to Assam, Bengal Cereals Ltd. upon its furnishing security in the sum of Rs.

Assam Bengal Cereals Ltd. along with National and Grindlays Bank Ltd. agreed to indemnify or pay to the Central Bank of India the value of the said goods being the sum of Rs. . . . in the event Assam Bengal Cereals Ltd. fails to establish its title as the owner of the said goods. The said bond or the agreement has been acted upon by the parties. It cannot now be ordered by amending the original petition that even if Assam Bengal Cereals Ltd. fails to establish its title to the said goods but the Indian Tea Association establishes its title thereto Assam Bengal Cereals Ltd. or the National and Grindlays Bank Ltd. jointly or severally shall not be liable to pay the said sum to Central Bank of India. The right, title and interest in the said goods of the parties in the said proceeding on 20th July, 1970 stood shifted to the said money under the said bond. That position cannot be changed now in my opinion in the instant application.
